Letters were sent to ministers of every church in the division inviting them and certain members of their congregations to a special morning showing of the picture. They were asked to bring along with them, free of charge, any member 60 years of age or over, or any other oldster of their acquaintance outside the influence of the church. These could be classed as either people in straitened circumstances or who had strayed away from the institution. In other words, the ministers were guests of the theatre and the oldsters were guests of the ministers.

Other exploitation efforts consisted of a whispering campaign by members of theatre staffs, by which word o' mouth advertising was circulated via verbal and 'phone messages to friends; the promotion of a double truck with radio dealers, based on Seth Parker's air feature; window displays in all radio stores; a suggestion to tie-in with any church advertising with the line, "Seth Parker Says: 'You Go To Your Church, I'll Go To Mine';" community singing at close of feature, and tie-ups for heralds, etc., with various merchants, such as laundrys, dairy companies, dealers in utilities for the home, based on the title, "Way Back Home."

As mentioned above the big gun of the campaign was fired in behalf of a "smutless, crimeless," picture; one that no church could disapprove of, but on the contrary would back to the limit. Next in importance was the tie-up with radio, over which Parker had gained his popularity. Both strong points and there's plenty of evidence to back up Grandjean's judgment in regard to choice of these two angles as main plugs for the picture. It's almost needless to mention that the newspapers followed through with a generous assortment of stories and readers concerning special showing and picture.

EDDIE RIVERS WAGED GOOD CAMPAIGN WHEN SELLING SPOOK PICTURE

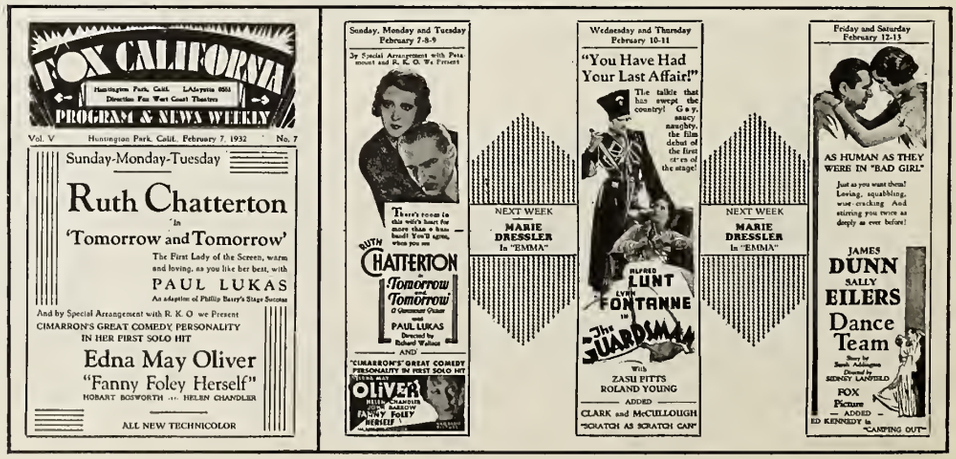
A campaign made on "Frankenstein" proved so successful for Eddie Rivers, vice-president and publicity manager of Tri-State Theatres, Lewiston, Idaho, that he passed it on to Joe Weil, director of exploitation for Universal. So we're passing it along for the benefit of Club members who have yet to play this picture.

First, he had a cameraman make up 2,000 samples consisting of three frames of film showing two sensational shots in the picture—one of the monster on the operating table in the old castle and the other as he crept up behind Frankenstein's fiancee on the wedding day. In between the two frames the center read: "Looks small now, but it's an actual scene from the world's biggest thriller, Frankenstein. Starts—at the Granada."

Next, in line with the fad for exercising one's vocabulary, he arranged a tie-up with a newspaper to see how many dictionary words could be made from the 12 letters in Frankenstein. Nominal awards and guest tickets were offered to participants.

For a sidewalk display in front of theatre the poster artist made a 14-foot monster with electrically lit green eyes. This was a replica of the grotesque, running figure on the face of the press book which, when placed, extended well above the marquee.

Newspaper advertising and other billing included an announcement three weeks in advance and a teaser ad in the paper every day two weeks in advance. A slightly larger ad was run every day up to opening. Extra heavy billing included 24's, 6's, 3's, 1's, window cards and 5,000 heralds distributed house to house. Other stunts were used, such as a borrowed ambulance with sign reading, "Frankenstein Emergency Ambulance—Courtesy of ——"; the engagement of a trained nurse to stand in lobby beside a table of doctor's instruments, etc.; distribution of 1,500 bookmarks by the local public library and two book stores, and the hanging of special exchange hanger above an oil painting made by artist, with green spot on cutout letters. Both special advance trailer and regular trailer were used on screen and all advertising stressed a warning not to see the picture if heart or nerves were weak.



This is the first time we've had a slant on Eddie Rivers' activities since last September and we're mighty glad to have him back with us.

DOES THIS ONE APPEAL?

Rummaging through the latest batch of programs to reach Club headquarters we happened across this one, and just because it attracted our attention we yanked it out, and—here it is.

Maybe we acted too much on the impulse, but it did strike us as being unusually good. Now you look it over and pass judgment yourself. As a steady diet, or possibly just for a change, would you like to have your own program made up this way?

It has many decidedly popular slants. It's not expensive from the point of composition costs, because the three attractions are being advertised via three exchange mats plus a little added text. About the biggest job on the whole spread appears to be the rule.

ED HIEHLE FOUND TOWN ALL SET TO SUPPORT HIS SHOW

Upholding traditional generosity and wholeheartedness of Mid-western people, the town of Newark, Ohio, made a genuine response to a Food Matinee recently staged by Ed Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatre, for relief of the unemployed.

In spite of a downpour of rain, a house full of youngsters, as you can see by the accompanying photo, "said it" to the tune of over 1,200 cans of food and about 35 bushels of potatoes, beans, onions and turnips, all of which was turned over to the Eagles Free Soup Kitchen. A local transfer company donated trucks to cart the articles from the theatre to the kitchen.

Besides Hiehle, the Paramount Projectionists house employees donated services for the special occasion and all deserve much credit for the way the show went over. "Huckleberry Finn" was the picture that deleted pantries in over a thousand homes.

Whether conditions among the unemployed are worse in the Middle West than elsewhere, from our observations it appears that there have been more indications of this sort of relief work among theatre men in that section than in other parts of the country. It's commendable, worthwhile work and Ed Hiehle will, without doubt, reap a future reward for the part he has played, both in satisfaction in the thought that he rendered aid to the needy and in the building of more good will for his theatre. Lest we forget, the newspaper gave him a large three-column cut of the interior shot that appears on this page.

SIMMON'S CALENDAR ACTING AS PLUG FOR A TWO-FOR-ONE STUNT

When monthly calendars are sent out by Thomas J. Simmons, manager of the Conway Theatre, Conway, Kan., he makes a bid for new patrons by attaching a small card headed, "Out of Town Patrons Notice." Following copy advises the holder that the Conway management wants the person to pay the theatre a visit that he or she may see the excellent programs, etc., and that the card will admit one other person free of charge. Blank space is reserved for signing of patron's name. The program is made up in the usual fashion for mailing.

The above is another example of the two-for-one method of boosting rural trade and we're sure that Simmons' gag will interest any of our members in a similar situation. It's surely an inducement to attend and a chance to gain a new customer.

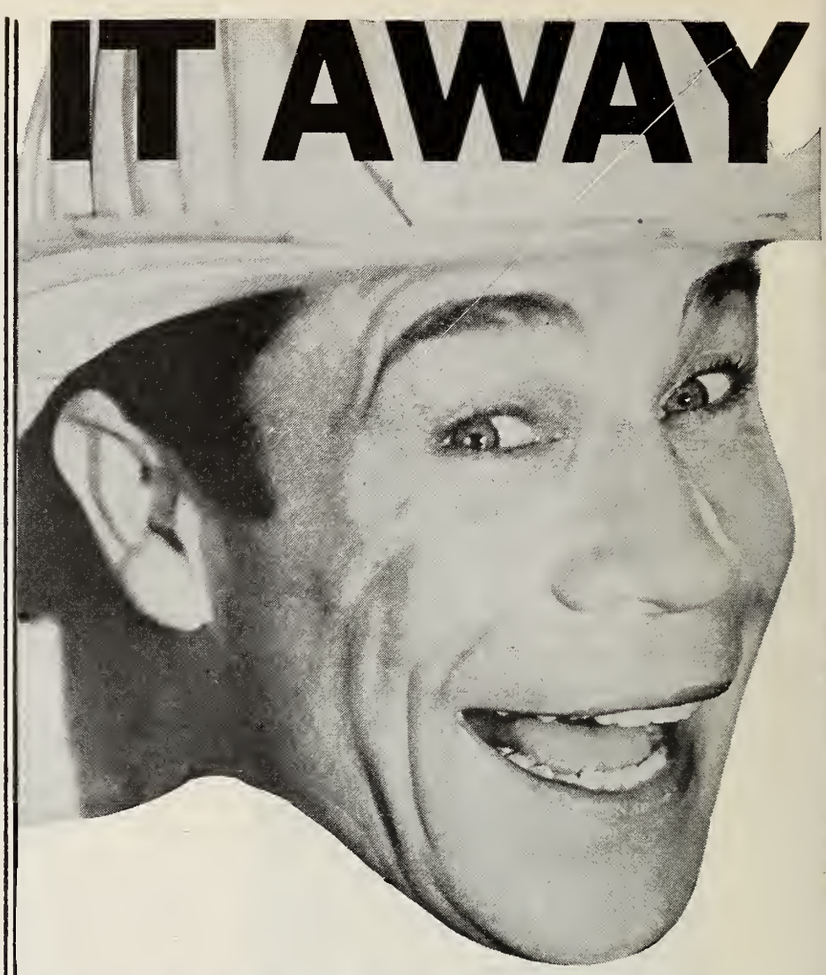
CHINA ROUND TABLER NOT YET IN BATTLE AREA IS CARRYING ON

At this writing, differences between Japan and China have not penetrated far enough to the North to affect show business in Tientsin, China, but by the time this appears in a regular issue, G. Fryberg, manager of Gaiety Theatre in that city, may be trying out a brand new type of exploitation.

Opening of another new house in Tientsin gives that city a total of six houses at the present time, all of which are equipped with one of the modern systems of sound projection. Six theatres in a town the size of this one, where one can traverse the main street in a half hour, would lead the average person to believe that there's much doing in show-selling activities. This is not the case, however, for after the first show, all Tientsin has become wise to quality of the current production by means of a most efficient "underground."

It is therefore not in keeping with the general situation to make expensive displays, etc., or to engage in any kind of elaborate exploitation campaigns in this Chinese city. But Fryberg does see that artistic posters are turned out for display inside and outside of lobby and also employs the use of banners and grotesque cutout figures. Numbered heralds are also sometimes widely distributed when guest tickets are used to boost patronage.



In view of existing conditions in his adopted country, it is to be hoped that Fryberg will continue to enjoy his present apparent health and prosperity, and that he will let us hear from him from time to time. It's several hundred miles from Shanghai to Tientsin but things are happening fast these days over in his land. Certainly, his patrons cannot be considered movie-minded at this time and we can guess that this Round Tabler will have to put his shoulder to the wheel to get them in.

Parker at the Helm

Following Floyd Maxwell's transfer to Spokane, where he has assumed charge of the new million dollar Fox theatre, supervision of all Fox Portland, Ore., theatres has reverted to J. J. Parker, well known theatre operator of the Northwest. Parker controlled these properties at one time, and his new responsibilities include charge of the Rialto and Vancouver theatres.

In his new location, Maxwell will also have supervision of Fox theatres in Yakima and Wenatchee.

"VITAGRAPH, INC., DISTRIBUTORS"

ORLOVE IS ACTIVE AS USUAL ON NORTH SIDE OF MILWAUKEE

The usual amount of energy necessary to sell shows in his neighborhood is being expended from week to week by Louis Orlove, popular manager of the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., with a portion allotted to regular routine, some to his flourishing kiddie club and other hours to institutional activities.

Orlove doesn't believe that it's a very good system to remember the hungry just at Thanksgiving or Xmas time and then forget about them for the balance of the year, and therefore has continued to hold food matinees for benefit of the needy in his neighborhood. The local newspaper cooperates with him by following up direct leads concerning families in distress and a taxi company donates the use of a cab to deliver baskets of food. To put the plan on a systematic basis, employees of the theatre have formed a club to regularly look out for those who are in need of assistance. Indeed, they even go so far as to donate a portion of their weekly salary to help along the good work.

We mentioned some little time ago that Orlove's Mickey Mice were engaged in competition to produce the best looking cartoons of the well known Mickey, and a two column head and photo in his paper discloses that ten children won as many original sketches from the pen of Walt Disney himself. We also note in the bulletin from the official Mouse Hole in Hollywood that Orlove was credited with an idea for keeping up interest in cards or buttons distributed to members of his organization.

One of the stunts calculated to keep and stimulate membership interest was an address made the youngsters by a dentist. The subject was care of the teeth and at the close of the talk the kids were advised that each might obtain a free tube of tooth-paste by presenting his membership button or card to a co-operating drug store. Another gag along the same lines was a tie-up made with a large department store, by which any member of the club could obtain a little present through showing button or card to the store Santa Claus.

Now all the foregoing was instrumental in securing some sort of a story in the paper whereby the names of Orlove and Upton received due mention. Here's still another little gag that was good for a two column head and story, if your patrons run true to form and lose their belongings in your theatre. Through Orlove, a reporter found that there were a lot of quaint and interesting sidelights on a theatre's lost and found department and proceeded to interview the management. The result was a corking little human interest yarn.

All of which is interesting and goes to bear out an earlier contention that this Round Tabler is forever on his toes in his neighborhood, Milwaukee's North Side. He knows that Mickey Mouse clubs will droop and cease to exist unless interest is continually kept alive through the office of some little gag apart from regular meetings. And he knows the value of institutional publicity for himself and theatre and therefore is vitally interested in community welfare work. This is a good year to exercise his theory that there are other times than Xmas to display concern for the poor; and, why not call a reporter some day and tell him your experiences with lost articles.

A DISTINCTIVE NEWSPAPER AD!

Ever since we ran some of Jameyson's newspaper ads we've had any number of requests for more. Well, here is another worked out by Jameyson in conjunction with Nat Holt of Wichita.

Advertising of this sort must command attention and respect regardless of where the town is or the theatre so advertising. It is the type of advertising upon which the theatres of today must depend for retaining interest and getting patrons to the box office and to our way of thinking it is doing just that and more.

H. E. Jameyson and Nat Holt are two students of public psychology especially where theatre advertising is concerned. They are both showmen of long experience and considered successful chiefly because they do understand the public and how to appeal to them. Their individual or combined efforts in turning out business-getting ads will always find a hearty welcome on the Club pages and from the thousands of showmen who follow these pages week in and week out.

Did your mother ever tie a string around your finger when you were a kid in order to remind you of some errand? Of course she did unless that exceptional mother didn't know what it was all about. Now, Jack Portee, manager of the U. S. Theatre, Bronx, New York City, admits that the following stunt wouldn't rate 100 per cent in an intelligence test, but that it helped put over a picture.

When exploiting "Are These Our Children" he used a plain manila envelope with copy on front reading: "Once in a Blue Moon There's Something Really New—It's Different—It's Sensational. The Screen Strikes in Defense of America's Boys and Girls." Title of picture, cast, theatre and playdates followed. Then followed: "As a reminder of the place and date tie the enclosed string around your finger and remember there is a treat in store for you."

All right, Jack. Maybe not so sensational, as you state, but if you got your message over what more do you want? And, we'll venture to add, every one who had one of the envelopes satisfied curiosity by opening the envelope to see if the string was inside. It was there.

POSTER STUNT WENT OVER BIG WITH ALL OF SMALLEY HOUSES

That enterprising and well known upper New York State showman William C. Smalley, president and general manager of the Smalley Chain of Theatres, Cooperstown, N. Y., recently used a Poster Exploitation stunt to such excellent results that it will be made an annual affair.

The stunt referred to here was one that was put over in Fort Plain, N. Y., where H. L. Richardson manages Smalley's Fort Plain Theatre, and was handled through cooperation from local school authorities. Awards were offered students for the best examples of poster advertising on "Manhattan Parade" and these were attractively displayed in the theatre lobby. Unusual originality and varied conceptions of the poster subject were shown by the students in the competition, which included drawings in water color, India ink, cutouts, colored crayons, and designs made with pasted colored paper.

This poster contest made the front page of the Fort Plain paper and it is taken for granted that papers in other Smalley towns also gave the stunt the break it deserved. The fact that it has gone down on the books for an annual plug should indicate that the Smalley management is well pleased with results, and so we're passing the idea along to others. Without a doubt it's a corking stunt for any showman to consider. "Bill" Smalley and his crew of managers are a hard working, go-getting bunch of men and it's a pleasure to hear from Cooperstown headquarters. We will hope to receive many more live show-tips from this source.

THE LIFE-BLOOD OF THE THEATRE—ADVERTISING—A PROVEN BENEFIT!

Careful Study Will Open Up Many Avenues To Check the True Value of Show Selling Via Your Local Newspapers!

By JACK HESS
Publix Theatres
Advertising Department

Delivered In Form Of An Address This Article Draws Many Unique Comparisons To the Art of Successful Advertising

I WOULD like to submit some views: each of which is brought to prove the value of advertising generally; and the value of advertising to show business in particular, and what methods we must employ to make this force function to its fullest potentialities. In our desire to produce profits with the merchandise we have to sell, we must all be students of a single subject; that is, the way of the public mind. It is only by understanding the reactions of human beings, typical everyday folk, that we may hope to secure and to hold their patronage.

It is necessary for me to go over some ground which some few of you have heard covered before. I claim that they are essentials, the very foundations from which springs the type of advertising we create. For that reason, they cannot be neglected in any discussion of theatrical advertising.

Two Types of Advertising!

You have, no doubt, observed that there is a considerable difference between theatrical advertising and the type used by commercial houses. For instance, the man in your town who sells shoes to the public year in and year out must necessarily present the same selling ideas. He draws attention to the quality of his shoes, their looks, etc., and points out to people that he gives them more for their money than the other fellow. Apart from special sales and very minor changes in fashions, his campaign remains the same. If he does not sell his stock today, then it is on his shelves to be sold tomorrow.

Our advertising is radically different from his, and it is the difference in our advertising to his that should be the basis of all our campaigns. In other words, while his product is staple and can be sold at any time with similar sales arguments, we have a perishable product, a picture that we must sell today because we do not get another chance once it has gone. The skilled work of the producers, artists, cameramen, and a hundred technicians, plus a huge financial investment, is in every picture that comes to your theatre. It is there for a limited time and must be sold today. You cannot put it on your shelves tomorrow. You are handicapped also by the fact that you do not always see the picture you are selling to your public and must base your campaign almost entirely on your experience and instinctive understanding of its advertising needs. It is this instinctive understanding and analysis of the worthwhile points of a picture that creates the quality known as "showmanship."

My illustration of the shoemaker was to make clear that while the average advertiser sells something of which he may definitely write and that remains in his hands if not sold, we sell to the public every day something entirely different. To explain this point it is necessary for me to digress a trifle. This digression is necessary, but I want to remind you that I will come back to the difference between commercial and theatrical advertising later. If I were to ask each reader individually, "Do you believe in advertising as a means of getting business?" you would reply without exception, "Of course," but with varying degrees of conviction and without enthusiasm. It is a most unfortunate occurrence that in show business where advertising is more essential than in any other line, we have less chance of gauging the profits accruing from our advertising. We do not have the advantages of commercial advertising which in the past five years has directed itself into a particular channel, coupon and direct order campaigns.

By this I mean that most large concerns advertising regularly in newspapers and magazines, have a coupon to be clipped which either is a direct order for the merchandise, or else a request for a book or a sample. Department stores make actual sales of the merchandise advertised. In this way it is known whether ads are being read, if they are attention-getters, and if the copy is convincing. It enables them to test campaigns before a full expenditure of the appropriation is made. It is because we do not see in actual signatures from the public the returns from our ads that we are apt to say, "Of course," when asked about the value of advertising, without fully realizing what it means. It also prevents us from knowing definitely the tremendous difference that a single piece of copy can make in the returns from an ad. It is my intention to show this difference and at the same time to clinch the value of advertising so that you may become more than ever "sold" upon its importance. As a preface to doing so, I would like to say that few people realize the sensitiveness of the human mind. This is particularly true with regard to advertising. Few showmen know how sensitive a good ad may be. By that I mean that a mere change in headline, or a difference of a few words, or the substitution of an illustration, may react at the box office favorably or unfavorably. For it is these small things that influence the public's estimate of an attraction. It takes very little to upset results, and a slight change may convert a failure into a success. It is said that a headline change from "Cold Feet" to "Warm Feet" quadrupled the returns on a national campaign. To emphasize the sensitiveness of the public mind in its reaction to copy, I draw your attention to the following actual facts:

A Tabulation of Results!

Twelve ads for player pianos were placed in one of the country's largest cities. These were displayed in the same paper, same amount of space was used, but the copy was changed in each case as a means of finding out what difference a good or a bad piece of copy might make on returns. I have placed these figures upon a chart as an easier method of conveying them to you than by reciting the figures:

Ad 1.— 3 replies	Ad 7.—227 replies
Ad 2.— 14 replies	Ad 8.—480 replies
Ad 3.— 16 replies	Ad 9.—672 replies
Ad 4.— 67 replies	Ad 10.—801 replies
Ad 5.—140 replies	Ad 11.—801 replies
Ad 6.—220 replies	Ad 12.—957 replies

If all of these ads would have done as well as Ad 12, we would have the following result: there would have been 11,484 replies instead of 4,284. It seems to me that figures of this kind should impress anybody with the importance of good copy and the effect of a fine or a poor piece of writing upon the responsiveness of the general public. To bring these statistics to bear upon the theatre, it is only necessary to point out that good or bad copy written to advertise one of our pictures would have exactly the same ratio of difference as that written for these player pianos. Think of your business being increased three hundred per cent by the difference between a bad or a good ad!

Always a Better Way!

One of the country's leading publishing houses confronted with the task of selling the works of Joseph Conrad, a little known writer,

When we first met Jack Hess he was plugging away at two in the morning on a sudden switch in bookings that pulled one picture out at the last minute and substituted another. But that was just another incident in the life of RKO's versatile publicity director in Chicago. His ability to meet such situations and successfully start a picture off on a long run is one of the many reasons why he can be considered an exceptional executive.

Shortly after our first visit we returned to Chicago and greeted Jack as the Director of Advertising and Publicity for Chicago and all points west for the same circuit.

Then, after a brief lapse we found him in the New York home office as National Director of all advertising, publicity and exploitation. His next move, and probably the most important of his career, was to join Paramount-Publix as executive assistant to Arthur Mayer. Truly as rapid an advancement as you can find a parallel for anywhere in this fast-moving industry of ours.

This series, due to its length—and we didn't want to use the scissors on so fine an article—will be presented in several installments. We sincerely urge you to read every line of it and you won't be sorry. It is well written, and each angle is clearly pointed out in language we all understand. Perhaps it will be a guide to you in planning your future advertising and give you a clearer understanding of the manifold problems encountered in this important phase of show-selling.

We are extremely grateful to Jack Hess for the opportunity of passing along his views via the Round Table Club pages in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

"CHICK"

HESS ON ADVERTISING

wrote a piece of copy around a half-tone head of the author. The copy was dignified, it stressed his literary standing, and insinuated that persons of any intellectuality would not be without a set in their homes. The second ad picked a particular character from one of his books, a seductive Malay princess, and placed her smiling face and attractive figure in their layout with suitable copy. The following chart shows you the result:

Second Copy—	returns $8,075

These figures show that advertising copy must be well-planned and well-written. A thousand similar instances are happening all over the country while we write these words.

But now I turn from the virtues of good copy to the value of advertising itself; that is to say, "What can be done by the power of the printed page?"

The furniture department of a large store inserted an ad costing $311 in one of the larger cities. The following chart shows the result:

Simple department store ad cost—$311.00
Returns—$11,500—actual sales.

The next chart conveys this illuminating data:

Ad addressed to 15,000 physicians; cost $2,400.00 and brought in $125,000.00 in actual orders.

These figures are absolutely correct. They are taken from actual results, and I have the authorities for each of them. These are merely examples of what is being duplicated by tens of thousands of ads all over the country. They are not fanciful romances about small millionaires starting business on a shoe string, but are the every-day business results secured by men like ourselves.

The reason for showing these figures takes me back to a remark made earlier; that is, the nature of our business which sometimes causes us to be half blind to the value of advertising. The fact that we do not see rugs rolled up and addressed to purchasers, or books packed after the receipt of coupons with three dollars attached, makes us unappreciative of our ads.

We ARE getting profits from our ads in ratio to the pulling power of the copy and layout. If every patron who bought a ticket at the box office wore a button denoting he had read one of our ads, not a single showman reading this article would reply "Of course," when asked about the value of advertising. He would be ready and willing to acknowledge it as the most important factor in show business. Advertising in show business is NOT waste. It is an investment which the nature of our business makes it impossible to judge.

It is a fact that over one and one-half billion dollars a year is spent on advertising in the United States. This tremendous amount of money is responsible for rating advertising as one of the first 10 industries of the United States, which is unusual, for it does not deal in material things. It is an industry that represents an intangible force, a force that sells merchandise, whatever it may be.

Advertising—A Sales Force!

Presuming that your appreciation of advertising has heightened, I bring this sales force, known as advertising, down to its position in our own business, the nature of which does not admit of a sales department; that is, the employment of salesmen who sell direct to the consumer or the retailer. This hole is filled by those who are matcrially responsible for selling the picture to the public, to wit: the advertising, exploitation, and publicity departments, and the manager while engaged in this phase of his work. It would not be a bad idea to rename the advertising department of a theatrical organization and call it the General Sales Department. In fact, I believe that the psychology in the use of such a name would help impress those connected with this phase of our work, so that their minds would run along selling lines.

Perhaps my attempts to increase your idea of the value of advertising were unnecessary, perhaps you are all in agreement; but I feel that I am justified just the same in re-selling you, because sometimes I have my doubts.

One of the terms most often used in favor of advertising by those in show business is that it is the "life blood of the theatre." This phrase is used in general conversation, but it seems to me that in many cases it is said without conviction; for when business is good, every one seems quite ready to allow their exploitation men and managers to take a "flier" and spend some money. As soon as business relapses, however, it is always the first thing cut out. Whether it be good, bad, or indifferent advertising, it goes like snow on a hot stove.

Now, our glib phrase about advertising being "life blood" means nothing when we fail to pump it into the veins of our business when it becomes anæmic; in fact, it seems perilously like extracting blood from anæmic persons as a means of curing them, and yet it is our own business that needs this life blood more than any other.

Theatres Must Advertise!

Regular commercial concerns have less need for advertising than we have. I believe, in spite of the figures I have given you, that their actual percentage of profit returns on advertising is less than ours. I base this on the fact that staples—foods, soaps, clothing, etc.—are things which the public must have, whether they spend money on advertising or not. The public is incapable of escaping purchase of these necessities, for that is what they are—necessities.

However, our customers can stay home with the radio and the kids and entertain themselves without going to our theatres. It might be desirable to go, but I have never agreed that shows can be classed as a necessity. Fundamentally, we are selling the public something which is very acceptable, but which they can do without.

For that reason, our advertising must be more skillful; have greater drawing power than the copy of those who sell the public something which they cannot do without. Commercial advertising is mainly competitive advertising to sell the public necessities. We are selling luxuries, but we also have the same competitive condition. It is with no desire to magnify the importance of my own position, or the department which I represent when I state that in no other line of business is advertising, publicity and exploitation a more potent force than it is in ours. The construction of any normal, commercial organization hinges upon three pivotal points; that is, the production, the advertising and the selling organizations. The general sales manager of any large business is the most important factor in its integral operation. In our business two of these three most important departments are merged into one; for the advertising department also bears the burden of sales.

The concluding installment of Jack Hess' article will appear in next week's issue. Following through with his forceful arguments and clear-cut explanations, Hess will finish his discussion just as he started it; from an expert's point of view. Every real showman should read it.

MACRIS NOT SNOWED IN AT WELLSVILLE, N. Y.; IS USING VAUDEVILLE

We have his own word for it that Orestes Macris, manager of the Temple Theatre, Wellsville, N. Y., is still very much alive and on the job, despite the fact that the name of Macris has been missing from these pages for several weeks. As an alibi he advances the argument that he's been very busy and, besides, wanted to wait until something unusual had taken place in his northern New York town. Incidentally, he's not snowed in.

A return to vaudeville was the occasion that prompted Orestes to let us know that he was still in show-business. Now, when something theatrical is sold in Wellsville a good showman never stops within the town proper, but covers all surrounding territory within a radius of several miles. So when Kirma, the Mystic Marvel, arrived to do his stuff Macris engineered a tie-up between his newspaper and a number of merchants for the promotion of cooperative advertising. The newspaper made a special rate for the occasion and the merchants not only swallowed the hook, but took line and sinker as well. Along with the tie-up the theatre put out several hundred window cards on Kirma and 3,000 program heralds.

As the result of the above campaign we note from a copy of the newspaper that Kirma rode in a Chevrolet car, endorsed restaurants, milk, etc., liked a certain brand of mattress for his hypnotized subjects to sleep on, and swore by all holy that Socony gas was the finest he'd ever used. Also, while blindfolded, he drove the auto through traffic, stopped at a hardware and painted a chair, and then went to a restaurant and ate his dinner. The very next day he put a lady to sleep in one of the stores, where she slept for 24 hours.

Okay, Orestes—a niece piece of work which certainly justifies your recent promotion to management of the Temple. Ballys of this sort do attract attention, as you state, and much worth while publicity must have resulted from the wide circulation of your tie-up advertising. The fact that the occasion shattered the record for the past two years speaks for itself.

It's almost unnecessary for us to add that this Round Tabler uses this department, and others in the Herald, to map out his campaign; however, there's photographic evidence on this page that he does just that. Don't wait so long next time, Mack, to let us know what's going on up in your Adirondack community. You can't help the rest of the boys along through silence.

LEE GOLDBERG AND STAFF ISSUED NEAT FOLDER FOR THEATRE

Recently we had occasion to examine a new house organ issued by Lee Goldberg and his Warner Theatre staff down in Louisville, Ky., which, to our way of thinking, is a neat piece of work.

Its fold is particularly interesting in that an eight page pamphlet has been entirely made from a sheet of paper measuring 10" wide by 16" deep. When folded, the size is reduced to a practical 5" x 8" folder.

In the first issue the front cover is given over to institutional copy and some sales copy on noteworthy coming attractions. Turning the page a spread containing the coming week's attractions is before the reader's eyes. Lifting the bottom of the spread, the entire contents of four pages, consisting of breezy movie notes, more institutional copy and brief plugs for coming attractions, are at the convenience of the reader, either to read as is or to fold any desired way. One of the four pages also carries a column headed, "Laffographs," made up of witty excerpts from leading publications. All pages are dressed with small cuts in keeping with the several subjects. The last page was devoted to "A Message from Santa Claus," this number having been issued the week before Xmas.

As we view the above, it appears to be just the sort of house organ to interest the fans and accomplish the double purpose of presenting a program of attractions and institutional selling. We are grateful to Lee Goldberg for sending it along and we'll be interested in further developments.

PAUL GLASE OWNER OF THEATRE LIBRARY THAT RATED A STORY

Possession of a theatre program one hundred and forty years old and a lot of other rare and interesting historical souvenirs relative to the theatre, recently brought mention to Paul E. Glase, Wilmer and Vincent manager in Reading, Pa., in the shape of a two-column head and generously descriptive story in one of the city's leading newspapers.

Under a by-line Glase told an interesting yarn regarding the collection of the large amount of data he gathered over a period of years. The program came from his old friend "Doc" Mengel and concerned the play "Road to Ruin," presented at Covent Garden in the year 1792. His screen records consist of bound volumes of the old "M. P. World" from the time that trade weekly was first published. In addition to bound volumes of "Theatre Magazine" since that paper made its appearance in 1901, he has some 200 volumes covering stage and screen history, along with numerous other books, programs, posters, etc.

Collecting a library of the theatre is a hobby with Paul Glase and we fully appreciate the vast amount of time and trouble he must have put in to amass such an extensive assortment of material. However, we can't get away from the fact that Paul's showmanship qualities came to the front and earned him a corking piece of newspaper publicity. More power to this veteran Round Tabler, whom we haven't had the pleasure of hearing from in quite some time.

THE STOCK ROOM!

It might be an excellent idea to keep a close check on your stock room and introduce a system of checking what you have on hand and where each item goes.

Theatre stock rooms must carry many items necessary for the smooth and uninterrupted operation of the house and such things as carbons, electric bulbs, cleaning supplies, toilet and towel paper, office supplies, statement forms and blanks, spare part for booth and sound equipment, etc., etc., must always be kept on hand.

A stock book with a few pages devoted to each item has been found a good medium to keep check. Enter the name of the item on the top of the page. Make an entry whenever you receive a new supply of any item showing the date received, quantity, where purchased, cost, etc. Below it carry a complete record of every time you take one of the items out of the stock room. This part of your record should show the date it was taken out, where used, whether it was for replacement or new, and who it was delivered to.

With such a record book, and it's simple to keep it accurate once you start it, you can tell at a glance how long any item lasts, how often it required replacement, who used it, etc. Such a system is part of every real showman's operating methods and is generally found where efficient showmen are functioning.

Your stock room represents an important part of your theater; handle it with all the importance due it. You can check waste and save many a dollar through keeping your business-eye focused on those items at all times.

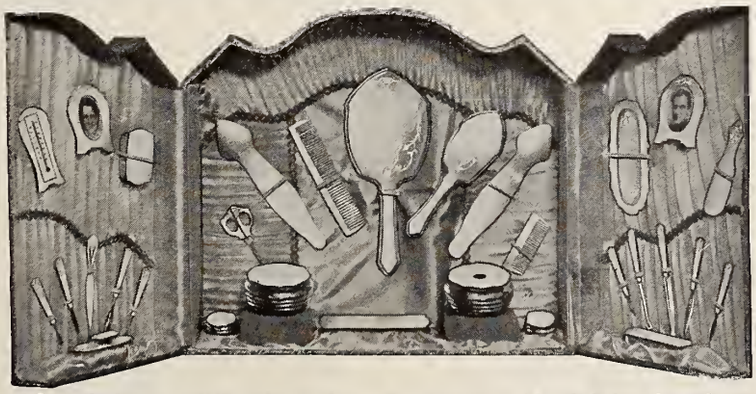
HOME TOWN HONORS TED MACDONALD BY EXHIBITING PORTRAIT

That old, familiar headline, "Local Boy Makes Good," was never more forcibly brought home—Home, we assert—than when a portrait of one Teddy MacDonald, youthful member of the publicity staff at Universal City, Calif., was ceremoniously hung in the lobby of the new Arcade Theatre, Springfield, Mass., the town where Teddy first saw light o' day.

Goldstein Brothers own the Arcade, the newest link in their circuit. MacDonald can rightfully be called a protege of the Brothers, for it was through their good offices that young Teddy went into the West to wrest fame and fortune from the fillum industry. What could be more appropriate than this gesture upon part of the Brothers —the exhibition of a portrait of their emissary to the City of Many Heartbreaks and Failures; their Local Boy who went out there and made good as a ballyhooer of Universal product, both human and celluloid.

A reproduction of the portrait was recently carried in the rotogravure section of "The Springfield Union and Republican." The caption discloses that Joseph Urdang, a Hungarian artist, is responsible for this contribution to American art.

NOVELTY THROWAWAY USED BY RICHMOND HELPED BOOST B. O.



A Novelty throw-away used by Louis A. Richmond, manager of the National Theatre, Boston, Mass., materially aided in running up a most satisfactory gross on recent showings of "Bad Girl."

All this little gag consisted of was a regulation size envelope with a card enclosure. Copy on the outside read, "Don't Open This Unless You Want To See A 'Reel' Bad Girl." The card inside was flanked on either side with a sketch of Sally Eilers and James Dunn and carried appropriate copy relative to picture, theatre and play dates.

Another case of where old Dame Curiosity again asserted herself and we are given to understand that this little stunt was the source of a great deal of comment concerning this picture. Thanks to Richmond for keeping the old ball a-rolling and we'll be looking for further word.

FOX-WEST COAST OFFICIALS MEET

DISTRICT MANAGERS OF FOX THEATERS GATHER IN WICHITA FOR SEMI-ANNUAL SESSION

Aside from the interesting fact that there are a great many members of the Round Table Club shown above, we'd like to call attention to the break given this event by the local newspaper. Certainly there's plenty of evidence in this "Special" that this Wichita paper is pretty much sold on showbusiness; due, undoubtedly, to its favorable reaction to policies pursued by Wichita showmen. And that's the way to have your papers, boys!

SATURDAY IS KIDDIE DAY FOR C. O. CLARK AT BALTIMORE HOUSE

A recent change of policy at the Metropolitan Theatre, a Baltimore, Md., house managed by C. O. Clark, has been instrumental in completely turning over Saturday matinees to the younger element. One portion of the matinee is devoted to a recently formed Mickey Mouse Club and the other to a Kiddie Revue.

Perhaps the following description of advertising done when forming the Mickey Mouse Club will be of interest to many of our members who may have in mind a similar move.

Three weeks in advance Clark ran a trailer announcing plans for the Club. Next, a tie-up was made with a large downtown department store, which agreed to act as sponsor and distribute application blanks good for free admission to the first meeting of the "Mice." Blanks were also distributed at the theatre. For the first meeting of the club a Western picture was shown, at the same time effecting distribution of the Mickey Mouse Club theme song. This song is sung at every meeting.

Heralds were also distributed in all schools in the neighborhood and at Xmas time cards were sent to all members. Other developments included the election of officers and the starting of a serial to keep up interest from week to week.

In conjunction with the Kiddie Revue an orchestra made up of youngsters ranging in age from 12 to 14 is featured under the name of "Our Gang Orchestra." The youthful musicians have all been recruited from dance and elocution schools located in the theatre building. Public interest is kept alive by holding auditions on Saturday mornings. Regarding both of the activities outlined above, we note by a pamphlet that children are admitted at all times for 10 cents. On the same day adults are admitted during matinees for 20 cents and for 25 cents in the evening.

Record Lineage!

A total of 20,166 lines of reader space in local newspapers was secured for the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, Mass., during the last two weeks in January through the efforts of Publicity Director Floyd Bell.

For the week ending January 22, with a bill consisting of Mme. Tetrazzini, Eva Tanguay and the picture, "Two Kinds of Women," the yield was 10,288 lines. For the week ending January 29, with Vincent Lopez, Ranny Weeks, George Dewey Washington and the feature, "High Pressure," a total of 9,878 lines was rung up.

The above is a record for Boston and it may be a high mark for some other cities to take a sock at. Bell had some strong attractions, to be sure, but those 20,000 odd lines didn't get set automatically. So, come on, boys; let's hear your song.

COUCHE REMEMBERED NEEDY CHILDREN BY HOLDING BIG PARTY

The needy children of Portland, Ore., were not forgotten last Xmas by Charles E. Couche, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Portland, Ore. He arranged a party for them, as well as for the inmates of charitable institutions.

A leading local newspaper, normally an ultar-conservative organ, co-operated with a front-page story which included a message from a featured player expressing approval of the party. Special invitations, crediting the player and the newspaper as hosts, were distributed to various institutions. The "Sunshine Division" of Portland and the City Commissioner also lent a hand in this. Transportation facilities for children from neighboring towns were arranged for through cooperation of various railroads and street car lines.

Grouped about an electrically illuminated tree, with a Santa on hand to greet the children were some 2,000 gifts for the kiddies. Each package contained chocolate bars, cookies, doughnuts, candy, etc. The picture played for this occasion was "The Champ" and an enlargement of Liberty Magazine's review, giving the film four stars, was displayed on an easel in the lobby.

Couche received a lot of valuable publicity through his good will measure which has since been reflected at the box-office by increased receipts. We hope to get a further line on this showman's work out in Portland and will look forward to hearing from him. In the meantime the Club wishes him continued success.

Not many newspapers of the better class go in for the running of display ads on the front page; consequently when one does depart from regular custom and permit insertion of a small co-op, it's surely a feather for the cap of the promoter—in this case P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Salem, Mass.

When playing "Palmy Days," Bloomberg arranged with a well-known baker for this two-column by 2 1-2 inch ad to run in the lower left hand corner of the first page. The copy tied in the title of the picture, theatre and baker.

Nice work, P. D., and all at no cost to theatre, we presume, by virtue of the tie-up.

CASH IN ON SEASONAL STUNTS WITH EGG HUNTS AND BUNNIES!

Easter Offers Many Splendid Opportunities For Live-Wire Showmen To Stimulate the B.-O. Via Some Surefire Stunts!

About the first thought that props up in mind after Lent gets under way is Easter. Like every other season of the year, Easter holds its own peculiar fascination for the showman who has a keen desire to capitalize on each and every event, holiday and celebration with his business eye sharply focused on the bank roll. Easter offers many advantageous slants that will help keep that b. r. fat and healthy and we are always delighted to squat ourselves down before the trusty typewriter and talk about several timely gags that fit the season like a glove reflecting, at the same time, much activity to keep your theatre before the public and likewise keep the theatre's receipts up to the pressure made necessary by the survival of the fittest. Maybe the Irish had a better name for it, but in any language we must keep coming to the theatre and with Easter we can swing several good old standby ideas into force and make the getting a wee bit easier.

Easter Egg Hunt!

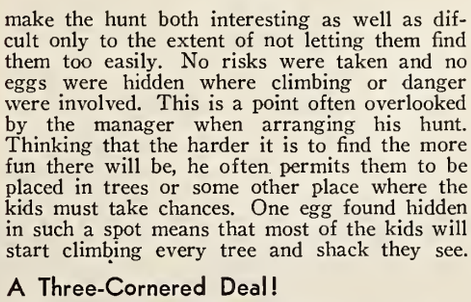
Offers one of the greatest possibilities for directing attention to your theatre and getting you heaps of free publicity and good will. The best way to discuss one of these Hunts would be to tell how an aggressive showman put his over. Then you can either fashion your own along the same lines or revamp it to suit your local situation.

Manager Larson of the Fox Theatre in Boise, Idaho, tied up his Easter Egg Hunt with the Mickey Mouse Club of his theatre and raised so much talk around the town that grown-ups as well as kids entered into the spirit of the occasion. The turn-out was nothing short of phenomenal and it was the talk of the town for weeks after.

He started off by building up interest via a clever publicity campaign and long before the Hunt actually took place he had the kids all on edge awaiting the start. Instructions were clear-cut and easily understood by all. The kiddies were instructed to meet on two streets which the police were to rope off for their benefit The time specified was 9:30 in the morning. Ample provision had been made with the police to guard the youngsters and keep traffic off those streets. At 10 o'clock they formed into a parade and, headed by two motorcycle cops and a band, they marched to a large park. Here they were divided into groups and the hunt started.

Free Eggs For All!

As an inducement to those who would not be among the prize winners to find any of the hidden eggs, every kiddie was informed that they would receive a large decorated candy Easter egg free. Which was a good slant because the number of kids hunting numbered almost a thousand, while there could only be about a hundred winners. Prizes for the Hunt included many valuable items and were well worth the effort and work, but the kids could see no labor attached to such fun and went into it with a will to find those hidden colored eggs.



The cooperation of the local park, education and recreational authorities had been enlisted with the result that the placing of the eggs was carefully arranged and spotted so as to make the hunt both interesting as well as difcult only to the extent of not letting them find them too easily. No risks were taken and no eggs were hidden where climbing or danger were involved. This is a point often overlooked by the manager when arranging his hunt. Thinking that the harder it is to find the more fun there will be, he often permits them to be placed in trees or some other place where the kids must take chances. One egg found hidden in such a spot means that most of the kids will start climbing every tree and shack they see.

Here is one of the half-page newspaper ads run in Hanford to ballyhoo the three cornered tie-up for the local egg hunt. How would this ad look in your own local paper with your theatre as sponsor of the idea?

A Three-Cornered Deal!

Larson was not the only manager who cashed in on a big Easter Egg Hunt. Our records also show that many others took advantage and engineered these Hunts in great style. One of the ads from another western town shows the way it was tied to a newspaper. The ad may suggest something to you along other lines. Look it over; it's from Hanford (state unknown) and shows that the three-cornered tieup included the theatre, the newspaper and a local confectionery and ice cream store. A perfect combination, too. The theatre to sponsor it and grab the goodwill, the newspaper to publicize it and create the interest, and the ice cream store to furnish the Easter eggs and other candy for prizes.

Manager Larson took no chances. Here's the announcement which appeared in the paper for several days advising the kiddies where they were to meet and promising parents absolute safety for the youngsters

Newspapers and Merchants Can Be Tied Into Your Activities To End the Lenten Season With Good-Will and Profits!

In addition to the Hanford ad we are also showing one of the many ads and announcements carried by Larson for his egg hunt. Note how he promises careful supervision and safety for the youngsters during the entire hunt so as to allay any fears of the parents. Keep this and all other angles constantly in mind.

Kids Furnished Eggs!

In Stockton, Cal., Manager Turner of the Fox California Theatre reaped a harvest of publicity and goodwill via the same kind of a hunt. His was staged on the day before Easter Sunday and prior to this day a special matinee was put over for the purpose of building up interest and getting the eggs for the hunt. He charged each kid one hard-boiled egg as admission to the special matinee. These eggs were colored and used for the hunt. Special emphasis were placed on the "hard boiled" angle so as to avoid the kids flocking to the theatre with raw eggs and messing up the house.

Prizes for this hunt included everything imaginable for kids, not forgetting live rabbits, chocolate eggs, ice cream and admission tickets to the theatre. Special prizes included roller skates, dolls and other worth-while toys. Every inducement was offered to get the kids in the hunt and make it interesting. Thousands of eggs were placed in "nests" and were hidden in all sorts of places and because of the large number of youngsters taking part they were divided into two sections and the eggs hidden in two separate places. Public parks and playgrounds, municipal bath houses, etc., were utilized for the purpose.

Easter Stage Revue!

Still another idea is the staging of a gigantic Easter Revue and April Fool Party, or just the Revue. A glance at the reproduction of one of the Fox Alcazar circulars tells just what it was all about.

The tie-up involved the local newspaper, the theatre and the dancing school operated in conjunction with the theatre under the direction of a local dancing teacher with a wide reputation. She gladly volunteered her services because it gave her own school a chance to enroll the more advanced pupils. Remember that slant when you start to work on the organization of your own dancing school at the theatre.

Coloring Easter eggs right in the lobby of your theatre is another angle to create interest. Prior to the hiding of the eggs for one of the Hunts, advertise that special selected children will color

TRY A RABBIT MATINEE TOO!

Last year Manager O'Donnell concentrated on a Rabbit Matinee and found that it meant many extra dollars to his b. o. Other showmen may decide to direct their efforts to this type of a stunt in place of the Easter Egg Hunt, so we are dropping a few lines on how O'Donnell handled it.

In advance a large cut-out rabbit holding a basket of Easter eggs was on an ornamental trellis above his box office. Copy advertised that the Rabbit matinee would take place the following Saturday at 4 P. M.

A cage on the sidewalk, properly protected, containing over fifty live rabbits attracted no end of attention and had a crowd around it for practically the entire day. This was used for four days before the special matinee. All the rabbits were given away from the stage of the theatre.

To publicize the stunt he had about five thousand throwaways printed and distributed in all the schools. By arrangement these cards were handed out right in the class room by the teacher who also made a personal announcement about the matinee.

Through a local tieup he gave each kiddie a candy Easter egg as they entered the theatre. This sort of eased the feelings of the kids who were not lucky enough to win one of the live rabbits.

In some communities it may be possible to promote the rabbits, but even if you must buy them you will find the cost is not too big. Just give this sort of a stunt the right help in advertising directing your chief fire at the children. They will turn out as they did for O'Donnell—to the tune of about two hundred extra dollars on the day's receipts. Worth it? You answer the question yourself.

BUNNY MATINEES AND EGG HUNTS!

the blank number of eggs for the hunt in the lobby of your theatre. Fix up a long table with the necessary pahaphernalia and let the customers watch them as they go through the lobby or come in from the street out of curiosity.

A Word of Caution!

At this point a word of caution is essential. DON'T attempt to stage a hunt in your theatre. The last manager who tried that found himself with about eight hundred dollars worth of repairs. Those kids literally ripped the theatre apart to find eggs. And where they didn't go hunting is nobody's business. Even seats were torn open in the frenzy to find the eggs. Kids are not going to stop and reason over such things. All they know is that if they find the lucky eggs they cash in with sweet prizes and the envy of all their playmates. That's enough for them. Off they go and Lord help the theatre while that hunt is in progress.

Stick to the public playgrounds and parks and you'll get far more benefit from it. The adults will come along to watch, the police will protect you and the school authorities will be glad to send a flock of teachers along to help keep order.

We've only touched on the Easter Hunt briefly. Maybe too briefly, but after all the important thing is the idea itself. Any smart showman should be able to take that idea and work it out to best suit his own town and theatre. Just get behind the idea and make a big thing out of it.

Schools Are Closed!

Don't forget that schools are closed for Easter Week and programs ought to be framed to appeal to them as well as the adult trade. Book appropriate pictures and keep anything suggestive off your screen for that week. There are enough good pictures available to do so.

FOR EASTER WEEK!

Your local florist will gladly co-operate with the theatre by furnishing plants and greens to be placed around the lobby, foyer or lounge rooms. This suggestion is particularly timely right now and helps the appearance of the theatre considerably.

Why not phone your florist NOW and work out the details before it slips your mind and you forget all about it? A little credit card is generally all they ask in return for the courtesy, and it's worth all of that in any man's town.

McCUAN USING MANY TRICKS OF TRADE TO PUT OVER HIS FILMS

Interesting little show-selling gags are still being turned out by L. W. McCuan, manager of the Cameo Theatre in Mountain Grove, Mo., including trick calendars, heralds and other novel advertising matter.

He issued a small monthly calendar a short time ago with pad containing program for each day and alternate leaves for advertisers. It was stated that the ads had several misspelled words, and the first three persons taking these to the advertiser became entitled to a guest ticket.

Another small herald he recently distributed carried the heading, "Am I Wrong?" and went on to state that Tallulah Bankhead was another Garbo, or better. The bottom portion of the herald read, "Am I Right?" Both were printed in large type.

A neat little folder, evidently designed for rural communities, also brought good results. The outside cover read, "Howdy, Folks!" Copy on inside was aimed to sell the reader on driving over to town to take luncheon at some deservedly famous hotel or restaurant and to relax for two hours of good entertainment at the Cameo. There was other institutional copy and the back cover listed attractions.

Just to let you all know that McCuan is on the job where "costless" activities are concerned, let us state that he occasionally promotes a four-page house program, interspersed with ads from local merchants.

It's interesting to check upon Mack's activities again and we hope he will continue to let his fellow members know what's doing in show-business out in Mountain Grove.

FRED MEYER STILL TURNING OUT FINE DISPLAYS IN LOBBY

There may be a narrow lobby in the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., where Fred S. Meyer holds forth as managing director, but this is not the first occasion we've had to call attention to it and the striking effects he obtains on both entrance and interior, even if quarters are somewhat cramped.

Note by photo the atmospheric treatment given this lobby two weeks in advance of "East of Borneo." Palm trees and shrubbery were placed along both side walls and we believe that you'll be able to discern the several jungle animals; at least, in the original there are two elephants, a dromedary and an old bear and two cubs, all skulking along the sides of the lobby. We gather these are papiermache beasts, but, if they're not, then Fred will have to put you wise.

Another recent happening out Milwaukee way, just to show you all that this showman never lets an opportunity get by, was distribution of cards to 10,000 teachers attending an annual convention in that city. Every one who registered received a card which, when presented at the box office, entitled the holder to admission at a reduced rate. The "service" angle was stressed in the copy on card.

Getting back to the subject of Fred Meyer's lobby, it, to our way of thinking, was a neat piece of work, particularly in view of the small amount of space available for this type of display. But experience is a good teacher and he has had many occasions in the past to get the utmost from the Alhambra's front and inner lobbies. We have a corking campaign of Fred's on hand in reference to putting over a football picture, and while it's rather unseasonable right at this time of the year, we're going to get it together and have it set up in type, even though his fellow showmen may have to put it away in their tickler files for next September.

JAMES MASON GIVES IDEA HOW SHOWS ARE SOLD OUT IN DAKOTA

This is the first opportunity we've had to present information concerning activities of one of our more recently-joined members, James Mason, manager of the Strand Theatre, Minot, S. D., and it's a safe conclusion that there's no grass growing under the feet of this Round Tabler.

Minot is in the real West and when Mason gets ready to show a "western" he treats the town to some regular atmosphere. In the case of "Range Law," he secured the service of a real bucking broncho and a rider who knew all the tricks of the game. This bally halted on every corner and went through its bag of tricks. The cowboy was dressed in regulation paraphernalia, six-guns and all, and two cards on either side of the broncho advertised the attraction.

At the theatre two six-sheets were formed into an "A" board effect and placed directly in front of the box office. On the marquee two cutouts made from three-sheets were mounted and spotlighted at night time. Felt pennants and heads of Buck Jones were strung around the marquee and large, cutout letters spelling name of star, were mounted on a velour-backed panel above the box-office. Regular displays also lent to the general scheme.

A Good Effect!

When he arranged the lobby for "Safe in Hell," the entire background and front were done in brilliant red. All routine displays, including the cutout letters, were treated to secure the flame effect, and bright crepe paper, cut into four foot streamers, was hung all around the edge of marquee to give the effect of waving flame. To further carry out this scheme, all outside lights were changed to red for the engagement, and, to top it all off, red flares were obtained from one of the local railway offices and burned on the sidewalk and marquee during the opening evening performance.

Tried a Dog Show!

A dog show played an important part of his campaign made on "Penrod and Sam," inasmuch as an important portion of this picture centers on Penrod's dog. So Mason and the local daily paper sponsored a show, to which more than 300 muts of all description were brought by their kid-owners. Kids and dogs were lined up in two rows facing each other in front of the theatre and the judges then walked through the center of the lines. A local officer helped keep the crowd of adults and youngsters in order. Guest tickets were given to each kid who brought a dog along and the winners were given twelve tickets each.

Results—At Small Cost!

To sum up, Mason's method of exploiting the Buck Jones picture brought in excellent returns and similar results followed from his efforts on "Safe in Hell." The expense in connection with the latter was negligible, providing one has the necessary lights, and the entire effect most striking. The dog show was a great stunt and one that always goes over unless it has been worked too often. In this case the newspaper gave full cooperation in the playing up of advance and other stories covering the event.

For his first contribution, Mason is certainly off to a good start and we sincerely hope he'll continue to be an active member of this Club. He sent along a couple of snap-shots on the western bally but both are too dark to reproduce. Next time he'll send some brighter ones. In the meantime, we and all his fellow Round Tablers wish him lots more success.

Baltimore Change

The Durkee Theatre interests recently announced the transfer of George R. Peppler, manager of the Redwing Theatre, Baltimore, Md., to management of the State Theatre, Havre de Grace. Charles Turner, formerly at the State, is now in charge of the Redwing.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

C. E. Duffey is connected with Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., of Montreal, Que., Canada, and at the present time his address is the Victoria Theatre, Sherbrooke, Ontario. We've often had occasion to hear from Duffey, for he has sent us from time to time interesting accounts of what's doing at the Victoria. However, for the life of us we can't give you his title, for he neglected to include that on the biographical data blank. Furthermore, the Duffeys were always a reticent clan when we knew them back in the old country.

C. E. Duffey

At any rate, this member of our Club was born in Richmond, Quebec, in '88 and was educated in schools and colleges of that city. He started in show-business at an early age and has been connected with privately owned theatres in various capacities. He has been in charge of the Victoria, Premier and Casino, all Sherbrooke theatres and controlled by Consolidated. He is active in community life, being a member of the local Elks, Knights of Pythias and the D. O. K. K. of Barre, Vt. He has held all offices in his local Elks and K. of P.

We're going to list C. E. as chief of his present house until we hear differently, and we're also here to tell you that to all appearances this showman will continue to follow his present line of endeavor. At least, he tells us that he would undoubtedly retrace his steps, could that occasion present itself.

Shocked into action by what seemed to him the rare sight of a group of theatre managers amicably engaged in discussion of plans for proposed benefit performances to be held at Utica, N. Y., theatres, Eddie Burke, of Fort Plain, N. Y., forthwith sent us the above photo as evidence of his dazed sensibilities.

Believe it or not, Eddie, theatre men do not always fight like cats and dogs; on the contrary, you'll find that they average up as a pretty regular bunch of fellows. True, any live manager it out to get business and one patron is as good as the other when it comes to filling seats. But, honest, they're not out gunning for one another, as some are wont to believe. And when such an occasion as the one depicted here presents itself, it's a ten to one shot that each and every one contributed many constructive ideas to put the benefits over in a big way.

By GUY JONES

One big laugh the independent gets out of his circuit opposition is the supposedly indifferent appearance of the circuit manager or his assistant as he stands outside the independent's house with a tally clock in his pocket, keeping a count on the number of patrons buying tickets. Of course this famous scout actually thinks that no one knows why he keeps that hand in his pocket.

P. S.—The independents are still in business.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Fred J. Sarr started his career in showbusiness when he was 21 years of age, which means that if we're not giving away any secrets, this Round Tabler has seen a lot of 'em come and go in this game, considering the 27 winters and summers that have passed since he began with the Shea outfit over in New England.

Fred J. Sarr

He put in seven years with Shea in various executive capacities and then set sail for Rochester, N. Y., where he spent four years with Fay's Rochester. Then he had a yen for the Middle West and migrated to Detroit to spend two years with the Miles circuit. New England again called him and at this time he formed a connection with Publix that continued for the next two years. Following his return to New England he put in a couple of years at the Fox-Astoria and then went up to Oswego, N. Y., where he was appointed city manager.

That last move of Sarr's took him back to familiar country, for he was born in Syracuse, N. Y., a short run from Oswego. This Round Tabler is married and active in community life, being a member of the Odd Fellows, Elks and Kiwanis. He tells us he's in show-business to stay, and we believe him.

Cantor to Aberdeen

David L. Cantor of Los Angeles, Calif., has been appointed manager of the Warner Theatre, Wishkah Street, Aberdeen, Wash., it was recently announced by George Weiss, Northwest division manager.

ASSISTANT MANAGERS!

Managers who are members of the Club should take steps to enroll their assistants in our organization as soon as possible.

It will give them an added interest in their work and help you to impress upon them the many responsibilities that go with theatre management.

Assistants so enrolled at the request of their superiors are entitled to all the advantages of the Club but do not receive membership certificates until they have been promoted to a manager's berth.

Hundreds of our most active members joined while they were assistants and found our pages most helpful in acquiring a keen understanding of the manifold duties in theatre management, advertising, exploitation, etc. It's the real school of showmanship and provides a much-needed incentive for them to advance in the business.

MEYERS TRYING OUT DIFFERENT KIND OF ADS IN NEWSPAPERS

Concluding that general run of theatre ads all looked very much alike as to copy, layout, etc., George B. Meyers, manager of the Grand Theatre, Henderson, Ky., has been striving to inject new angles in his newspaper advertising.

For instance, when making up copy on "Sob Sister" he laid out the ad to partially represent a small page of a tab newspaper. The top line read "Grand Special," with two boxed "Extras" on either side. Underneath was the "Volume" number, city and date line. The headline, "James Dunn Scores Big Hit in "Sob Sister" at Grand Today," followed. The balance of the ad carried a mat of star, and title in large type, along with other copy that stood out well owing to plenty of white space.

Meyers has also been experimenting with a new type of circular made up with mimeographed copy and imprinted cut. Comic sketches accompanied the copy, "Did You Ever Have Your Hat Fly Off Your Head—Or Have Your Hair Stand Up From a Thrill—Or Jump Out of Your Seat From Watching An Exciting Movie." Then followed a sketch of a spider web and copy, "No You Haven't—But If You Do We Won't Blame You When You See 'The Spider.'" The imprinted cut was placed at the right of the spider web and its heavy blackness strongly contrasted with the balance of the circular.

This Round Tabler would like to see other specimens of ads that are different from regular run and suggests that we search out this type of material. So do your best for Meyers, brother members, and when you run or come across an ad that's stands out from others on the theatrical page of a newspaper, shoot it along so we can pass on the information.

MASON USED "DARE" ANGLE WHEN SELLING A "HORROR" PICTURE

There are at least 100 daring citizens in the town of McAllen, Texas, where L. J. Mason manages the Palace Theatre, for that many replied to his announcement that an award would be given any man and another woman who would sit through a private screening of "Frankenstein"—one on each side of the house, with all lights out and doors locked. Mason took the first two to apply for the privilege.

On the night of the preview for the man and woman a large crowd gathered outside the theatre, curious to see if the house would really be darkened and whether the stunt would be carried out.

The above stunt has come into wide use as part of campaigns made on this picture and is right in line with the sales policy to create a "dare" angle. In this case it materially helped to gain city-wide attention for the picture. Other angles might be added, such as a physical examination before allowing them to see the picture, or taking reading of blood pressure before and after show. Sensational ballys are also playing an important part with the merchandising of this show. We are glad to know that Mason came out so well with his stunt.

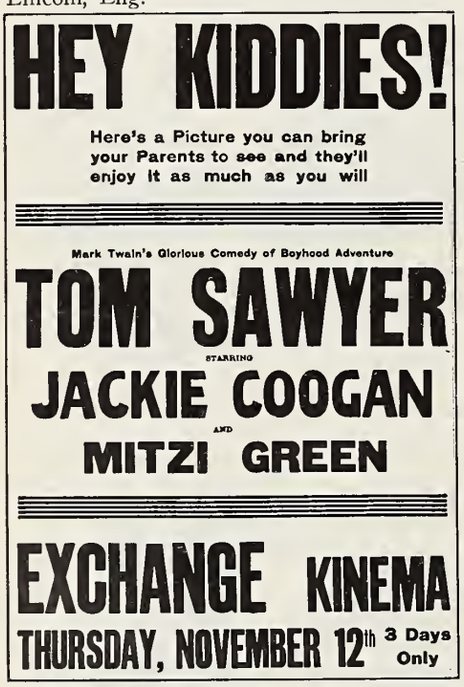
NEW ORLEANS

WHAT ABOUT THE ORGAN?

Recently several aggressive showmen tried an experiment and engaged feature organists for the expensive instruments they found idle in their theatres.



The reason we became vitally interested was because they asked us to secure the organists for them, and we did. So we made it a point to watch the experiment closely to see how it worked out.

So far it is such a success that the district manager of one outfit has informed us that he is having the organs in three other houses overhauled and will require organists within the next two weeks. The other manager is so pleased and his patrons so well satisfied that he has made the organlogue a most important feature of his program. Backing the organist up with all sorts of publicity and advertising.

If you have a good organ in your theatre it may pay you to investigate this angle. We will gladly give you the names of managers who are now completely sold on the box office value of a good organist and let them tell you about it themselves.

HARRY HARRIS WOULD LIKE TO SEE SAMPLES OF TEASER ONE-SHEET

Teaser posters, or weekly D. C.'s as these one-sheets are called over in England, form an important portion of a theatre's advertising appropriations in that country and we are herewith presenting a sample of one recently used to good effect by H. B. Harris, general manager of Exchange Talkies, Lincoln, Eng.

He asserts that though this type of poster is in general use over there, the same stereotyped setting is carried out year in, year out. In order to make his distinctive he has consequently made a practice of altering his set-up each week, and endeavoring, when possible, to catch the eye with original angles and varied settings.

It takes work to think up 52 good poster ideas each year, so we're sending out an S. O. S. call for Brother Harris. Come on, boys, those of you who have recently made up some snappy teaser posters. Shoot them along to Club headquarters so we can pass along some of your ideas to this enterprising British showman. He'll do the same to you. Thanks!

Veteran Joe Simon

Joseph Simon, in charge of the National Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., for the past 20 years, is still at the same old stand. This house, also referred to as the 4th Avenue, has just reopened after having been dark for some time.

SELLING STRAND AT SYRACUSE KEEPS LEO ROSEN ON HIS TOES

From up in that live upper New York state city of Syracuse comes word of recent show-selling work done by Leo Rosen, manager of the Strand Theatre. What with Victory Month, supervision of construction of unusual lobby displays and sundry other activities, we're here to tell you all that he's been a busy showman.

For one thing, he dressed the lobby during Victory Drive to resemble a wartime dugout and won first prize for costless, novel decoration. Everything used, including soldier's and fighting paraphernalia, was promoted free of cost to house. Even the additional help was on the free list. The larger photo reproduced on this page shows the front of the Strand decorated for this occasion. Compoboard was used and the blasts on either side illustrate coming attractions for the month.

Rosen used a gag for "Penrod & Sam" that ought to prove acceptable to many of our members, providing, of course, that something similar hasn't been used, or if so, overdone. Syracuse is quite a big city and therefore has many public schools. It was arranged with groups of five youngsters in each school to place daily on the blackboards the following copy: "Penrod and Sam Starts at the Strand Friday." On a Saturday morning all youngsters assembled at a stated point and paraded to the theatre where they were treated to a free show. Appropriately lettered banners were carried on route.

Work of Strand artist, Will Wills, figures conspicuously in most of the displays made for this house. In the smaller photo, showing front of house, note the "Manhattan Parade" sign. While it may not be noticable in the reproduction, the top was made to represent a New York City skyline, with lights placed so as to illuminate the miniature cutout windows. Novel lettering of the title also lent to the general attractiveness of the display. This photo will also convey some idea of the flash fronts used for this theatre, for reason that the Strand is located a short distance from what is termed strictly Syracuse downtown and therefore demands a display which will attract.

It's a pleasure to again have Syracuse represented through the good offices of Leo Rosen and also to have the opportunity to get a line on his campaigns. That school gag of his ought to be a corker to apply to any picture having particular appeal to youngsters and he hopes that it will prove of interest to other showmen in this organization. In the meantime, we'll assume that the next word from this section will not be so far apart as the last.

The value of good exterior lighting appears to be forcibly brought out by the work of Rosen and his staff at the Strand. Here is a theatre somewhat off the beaten path, but we'll lay dollars to doughnuts that any one who can still use their eyes can obtain a darn good idea of what picture or attraction is playing this house. No one will dispute the fact that a brilliantly lighted front will outsell a dim one, and this reminder of Rosen's may be an inspiration to check up.

CHARLES KOERNER is a Baltimoreian and comes recommended to this Club by no other than our old friend Fred Schmuff, well known showman and Round Tabler. Koerner manages the Red Wing Theatre down in Baltimore, is a fast stepper when it comes to bringing in business, and unless we're very much mistaken he'll prove a valuable acquisition to this outfit. Now, with that send-off, Charles, how can you miss? So let's hear all about what you're doing to keep that Red Wing fluttering.

C. P. GREENWOOD is the manager of the Paxtonian Theatre, Paxton, Ill., and he's another recruit in line for introduction to the veteran members of this organization. He is in charge of a 500 seat unit of McCollum's Theatres, equipped to present anything in the picture line. Now that you are a Round Tabler, Greenwood, it's your duty to keep headquarters informed concerning show-business in your city. Help keep the old ball rolling along by sending in a good tip for your fellow members.

ARTHUR R. JOY recently took our advice to "procrastinate no longer" in respect to becoming a member of this organization and so here he is boys, up for membership and introduction to the rest of the fellows. Joy recently took over management of the Liberty Theatre, one of Amalgamated Theatre Company's houses at Trail, B. C. Prior to entering show-business he was a newspaper man, and before that an usher in a theatre. So it's apparent that the lure of the screen brought him back to his first-love. He's only 23 years of age and well on the way up the ladder. Keep the Club posted, Arthur, on what you are doing to sell shows.

JAMES V. PISAPIA was recently made assistant manager of the Beacon Theatre in Port Washington, N. Y., a house managed by the well known William "Bill" Levy. James was formerly with the service staff at the famous Roxy Theatre, Manhattan, where he became inoculated with the unique system used there to train ushers and other staff members. He's already set about installing a similar system at the Beacon, a house generally conceded to be one of Long Island's finest. With Bill Levy to lend him a helping hand, keep your eye on Jimmy and the Beacon. Next thing you know you'll be reading about his promotion to a post of full fledged manager in some house.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BUD LAWLER is another independent manager to become a member of this Club and to him we also extend the official welcome of this organization. He operates the Roxy Theatre out in Mounds, Ill., a small house but one that's equipped with the best of what it takes to put over a good show. It will be interesting to hear what Lawler is doing in show-business, and if this new member will shoot along some of his ideas on this subject, we'll see that his fellow members are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER CHENOWETH is another new member of this organization and when we last heard from him he was busy putting over Edward Everett Horton at the Hollywood Playhouse, Hollywood, Calif. In a later issue we'll tell you about some of the stunts he's using to publicize Horton and right now will acknowledge his membership application and introduce him to his fellow showmen. In the meantime, we'll be looking for further information concerning his activities on the Coast.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. P. HARRIS is a Long Islander and hails from Corona where he manages the Plaza Theatre, a Loew house in the midst of a live suburban community. He, also, has become a member of this ever-increasing army of enterprising showmen and soon we'll be getting some hot news from Corona-Corona. Come through, Harris, with an account of that stunt you put over recently—the one that made the old cash register sing a merry tune—so we can pass the dope along to other Round Table members.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CLAUDE FLATER hails from Bloomfield, Ind., where he is in charge of the Citadel Theatre. Apparently this new member of the Club is an independent operator for we note by his card that no chain or circuit affiliations are claimed. That being the case, we'll expect to hear some bald statements from Claude as to how show business is progressing out his way, and what he's doing to fill those 600 seats. We'll be awaiting your next communication, Flater, so please keep that in mind.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MITCHELL B. SOLOMON is located way out in Phoenix, Arizona, where he skippers the Strand Theatre. We are also glad to have this showman for another Club representative out in his state and this little paragraph will serve to introduce him to his fellow members. Now that he's one of us, we hope that he will do full share in the way of making interesting contributions to this department. We and all your friends in the Round Table want to hear about show-business out your way, Mitch! so shoot along some information.

BERNIE COHEN has the job of assisting Dave Samuels with the management of the Windsor Theatre over in Brooklyn, N. Y., and, according to his boss, has the makings of a real showman. Bernie is only eighteen years of age and been in the game but a short time, but has displayed qualities which stamp him as a fellow who will get along in show-business. Convey our best regards to Dave, Bernie, and do your darndest to keep the old ball rolling along at a lively pace.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

VERNE S. GORRELL is an independent theatre operator out in Winamac, Ind., where he owns the Isis Theatre. We are taking this opportuntiy to extend a cordial welcome to this recently-elected member of our Club and will look forward with a great deal of interest to any information this new member may contribute in the future regarding show-business conditions in his community.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BERT HENSON has charge of all advertising for Publix theatres in the Omaha, Neb., district and we're indeed glad to list his name among the many advertising and publicity men on the Club roster. We'll be calling on Bert one of these days to air his views on some phase of operation in his end of the business, and in the meantime will cheerfully receive any contribution he may make in behalf of his fellow showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. M. EAGLESTON (Mrs.) is now listed as another lady-manager member of the Round Table Club and she hails from Seymour, Ind., where she has charge of the Majestic Theatre, an independent house that seats 1,000. That's enough to keep any one lady stepping and unless we miss our guess this new member will have some interesting stories to contribute to this department. Welcome to this outfit, Mrs. Eagleston, and please try to do your share to keep these pages full of live show-selling ideas.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY KORNBLUM is another new member of this organization and he hails from out in Evansville, Ill., where he operates the Rosedale Theatre. We are not sure whether Harry just manages or both manages and owns this house, but we do know that he is not hooked up with any chain or circuit. His house is well equipped to present the best in modern picture entertainment and we'll be waiting to hear what methods he follows to sell shows out in his town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. E. HART is a member of the firm of Smith & Hart of Auburn, Ind., operators of the Court Theatre and we've already had occasion to tell Round Tabler's something about this new member's way of doing business. But that was just a forerunner of what is to come, unless we're very much mistaken, so watch out for further dope from this showman.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED LOOMER is one of our new members who is located out in Chicago, Ill., where he has charge of the Shore Theatre. He, also, has caught the Club spirit and we're very glad to record that Fred has joined this organization. There are a great many Club representatives in his city and we want this new Round Tabler to convey our best regards to all when he meets any of them. In the meantime, we'll be looking for some news about his way of selling shows.

INC SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE EN ROUTE.

Dear "J. C.":

Here's an idea for you, "J. C." What with summer coming along within a few months, it occurs to me that a lot of outdoor resort managers are beginning to look around for attractions that will stimulate attendance at their respective places of amusement, and right now it is very likely that they are in somewhat of a quandary. Well, if they are wise, they will follow in the footsteps of Max Syern of Olentangy Park in Columbus, Ohio, who installed an RCA Photophone 35 MM portable apparatus in the outdoor theatre and gave his patrons a complete programme of sound pictures three evenings a week last summer. Olentangy is one of the oldest and most successfully operated summer amusement parks in the country, and if you happen to bump into any outdoor resort managers along your extensive route, you might suggest to them to look into this matter. The RCA Photophone portable sound equipment is just the thing for them. It is all AC operated, with no batteries or motor generators necessary, and you can set up the machine all ready for operation within fifteen minutes. There must be a lot of outdoor resorts in the neck of the woods through which you and "April Shower" will traipse during the next few months, so you tell 'em all about it, "J. C." I received your letter about the dance pavilions and thank you for the suggestion. Have turned it over to the proper department and you will hear from me later. So long, "J. C." Don't get lost in the desert.

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Los Angeles

DEAR HERALD:

On Hollywood boulevard is a building with a sign "The Church of higher Spiritualism" and close to it is a building with a sign "School of Phylosophy" and between them is a sign "Intestinal Baths."

Now our theory is that if you mix a little "phlyosophy" with a sprinkling of "Higher Spiritualism" and then take an "Intestinal Bath" you ought to come out all right.

Well, that's the lowdown on Hollywood and Los Angeles as we get it from a bird's-eye view. Most fellows wouldn't put it quite that way. Nevertheless we like this country. We like the people, and there are a lot of them. We like her oranges, and we bought a whole water-bucket full for two bits. We like their ham and bacon because it has the Omaha brand on it and has that good old corn flavor that you don't get from any other packing center.

The only difference we can note between a radio crooner and a couple of lovey doveys on their honeymoon is that they both make us sick.

Speaking of motion picture critics. We've got too many "yes men" in this business. Producers will send out invitations to a lot of their friends and a bunch of free tickets to the critics to attend a preview of their pictures in order to get the "audience reaction," and while we wouldn't want to say that free tickets would have any influence on the critic's reports, yet we doubt if they would poison their minds against the producers.

We used to take chocolate bon bons and gum drops to a girl friend of ours in order to find out if she loved us. She always said she did, but we didn't feel sure of it, so we sent a fellow to call on her with instructions to get at the truth of the matter and the report he brought back was altogether different. So from then on we let him buy the bon bons and gum drops, but she afterwards married a Swede.

Personally we would sooner take the judgment of Bill Smith and Sally Jones as to the merits of a picture than the judgment of all the "free ticket" critics between Grindstone, South Dakota, and Tombstone, Ariz., and that will leave out Hollywood and New York.

When they get the warships of all the nations gathered together at Shanghai, if something happens so they go to shooting holes through one another, wouldn't it be a big joke on the League of Nations? Every gun crew will have a chip on its shoulder and every admiral will want to boss the job. It looks like the Jap is going to outsmart the whole world.

We haven't yet found our tire cover that was stolen from our car at Santa Monica, but we have asked the city council of that suburb of Hollywood to expunge from the records the remarks we made when we found it had been stolen.

The time was when the theatres sought the service, but now the service must seek the theatres, and every theatre that closes reduces the physical value of the service just that much, and producers would do well to recognize that fact, and to remember also that over-production doesn't tend to stimulate business. As proof of this, recall the prices of wheat and corn last year, when we had overproduction.

Maybe we shouldn't talk that way. Maybe we should use soft soap, but we never could stand the smell of soft soap ever since we helped our mother make it back in Indiana. In fact, we don't use much soap of any kind. Our wife says we don't use half enough. We might be induced to use soft soap if it wasn't so darned high, but the press agents have got a corner on it.

When Hollywood puts on a splurge she puts on a big one, with red flares 'n' everything. Sid Grauman gave a preview of "Mata Hari" at his Chinese theatre recently and invited all the celluloid celebrities, bellwethers, trail blazers and lead mules of the community.

The array of sables and ermines was a delight to the feminine heart and the flash of the diamonds gave everybody on Hollywood boulevard "Klieg eyes" between Gower street and Canyon drive. The powwow they staged would make a Sioux war dance look like an old ladies' quilting party.

At the height of the excitement the famous Dr. Einstein drove up in a $24,000 Italian limousine which was the occasion for a general outburst of enthusiasm. The crowd went wild, the stars were all smiles, Sid Grauman rushed up and wrung his hand and told him how happy he was that he had honored the occasion with his presence. Wallace Beery said: "Delighted to meet you, Doctor." Clark Gable said: "Just look there, girls." Some of the stars tried to kiss him and Al Christy offered to give him one of his bullfoundland pups. The uproar was continuous until the famous Doctor was ushered to his seat by three burly policemen. The entire company congratulated itself on being a guest on such an auspicious occasion.

Everything went lovely until the end of the performance when it developed that the famous Dr. Einstein was none other than Harry Goldberg, a tailor who had been framed up for the occasion by Joe Wilharber of the foreign auto rentals, and that Jack Bean, dress suit maestro, had made an "Einstein" out of a tailor. Now all of cinema land has cracked ice on its head and hot water bottles at its feet. Goldberg had the time of his life for three hours.

We can't wait forever for the blizzards to subside, so we are about to head April Shower toward Arizona, New Mexico and Texas in spite of the protest that will be made here. But we are not going until we have had our picture taken with Polly and Marie.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

Baltimore Keith's

Week ending February 12

With Joe Candullo acting as master of ceremonies and introducing each act with short, pithy chatter, the initial program of vaudeville, which has returned after an absence of several years, was finely received by crowded houses at every performance February 6. The new policy has been started by Fred C. Schanberger, Sr., head of the Schanberger interests.

Gloria Lee and the Sherr Brothers were offered first, doing their bit in two, the trio in a fast tap routine with Lee in some athletic work to running applause. Then the Sherrs came on in a "drunk" song and dance duet, which won laughs and applause. Lee followed this in toe tap work on steps and got a big hand followed by the Sherrs singing "We Gotta Heavy Levee Date Tonight With Mandy" and all together in a dance, with a special flood light making them look like colored troupers.

Candullo then introduced Arthur Tracy as The Street Singer. Tracy was heard singing behind the curtain, which parted revealing him before the microphone with a pretty blonde playing his accompaniment at the piano. He went into "If I Were King," then encored with "Call Me Darling," which he sang also in German, and then encored with "Girl of Mine You're Gone From Me." He encored again with "Eli, Eli."

Next followed Jans and Whelan doing their comedy chatter, songs and music, with their routine changed to include a likeable hip shaking blonde. "St. James Infirmary" was sung by the girl, drawing applause and laughter. Then Jans and Whelan went into their old routine, winning the audience particularly with "Skidoodl-oo" and "Ska-gag-a-la-ga" hokum finishing with "Robert E. Lee."

Omaha Orpheum

Week ending February 4

The "Harry Delmar 1932 Revue," with Delmar as master of ceremonies, opens with his cast of eight girls in a dance and song, "Hello, RKO," each girl speaking for some state in the Union. Charles Kemper, eccentric comedian, appears as a goof and jokes with Delmar. An oldfashioned costume dance follows, the eight girls coming down from a modernistic throne, while a herald in Hussar uniform stands guard at each side of the first step. The guards, the Remo brothers, then do a tap dance. More dancing, more joking, a song, "Good for Nothing But Love," by Lucille June, a song by the m.c., and then a pageantry dance, with a huge butterfly in the backstage drop, much-bejeweled, is the finale. The entire cast reappears singing "Go Home and Tell Your Mother" and the rest of the relatives how good the show is.

A comedy skit with the act, portraying Ben Hur, Paul Revere and Jessie James, provokes much laughter.

Leta Wales, in a scene within prison walls as a shackled prisoner, sings a number of songs.

Phil Spitalny at Capitol

Phil Spitalny, orchestra leader, will act as guest conductor at the New York Capitol, beginning February 19, during the absence of Yasha Bunchuk, on vacation at Palm Beach.

ARSENE SIEGEL

This master musician has, for the past three years, been featured at the Fisher theatre, Detroit. He was born in Lyons, France, and came to America at the age of 13. He originally studied piano, organ and composition with the intention of becoming a concert pianist and composer but the glamour and opportunities in the theatre organ field won him over and a theatre organist he became.

At the age of 16 Siegel was a demonstrator for Wurlitzer and a bit later became solo organist in the Lubliner & Trinz houses in Chicago. Louis Lipstone discovered him and he was given the position of concert organist at the Chicago. Such was his success there that he was put in the Uptown and he also broadcast over WEBH. After being in Chicago for a number of years he was sent to the new Fisher, where he since has been.

Mastbaum Benefit Nets $4,000

The Mastbaum, Philadelphia, recently gave an elaborate performance for the benefit of the local Musicians Protective Association. Approximately $4,000 was gathered for unemployed musicians.

Begin Vaudeville Programs

Warners' Ohio and the Madison, Publix, at Mansfield, Ohio, have inaugurated vaude-film policies. Both feature organ and orchestral overtures, and have dropped admissions to 35 and 45 cents.

Radio Feature on Stage

The Sisters of the Skillet, Eddie East and Ralph Dumke, featured on the NBC radio network, have started a long RKO vaudeville engagement in the metropolitan area.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Warfield

Week Ending February 10

The Warfield theatre, built for vaudeville, lends itself particularly well to the intimate type of stage entertainment and this is the style that has been favored since the shifting of Fanchon and Marco "Ideas" to the Fox. There are no elaborate lighting effects, no stage spectacles and no line girls, but there is a galaxy of individual talent, much of which is drawn from local sources.

This week's show opens with a playlet, headed by Bob Lee of the orchestra, and the slightly naughty turn is forgiven by the audience which is impressed by its cleverness. A Dutch windmill setting features the stage and Paul Ash leads his musical gang through a breezy rendition of "Shaking That African," at the same time giving a verbal description of the number through a loudspeaker.

Don and Darlene offer an adagio with many good poses, with the beauty and grace of Darlene a factor in putting the act over. Benay Venuta sings "Cigars, Cigaretes" effectively in costume, the song scoring quite a hit.

Bert Fay staggers on with a banjo and a bottle and offers some selections from the opera "Bohunk." His fun-making reaches a climax when he manipulates a pair of shoes about three feet in length, getting into many odd positions. This act suggests the turn of Eddie Lambert and the crowd likes it so well that an encore is necessary.

Ward and Pinkie put on a slapstick dancing and acrobatic turn which suggests that they must require a lot of arnica, but they come out of it smiling. Their slow-motion stunt is a winner. Barton and Young do a comedy turn which hinges largely on a wrangle with the drummer of the orchestra.

Two musical novelties are offered by Paul Ash and his boys, one representing a clock store, with sound effects galore, the other a musical journey around the world, visiting such points as Mexico, Cuba, New York, England, Holland, Germany, France, Italy, Russia, China, Japan, San Francisco and Chicago. A dainty miss manipulates a rack of cards to assist the audience in making the journey. The stay in China and Japan is marked by the popping of toy pictols, while the end of the trip is reached at Chicago amid the booming of real firearms.

Paul Ash contents himself with leading the band and introducing the individual acts, which he does in clever style.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending February 17

"Springtime Fancies," Saenger stage production, is colorful, well staged and has in it entertainment of considerable merit. The Strakova Girls' producer is to be commended for the way she put them through the intricate routine in the opening. That turn is on a par with those presented by girls who have worked together for an entire season in an act. Lee Barton Evans' song number also was well received. Another hit of the show was winsome Helen McFarland, who dances, sings and plays a xylophone. Another well deserved period of applause greeted David and Hilda Murrau, unusually gifted dancers, and Lou Forbes' Four Horsemen.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Charlie Agnew, who wields the baton at the Edgewater Beach hotel, comes from the same town that gave Nick Lucas and Ted Fiorito to the music world—Newark, N. J. Charlie started out as a drummer and has now worked his way through the entire orchestra and plays any instrument, although his forte is trumpet and xylophone. He has played with such famous bands as those of Vincent Lopez, Charles Strickland, Harry Yerkes, Bodewalt and Dell Lampe. Once he played at the Trianon Ballroom in Chicago in the orchestra with Wayne King, Al Morey and Harold Stokes. When he left Lampo he formed his own band and went on the road for Publix, and slowly but surely is coming to the front.

Chuck and Ray, members of that famous radio team, Chuck, Jean and Ray, are now broadcasting daily over station WLS and from the amount of fan mail they have received they are great favorites with the radio listeners. There is no doubt that this team will be back on chain broadcasts in the very near future.

Preston Sellers is back at the Oriental theatre. . . . One day each week Jean Paul King, Chicago NBC announcer, does not smoke, to test his will power. . . . Skipper Flynn has turned publicity agent, writing articles for various newspapers. . . . Tuffy Griffith, the fighter, will have a permanent battler when he marries on March 28. . . . Jack Perry has another hit in "Kiss by Kiss." . . . Danny Russo opens at the Beachview Gardens on February 19 after closing at the Canton Tea Garden.

When Gus Arnheim brought his famous Cocoanut Grove orchestra to Chicago the last week in January for an engagement at the Winter Garden, he was returning to his home town for the first real visit in 16 years. Gus, a former Chicago boy, and Abe Lyman started out together in orchestra work in the Windy City. Arnheim played piano and Lyman drums in a small combination which used to provide music at the dance halls and back-room saloons.

Danny Russo, whose Orioles orchestra is heard daily from the Canton Tea Garden, celebrated his twentieth year in the music business. Danny is one of Chicago's best liked maestros. The nation is becoming Kogen conscious. The NBC orchestra leader finds that 90 per cent of his fan mail has his name spelled correctly, whereas three years ago his listeners gave it in 55 different spellings.

Harry Richman opened at the Cafe Winter Garden last Friday. Bob Nolan is to be featured over the NBC network on the San Felice cigar program.

STAGE SHOWS

Oakland Paramount

Week ending February 2

In distinct contrast to the ultra-modern tone of the beautiful new Paramount theatre is the Fanchon and Marco stage revue, "Once Upon a Time," arranged by Gae Foster. This revue delves back to the days of the dinosaur and cave men and gigantic forms of vegetation that long since have passed.

The show opens with the appearance of Dorothy and Helene Blossom who sing from a great book, "Once Upon a Time," and tell in song just what may be expected in the show. The curtain goes up on a scene representative of ages ago, with the Sunkist Beauties enjoying a frolic in the water, a submarine ballet, as it were. They swim and then come out upon the sands for a dance while Franklin Record sings a classical waltz song. The water effects are especially fine.

Raye, Ellis and LaRue follow with a dance along strictly modern lines, marked by some new and very lively steps, and Dorothy and Helene disport in the role of story-book cutups, lending a desired touch of comedy. Their Spanish fantasy develops into a killing burlesque.

The scene shifts to the jungle. The Sunkist Beauties do a savage dance before their grass huts and then offer a fantastic number in the dark, with only their white arms visible. This proves scarcely as effective as some other offerings along this line.

Keith Wilbur, who speaks with the twang of an Australian, offers some novel interpretations, with imitations of a banjo, cats, dogs, chickens, babies and a steel guitar. These are put over in pleasing style.

A primeval dance is offered by Raye, Ellis and LaRue, with the girl being hurled about the stage by the two husky cave men. Before the dance can be concluded a group of cave women rush into the foreground, pursued by a dinosaur, with flaming eyes and fiery breath. The animal seizes a screaming girl in his mouth and swings her far over the orchestra pit before retreating to his lair.

The show depends for its success largely upon its novel settings and the splendid dancing. The finale is spectacular. It is a well-balanced show without stars.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending February 8

Hilda and David Murray, ballroom dancers, went over in a big way in the stage show, especially when they interpreted dances of several nations, ending with their idea of how the present day youth acts on a dance floor. Lee Barton Evans, with the Strakova Girls, registered mildly with a song number. Bill Rand, eccentric dancer, gained hearty approval. The fun of the performance, however, was supplied by Lou Forbes' "Four Horsemen," who became five when Louis Prima joined them.

Salt Lake Orpheum

Week ending January 7

The stage presentation met with high favor, with Owen McGiveney toplining the vaudeville and proving his versatility and ability at swift changes by presenting all the parts in a one-act mystery drama, "The Manor Murder Mystery." Anger and Fair, a team of comedians had a lot of fun in burlesquing McGiveney's offering. A comedy act that was approved was Bob Nelson's variety of song and patter, while the Wallace Sisters' dancing act, composed of the two young women and three assistants, was very well received. The assistants were Matt Gibbons and the Coen Brothers.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

This coming Monday being Washington's birthday, it is only fitting and proper to make some mention of the anniversary. . . . The best and easiest means of doing that, as far as I am concerned, is to tell you all of the song, "Father of the Land We Love," which is to be the theme of the Washington Bi-Centennial celebration, to be observed throughout the country. . . . The only logical man in the country to write such a song would be George Cohan, and did he come through! . . . He did! . . . The song, itself, is being published by the United States Government and Edward B. Marks Music Co., has been chosen as exclusive agent. . . . This song, then, is the new "Over There," and in these days it is just the tonic that is needed. . . . A toast to the two Georges, Washington and Cohan, good Americans both. . . .

Henry Francis Parks, former Chicago organist, is now in "Buss" McClelland's place at the RKO Orpheum, Seattle. . . . Dan Daniels, "ace" organist for the Fox, Green Bay, Wis., besides being a popular radio artist is also a regular version writer for the Quality Slide Company, Chicago. . . . Matt Duffin, formerly of the wellknown dance team of Duffin and Draper, is now "doing" Europe with a new partner, Chita. . . . They broke in the new act at the Cafe de Paris, Monte Carlo, and by this time are playing in the "swank" places in all of Europe. . . . Dr. Art Spaulding, master of ceremonies and musical director at the Publix Scollay Square, Boston, is also leading the audiences in community singing. . . . Arthur Tracy, "The Street Singer," is making his Broadway debut this week at the Capitol . . . in the Chester Hale stage show, "Cuban Holiday." . . . For that perfect relaxation feeling, take a peek at little Ebo Grant, Danny Parker's sec. . . . She's Southern too. . . . While Yasha Bunchuk, conductor of the famous Capitol Grand Orchestra, is enjoying a vacation at Palm Beach, Phil Spitalny will pinch-hit for him. . . . Al Solamon, special service manager for DeSylva, is a proud father again. . . . Mrs. Solamon presented him with another 8-pound boy to take the place of the lad they lost last year . . . and is Al happy.

Lloyd Hill (Wild Oscar) is back with his first love, Loews,Inc., and is now at their 175th street theatre. . . . Betty Hammond, from 'way down south in Dixie, is subbing for Joe Stoves at the Valencia, Jamaica, while he is visiting his folks in Nashville.

ARLO HULTS

RKO Albee Theatre
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

ORGAN SOLOS

ANN MELODIE (Lynchburg Paramount) presented as one of her most recent and best efforts an entertaining organ solo titled "Dreams." And it was a "dream," beautifully illustrated and presented. Ann, as she is popularly known, opened with the playing of "Ah Sweet Mystery of Life." A blue spot on the console with candelabra on either side with flame bulbs lent a dreamy effect to the entire proceedings. A beautifully played solo of Liszt's "Liebestraum," was then offered. "See You In My Dreams" and "Dream a Little Dream," both played for the audience to sing, concluded the enjoyable program.

KENNETH LEA (Elyria Capitol) offered a "demonstration of the organ" stunt, recently, which was presented in a manner enjoyable and quite different than is usual. It was done as a straight spotlight solo, with Mr. Lea illustrating each stop by playing excerpts from some familiar number after an invisible announcer explained them via "mike." Everything on the organ was presented and the solo closed with a snappy fox trot rhythm on "Try Somebody Else," using a combination of xylaphone, orchestra bells and drums.

The novelty interested this audience and, though it was a straight solo, drew heavy applause.

DICK BETTS (Jamestown Winter Garden) offered a singing novelty for his second week here, which actually had the audience singing. This is quite unusual, inasmuch as singing never has been tried here before. Betts is a personable chap, a good organist, also a good singer himself, and he apparently takes his work very seriously, because he is presenting novelties never before attempted in this town, and doing very well with them. This solo opened with a parody chorus to "Gang's All Here," with lyrics telling the audience not to be bashful but to sing.

After this it was clear sailing because the audience did sing the following songs: "River Stay 'Way," another parody to "Swingin' in a Hammock," "Good Night Sweetheart." Betts vocalized on "Love Sends a Gift of Roses," and drew very good applause. A comedy debate between boys and girls to "If I had a Girl like You," aroused plenty of laughter. A pretty effect on the screen was used as Betts softly sang and played "All of Me." The solo closed with the chorus of "Call Me Sweetheart," the audience singing softly where the words were small and loudly where they were large. Loud and prolonged applause followed.

ARLO HULTS (Brooklyn Albee) opened here with a snappily played and entertaining novelty entitled "Is Everybody Happy?" For his first number, he sang special introductory lyrics to "Voice of the RKO," and then went directly into "You Try Somebody Else," a special to "Smiles," in which the audience grinned each time the word "smiles" appeared. Hults vocalized on "I'll be Happy." Besides his pleasing voice, the special intimate lyrics to this song proved favorable to the audience, who then sang for him the following songs: "Call It Madness," a Chinese version to "Stein Song," and a final chorus of "Faded Summer Love." This young chap plays a good organ, is personable, sings well and is a good showman. This combination undoubtedly will gain him a big following here.

FRANK ALBANESE (Jersey City Stanley) who is on his sixth week here, proved to the audience that he can play beautifully as well as in the simpler manner for community singing. This week he opened his solo with "Kentucky Lullaby," as the organ arose, then went into a slow but rhythmic arrangement of "I'm Falling in Love," with interpolations of other "love" songs cleverly worked in. This he played in most pleasing combinations and a score of variations.

He followed this with "a red hot" rendition of "Tiger Rag," played with a wild abandon but with each note "staccato" and full of rhythm. He took three or four bows for this amid good applause and then offered two numbers, "Call Me Darling" and "Oh, that Kiss," for the audience to sing. They did.

BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill RKO) dedicated most of this week's solo to the wellknown song writer, Robert King. Featured as straight spot solos were the songs "Old Fashioned Home in New Hampshire," "Beautiful Ohio" and "Winter Is in My Heart." Other numbers of this writer were mentioned by Meeder but as time was short he did not play them. Mr. Meeder's playing of these beautiful numbers was marvelously done and the audience's appreciation of his firstclass work was shown by their attentiveness and their applause at the finish of the concert. This being Valentine week, Meeder chose three numbers suggestive of Valentine Greetings. They were, "Honest, Really and Truly," "I Love You Truly," and "Call Me Darling." The first two were played in concert style while the last, one of the most popular of the day, was offered for the community singers. The entire solo was capably presented and appreciated.

FRANKLIN BENTEL (Beaver Falls Rialto) conducted an organ novelty entitled "The Melody Auctioneer." The organ console was decorated with signs bearing the words "Overdue Songs," "Songs for Sale," "New Songs," and the like. The following songs were put up for sale: "Call Me Darling," "Dream Your Troubles Away," a picture puzzle chorus on "Old Mill Stream," and the last melody offered, with no reasonable bid refused, was "River Stay 'Way." It was an entertaining novelty which elicited much applause.

OVERTURES

DAVID ROSS (Philadelphia Mastbaum) and the augmented Mastbaum Symphony Orchestra presented for the first time in any motion picture theatre Maurice Ravels composition "Bolero," opening with a thematic solo which was taken up by one instrument after another in the characteristic rhythms of Spanish dance music, working up to a tremendous crescendo. The audience attested its appreciation of the efforts of the orchestra by enthusiastic applause, bringing the members to their feet three times. For this occasion the Mastbaum obtained several solo members of the Philadelphia Orchestra and employed instruments rarely used in motion picture theatre orchestras.

FRED SCHMITT (Denver Denver) and his orchestra played an interpretative overture, "Light Cavalry," the beginning being the call to arms by the buglers of the rival armies, then the lull before going into action, the battle, the charges and surrounding of the cavalry detachment. After the fight they bury their captain. The battling starts again and they emerge victorious. Slides showing the scenes and with appropriate description are used throughout the overture. Overtures by this orchestra always show the result of a lot of hard practice and rehearsal.

ERNEST HAUSER (San Antonio, Majestic) and his Greater Majestic Orchestra gave one of the best overtures last week which sent the music lovers home talking. Hauser called his musical offering "Romantic Rivers." "The Blue Danube Waltz," was first on the program; "Indian Love Call" and "By The River Sainte Marie" then were heard. Hauser also did a specialty on "Old Man River," and brought the well-liked introductory symphony to an ending with "Lazy River."

S. DELL ISOLA (Brooklyn Albee) and his RKOlians, who each week feature the songs of foreign countries, this time offer the characteristic songs of Austria. Individuals in the band are featured in a saxophone solo, a trio of muted trumpets, and a trombone duet. Both the orchestra and the leader, Isola, are very popular here and they play to an appreciative audience.

MAX BRADFIELD (Philadelphia Fox) and the Fox Grand Orchestra gave a splendid interpretation of Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture," followed by a baritone solo by Willard Singley, who received his usual enthusiastic applause.

SOL KLEIN (New York Audubon) and his 12 capable musicians offered a high class overture this week in which the opera "Orpheus," was featured. The special arrangement, together with a flute and violin cadenza, proved the adaptability of the orchestra, who play both classics and jazz equally well. They earned the good applause given them.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Grand Orchestra draw upon grand opera for their inspiration and present selections from "Pagliacci" as their offering. This proves one of the finest presentations in recent months and reaches an impressive climax in the immortal song of the griefstricken clown. Joaquin Garay is in splendid voice in his interpretation of "Home," a present day success.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and his Wisconsin theatre orchestra offer "Old Heidelberg" with the Blatz Quartet. Selections included are "Auf Viedersehen," "Ich Bin Ein Jaeger's Man" and "Two Hearts in Waltz Time." The quartet sings the last three selections in German and clicks in good fashion.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

A third trailer service has entered the local scene. I. Mandel of Security Pictures has acquired territorial rights covering Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin for the trailers produced by Supreme Screen Service of 630 Ninth Avenue, New York.

A downtown exhibitor feels that he has plenty of cause for complaint when, on the widely advertised opening date of his new theatre, the town's leading bank picked the same day to close its doors.

Chicago section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held its February meeting last week at the Electric Association. The affair was well attended and many interesting papers presented.

Al Bachman is now to be found at the Alcyon theatre in Highland Park, where he is manager.

The Daily Times' Inquiring Reporter last week asked six persons if they liked double feature programs. Five of them replied in the negative. All of which may or may not mean anything.

Hal Young of National Screen Service, who has been in the East for the last several weeks, paid a brief visit to the Chicago office and was off again on a tour to the company's midwest branches.

Emma Abplanalp, film board of trade secretary, was guest of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs last week and addressed the association's motion picture division leaders.

Max Mack has purchased the Alma theatre from J. Ward.

Irving Mandel of Security hopes that a blizzard hits town about February 21, for on that date he will grab the rattler for New Orleans to attend the second annual convention of Monogram Pictures.

Al Dezel, up from St. Louis, was greeting friends along the Row last week.

Aaron Saperstein, Allied president, is back at his desk in the Standard Oil building after a vacation spent at Hot Springs.

Plans for eliminating triple features are still being discussed, with definite action in this direction expected at a meeting of Allied and other exhibitors to be held in the near future.

Film time tables, showing the starting time of feature pictures at various Loop houses, is a recent innovation in the motion picture departments of the local dailies.

Woods theatre, which had a short life as a burlesque house, will soon reopen with a picture policy, according to current reports.

HOLQUIST

Langdon Starts On Short Subjects

Harry Langdon, once star comic of First National, and later a headliner in vaudeville, has formed his own independent company to make two-reel comedies in the East. A deal has been consummated between Langdon and Arthur and John Breslin, owners of the Royal Studios in Grantwood, New Jersey, where Langdon will produce for the Breslins and himself. The studio was recently equipped with RCA sound recording.

Langdon's first of the new group is "The Show-Goat," which he wrote and will direct. His supporting cast includes Barbara Willison, Maryan Lynn, Ina Hayward, Ann Green, Harry Hamill, James Harkins, Ernest Van, Edward Schubert, Ross Mobley, J. Francis Robertson, Rollin Grimes, Charles Henderson and Herbert Warren.

Langdon secured many former Paramount Studio technical men to assist on his first production. Alice Hunter will act as script girl, John Boyle studio manager, Danny Doran property man, George Webber first camera and David Thursby assistant director.

Educational Plant Active

Recent shorts completed or in work at the Educational Coast studios include: "Wedding Night," "That Rascal," comedies; "Slides and Glides," formerly called "Spills and Thrills," Bill Cunningham Sports Review number; "Play Ball," "Ye Olde Songs," Terry-Toon cartoons; "Hubby's Last Chance," comedy.

THE BROOKHART TEA-POT TEMPEST

IF it were not for the time and expense involved Senator Brookhart might well be encouraged by the industry to persist in the investigation which he is seeking to have the United States Senate authorize.

Such an inquiry, while making Senator Brookhart appear quite ridiculous on account of the fantastic notions he entertains about the industry, might very conceivably result in telling the world a number of things about the picture business which would accomplish important results. It would be very enlightening to the public on various points, including the essential difficulties and hazards of motion picture production, the social and community significance of the motion picture theatre, and the fact that the industry in all of its branches includes a personnel of unusual enterprise, initiative and progressiveness.

The public—to the industry's advantage—would be amazed to learn of the tremendous efforts that are put forth in order to make possible the kind of motion picture entertainment to which it has become accustomed.

But the industry, in all probability, will have to forego these benefits. The United States Senate in its lighter moods is quite capable of many extraordinary excursions, but in these serious times, when it is carrying a great part of the burden of reconstruction, the chance is very remote indeed that it will do other than allow to Senator Brookhart the time-honored senatorial privilege of blowing off steam.

Senator Brookhart's speech in the Senate requires and warrants no detailed reply. It is an extraordinary composition of error, misunderstanding and—we regret to say—malice. It will, deservedly, get nowhere.

MRS. FISKE

THE passing of Minnie Maddern Fiske, within a twelve-month of David Belasco, faces us with the fact that the traditional glories of the stage are going, likely forever, with the supersedence of the motion picture as the increasingly dominant medium of dramatic art. The last two decades of her two generations of brilliance have seen the decline and disappearance of those institutions and processes by which players upon the stage became world figures. As with Duse and Bernhardt there is for Mrs. Fiske no successor in her own medium.

Mrs. Fiske will long live in exalted memory of consistently capable and often remarkable performance. This writer likes best to recall her in the whimsical and demanding role of "Madame Sand."

While Mrs. Fiske's direct impingement upon the motion picture was not considerable, there are relations interesting to recall. She was in truth the first artistic person of authority to become articulate in recognition of the abilities of Mr. Charles Chaplin, with a contribution of appreciation and analysis published in "Harper's Weekly" in 1916. This was the first ripple of a wave of approbation in high places by which Mr. Chaplin emerged from the lowly status of a tremendously popular Keystone slapstick comedian into the high place of a lone genius in the art of pantomime.

And the name of Fiske, too, recalls the once important "Dramatic Mirror," published by Harrison Grey Fiske, which was the first considerable journal of status to give serious heed to the motion picture, with special articles and reviews.

Frank H. Woods, in after years an important factor in the Lasky organization and more recently with the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences, was the "Dramatic Mirror's" discoverer of the screen. He quickly became a contributor of scenarios, at the dawning of what we may call the golden age of Biograph, when Lee Dougherty was the editor of "story suggestions." George Terwilliger, also on the staff of the "Mirror," became a scenario writer of moment, too, and subsequently a director of note. In later years the staff of the "Mirror" contributed many another to the personnel of the industry, among them Mr. Frederick James Smith, a writer, critic and editor of motion picture magazines and Miss Allison Smith, dramatic critic.

Also, if memory serves aright, it was Frank Woods who carried about and continually thrust upon Mr. David Wark Griffith a copy of the script of the roadshow version of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which is today enshrined in traditional glory as "The Birth of a Nation."

Also, the while the "Mirror" was contributing to the evolving art of the screen, it was also the vigorous organ of the expression of the causes of Mrs. Fiske in her debates, which were many, with her managers, and especially with the then mighty Klaw & Erlanger offices.

GREGARIOUS

THE general impulse to have "some place to go" in many a rural community too small to support a motion picture theatre, is evidenced by the habit of the leading citizens to leave their home radio sets and go to the parlors of the village hotel to listen, in mass audience, to "Amos 'n' Andy" and other radio offerings. Making the theatre "some place to go" is a large part of the exhibition job.

THE VERY HUMAN RACE

MR. ARTHUR BRISBANE, whose syndicated column for the papers requires him to get exercised about something every day, has been moved to the comment that the lectures by Professor Einstein on "the geometric interpretation of the gravitational and electric field" at the University of California scarce can draw a tenth of the audience that can be had by a match between two bantam weight fighters in the same region. That, he thinks, is a commentary on our civilization. We can give him another one: the same people, and most any of us, would rather read a Hearst paper at breakfast than enjoy a mess of quadratic equations. If civilization and culture took Einstein for amusement, a number of us, including Mr. Brisbane, would be unemployed. If the audience gets any smarter we will all be in trouble.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

ON TALENT

ARTHUR BRISBANE, in the HEARST papers, warns young folk that something besides picture-mindedness is needed to become players, and quotes Alfred Santell on what makes acting talent, thus:

Young people with their minds and ambitions turned toward this coast, and the Hollywood movies, are warned not to come now, unless they can bring money enough to take care of them while they seek an opening for their talent.

Alfred Santell, one of the ablest moving picture directors, which means that he knows how to bring out and use talent, names three things that make moving picture success:

They are, in the order of importance:

First, appeal, the power to interest the public by force of personality. The vulgar, outworn "sex appeal" is not meant. Nor is mere physical beauty meant.

Second, ability, the power to express emotion, to act.

Third, aptitude, power to learn, innate adaptability to the work in hand, to co-operate, understand, express.

"Women, for stage or screen," says Mr. Santell, "are divided into two classes. First, the type that men want to own—Garbo, Dietrich. Second, the women that men want to protect—Mary Pickford, Janet Gaynor. Between float all sorts, less definite, less successful."

UP TO MOTHERS

THE NEWS of ANTIOCH in ILLINOIS, records remarks of a clubwoman, which are of special interest to exhibitors in view of the growing following of Motion Picture Herald's presentation of Rita C. McGoldrick's "Your Public" and "The Juvenile Show." The Illinois paper says:

Mrs. Richard McClure, of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, in her address before the members of the Antioch Woman's Club...is of the opinion that in order to intelligently consider pictures, their good and evil points, it is necessary for mothers to have accurate information about the motion picture industry. "Women must know the problems of the producer and distributor and be thoroughly acquainted with the theatre manager and the regulations governing the showing of pictures in their community."...Mrs. McClure closed her lecture with the statement: "The future influence of the motion picture, whether for good or evil, will be determined in large measure by the attitude of women's groups the world over."

REPEAT!

The WESTERN WATCHMAN, a Catholic paper published in ST. LOUIS, remarks on the short life of pictures when it urges editorially, that the patron should have another opportunity to see those he has missed of the HERALD'S list of best pictures of 1931, upon which Daniel A. Lord, S.J., commented in the issue of December 12:

Unfortunately, most of us will never have an opportunity of seeing "the 10 best pictures of 1931" again. If these pictures are really worthy of the appellation "best," surely some arrangerangement should be made so that we might see those we missed. . . .

Many persons who would like to see good movies seldom attend because it is next to impossible to know in advance whether or not the picture will be worthwhile. The advertisements and sample previews call every coming picture a super-film. Similarly, busy people often haven't time to read magazine after magazine looking for good stories. At the end of the year reputable authorities select the best stories and the busy man or woman can read the best without out wading through the others. Some arrangement should be made by the movie producers to re-schedule the best films, which would be not only popular, but successful financially.

INFLUENCES

The AMERICAN of BROOKVILLE, in PENNSYLVANIA, points to the testimony of parents that vicious companionship at school, are the foundation of social evil, not motion pictures, putting it this way:

. . . It is the testimony of many parents that the associations which their children form in schools get them into more deep water than the movies could possibly accomplish. Bad playmates, vicious practices and all such idle moment evils are the foundations of most errors, it would seem. All other experiences, the movies included quite naturally, are but contributory influences. Evil is social, whether evil of youth or adults. Without vicious companionship all the evil suggestions of youth would fall upon hard, barren soil.

So it would seem that the movie, though fraught with hazards of a moral and social character, cannot be blamed for evil. The world was full of murder, lust, robberies, etc., long before the movie came upon the scene.

MASTERPIECES

Eight revivals of "Disraeli" in one Cleveland suburb are recalled by David Kessler in his JOURNAL at ROCHESTER, in NEW YORK, in his plea for the building of a repertoire of motion picture masterpieces Mr. Kessler says:

Encouragement for the daring producers who gambled on such pictures as "Disraeli," "Street Scene" and "Outward Bound" may be found in the fact that the first named film was revived on eight occasions by public demand in one Cleveland suburb. May we hope that, when enough of such films have been produced, some day we will have a select repertoire of masterpieces which may be handed down from generation to generation, like the best of legitimate plays?

SAFETY VALVES

Says the HERALD of SANFORD, in Florida, of the motion picture as the "safety valve" for the tired, busy housekeeper or professional man:

. . . The intelligent citizen realizes that we need the theatres in the amusement life of the community. It furnishes relaxation, recreation and amusement. These are the safety valves for the tired, busy housekeeper or busy professional man. Mental relaxation is as important as physical recreation. We can have only the best theatres as we give them our support. . . .

BROOKHART URGES FILM INQUIRY AFTER 8,000 WORDS OF TIRADE

Iowa Senator, in Resolution, Would Have Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Make Broad Investigation

By F. L. BURT, Washington

A sweeping investigation of the motion picture industry which, he declared, will equal the "Teapot Dome" oil case of unsavory fame, was asked of the Senate February 23 by Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa at the conclusion of an 8,000-word speech in which he bitterly attacked the industry.

Senator Brookhart also reintroduced his block booking bill. This measure (Senate Bill 3770) would prohibit block booking of pictures as discriminatory protection in favor of certain theatres, would compel the submitting of synopses of pictures to theatre operators before release and would amend the Clayton act to make it apply to license agreements and leases.

Introducing his resolution of investigation, Brookhart declared:

"It has been alleged that the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures is carried on by various corporations and individuals in violation of the antitrust laws

"It has been alleged that the motion picture industry has made no bona fide effort to censor screen material.

"It has been alleged that the motion picture producers and distributors is primarily a political organization and has exercised undue influence with private, state and federal agencies in matters affecting the motion picture industry."

Charges Immorality Stressed

Calling upon many sources for the bombardment of criticism laid against the industry, Brookhart declared that the gangster film is passing out, but that the current productions stress immorality. Taking this for his text, he charged that the Hays organization has not lived up to its own production code.

Reviewing the ground covered in previous attacks against block booking, the Iowa Senator characterized this as an outstanding evil, but added that "the most flagrant, the most oppressive and, in my opinion, the most clearly illegal of all is the practice known as protection."

"This practice has been and is the most effective weapon for driving out competition that has ever been developed," he asserted, "and the manner in which it has been used by the motion picture trust is a blot on American business and fair play."

On Admisssion Prices

Brookhart also charged that the producers have resorted to zoning and protection as a means of holding up admission prices and that independent exhibitors who have sought to fight depression by reducing prices have found that "the lower the

A Son of the Wild Jackass

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

Smith Wildman Brookhart, United States Senator from Iowa, Tuesday projected into proceedings of the United States Senate his accumulated prejudice against and ignorance of the motion picture business.

We feel under no compunction in not dealing tolerantly with Mr. Brookhart's latest assault upon the industry. It could be argued in light of his frequently demonstrated shortcomings in the position in which the fortunes of political life have placed him that he merely has again been imposed upon with wrong information.

But even in according to Senator Brookhart the full measure of indulgence to which his obvious incapacities entitle him, there still remains no excuse or explanation of this new attack upon the industry for the reason that he has so long been interesting himself in motion picture matters that he could not have escaped a truer understanding of the facts were he not impelled by malice and prejudice.

And also despite the fact of Senator Brookhart's record and reputation, it remains singularly shocking to observe a person in his position so cheaply lowering himself as to resort to out-of-context quotations and other forms of misrepresentations in order to gain—or to pretend to gain—his point. Many instances of this character appear throughout Tuesday's attack of Senator Brookhart upon the industry.

Senator Brookhart asks for a senatorial investigation of the motion picture industry. While the public at large doubtlessly will be amazed to learn of any senator, even Senator Brookhart, during these times of national distress, giving his time and thought to such a fatuous project, the industry may view with perfect equanimity an investigation on the part of the senate or any other responsible body.

It is true that such an investigation would take time and money which might much better be diverted along other lines, still it could not conceivably do other in the long run than impress both upon every fair-minded investigator and the public that the extraordinarily difficult business of motion pictures is being operated in such a manner as to inspire not only respect but admiration.

When the industry is stripped of the theatrical ballyhoo with which it is properly surrounded because of its nature, it will be demonstrated to the world that the industry is intelligently and conscientiously manned; that it includes a body of exceedingly hard-working men and women; that it is a business involving great risk and disappointment and that at a relatively small cost it regularly brings to the whole public a form of entertainment and inspiration which is as necessary in these modern times to the well-being and contentment of society as the actual necessities of life.

Senator Brookhart's attack containing as it does much information, correct or incorrect, from within the industry must focus sharp attention upon the fact that within the circle of the business, enjoying the advantages which the business affords, there are certain savage traitors to the industry; certain vicious schemers who are unwilling to fight fairly within the boundaries of the industry and who seek in an under-cover and corrupt manner to bring the forces of the Government to their aid for the accomplishment of selfish purposes.

These are the persons upon whom Senator Brookhart has been relying for his information and guidance. These are the persons who would admission charged the longer an independent house must wait for a picture."

Arraigning the Hays organization on the part it has played in the industry, Brookhart charged that it sought to influence and control welfare agencies, public speakers, and others. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners' organization (MPTOA), once an aggressive independent association, he asserted, has largely been absorbed by the Hays organization, this leading to the formation of Allied States, "which is now the only coherent organization fighting the producers."

Among the exhibitors, he charged, are leaders who pose as independents who are "receiving money directly or indirectly from the producers."

Charges Stocks Watered

Brookhart called the attention of the Senate to the financing of the industry, declaring that stocks were heavily watered during boom times and that the money so secured was spent extravagantly "so as to contribute little or nothing to the earning power" of the enterprises.

He referred to the resolution recently introduced by Senator Dill of Washington for an investigation of the refinancing of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and urged the Senator to join with him in a broader inquiry.

Any investigation which might be undertaken, Brookhart declared, should also go into the relationship between the producers, on the one hand, and the manufacturers of sound equipment, music publishers and American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and the manufacturers of trailers, on the other hand.

"A thorough investigation is needed," he commented in bringing his speech to a close.

Senate Committee Would Act

Under the terms of his resolution, the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee would make the investigation, and would be given authority to employ outside counsel for its prosecution. The inquiry would go into the organization, functions and financing of the motion picture producers and distributors; allegedly monopolistic activities through the uniform contract, compulsory arbitration, withholding of product from independents, block booking, protection, etc.; allocation of product to controlled houses; efforts of theatre owning producers to regulate admission prices of independents by limitations in percentage contracts, etc.; the "diligence" of the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission in prosecuting alleged violations by motion picture companies, and reasons for delay in completing cases before them; capitalization of large companies and methods of financing over a period of the past six years; the inter-relationships of the producers and music publishers and electrical manufacturers and their effect upon exhibitors in the form of royalty charges; the Copyright Protection Bureau, and the Hays "morality code."

scuttle the industry for the purpose of being able to steal away with a piece of the debris. Within the industry they should be dealt with as their treachery warrants.

Senator Brookhart characterizes the writer of this article as a "competent observer" within the industry. While his opinion as to our competency is a matter of small interest to us, we state to him upon the basis of his own appraisal that the premise upon which he bases his proposed investigation is utterly false; that his ideas for cure-alls of all the industry's problems are absurd and where his assault upon the industry is not plainly malicious it is plainly ignorant.

In short, Mr. Brookhart is persisting in his accredited characterization as a Son of the Wild Jackass.

Myers Explains Allied Reference From Brookhart

Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart's outburst before the Senate at Washington on Tuesday, during which he vigorously assailed the motion picture industry—a periodical affair—immediately started the trade wondering as to the extent of the interest held by Allied States Association in Brookhart's newest tirade, in view of the fact that he mentioned Allied prominently in his assault.

Accordingly, a query was dispatched to Washington to Abram F. Myers, chairman of Allied's directorate and he replied as follows:

> "Senator Brookhart has been working on this matter for several months. He has been in touch with numerous organizations and gathered information from many sources. Memoranda and data regarding trade abuses in which independents are vitally concerned were submitted by Allied under authority of a resolution of the board at Chicago, February 6. The matter is scheduled for full discussion and action at the annual (Allied) convention at Detroit, March 9 and 10."

The recent admission tax hearings at Washington, in which various industry factions appeared against proposed taxation, revealed the intention of Senator Brookhart to probe the industry. Allied officials, reporting the results of the hearing in a bulletin to members, stated that reports of an impending investigation were apparent during the tax hearings.

Rests Conclusions Upon Many Untrue Statements: Hays

The following statement on the Brookhart proposal was made Tuesday by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., now in Hollywood attending a series of business meetings:

"From the press reports which reach me concerning a speech made by Senator Brookhart in Washington today, it is apparent that he chooses to reiterate the position he has taken for the last five years with regard to the motion picture industry and he rests his conclusions upon many untrue and distorted statements that have been published and repudiated from time to time.

"The motion picture industry has no objection of course to an inquiry should the Senate of the United States see fit to authorize it.

"The complaint which Senator Brookhart files against us is quite on a par with the charges of meditated propaganda to defeat law enforcement which he recently fired at the organized press of the nation. No industry anywhere could conduct its business more frankly, open and above board than does ours. The things we do, the contracts we negotiate, the theatres we buy or sell and the artists we employ are of public interest and generally noted in the newspapers of the world. There is no secret about anything we do in the motion picture industry. We engage in no activities at any time of any kind which restrain anybody from doing business anywhere. Our job is to provide wholesome entertainment for our millions of patrons throughout the world. This is an essential service and its value is attested by the millions who daily approve it. We recognize this as a great public responsibility which we are discharging in the thoroughly American method of effective self-regulation, constantly improving the quality of the pictures in an open market and with unrestricted competition. This program engages all our energies and to it we shall adhere.

"Our industry is quite willing to stand upon its efforts and its achievements, which countless thousands everywhere daily more enthusiastically applaud in appreciation and gratitude."

Nothing New In Attack: Pettijohn

C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in Washington to attend the hearing Wednesday by the House immigration and naturalization committee on the Dickstein bill, commenting on Senator Brookhart's speech, said:

"There is nothing new in Senator Brookhart's latest attack on the motion picture industry. It was inspired by a few dissatisfied gentlemen in the business who, in my opinion, have deceived and misled him.

"His speech presented a painstaking and thorough history of every criticism true and

BROWN HAS FULL CONTROL AT RKO; SCHNITZER RESIGNS; KENT DEAL OFF

Franklin Joins Company in General Advisory Capacity; Martin Beck Is Managing Director in Charge of Vaudeville

Uncertainties which have existed in varying degrees in the affairs of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and its picture subsidiary, Radio Pictures, over a period of several months, were considerably cleared up by a series of important developments occurring early this week:

Hiram S. Brown, president of RKO, emerged with a vote of confidence of the board of directors, restored in complete authority as the chief operating executive of the companies.

David Sarnoff, chairman of the board of RKO, and president of the Radio Corporation of America, announced that discussions with Sidney R. Kent, over Kent's participation in the company, "have terminated."

Joseph I. Schnitzer, president of RKO Radio Pictures, resigned to enter independent production.

Harold B. Franklin joined the company in a general advisory capacity.

Martin Beck, former president of the Orpheum Circuit, became managing director of RKO in general charge of vaudeville.

Jules Levy was transferred from the post of film buyer for RKO Theatres to the distribution department of the picture company.

This series of developments, occurring in rapid succession Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, constitute the re-establishment of Brown in full power after a period of uncertainty over executive authority, and a general reorganization at his direction.

The first thing that happened was the affirmation of Brown, which occurred at a special meeting of the board of directors called to review his three-year administration, at which meeting a resolution of confidence was unanimously voted. The outcome of this meeting was an official statement from the corporation announcing the termination of discussions with Sidney Kent, reading as follows:

"When asked to comment about the statements which recently appeared in trade papers to the effect that discussions were proceeding between Mr. David Sarnoff and Mr. Sidney R. Kent, regarding the latter's joining the RKO organization, Mr. Sarnoff made the following statement:

"'When Mr. Sidney R. Kent left the company with which he was formerly connected, Mr. Hiram S. Brown and I invited Mr. Kent to join the RKO organization. It is true that Mr. Kent and I have had several conferences regarding this matter, but these discussions have terminated.'"

Brown Announces Franklin

Simultaneously with this statement, Mr. Brown announced that an arrangement had been entered into with Harold B. Franklin, under which Mr. Franklin would act in a general advisory capacity, "giving the RKO organization benefit of his wide and successful experience in all branches of the entertainment industry." Franklin, former president of Fox West Coast and of Hughes Franklin Theatres, and for many years head of the Paramount theatre department, took over his duties Monday.

It was understood that he has been empowered to make a complete survey of the company's business, including production, distribution and exhibition. Regarding this survey, Franklin is of the opinion that his study can be completed in two or three months and he is understood to have rejected a long-term agreement with RKO pending his findings. In the event his observations reveal existence of a situation to which his abilities are adapted, it is understood that RKO will offer and Franklin probably will accept a permanent executive assignment.

Franklin had been reported at various times in the last several weeks to have been under consideration for a post of RKO general theatre operator and at other times for a post as operator of the Orpheum circuit houses.

Schnitzer Action Announced Wednesday

The resignation of Joseph I. Schnitzer as president of RKO Radio Pictures occurred on Tuesday evening and was announced Wednesday in the following statement by Hiram Brown:

"Mr. Schnitzer's resignation is a friendly move, anticipated for some time and delayed because he was generous enough to wait until his departure would not jeopardize the interests of the company.

"Mr. Schnitzer's service to this organization has been immeasurable. His success in new endeavors is assured by the energy and devotion he has given to us."

Schnitzer has been actively engaged in distribution for 24 years, entering the industry as manager of the Des Moines branch of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Company, advancing to general manager of Universal. From 1920 to 1922, he was president of Equity Pictures, resigning to become vice-president of the former FBO company, a post he held until the formation of the RKO group.

Schnitzer was the ranking vice president of FBO Pictures when that company was purchased by the Radio Corporation, and upon the formation of RKO Radio Pictures in 1928, Schnitzer was elected its first president.

It has been known for some months that Schnitzer was not entirely happy in the situation which had developed in the affairs of the company. He went to the Hollywood studios some 18 months ago to exercise a greater executive control over production costs and gradually shifted his major activities from New York to Hollywood. When the company's financial difficulties reached a crisis, much of the blame for the company's troubles was placed on production. Schnitzer came back to New York when David O. Selznick was appointed production chief of the combined RKO Radio and RKO Pathe production activities. His resignation is reported to have been in the hands of Mr. Brown for the last six weeks.

Jules Levy Transferred to Distribution Department of Radio Pictures; Franklin Empowered To Make Complete Survey

Beck Vaudeville Veteran

The appointment of Martin Beck to an official post marks Beck's second entrance into RKO during the last several months. Late in 1931 it was announced that Mr. Beck had joined the company in an advisory capacity. After several weeks in the vaudeville department, he withdrew gradually. He now returns with a title of managing director, "in general charge of RKO vaudeville." It was announced simultaneously that Charles J. Freeman will continue as general manager of the RKO booking department. Mr. Beck was formerly president of the Orpheum Circuit and one of its founders. He is known as one of the leading vaudeville authorities in the country. He was an associate of the late B. F. Keith and the late E. F. Albee.

There was no indication in the announcement of the resignation of Mr. Schnitzer, of his successor. It was said that, under the reorganization plan, with David Selznick in charge of studios, a president might not be appointed for the picture company, that the New York operations would continue under the direction of Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution, with Hiram Brown personally functioning as general executive of the picture subsidiary. This plan was somewhat borne out by the transfer of Jules Levy from the theatre film purchasing department to the distribution department. Levy and Depinet had been previously associated in the sales activities of Universal and First National. Lee Marcus, who was president of RKO Pathe, and who functioned as chief executive of the picture company during the merger of Radio and

EDITOR FINDS SOUTHLAND BUSY WITH SUNDAY SHOW CAMPAIGNING

Terry Ramsaye Sees New and Significantly Promising Movement Underway in Georgia and Alabama

And R. B. Wilby at Atlanta Points Out That "Little Ten Cent Fellow Is Teaching Us About Amusement of Masses"

By TERRY RAMSAYE
Editor of Motion Picture Herald

The itinerant editor of Motion Picture Herald, who last week came to a dynamic pause in the Shenandoah Valley with a reverberating motor explosion, is rocketeering over the trails of the Appalachian highlands again, with here and there an interlude of visiting with the exhibitors and exchangemen of the Southland. There is a remote suspicion that his route has been laid with reference to a fishing camp and some mountain acres of his in the hills of the sporting country of Pickens county in Georgia. That of course has nothing more to do with motion picture journalism than Palm Springs and Tia Juana have to do with production in Hollywood.

The exhibition business of this southern empire which has made Atlanta its metropolis and capital is now vigorously engaged in what is tantamount to a complete reconstruction of retail amusement activity, casting aside most decisively the precedents and judgments of the flush and hectic years before "the depression" broke.

With cotton selling three or four cents under the cost of production and tobacco in a bad way, the strictly agricultural regions are exceedingly weak in buying power, while the mill towns and manufacturing regions show a surprising relative strength, resulting in a spotty selling map. The most immediately conspicuous result is a trend toward sharp downward revision of admission prices with marked increases in gross receipts and some curious aspects of the circuit theatre situation.

Also, with the pressures generated by the general economic condition, a new and significantly promising endeavor is being made to improve the business by a consistent, persistent and widespread, even if quiet, campaign aimed at removing or escaping Sunday restrictions and opening up all of the Southland as a seven-day territory. The addition of a day a week, and such a spending day as Sunday, promises to increase box office revenues remarkably and restore earnings in many a red spot.

The film center of this part of the world is Walton street, where within three blocks all the corporate names of Broadway appear on substantial exchange buildings. The motion picture community is closely knit and compact, so that along Walton street in an hour one is likely to see most of the regional leaders somewhere between the hospitable office of Rufus Davis at the National Theatre Supply Company and R. B. Wilby's, which is just a bit away from the exchange center up in Peachtree street. Here you will come upon Senator Alpha Fowler and Arthur Lucas and like as not Love Farrell, the indefatigable editor of the local regional weekly, also local secretary of the MPTOA. A relative newcomer in Film Row is C. W. Allen, for years in Dallas and the Southwest with Pathe Exchange, and now Atlanta manager for RKO. His theme song is Constance Bennett and he knows the map like a native son.

If you chance to see a particularly hard driven, breathless looking Chevrolet in Film Row you may know that Tracy Mathewson, the South's perennial star newsreel cameraman, is in his hometown for a minute again. Mr. Mathewson, for these 20 years, man and boy, has been picturing the news events of the region between Washington and the City of Mexico, with an occasional expedition to Europe, Canada and the South Pole in between, for a long succession of newsreels beginning with the Hearst-Selig weekly of 1912, and thence to Kinograms, Fox and Pathe and now for Universal's Newspaper Newsreel.

After two years on the mountain trails with a five-ton sound camion, Tracy admits that he finds it most soothingly pleasant to do his work with a silent camera and let Graham McNamee up in New York supply the supplemental noises and remarks. Tracy is still armed with Bell & Howell camera No. 67, purchased first by John R. Freuler of Mutual so that Albert Cappelani might record the histrionics of Edna Goodrich at the Glendale, Long Island, studios in 1916, and sold thence to Charles Urban and Kinograms, and traded away by Mathewson then for a masterpiece scenic of the Suwanee river. The old Suwanee river negative has meanwhile escaped to the film libraries and portions of it appear every now and then in Hollywood productions with southern locale. The camera and the picture are as durable as Mathewson himself. The camera, if left anywhere on Peachtree street, will go home by itself.

And since Peachtree street has been mentioned, something ought to be said about it, by a man who can find his way through Boston and Brooklyn. Peachtree street, the great major artery of Atlanta, is doubtless so named because it runs all over town with such merry abandon. If the city's geographers had contented themselves with using the main trunk of the tree all would have been well. However, they used the whole tree, roots, stem and branches, letting them fall where they would. After which the tree appears to have been generously budded and grafted. You can come across Peachtree street anywhere in Atlanta and the traffic regulations vary according to the age and political preferences of the officer in charge of the particular intersection. I met one damyankee, who, trying to get out of town, had been lost on Peachtree street for three days, without food or water. Also he had not missed the water. While cotton and tobacco are not doing so well in this region, the corn crop appears to be liquidating nicely.

Some research is necessary to get at the roots of this Peachtree problem. It seems that in the course of that other big depression called the Civil War, one Sherman, as he set out on his journey to the sea, burned the then town of Marysville, and that in the vigor of the reconstruction Atlanta grew up from the ashes and grew so swiftly that country lanes became city streets before the surveyors could do much about it. Sherman, incidentally, left one building standing. It was probably a little church he used for headquarters, but the six Oldest Inhabitants will show the visitor six of the Oldest Houses. You politely and silently take your choice. Also remarks about Peachtree street are best made as one leaves the city. We are packing now.

Atlanta has a large wealthy and middle class population, which, with provocation, is inclined to support entertainment in a substantial manner. It also has its militant social and religious groups, which just now are contributing to the color of the motion picture's endeavor to make Atlanta the germinating center of an "open Sunday" movement for the whole Southland.

The municipal courts this week have been busy with the current moves of the Sunday opening litigation and this litigation is likely to run along considerably, with appeals and related moves. It all began something like a fortnight ago when without much of a fanfare of publicity it was to be discovered that the Paramount theatre in Peachtree street was open on a Sunday with a program conducted and sponsored by Mrs. M. H. Margeson, a social figure, in behalf of the Mayor's Unemployment Relief fund. This resulted in arrest, trial and acquittal before Recorder A. W. Callaway, in police court.

In the expectation that this precedent would hold, a considerable array of Atlanta theatres, after a long sequence of conferences up and down Walton street, opened on Sunday, with an arrangement to give their net proceeds of the day to the unemployment relief fund, the net being established after a deduction of film rentals, operating costs and one-seventh of the overhead. The plan as put into operation contemplated running on this basis until June, after which it was deemed possible Atlanta would be accustomed to and acceptant of Sunday shows, with a probable wide influence on lesser centers throughout the region, particularly in the adjacent states of Tennessee and Alabama, where some slight beginnings of Sunday opening have already been made.

This general Sunday opening resulted in the service of summonses upon theatre managers: Roy G. Youngblood, Fox; E. E. Whittaker, Keith's Georgia; L. Weiford, Capitol; G. T. Willy, Cameo; H. T. Kimmel, Rialto; L. M. White, Grand; T. L. Anderson, Tenth Street; E. W. Hathcock, Palace; G. T. Bailey, the white operator of the Royal, a theatre for negroes; G. W. Gaston, Madison; L. S. Batch, Alpha; John Thompson, West End; and A. H. Duran of the Empire, owned by Senator Fowler, who incidentally operates a number of other independent theatres in various adjacent towns. Senator Fowler has been in public office and political life some 12 years and is a considerably militant factor in motion picture affairs among the independents hereabouts.

Opposition to the Sunday openings for charity have come from Dr. W. H. Faust, pastor of the Gordon Street Baptist church, and from Mrs. J. E. Andrews, chairman of the Woman's Georgia Commission for Law Enforcement, acting, it is said, independently of each other. Meanwhile Dr. R. L. Russell, president of the Atlanta Evangelical Ministers' Association, has indicated that the matter will be given some attention at the next meeting of the organization.

A delicate distinction between the case of Mrs. Margeson, a socially minded citizen, operating a theatre, and the cases of the 13 theatres themselves operating their plants for the same cause, is at issue. The proponents of the Sunday opening movement contend the Margeson case a precedent, while the opponents deny this and point to the code section of the statutes involved which purports to prohibit "merchants or dealers" from carrying on their business on Sundays and to prohibit any "work or labor" except where absolutely necessary.

The municipal code specifically mentions "merchants, proprietors of tenpin alleys and billiard parlors," apparently having been drafted in the old days when the Devil was limited to Kelly pool and bowling for baiting sinners of a Sunday. Mrs. Margeson escaped conviction by being neither a "merchant" nor a "proprietor" of bowling alley or poolhall. The theatre manager is held to come a shade closer to that classification. The failure of the 13 theatres concerned to provide themselves with a social intervenor like Mrs. Margeson in the Paramount case, has become for the moment a subject of some sharp remarks by the politically astute Senator Fowler, who saw a necessity in such legal instance of sticking precisely to the precedent.

However, regardless of the immediate outcome of the present issue, the motion picture industry of the South, as represented in Atlanta, is committed to an unending campaign to give the week seven earning days.

Sunday shows are now, and have been for a long time, in operation at Albany, Ga., under the auspices of the American Legion, and at Columbus, Ga., because of the influence of the command at adjacent Fort Benning, which sets up the contention that single men in barracks are less likely to set out on the faster highroads to Hell on idle Sundays if their attention is diverted by the relatively less corrosive motion picture. And in Alabama the Sunday door has been opened a bit, with charity benefit program arrangements at Auburn, Selma and Tuscaloosa, all minor centers.

"The little 10-cent fellow is teaching us about amusement of the masses at a price," R. B. Wilby, circuit operator, told Terry Ramsaye at Atlanta.

"Just recently I observed a case in an upstate town where the circuit man got annoyed when a 10-cent man opened up in opposition. The circuit house was losing money at 20 and 40 cents. Just for spite the circuit man decided to cut and run the little fellow out of town. He cut to 10 and 20 cents, and, immediately went into the black and they both made money."

In Georgia a state law permits shows of charity, and it is the expectation that ultimately the Atlanta ordinance will be held null as affecting the theatre. The influence of an Atlanta decision would be wide in this territory.

The movement to give the southern box office another working day is very considerably, if not conspicuously, given its motivating pressures from the office of R. B. Wilby in the Paramount theatre building up in that endless Peachtree street. Mr. Wilby evolved in the famous Lynch organization and brought along to eminence with him the redoubtable Mike Kincey, who, still in association, offices at Charlotte, N. C., these days. They are concerned with the operation of a considerable array of their own theatres and there are now in consummation, and brewing, deals for the taking over and operation of sundry Paramount Publix houses. Conspicuous among them is Keith's Georgia in Atlanta, which is likely to go to Wilby management in March.

Mr. Wilby was not precisely in agreement when suggestion was made that evidences of a disintegration process were getting astonishingly conspicuous among the circuits.

Rather, he agreed to the modification that the disintegration was from national organization downward toward sectional units.

"This always has been properly a regional or sectional business," he agreed. "But there is nothing wrong in principle with circuit operation. The problem is just to get the men to run the circuit and repose enough confidence in them to let them do it.

"We'll take the case of the 'X' Theatre in Blankville. The owning circuit decided to rehabilitate the house and open it. Their representatives looked it over and asked New York to let them spend $40,000 to open the house. The decision that came back said $17,000. Then before anything was done it chanced that Kincey and I were brought into the deal and we looked the house over. We decided that it would cost $45,000 to do the job right. We got an OK right away, the job was done, and it paid out. The answer was confidence.

"You cannot operate and get anywhere if decisions that can only be made on the ground and with a full knowledge of the local situation have to go to a remote home office and be passed upon by a group of gentlemen who can only make a guess about it. If you have to get 17 OK's to change an admission price in the face of a competitive or local economic condition you are likely to get left at the post, or discouraged, at least.

"Right now the little shoestring operator breaking in with a 10-cent admission is teaching me something and teaching me fast," observed Mr. Wilby with a sharp inflection of emphasis, "and he is showing up things in the circuit situation, too.

"I felt insulted when the little 10-cent chap came along—I'm a 40-cent guy. But I'm done being insulted now. Just recently I observed a case in an upstate town where the circuit man got annoyed when a 10-cent man opened up in opposition. The circuit house was losing money at 20 and 40 cents. Just for spite the circuit man decided to cut and run the little fellow out of town. He cut to 10 and 20 cents, and, immediately went into the black and they both made money.

"The circuit idea of grandeur at 40 cents is apparently not just right. The cry against the Atlantic and Pacific and other chains has been that they supplied standard goods underselling the local merchants, and thereby getting the business. Now what's the matter with the circuits, with their big houses and other advantages? It would seem that they ought to be able to sell quality entertainment at volume prices if they are going to be justified in their existence.

"Yes, sir, the little 10-cent fellow is teaching us about amusement of the masses at a price."

Mr. Wilby has his sharp convictions about the influence of exaggerated egos and the pursuit of glory in the motion picture industry. He remarks that some troubles have come from men in high places who, having no longer to work for money, set out to gild their industry for self-glorification.

"And some good pictures would help mightily right about now," he remarked. Broadway sophistication finds no appreciation in his markets. Speaking of pictures in passing, he remarked that he expected important results with Warners' "The Man Who Played God," with George Arliss.

One leaves Atlanta with the conviction that the South is going to run its own film business, and that most likely it is to be permitted to from now on.

Paramount Chiefs Discuss New Product at Hot Springs

Paramount sales and production heads will hold their annual preliminary meeting at Hot Springs during this week-end, when new season's product will be discussed.

In attendance will be George Schaefer, general sales manager; John D. Clarke, Western sales manager; Charles McCarthy, in charge of public relations; Emanuel Cohen, vice president; B. P. Schulberg, in charge of production on the Coast.

KENT HAS NOT TALKED WITH TINKER; FOX CHIEF RETURNS FROM STUDIOS

President Leaves Coast Organization Working with Renewed Vigor; Sheehan Well on the Way to Complete Recovery

President Edward R. Tinker of Fox returned to New York late on Monday from Hollywood. He left the studio organization at Movietone City working feverishly with an obviously stronger morale, with renewed vigor and a much stronger determination to overcome at once whatever ill effects were brought about by the "reconstruction movement" through which all of Hollywood has been laboring ever since the current period of deflation first began to revolutionize the nation's economic and business structure.

When Tinker arrived in Hollywood less than three weeks ago—his first trip Westward in two years and his initial visit to the Fox lot—he found much misapprehension, of a general nature, existing at Movietone City. He spent two weeks with executives and workers at the studio and when he left last Thursday, that misunderstanding had dissolved into thin air. This, Tinker expects, will show an immediate favorable reaction in the modus operandi at Movietone City, thereby strengthening the organization and raising the quality standard of its motion picture productions.

Grainger in Hollywood

E. I. Sponable, Fox's technical chief, and Glen Griswold, vice president in charge of press and public relations, will return to headquarters in New York in one week. James R. Grainger, vice president in charge of sales, arrived in Hollywood this week to outline with production officials plans for the 1932-33 schedule, which will not exceed last year's lineup of 48 features, but may be lowered. W. C. Michel, executive vice president, and also of the home office, will remain on the Coast until the return of Winfield Sheehan. Clayton Sheehan, in charge of foreign activities, returned to New York late last week.

Would Have General Duties

Immediately following David Sarnoff's official announcement from RKO indicating the termination of "discussions" which would bring Sidney R. Kent into the Radio fold in an important executive capacity, there developed this week a flood of speculation linking Kent's name with Fox, in a similar post. Negotiations were reported to have been launched toward this end, but this proved untrue inasmuch as Kent would have to deal directly with Tinker, and the Fox president, it may be authoritatively stated, has had no discussions with Kent. Kent still is in Florida vacationing, and not since long before Kent's resignation as vice president and general sales manager of Paramount has Tinker met or talked with him, directly or indirectly.

However, in the event that Kent should go to Fox, working under Tinker, he would have general executive duties to perform which would not upset the distribution structure as now headed by James R. Grainger, whose five-year contract still has three years more to run. Kent, or his representatives, may have had indirect discussions with the Chase interests, which control the Fox corporations, but the Chase people would not actively figure in actual negotiations between Tinker and Kent. Tinker refused to discuss a possible deal with Kent.

During his brief stay in Hollywood, Tinker set up a board of management which will guide production affairs at Movietone City. This board consists of Winfield Sheehan, the general manager; D. E. McIntire, business manager; Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent; George Bagnall, comptroller; Al Rockett, senior associate producer; Robert North, associate producer; and vice-president Richard A. Rowland of the New York office. Sheehan will be chairman of the management board.

In Sheehan's absence, President Tinker will designate an acting chairman. For the present, Executive Vice-President Michel is so designated.

Governs Production Policies

The new board is the executive body governing studio and production policies and is a departure in the production operation at the Fox plant. An inter-change of ideas will be brought about through frequent visitations of Fox executives in New York and by westward trips to be made by home office chiefs. Tinker will strive to cement closer relations between studio and home office executives, thereby breaking down the so-called "barrier" set up by lengthy geographical differences between both coasts. Tinker believes that cabinet control of production, rather than individual control, offers stronger protection to the company, its stockholders and employees.

While on the West Coast, Tinker adjusted differences which existed between Wurtzel and the corporation. Wurtzel will remain on the lot with the title of "general superintendent," as heretofore. A new agreement for one year is understood to have been signed.

Along with the new system effected by the management board, Tinker hopes to establish "full and free opportunity" for all employees to offer constructive suggestions looking to improvement of the company's product. And he so told the entire staff when he addressed it on the night preceding his return to New York.

Sheehan Planning European Trip

In the meantime, Sheehan's physical and mental condition, which was upset some weeks ago by a general breakdown, continues improving. Plenty of rest and a long hike daily have sent him well on the way to complete recovery. His physician Dr. Milton Lennon, said at San Francisco that a trip to Europe is planned by Sheehan, although no definite details have been worked out, nor arrangements made.

While in Hollywood, Tinker did not find opportunity to confer with officials of West Coast Theatre Circuit, management of which recently was transferred to Skouras Brothers under a ten-year operating deal by which the Skourases will receive a salary plus a percentage of the net intake.

Spyros and Charles Skouras arrived in Los Angeles Tuesday night to effect the physical transfer and to establish new economic and entertainment policies for the string of approximately 500 theatres. The Skourases were accompanied westward by Elmer Rhoden, division manager of Fox Midwesco; John J. Sullivan, film buyer; M. Wolf, of Los Angeles; and Sid T. Towell and A. J. Krappman, assistant. Tinker plans a second trip west in the immediate future, at which time he expects to study the West Coast theatre situation.

Stockholders Meet March 23

Annual and extraordinary meetings of RKO stockholders will be held in Baltimore March 23, to approve a reduction in capital and a change in date of future annual meetings. The stockholders will be asked to approve a reduction in capital represented by the outstanding shares of no par stock from $19.94 to $10.00 per share.

On the 2,461,015 shares outstanding as of February 10, this would amount to a reduction of $24,462,489 in the capital account. This would be used as a reserve against which to charge the reductions in property account to eliminate fictitious values, as the directors may determine. Any balance remaining would be transferred to surplus account, but would not be available for dividends, it was said.

It also is proposed to change the date of the annual meeting of stockholders henceforth from the fourth Wednesday in March to the second Wednesday in April.

Chas. Skouras Drops St. Louis Interest for Coast Theatres

Charles Skouras, who has been in charge of the Skouras Super Theatres in St. Louis and Indianapolis, operated jointly by Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the Publix interests, has severed all his connections with those organizations and the St. Louis Amusement Company to devote his time to the operation of Fox West Coast, recently taken over by the brothers.

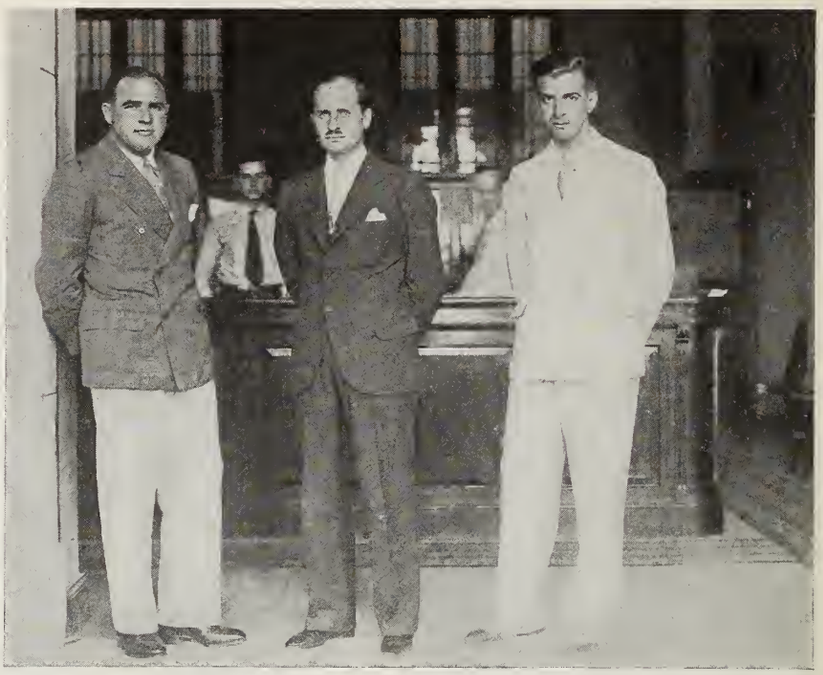
Charles Skouras will make his headquarters in Los Angeles. He is the last of the brothers to leave St. Louis, scene of their first triumphs in the film business. Spyros and George Skouras will maintain headquarters in New York, watching Eastern interests.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

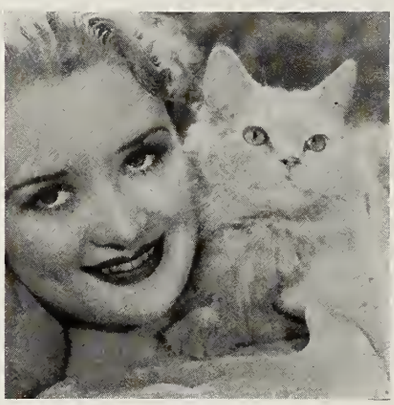
NOTED VISITOR. John Hays Hammond, the celebrated engineer, and a group of his friends at the Warner studio. They are shown on the set for "The Mouthpiece," with the leading player thereof, Warren William (left).

RACKETEERS. At least they participate in the "cafe racket," subject of Universal's "Night World." Busby Berkeley, dance master, is shown rehearsing the chorus under Hobart Henley's direction. Mae Clarke (left) is featured.

APRIL SHOWER. Leila Hyams, featured in M-G-M's "Freaks," casts herself prominently in this premature preparation for May flowers—a freak more photographic, however, than climatic.



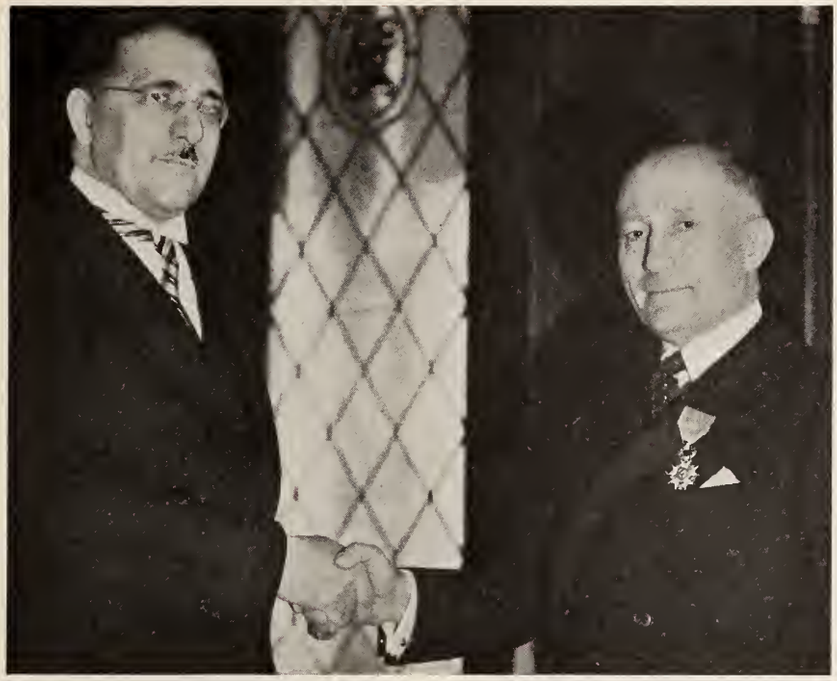
SWEET GIRL GRADUATES. Misses of the gay '90's, bearing diplomas from Miss Fisler's Select Boarding School for (we assume) select young ladies. Thus is the period recalled in the Warner production of Edna Ferber's "So Big." In the foreground are Mae Madison and Barbara Stanwyck.



PROFILE. The distinguished facial cast of William Powell, here emphasized as the Warner star pauses in his stride across a studio stage before one of the latest type lamps.

PROMOTED. And feeling very good about it. Henceforth Ann Dvorak will be a featured Warner player, making her debut as such in "The Tinsel Girl."

IN PERU. (Above) Hal Roach, producer of M-G-M comedies; Arthur Loew, M-G-M foreign manager, at M-G-M's headquarters in Lima, visited during their 20,000-mile airplane trip inspecting film interests in South America, shown with William Levy, Peru manager.



ADD BEAUTY. (Left) With apologies for pictorially commenting so soon again on the pulchritudinous recommendations of Marian Marsh, Warner featured player. We just couldn't resist the cat!

ASSIGNED TWO MORE. Mervyn LeRoy, who has been assigned to direct Warners' "Two Seconds" and "The Heart of New York."

AT HOME. Another glimpse of a film celebrity where he really, not reely, lives. Here is Warner Baxter in the music corner of his home. The Fox star's next production is "Scotch Valley."

HONORED. (Above) Adolph Zukor and Henri Job, French consul, as latter notified Zukor officially that he had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor by the French government for his efforts in developing film productions in France.

WAITING. (Right) And watching the set being prepared for the next scene. A studio study of James Cagney, before stepping into his character as star of Warners' "The Crowd Roars."

NORMAL. For here is Tom Mix back on a horse's back—shown with his daughter, Tomasina, at Universal City, where he has started the Westerns delayed by illness.

AUTHOR AND STAR. Mary Roberts Rinehart, the novelist, and Joan Blondell, who will make her debut as a Warner star in "Miss Pinkerton of Scotland Yard," mystery story by Mrs. Rinehart.

SHOCKING. Just as it is intended to be. For here are Mischa Auer and Eddie Boland as they appear in Big 4's mystery, "Murder at Dawn."

SCHLAIFER JOINS "U"; REISMAN RESIGNS

New General Manager Takes Over Sales Post; Reisman Contract Settled Amicably; Schlaifer, Laemmles in East

J. L. Schlaifer, formerly a division manager for United Artists and several years ago a Universal distribution executive, has been appointed general manager by Carl Laemmle. Within a few hours after the appointment, Phil Reisman resigned as sales manager of the corporation, and Schlaifer immediately assumed charge of sales along with his other executive duties.

Reisman announced Wednesday that he would make no plans for the future until he discharges what he considers his obligations to Universal with regard to the company's current problems. A joint statement, from R. H. Cochrane and Reisman, explained the termination of Reisman's connection as the result of "an honest difference of opinion over sales policy . . . the most friendly feeling prevails between Mr. Reisman and the company. . . . Reisman had promised his hearty cooperation in connection with all pending negotiations." Cochrane announced that no changes were contemplated in the sales department of Universal.

Settlement Arranged

Under Reisman's contract, which still had some time to run, there was provision for just such a difference of opinion as was the immediate cause of Reisman's resignation, and which he invoked in this instance. The former general sales manager is said to have denied before his departure for a few days' rest reports that he would assume a position with Warner-First National. A settlement has been arranged covering the unexpired period of Reisman's contract.

Schlaifer, Carl Laemmle, with whom negotiations were concluded, and Carl Laemmle, Jr., left Hollywood for New York late last week, arriving on Friday of this week. The Laemmles will complete plans for the 26 features scheduled for the 1932-33 season.

Schlaifer was born in Ovrick, Russia, December 15, 1891. He entered the film business in 1914, after receiving his education in Omaha, as a salesman for Warner Features in Calgary. He later joined United Film Service in New York, and in 1916 became a salesman for the "U" exchange there. He went to Chicago as manager of the Unicorn exchange, and then started a group of state rights exchanges. In 1920, after being demobilized following the war, he joined Universal as Seattle exchange manager, successively managing exchanges in Spokane and Portland. He was named western division manager in 1926, and held that post until June, 1927, when he resigned to associate himself with United Artists as a division manager. He served with that company until a few months ago, when United Artists abandoned the division managerships.

Carl Laemmle, before his departure with Laemmle, Jr., and Schlaifer for New York, was honored at his Beverly Hills, Cal., home on Wednesday, February 24, by intimate friends invited to assist in the celebration of Laemmle's 26th anniversary in the motion picture business. Preceding the private affair, the Wampas of Hollywood tendered the Universal president a testimonial dinner on Tuesday. Among those invited were Will H. Hays, Governor James Rolph of California, Dr. R. V. Von Kleinschmidt, president of the University of Southern California, and various other film executives and Coast leaders. The Laemmles are expected to return to the Coast in about three weeks.

Harry Rathner, recently replaced as general manager of the Universal circuit by Mike Newman, has left the home office to handle three local situations in Atlanta. Newman was recently director of publicity for Columbia at the studio and Coast exchanges. Newman has stated that he intends making no changes until he "personally examines each situation" in attempting to work out a solution of whatever problems he may find.

Before leaving for New York Carl Laemmle, Jr., signed Felix Young as an associate producer. Young was formerly a producer at Paramount.

Super-Programs at $2 Top Roxy View At "Radio City"

Theatrical entertainment on a grander scale than that of any yet presented regularly, at prices no higher than $2 for the best seats, was envisioned by S. L. ("Roxy") Rothafel at a luncheon of the New York Building Congress, at which he was the principal speaker, Such entertainment—with an orchestra of 90, and a ballet "with 45 girls on a line"—was designated for the International Music Hall of "Radio City" in New York, now definitely named Rockefeller Center.

International Music Hall is thus far set aside for only stage productions, but it is believed probable that a similar policy of lavish programs at moderate prices will be followed at the Rockefeller Center Cinema, which will also have a stage.

Rothafel said that present plans call for arrangements at International Music Hall whereby seats may be reserved a year in advance. Programs, he said, would be changed once a month.

McGoldrick Broadcasts From WMAQ Saturdays

The important Chicago radio station WMAQ has arranged to present weekly on Saturday morning, at 10:10 o'clock, a radio broadcast on "School and Screen" by Rita C. McGoldrick. Mrs. McGoldrick is editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD's department, "School and Screen."

Suburban Theatre Starts $1,200,000 Restraint Action

A suit asking $1,200,000 damages for business losses laid to enforcement of block booking policies has been filed in federal court at Indianapolis by R. R. Bair, neighborhood theatre operator there. Named as defendants are eleven producer-distributors, the Indianapolis Film Board of Trade and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Bair claims actual damages to his business of $400,000 and asks a judgment of triple the amount, as provided by law.

The defendants named in the action are: First National; Paramount Publix; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Universal; United Artists; Fox Film; Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Radio-Keith-Orpheum; RKO Pictures; Educational; Indianapolis Film Board of Trade, Vitagraph, Inc., and the MPPDA.

Conspiracy Charged

The concerns named are charged with conspiracy to restrain interstate trade. The plaintiff sets forth that enforcement of compulsory arbitration under the standard exhibition contract, which was invalidated by the Thacher decision of 1930, was responsible for financial losses to the Bair theatres. The complaint charges that the contract resulted in loss of patronage to the theatres because it forced the exhibitor either to show a certain number of poor pictures or to obtain substitutes at increased cost.

The suit, which is similar to the one filed in December by Indianapolis Amusement Company, is based on a United States supreme court decision of 1930 by which the defendants were enjoined from restraining trade in interstate commerce, according to H. K. Bachelder, of Bachelder & Bachelder, attorneys for Bair.

Similar Suits Filed

Similar suits also have been filed by F. J. Rembusch Enterprises, Inc., and Capitol Amusement Company, both of Indianapolis, in federal court in New York.

Counsel for the MPPDA in New York had no statement to make in regard to any of the Indianapolis actions. Copies of the complaint had not been received, the attorneys said.

To Name Hatch's Successor Later

Earle W. Hammons, president of Educational, will not appoint a successor to Stanley W. Hatch, general sales manager who resigned last week after three years in the post, "for two or three months," the company executive said on Tuesday. The future plans of Hatch have not been definitely set as yet.

Various assistant sales executives will handle the duties of the general sales manager until such time as a successor to Hatch is appointed, Hammons indicated. Hatch was with First National for nine years prior to his association with Educational, having held the position of western sales manager during the last three years of the First National connection.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Probably the last man to leave the Fox home office at night is none other than the corporation's president: Edward R. Tinker. We left him at eight o'clock the other night, working tirelessly on a sheaf of papers and important documents which had accumulated during his absence in Hollywood. Even that all important business of dinner was relegated to the background in order that he might keep pace with company affairs.

Bruce Gallup arrived in town on Tuesday morning from Hollywood to take over advertising-publicity management at Columbia's home office. At 11 o'clock someone thought of a "welcome-home" luncheon for Bruce. By noon, arrangements had been completed at the Hotel Astor and one hour later 25 of Bruce's closest friends were gathered with him at the table.

Kentucky's joker bill to make 1,000 or more colonels useful as well as ornamental brought a kick-back from Phillip Lord, the "Seth Parker" of Radio's "Way Back Home," who holds that he would like to remain a Kentucky colonel at a rate of $22.50 a year, but certainly not at $100, as stipulated in the proposed legislation. Anyway, says Seth, he's not a full-fledged Kentucky colonel because he has never worn gray trousers, long-tailed coats, broad-rimmed hats or a flowing "kernel" beard.

He also discovered that it is possible to send supplies and other materials and accessories along with the film lot, increasing the cost of the film shipment only slightly and entirely doing away with express charges for the supply department.

BRITISH FEARS OF U. S. CORNER ON TELEVISION NOW DISPELLED

Isadore Ostrer Obtains Hold on British Concern Formed by Baird; New Company to Form; Fox to Make Pageant Picture

By WM. H. MOORING, London

Isadore Ostrer has secured a hold on the British Television concern formed by the inventor J. L. Baird.

This is an astute move designed to anticipate any move by certain film interests in U. S. A. who for some time past have been understood to be watching for a suitable opportunity to break into the "British Settlement" of the "Televising Shanghai."

Britain Fears Foreign "Corner"

Ostrer is early enough to be in the forefront with any new development—and something is in the offing—which may bring the televisor and the cinema screen into practical relationship. It is a move which will win the approval of influential members of the British Government, among whom a good deal of propaganda regarding the dangers of a foreign "corner" in connection with television has recently been put in. Radio City started the talk, and there has since been a good deal of secret conversation and negotiation in high circles, with the object of making television safe for British democracy.

Some time ago a director of the Baird concern told me that he would go to the ends of the earth to prevent America getting a hold on the television situation, as it had on the cinemas of this country, because he recognized that at any moment they might wake up to find screen entertainment being served up on the broadcasting principle, and if that had to happen it might as well be that in this country, at any rate, British and not American nationals were in charge of programs, to say nothing of possible profits.

New Company to Form

If and when that time came he recognized that the status of the British Broadcasting Corporation would probably prevent any unauthorized radiation of televised entertainment, but the Baird concern was desirous not only of circumventing foreign control by backdoor methods, but to be able to justify the control of the television monopoly by British finance and personnel on grounds of merit as well as of national policy.

Ostrer's latest move seems to ensure that: time will tell.

Meantime a new company will be formed to take over the Baird concern as a subsidiary of British Acoustic, Ltd., which in turn is allied to Gaumont-British Corporation whose sound recording unit it is. A total of 800,000 deferred shares have been purchased by Ostrer in order to convey to him the desired control, and the newly constituted board of directors will include Maurice Ostrer (director of Gaumont-British), Sydney Moseley (vice-chairman of Baird Television) and possibly Isadore Ostrer.

No immediate adaptation of the televisor to cinema use by the Gaumont theatre circuit is under contemplation, but new capital will press forward the work of perfecting the system with that object in view when a practicable stage is reached.

Fox to Make Pageant Film

W. J. Hutchinson, managing director of Fox Films in this country, on his return from America this week announced that his company has secured the film rights in Noel Coward's current Drury Lane Theatre success, "Cavalcade," and also those of "Bitter Sweet," the latter much sought by several British producers, including Eric Hakim, who wanted the thing for Metro-Goldwyn release.

That an American concern should have the courage to attempt "Cavalcade" is amazing, for it is not merely a purely historical subject, it is really a panoramic presentation of all the things a true blue blooded Briton holds as sacred. It is possible that Fox will be able to cut out maudlin sentiment and get a real picture from the thing, which is not really a story at all, but simply an historical pageant. But great care will be needed if success is to be assured on this side.

The stage show created a sensation and cashed in on the terrific wave of patriotic sentiment which swept this country just before the recent Parliamentary election. It includes snatches of old London, the funeral procession of the late Queen Victoria, the scenes on the first Armistice Night after the great war, and all kinds of similar national episodes.

"Bitter Sweet" is of course a quite pleasant and entirely uncomplicated musical, which will I imagine be as well done in America as anywhere else. But if Fox want to make a beau geste, they would be wise to send over a competent unit to make "Cavalcade" in this country. They could enlist national sympathy by acknowledging that the nature of the subject induced them to have it made in the country to which its historical motif belongs.

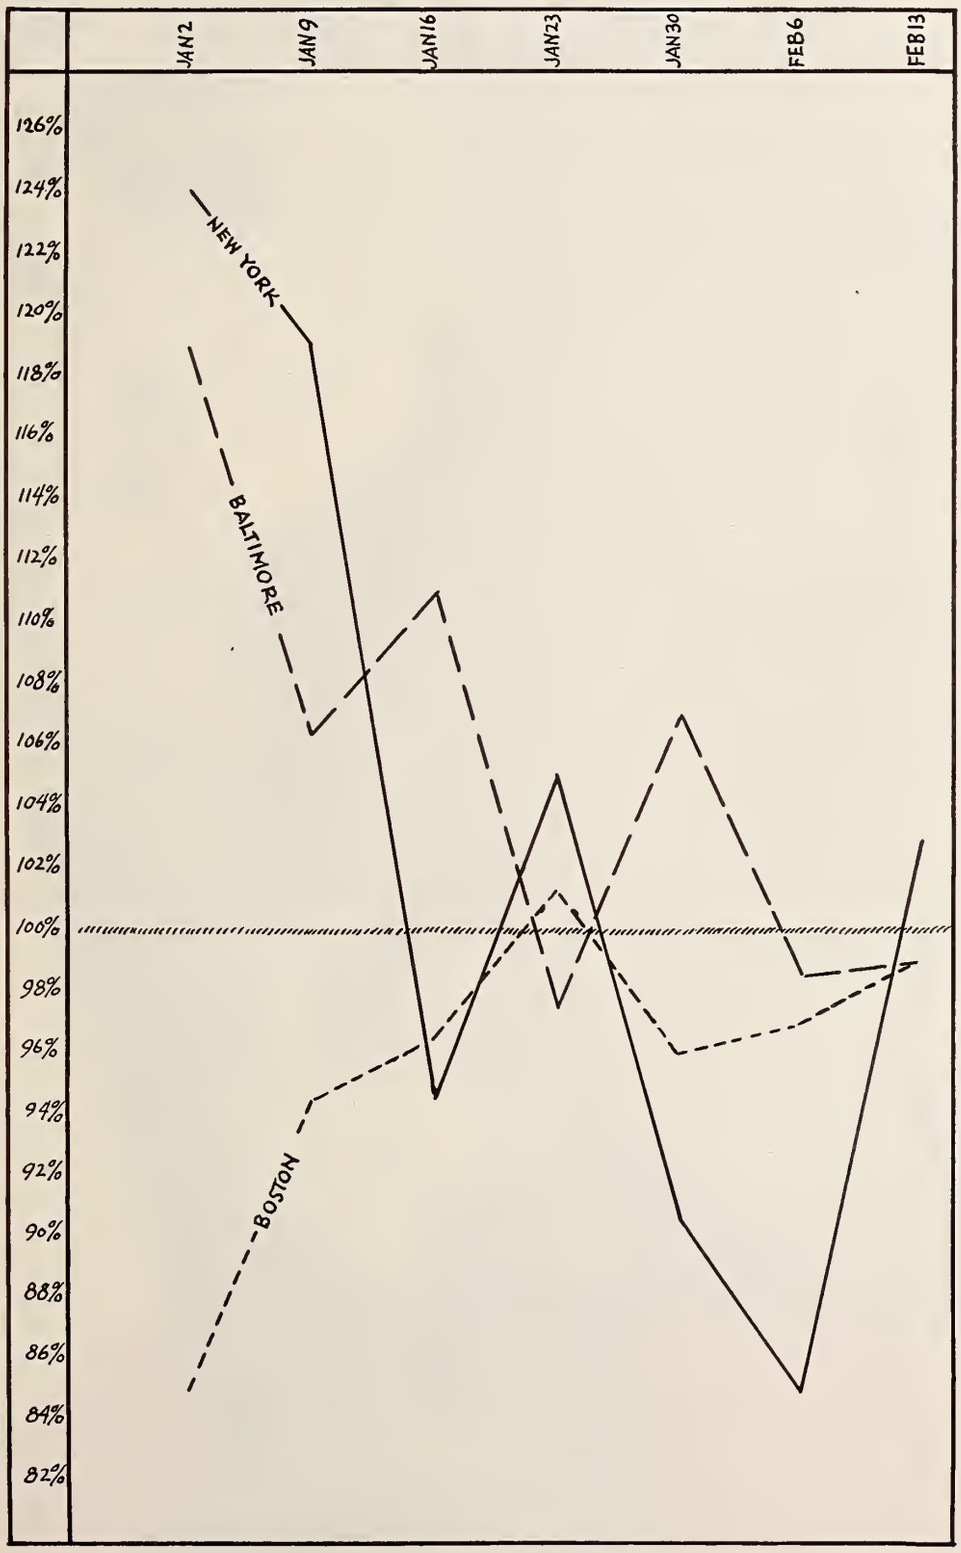
Warner Supplies Best Ad Campaign To All Bookings

Selection of the best advertising campaigns used with Warner-First National pictures for dissemination to all theatres which have booked the same pictures is bringing results to both exhibitors and distributor, says the company. A complete service system utilizing the company's home office advertising department and Warner exchanges throughout the country has been developed to conduct the new plan.

The service is designed to select those advertising campaigns which proved most effective at the box office and bring them to the attention of other exhibitors playing or about to play the same picure about which the campaign was originally built. This service does not supplant any sales aids formerly supplied exhibitors by Warner Brothers, but is provided in addition to the regular merchandising campaigns.

Photostat Machines Installed



In conducting the service, Warner Brothers' home office advertising department scrutinizes the newspaper campaigns used on Warner pictures in all key cities. Good, original campaigns, or novel and effective sales angles included in them are recognized and reproduced. Photostating machines have been installed in the home office for the purpose and within two hours after a distinctive advertisement has been clipped from a key city newspaper, copies of it are on the way to every Warner exchange for distribution to exhibitors who have booked the picture. Campaigns which were used successfully during New York first-runs are also reproduced and dispatched to the field.

Warner exchangemen throughout the country have standing instructions to be on the alert for novel and effective selling ideas used with the company's pictures in their territories. These are reported to the home office and immediately made available to exhibitors playing the picture everywhere. Warner salesmen carry duplicates of these original campaigns, and discuss advertising values as well as pictures when calling on exhibitor accounts.

Another phase of the service is the dispatching of a home office exploitation man into the field to stage the campaigns which have been recommended to the exhibitor. The success of this plan has made it popular with large first-run houses in particular.

S. Charles Einfeld, Warner Brothers advertising manager, cites instances where particular success was met with New York ad campaigns when employed in duplicate in numerous other cities.

Chairman Sirovich of Patents Committee Tells Hess Members Are Agreed on Vital Points; Measure to be Drafted

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Copyright legislation which will meet the full approval of the motion picture industry will be drafted by the House patents committee as a result of its hearings, representatives of the industry were promised at Washington Wednesday by Representative Sirovich of New York, chairman.

Members of the committee, Sirovich said, are practically unanimously agreed upon the inclusion in the measure of provisions that all copyrights shall be in the name of the author; the copyright owner shall have the right to make assignments; the copyright owner may license his rights separately, and copyright owners guilty of plagiarism or assigning or licensing two or more persons at the same time for the same thing shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable.

Exhibitors having complaints against the producers will be given a hearing on March 2, at which time Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney of the Hays organization, promised to be present with the documentary evidence of holdover or bicycling for which the exhibitors were penalized.

Discussing the subject of copyright with Louis Swarts, chairman of the copyright committee of the Hays office, Sirovich announced that representatives of the State Department are working with the committee in an effort to draft legislation permitting entry of the United States in the Berne International Copyright Convention and thus take care of the international situation. Swarts pointed out that the present copyright law is 20 years old and that since its enactment many new developments have occurred. All of these, however, have been taken into consideration by the committee. He urged that the legislation give the licensee or assignee the right to sue and also that steps be taken to protect innocent infringers against the imposition of exemplary damages and, in the case of films, against injunction.

Declaring that the present penalty provisions for unauthorized exhibition, providing for damages of $250 to $500 be continued, Hess asserted that probably 10 per cent of the exhibitors of the country at one time or another practiced holdover or bicycling. His explanation of the situation aroused Congressman Sirovich, who suggested that there be a law which would "put them out of business."

Indications that the committee does not look with favor upon the practice of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers of collecting seat taxes from theatres for the use of music on sound films when the exhibitor has already paid for the film, were seen in questions by Sirovich. This phase of the situation will be discussed at a hearing February 26.

untrue, distorted and exaggerated that has been uttered against the movies in the past ten years. What has been said in praise of the movies and the progress they have made in that time would make a much larger and more illuminating volume.

"The motion picture industry has no objection to a senatorial inquiry. Like all other forms of American business we have our problems, which we are making every effort to solve.

"Right now the motion picture industry in common with other great American industries, and our Government itself, is going through a serious economic transition. It must seem to even a casual observer that this is a poor time to subject our industry or any other industry to needless harassment, or to spend the taxpayers' money to enable a few disgruntled and unsuccessful members of the picture profession to vent their spleen before a senate committee.

Gallup Honored at "Speechless" Fete

A decidedly warm, but informal welcome was tendered Bruce Gallup at the Hotel Astor, New York, early this week on his arrival from the West Coast to assume his new post as director of publicity and advertising at Columbia's home office.

The welcome was in the form of a "speechless" luncheon, organized by Larry Wiener of Columbia about 45 minutes after Gallup's arrival.

"Wisecracks" were so abundant that all present decided the luncheons should be continued as a weekly opportunity for the comedians. When the assemblage was called on to toast Gallup all arose and pointed thumbs upward. Accordingly, the assemblage will be known as the Thumb Club and will meet on the eighth floor of the Astor at 1 o'clock each Tuesday.

Those present included:

Don M. Mersereau and Marvin Kirsch of The Film Daily; Kelcey Allen of Women's Wear, Mike Simmons of Educational, Ed Finney and George Gerhard of United Artists, Lou Rydell of Variety, Henry Ruston, Tom Gerety of M-G-M, Julius Cohen of the New York Staats Zeitung, Larry Wiener, head of the advertising agency bearing his name; James P. Cunningham, Herbert Fecke and Ray Gallagher of Motion Picture Herald, Jack Cohen of Supreme Trailer Service, James A. Cron and "Red" Kann of Motion Picture Daily and several others.

The AMPA in New York has decided to singularly honor Gallup, its former president, at the weekly luncheon meeting on Thursday, at Sardi's.

Hess Sees Test of Sincerity Coming In Abramson Case

The following statement was made today by Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of American, Inc., with regard to the address delivered by Senator Brookhart in Washington:

"The attack made by Senator Brookhart upon the motion picture industry is too characteristic of his destructive attitude towards all industries to require extended comment. There is no shred of novelty in the statements which he has repeated time and again.

"However, this latest attempt to use the political washtub for many charges against the movies that long ago have been exploded in the public press has a significance which his senatorial colleagues and public opinion can not fail to note. Senator Brookhart is one of the trial counsel of record in a case scheduled for trial early next month that involves the very issues which he now seeks to re-air in advance by means of a senatorial inquiry. The case is Ivan Abramson and Graphic Film Corporation against the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and many others named as defendants, in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

"When the action does come up for trial, the public will have ample opportunity to determine the sincerity of Mr. Brookhart's protestations that he is seeking to protect the morals of the nation.

"Senatorial Show"

"Certainly the motion picture industry has no objection to any investigation. But at a time when this industry in common with other great American industries is earnestly engaged in the problems of rehabilitation and readjustment imperative for the return of national prosperity, it would seem that the taxpayers' money could be more usefully spent than by providing a senatorial forum for every racketeer who may seek to arouse lagging interest in his anti-movie activities. At a time when the nation is looking to its elected representatives for constructive legislative measures that would hasten the return of public confidence and increased employment, Senator Brookhart's contribution to public welfare, apparently, is to offer to stage a senatorial show with the movies as the main attraction.

"The statements made by Mr. Brookhart on the basis of partial and incomplete quotations from various publications during the past two or three years give a false and misleading picture of present conditions in the motion picture industry. Senator Brookhart quotes extensively from a report issued last year on the motion picture industry by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

"The statement issued by the Federal Council of Churches for release to the press on June 29, 1931, specifically declared that 'in evaluating the work of the Hays organization, the report has two findings,' expressing the first as follows:

" 'That the Hays organization has entertained some laudable purposes, has set up some constructive procedures and has definite accomplishments to its credit, we think is clear. The record shows that the studio relations department has done some constructive work in hammering out standards and securing recognition of them. The development of an extensive program of cooperation with women's groups in the use of preview lists and in the arrangement of special programs is no small accomplishment.

" 'The record of the industry in settling disputes by arbitration is impressive. It appears also to have accomplished something noteworthy in the matter of employment conditions, through the operation of the Central Casting Corporation in Hollywood. In such undertakings there is much of social value to conserve.'

"Nevertheless, Senator Brookhart saw fit to ignore every constructive feature of the report in his own statements.

"Equally typical of his methods is the manner in which he misrepresents the program of the Association of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America in encouraging organized cooperation to secure the widest possible public support for pictures of the better kind. A public statement issued on April 7, 1930 by organizations representing a membership of more than 5,000,000 in the United States declared specifically:

" 'The industry has asked nothing but our advice and counsel on matters of picture production, and has given nothing in return but their respectful and effective consideration of the proposals that we have made. In addition to presenting special criticisms and making suggestions for motion picture improvement, we have considered it a privilege to help stimulate support of a number of highly commendable pictures that were not attracting sufficient patronage to pay for the cost of production. We believe that lack of public support for meritorious productions has been one of the deterring influences in motion picture improvement. Our only compensation has been a large amount of personal satisfaction in performing what we believe to be a public service by helping in the progressive improvement of motion picture production and in influencing the recent adoption by all leading motion picture producers of an excellent and far reaching code of ethical practices.'

"And yet Senator Brookhart, on the basis of the fact that the organized motion picture industry has gladly undertaken printing and similar costs to insure the widest possible distribution of educational material, often critical of the pictures produced by the industry, finds such cooperation of allegedly sinister import.

"The motion picture industry can well afford to leave it to the public opinion to determine the fairness or unfairness of such methods."

GENERAL SALE TAX WOULD EASE PROPOSED BURDENS ON INDUSTRY

Hint of Move to Restore Assessment on Film Rentals But Officials Admit This Levy Would Not Yield Over Ten Millions

By F. L. BURT, Washington

With the fate of a proposed tax on admissions still undetermined, the industry faces another taxation yoke in the form of an assessment on rentals.

Exploring every avenue of taxation in the effort to raise $1,250,000,000 necessary to balance the Federal budget, members of the House Ways and Means Committee obtained this week from the treasury department estimates of the revenues which would be derived from return of the war taxes, including the levy on film rentals.

While details of the amounts which could be raised by return of all of the so called "nuisance" taxes of a dozen years ago are being kept confidential, it is admitted that the revenue from motion picture rentals would probably not exceed $10,000,000.

Not Agreed on Admission Tax

Indications that members of the committee are not agreed as to the advisability of cutting the exemption on admission taxes from $3 to 10 cents are seen in the request that the treasury estimate the revenues which would be derived, respectively, from exemptions of 35 cents and 50 cents. Two-thirds of the revenue would be lost by moving the exemption as proposed from 10 up to 35 cents, the figures are understood to show, and probably $25,000,000 or $35,000,000 would be obtained from a 50-cent exemption.

Development of a tax bill which will raise $1,241,000,000 without imposing a tremendous hardship upon the people is a "nightmare," according to leading members of the Ways and Means Committee. Recent developments have indicated that the imposition of a general sales tax is gaining favor. This tax would be imposed upon manufacturers, so as to prohibit "pyramiding," and it is believed as much as $600,000,000 could thus be raised.

Still Would Fall Short

Even with a general sales tax, which, of course, would not apply to necessities of life, and with increased income rates for individuals and corporations, there would still be the necessity of raising several hundred million dollars in other ways, and the opinion prevails that an admission tax would be included in the miscellaneous levies designed to round out the bill.

Officials of the treasury department, asked to make new recommendations as an aid to the committee, have stuck by their original program, including the 10-cent admission tax exemption, and insist that income tax raises shall be made retroactive and that postage rates shall be increased.

The committee has definitely refused to make any of the taxes retroactive and there is little or no possibility of securing an increase in postage rates at this time, so that it is necessary to make up something over $200,000,000 by other taxes.

It is now generally accepted that the corporation income tax rate will be increased from 12 to 13 per cent and that the present exemption of $3,000 allowed corporations with taxable net income not exceeding $25,000 will be reduced to $2,000 for corporations showing not more than $10,000 taxable income. Individual normal tax rates will be two, four and six per cent, instead of 1½, three and five per cent, as at present, and exemptions are likely to be reduced from $1,500 to $1,000 for single persons and $3,500 to $2,500 for heads of families, while surtax rates, now having a maximum of 20 per cent, will be rewritten to give a maximum of 40 per cent on income in excess of $500,000.

BULLETIN!

Prior to leaving New York for Washington, Charles C. Pettijohn, one of the leaders in the fight against admission taxation, reported the expectation that the House ways and means committee would report on its revenue program, including admission phases, late this week.

Industry Defends Aliens In Attack On Immigration Bill

The industry on Wednesday presented arguments at Washington against pending legislation subjecting alien actors to the provisions of the Contract Labor Law. C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel for Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, told the House Immigration Committee that the bill would not improve opportunities for American artists, while it would materially increase the difficulties which are being encountered by our films abroad.

"Passage of the bill," he declared, "would seriously affect our domestic trade by restricting the source and variety of artistic talent upon which we rely for the success of our productions and it would practically ruin our foreign trade by placing almost insurmountable obstacles in the way of foreign production."

"If American producers were to continue to make foreign versions of films," he continued, "the bill would compel them to establish studios abroad." Admitting that there is unemployment in the theatrical industry, Pettijohn asserted it is not good legislation to jeopardize the jobs of thousands to provide employment for a few. It is the talent of the individual actor and his value as a box-office attraction which is employed, he pointed out, and if an alien actor is a good box-office attraction he will provide employment for hundreds of Americans. The American picture industry has achieved its present position abroad through the free flow of talent. Today, its supremacy is "more seriously threatened than ever before," he declared, and the producers are also confronted with numerous economic problems with regard to foreign trade.

Wiley to Speak at MPTOA Banquet

Is there a definite line of cleavage between the press and the screen? Do these mediums of expression clash in any way in the American public's mind? Or is there a service mutuality between them?

These questions will be answered by one of the leading newspaper executives of the United States, Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, at the national convention of the MPTOA to be held at the Mayflower hotel in Washington March 14, 15 and 16.

Mr. Wiley will speak at the convention banquet Tuesday, March 15. At this event will be many United States senators and congressmen. Many leading stars will be there and two leading humorists, Eddie Dowling and Con. McCole.

MONOGRAM PLANS 40 TO COST $2,400,000

Increase of Twelve, Including Eight Specials, Is Announced at New Orleans Convention; Exceed Quotas, Says Johnston

Franchise holders of Monogram Pictures, in their second annual convention at the Hotel Jung, New Orleans, have authorized a production schedule of $2,400,000. The 1932-33 schedule will consist of 32 features and eight specials, an increase of 12 over last season's program. W. Ray Johnston, president, who opened the three-day session on Monday, announced the schedule as divided into a first group, called "Monogram's Magnetic 32," consisting of 16 action dramas and 16 action westerns in two series of eight, each featuring a star, and eight features to cost approximately $100,000 each. One other "super-special" will be announced later.

The combined business of all the organizations represented at the convention is $14,000,000 annually, without considering the interests of the corporation abroad, it was reported to the opening session on Monday. Johnston announced that nationally the exchanges as a whole, in combined totals, have exceeded the quotas set by the parent organization by approximately $880,400 on the season to date, which has three months yet to run. Over one-half of the exchanges have already exceeded their sales quotas, Johnston reported. Thirty-three territorial franchise holders were represented at the convention.

Twenty-two of the announced 28 on the company's 1931-32 schedule have been completed or are in work, leaving only three melodramas and three westerns to be finished.

The treasurer's report showed the company in excellent financial condition. Treasurer Albert Siedler said a suggestion would be made to the meeting that the stock be put on a dividend paying basis for the year. He indicated that the bank loans of the corporation had been paid off in full on February 1, leaving the company in excellent position to borrow money for its 1932-33 production schedule. Committees have been appointed to re-zone the different territorial divisions to conform more nearly to the lines used by the national distributors. Another committee has been named to handle the re-assessment of percentages to be paid by the various franchise holders to conform to the new divisions.

Sports Tie-ups Being Arranged For Rogers New 'Garden' Film

Arrangements for a tieup embracing cooperative exploitation and merchandising campaigns with practically every active factor in the field of sports, are being started by Charles R. Rogers in connection with the launching of "Madison Square Garden," the Thompson Burtis epic of the sports world. A setup is being formulated for pertinent hook-ins—concurrent with the release of the picture—with local athletic tournaments, boxing, wrestling and hockey contests throughout the country. Schedules of national, interstate, intercity and county athletic and sports programs are now being compiled, to be used as part of the exploitation operations on behalf of the picture.

Quebec Roused to Combat Tax Raise

A furore has been raised in the cities of Quebec by the heavy increases in the amusement tax provided as a government measure in the provincial legislature. The changes establish a straight five cent levy on the first 30 cents of an admission price and a 20 per cent tax on the admission over 30 cents. The former amusement tax in Quebec was 10 per cent of the face value of a ticket.

Managers in Montreal and other cities are disturbed over the prospective result of the new tax scale. It is unanimously predicted that patronage will show a distinct falling off and that the revenue for both the theatres and the government will be materially reduced. Another angle is that, up to the present, practically all theatres included the tax in the admission price and deducted the assessment from receipts, whereby business was not materially affected. Members of the Montreal Theatre Managers Association say that it will be impossible to include the new tax in the admission price. Instead of the theatre absorbing the tax of six cents on a 60-cent ticket, the patron will have to be called upon to pay the 20 per cent levy in direct manner. If a 60-cent price is maintained, the tax will mean an additional 12 cents to be paid by the theatre patron.

Exhibitors of Quebec met with Premier L. A. Taschereau some days ago to argue their case. Taschereau has announced that he granted a concession as a result in raising the minimum ticket price covered by the straight five cent tax from 25 cents to 30 cents. Montreal exhibitors are organizing to fight the tax increases which, otherwise, are sure to be enacted.

One Association, if Independent: Allied

Allied States Association is in favor of one large organization of exhibitors, but only if it is an independent association, it was emphasized by W. A. Steffes, president of Allied, in a statement to the members of the Minnesota, North and South Dakota unit, of which he is general manager.

In his communication, Steffes noted that such a proposal was voted down at the Allied convention last February, but that it would again be offered at the Allied meeting in Detroit, March 8 to 10.

Block Sales Case Against Paramount Comes Up March 7

Compulsory block booking goes under fire March 7, in U. S. District Court of Appeals at New York, when will be heard the Federal Trade Commission's ten-year old action against Paramount which will decide the legality of block booking as a sales policy. The hearings arise out of the Commission's appeal to have enforced against Paramount its "cease and desist" order of 1927, and are destined to culminate the lengthy action.

In its original complaint the Federal Trade Commission charged Famous Players-Lasky with unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce, basing the charge on allegations of conspiring with others to lessen competition and set up a monopoly within the industry. The Commission, following the taking of voluminous testimony, issued a cease and desist order against Famous Players-Lasky, calling upon the concern to stop the practice of block booking and to refrain from building or acquiring theatres as a means of intimidating exhibitors into purchasing Paramount pictures.

Subsequently, the Commission withdrew its charges of furthering a monopoly by conspiracy and by acquisition of theatres, and now seeks only the court's affirmation of its order to cease the practice of block booking.

Proceedings in the case were begun in 1921, and an amended complaint was served in 1923. Paramount filed an answer to this complaint and after the taking of testimony the orders to cease and desist were issued. Paramount ignored the Commission's order and in 1928 the Commission applied for a Circuit Court order for the enforcement of its decree. The testimony taken during the hearings was of such volume that the printing of the records would have cost the Commission approximately $200,000. Without this sum available, the Commission decided to reduce the record to a reasonable length, and during the past four years this work has been in progress, holding the arguments on appeal in abeyance. The result of this review work, engaged in by Martin A. Morrison, attorney for the Commission, and representatives of Cravath, De Gersdorff, Swain & Wood, attorneys for the defendant, was the elimination of the charges involving furtherance of a monopoly.

Named in the amended complaint of 1923 in addition to Famous Players-Lasky were Adolph Zukor, Jesse Lasky, Stanley Company of America, Stanley Booking Corp., Jules Mastbaum, Black New England Theatres, Alfred S. Black, Southern Enterprises, Inc., Saenger Amusement Co., E. V. Richards, Jr., and Realart Pictures. Charges were subsequently quashed against all by Famous Players-Lasky.

'Shanghai Express' Hailed As Best Picture in 10 Years

By REGINA CREWE,
Motion Picture Editor N. Y. American

"SHANGHAI EXPRESS," a Paramount Picture, adapted by Jules Furthman from a story by Harry Hervey, directed by Josef Von Sternberg, and presented at the Rialto theatre.

THE CAST.

Shanghai Lily	Marlene Dietrich
Capt. Harvey	Clive Brook
Hue Fei	Anna May Wong
Henry Chang	Warner Oland
Sam Salt	Eugene Pallette
Rev. Carmichael	Lawrence Grant
Mrs. Haggerty	Louise Closser Hale
Eric Baum	Gustav von Seyffertitz
Col. Lenard	Emile Chautard

Of many thousand pictures viewed during a ten-year period "Shanghai Express" is the finest—the most fascinating. I shall return to the Rialto again and again to enjoy an exquisite busman's holiday. Von Sternberg, Dietrich, Brook and the rest have attained perfection. There is no jarring note to mar this cinema symphony.

The director's ever restless camera moves through the Oriental motley of the Peiping station limning the colorful melange found East of Suez, pausing occasionally to pick up this detail or that, until one not only sees the vivid procession but is part of it. The very smell of China has been camera-captured.

From the milling mob Von Sternberg picks his characters—an opium smuggler, a cached officer, a gambling man, a slant-eyed girl of the Red Lantern, a boarding-house mistress, a suave Eurasian, a British officer and—"Shanghai Lily," the notorious beauty whose charms have strewn broken hearts and empty purses along the China coast.

Amazing and amusing by-play further establishes the atmosphere in which finally the siren and the officer encounter one another, and in a flash of bitter memory recognize their loves of other days. Doubt came between them to leave him in sorrow and she in desperation; to send him to the world's ends in his Majesty's service, and to make her "Shanghai Lily." Doubt did this to them. For, mind you, "Shanghai Express" has for its premise the cardinal necessity of Faith in Love.

As the train thunders along through the heat-laden night, Government troops bring it to an abrupt halt. Each passport is demanded, and at last a luckless Revolutionary—a spy—is taken prisoner. The train moves on. But not before the half-caste passenger sends a code-dispatch. For now we're deep in the drama, and "Mr. Chang," is divined to be a moving factor in the revolt.

At a water tank the rat-tat-tat of machine guns pierces the darkness, and the enemy forces seize control. Now the Eurasian emerges in proper guise, clad in the uniform of commander in chief of the Revolutionary forces. He seeks a hostage for the spy, his assistant, and holds the British officer.

The others do not interest him. But in his malignancy he stops long enough to brand one who has affronted him. And his business completed for the moment, he turns his attention to "Shanghai Lily." She scornfully rejects his offer to become chatelaine of a palace hidden in the interior, and when he persists "Captain Harvey" comes to the rescue. With a blow he earns the yellow man's enmity.

The agreement is for an exchange of prisoners—the captured spy for the British officer—both to be delivered alive. But the fiendish "Chang," with his accomplice saved, plans to blind his hostage. Then "Shanghai Lily" offers herself in sacrifice. And only a dagger thrust removes the menace.

There is more—much more. But time is brief and space scant. See for yourself—as I have, and will again and again.

Never has Marlene Dietrich reached greater heights—and never has she appeared so alluring. Her close-ups are quite the most beautiful pictures to be seen upon the screen. Put Clive Brook in a British uniform and he is perfection. And the brooding Anna May Wong personifies the tragedy of the East. A leavening of laughter is supplied by those accomplished technicians 'Gene Pallette and Louise Closser Hale. And when it comes to Oriental villainy try to top Warner Oland!

It's a mighty triumph for Paramount—and all concerned. And in particular for Joseph Von Sternberg, who, with "Shanghai Express," occupies a throne high among the directorial gods.

EDUCATORS DISCUSS PROGRESS OF A DECADE IN VISUAL INSTRUCTION

Visual Educational Groups at Washington Told Financial Support Must Be Obtained, Teacher Resistance Broken

Ten years of progress in the development of educational motion pictures this week were discussed by the National Academy of Visual Instruction, meeting jointly in Washington with the department of superintendence of the National Education Association.

The creation by producers of a systematically organized library of visual material, development of a current events educational news weekly, consideration of a possible independent organization to restrict its production entirely to educational films and establishment of a clearing house for distribution of visual educational aids were recommended.

On the part of the schools, it was urged, financial support must be secured for supplying equipment for effective visual instruction, the product available—"greater than is generally appreciated"—must be used more extensively in order that further production may be encouraged, and the "resistance" of educators to this new form of teaching must be broken down.

Developments Summarized

Developments of the past decade were summarized by Dr. F. Dean McClusky, president of the academy, in a report prepared at the request of Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, as a guide for future activities on the part of the producers.

Among the companies active in this field, he declared, Eastman Teaching Films, Inc., has a program of 325 pictures, 200 of which are already produced and 75 in production; RCA Photophone, Inc., is concentrating on experimentation in the realm of higher education; Fox Film Corporation has produced 52 pictures, 15 additional are virtually complete and 200 more are programmed; and Electrical Research Products, Inc., has produced 60 and has 20 in production out of a schedule of 360 planned.

The educational value of many current entertainment pictures was stressed by Dr. McClusky. "The vaults of the theatrical producers," he declared, "are filled with treasures for the school room in which many great epics of history have been reincarnated.

"Of all the source material to be drawn up," the academy was told, "none appeals more to the imagination than those actual recordings of human activity which the newsreel companies have been gathering from the four corners of the world over a period of 30 years."

Reports of scores of the several thousand school superintendents and other educators present emphasized that sound pictures are destined to play a most important part in education during the coming years.

The convention showed a definite interest in the 16 millimeter projection apparatus, though it was generally recognized that the regular 35 millimeter is superior for auditorium presentation. Among the exhibits viewed by the educators was the new RCA Victor Photophone 16 mm. sound-on-film portable apparatus, designed for classroom work in particular and demonstrated in Washington for the first time. Demonstrations of various types of equipment were held for the estimated 10,000 educators present at the Washington Auditorium, National Press Club, local Board of Education.

Particular interest in the possibilities of the 16 mm. apparatus was evinced by Dr. McClusky, Ellsworth Dent, secretary of the association; Mrs. Grace Ramsey, associate curator of education of the American Museum of Natural History in New York. Eriak A. Anderson, deputy superintendent of schools in Providence, R. I., a pioneer in visual educational activities, saw great potentialities in the 16 mm. type of equipment for the class room and small study hall.

Suggestions to Educators

Dr. McClusky's report, entitled "Visual Instruction, Its Value and Its Needs," comprised an analysis and condensation of findings by scores of educational authorities, including surveys of the effectiveness of instruction through pictures, as evidenced by modern advertising practice, rotogravure sections and increasing illustration of textbooks.

"Educators must assume a more active role in the development of the new technique and the acquisition of facilities for its use," Dr. McClusky said, and recommended four types of activity:

1. Educators must inform the laymen and those on whom they depend for financial support as to the necessity of supplying the equipment for effective visual instruction.
2. The schools must increasingly use the product available—"and the amount of visual material is greater than is generally appreciated"—in order to encourage further production on an elaborate scale.
3. "Natural but mistaken" resistance must be broken down. "Properly used, visual material will repay its cost in the conservation of the teacher's time and energy alone." It "can never supplant the teacher."
4. Willing cooperation of educators with those preparing plans for the production of pedagogical pictures.

Suggestions to Producers

To the producers Dr. McClusky makes the following recommendations:

1. Working out of a "comprehensive philosophy of education" with "cognizance of the respective parts to be played by the teachers, texts and visual aids in the classroom."
2. Creation of "a systematically organized library of visual material."
3. A current events educational weekly, selected from the most educational sequences in the existing news weeklies.
4. A clearing-house for distribution of visual educational aids exclusively.
5. Specialization in particular fields by the various companies interested in the educational film supply, with subdivisions of activity such as primary, secondary, college and technical subjects.
6. Consideration of a possible independent, permanent producing organization to restrict its production entirely to pedagogical films.

Producers Are Urged to Create Library of Visual Material, Develop News Weekly; Seek Producer of Teaching Films

Aims, Subjects Noted

Hitherto unpublished results of an elaborate study, conducted over a period of years by Electrical Research Products, Inc., is included in the McClusky report. This study reduced 59 differently worded aims of pedagogical film development in the field of social science, as stated by the world's leading educators, to five general headings:

1. The nature and needs of human society.
2. A knowledge of social institutions.
3. The development of individual social and civic responsibilities.
4. Interpreting the past in terms of the present.
5. Study habits and skills in the use of social data.

Another survey in the Junior high school field, again with the aid of educators, indicates nine subjects of film treatment as particularly desirable to assist the high school teacher:

1. Transportation.
2. Communication.
3. The Natural Resources of the United States.
4. Interdependence of Modern Life.
5. Development of Agriculture.
6. Industrial Development.
7. Governmental Problems and Relations.
8. Educational Opportunities.
9. Desirable Recreational Activities.

English Circuit's Net off in 1931

The annual report of Moss Empires, large English theatre circuit, shows a 1931 profit of 50,350 pounds, as compared to 154,570 pounds for 1930, a decrease of 104,220 pounds.

A stockholders' meeting scheduled for Friday of this week, is expected to precipitate a sharp battle between the Ostrer Brothers on the one hand and Will Evans, with the backing of Lord Beaverbrook, on the other. A cinema or film policy as against a vaudeville policy in the circuit's theatres is the prize for which the fight is to be waged, advices from London indicate.

Gaumont British, which controls 300,000 shares of the stock outstanding, is the protagonist for the vaudeville as against the cinema policy. The Evans-Beaverbrook interests control, on their side, 175,000 shares, and other directors 146,000 shares. The balance of power lies with 700,000 individual votes, for which the rival factions in the controlling groups are waging a sharp fight.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"SHANGHAI EXPRESS" without the present Sino-Japanese fracas would be a great b.o. picture; with it, it's a cleanup all the way down the line. Besides, railroad stories, even in foreign lands, hold a peculiar fascination for the average theatregoer and here you get a plentiful presentation of a most unusual railroad run to Shanghai.

The titles is so loaded with box office magnetism that we wonder whether it should be necessary to try to oversell it. On the other hand, to let it shift for itself may result in business below your expectations. So, keep your eye on those key city campaigns, especially the newspaper ads, and see how they make use of that title, plus the cast and plus the present war rumblings from the east.

Its "audience value" can never be questioned. It more than holds your interest, it completely fascinates you until you find yourself following the action of the picture under more or less of a tension. Pictures that can boast of such a thing can certainly be placed in a distinct class by themselves, and "Shanghai Express" deserves to be classed as something far and above the socalled "great" pictures—speaking of course from its box office appeal, not its greatness of story or treatment.

Your chief problem, it appears to me, is to get your play dates in as soon as possible. You can never tell when the war in China will suddenly end and leave you stuck without its profitable slants to be used when merchandising this picture. You can spot it anywhere you please, but it would be very advisable to keep it away from your kid days. Otherwise it has enough b.o. "it" to mean one of the biggest paid admission pictures you have played this season.

"LADY WITH A PAST" appealed to me so much that I just sat and chuckled through the whole picture. And that's the way it obviously affected the rest of the audience at the Mayfair theatre in New York, to judge from the sounds of enjoyment they were making. Miss Bennett gives an excellent performance and is convincing all the way through. Ditto for Ben Lyon and all the others. And what gowns Miss Bennett wears! Womenfolk in the Loop or on Main Street will get their money's worth on that slant alone.

The title conveys any number of different b.o. slants. But to get the utmost out of it you will have to build up interest via your selling campaign, which should not be so tough considering the actal bearing that title has on the story and plot. Sell it just that way and you can make it a real box office bet. Combined with Constance Bennett's past film successes, it ought to be pretty nearly air-tight.

"Audience value" is splendid, leaving mighty little to be desired in the way of entertainment. The greatest appeal is for the women, both by reason of the story and the clothes displayed by the star, but it nevertheless is real entertainment for the menfolk too. You need not be a bit afraid of overselling this one; you can stretch a point or two and promise them one of the best shows of the season and when you stop to consider the really few pictures that have topped "Lady with a Past" in this year's product then you'll agree that it won't be telling an untruth.

While hardly suitable for kids and in some spots on Sunday you can give it preferred playing time and chances are that you will cash in to the tune of a profitable engagement. It's light comedy stuff of the kind that we all can use plenty of. It will do business for you with a little help, and maybe without the help, too.

"SHE WANTED A MILLIONAIRE" makes it two for the Bennett family girls on Times Square this week. (Connie is at the Mayfair.) Joan Bennett is the featured star in this one, along with Spencer Tracy, James Kirkwood and Una Merkel, and every one of them helps make this picture a darned good one. Miss Bennett carries off her end of the picture leaving nothing to be desired. The story calls for a pretty and very youthful girl, and Joan is all of that—and more. Una Merkel had the Roxy audience roaring and certainly ought to be starred in something carrying a role like the one she handles here. Tracy is a bit like Jimmie Dunn but is O.K.

The title offers many fine selling angles, all of which could be built up to large box office proportions depending on just how strong you sell it in your own community. The different angles all are strong enough to make them valuable for advertising purposes, but the smart showman is the man who will make use of them all. In many spots the names in this cast may not be any too strong for b.o. purposes, therefore the necessity for leaning on the title is most important.

"Audience value" is above par. Joan Bennett will win many new followers through her work in this picture and her personal performance was very acceptable to a large holiday audience at the New York Roxy. At times she was adorable, especially in the sequences at the Atlantic City Beauty Carnival. There's plenty of entertainment in this picture to suit the tastes of the different classes of movie goers, so sell it strong enough to get them to the b.o. and buying tickets.

NG for kids, but anywhere else OK. Take advantage of every opportunity to build up a good campaign for this picture. It will get by in grand fashion if you're a good salesman.

"NICE WOMEN". Frances Dee takes whatever honors there are to be taken while Miss Fox struggles through a part that is not convincing.

The title is supposed to be sarcastic, so you'd better make special efforts to make sure they don't misunderstand it.

"Audience value" is slim. The story's keynote is of a 17-year-old-girl marrying a man of 41.

Better get a screening of it before you date it in, so that you can decide how you can best sell it for your particular patronage.

"LOVERS COURAGEOUS" may be a bit too talkative, but it's excellent entertainment just the same. Madge Evans runs off with as much of the honors as Robert Montgomery and is entitled to equal billing in any theatre. Together they make this one of the neatest offerings in some time. It is probable that the bigger business will be clocked in the better class clientele houses. The other types of audience may not go for it too strongly.

The title has little meaning other than what you make it mean in your merchandising and advertising. Frederick Lonsdale's name doesn't mean in small towns what it means in the key cities. So you should fall back on the cast and that should not be too tough. Besides Montgomery and Evans you have Roland Young, Beryl Mercer and a short but pleasing squint at Jackie Searl. So put on your thinking cap, especially in those spots where these names are none too strong, and see what you can do in the way of making your regular cash customers turn out en masse for this picture.

"Audience value" is splendid (except as noted) and ought to get much favorable comment from the average fan. Montgomery, as ever, is delightfully bright and smiling most of the way through and Madge Evans (one of our favorites since she played kid parts) will win the audience's heart all the way through. The story may not overtax their mental powers but it serves as a suitable vehicle for the two stars.

Nothing objectionable for either the kids or Sundays, although the youngsters won't find much to hold them spellbound, so you get the added advantage of being able to play it wherever you please. It's a nice offering that ought to mean money to your theatre. It will be worthy of your best efforts.

Shanghai Express

(Paramount)

Drama

Marlene Dietrich, Paramount's blonde, European and attractive star, whose slight hint of an accent is entirely pleasant, plays here the principal figure around whom revolve a series of occurrences, within the close confines of a Shanghai-bound train on the way from Peiping, in the then revolution-ridden and consequently bandit-infested China.

In the nature of introductions take place in the crowded, tumultuous Peiping terminal, prior to the departure of the train. Slipping into their allotted notches for the plot evolvement to follow are: Clive Brook, British army doctor, who, we learn later, was the former fiance of Miss Dietrich, now notorious as Shanghai Lily; Anna May Wong, Chinese and attractive, though of doubtful character, it is indicated; Warner Oland, revolutionary leader, on whose head a price is set; Eugene Pallette, American gambler; Lawrence Grant, rather close minded reverend, who develops a change in that mind; Louise Closser Hale, wearing a wig, owning a boarding house in Shanghai and a pekingese of which she is fond, humorously; Gustav von Seyffertitz, German opium dealer, an invalid; Emile Chautard, voluble French army officer. Hundreds of Chinese fill the sets for the eye; jabber endlessly for the ear.

At a waystation on the line, Oland holds the train by pre-arrangement with his henchmen and selects Brook, after examining all the foreigners, as the most logical candidate for hostage to be held pending the release of Oland's right-hand man, who has been captured by the government forces. To Miss Dietrich, already reconciled with Brook, Oland makes advances; to which Brook's resentment takes the form of a knockout. Later Miss Dietrich is given the choice of seeing Brook blinded or of accompanying Oland. She chooses to save Brook, who renounces her, not aware of her sacrifice. Meanwhile, Anna May Wong stabs Oland to death in retaliation for violation.

The train departs for Shanghai, with all aboard, from which point much footage is taken up before the final reconciliation, in the station at Shanghai, between Miss Dietrich and Brook.

The cast was thought to have handled itself as a whole with definite assurance, each one portraying rather faithfully, the respectively diversified roles required.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Josef Von Sternberg. Based on story by Harry Hervey. Screen play by Jules Furthman. Photographed by Lee Garmes. February 12, 1932. Running time, 84 minutes.

She Wanted a Millionaire

(Fox)

After months in retirement, due to a serious accident, Joan Bennett returns to the screen, radiant and thoroughly attractive, in "She Wanted a Millionaire" under the Fox banner. This is a modern and lavishly embellished version of the Cinderella theme, a type which has often demonstrated its success when it is done properly. Joan of the Bennetts, surrounded by an excellent cast, gorgeously gowned, plays the role with an intelligent restraint.

Winner of an Atlantic City beauty contest, staged with some of Hollywood's super-beauties and plenty of fanfare, Miss Bennett becomes the bride of what she wanted, a millionaire, but a jealous millionaire, played by James Kirkwood. Doing this, she gives up her home town sweetheart, Spencer Tracy. However, her reason was chiefly the need of a widowed mother and a large brood of brothers and sisters. The marriage goes on the rocks, the home town boy grows rich, and all turns out as it should.

Spencer Tracy is the small town boy with all the assurance in the world, a type of role to which he brings a happy freshness. Una Merkel contributes also in one of those roles full of wise cracks spoken in her inimitable drawl. Jim Kirkwood is the heavy. Other contributions are made by Dorothy Peterson, Douglas Cosgrove, Donald Dillaway and Constantine Romanoff.

Jack Blystone's direction is aided by the dialogue direction of William Collier, Sr. Gordon Wiles contributed some very elaborate sets.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by John Blystone. Screen play by William Anthony McGuire. Story and continuity by Sonya Levien. Photographed by John Seitz. Lovers Courageous

(MGM)

Drama

The drama of two quite young people, portrayed by Robert Montgomery and Madge Evans, who fight their way to happiness, despite the drag of poverty and misunderstandnig on the part of the girl's parents, is this MGM effort.

A short prologue shows the English home of the Smiths, with Jackie Searl the recalcitrant youngster who is whipped for non-attendance at school, and who rebels. Beryl Mercer offers the understanding mother in her usual appealing manner; Halliwell Hobbes, the stern, short sighted father.

Searl, grown up, becomes Montgomery, whose flighty and highly unsuccessful career finally carries him to South Africa where, as a tobacconist's assistant in Cape Town, he accidentally meets Miss Evans, bored with the slow laziness of the spot where she is forced to sojourn, being the daughter of the crochety admiral, played by Frederick Kerr, and a social climbing mother, Evalyn Hall.

The young pair fall rather completely in love, and the mother, hearing of it, takes her off to England through a ruse. Her fiance, offered as the stupid kind of Englishman who is interested only in his "'ounds" and "'unting," makes her realize how much she misses the budding playwright, Montgomery. Montgomery comes to England and, on the eve of her marriage to his lordship, Miss Evans takes herself and luggage to Montgomery's lodgings. The two are married, the admiral cuts them off, and their troubles begin.

Finally, unsuccessful and at the end of the rope, Montgomery, to save his wife, and without her knowledge, goes to the admiral and permits her to be taken from him, on the stipulation that he never see her again. The play is finally produced, and successfully. Montgomery is informed by Miss Evans' old friend, Roland Young, that his wife is ill, and the newly successful playwright rushes to the bedside and a reconciliation.

The performances throughout were very well received at the Capitol in New York, and numerous instances of smart dialogue, by Frederick Lonsdale, were greeted with the spontaneous laughter of enjoyment by the patrons.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Robert Z. Leonard. From original screen play by Frederic Lonsdale. Photographer, George Barnes. Film editor, Margaret Booth. Release date, January 23, 1932. Running time, 77 minutes.

Nice Women

(Universal)

Drama

Marriage and young love, almost lost, take the dominant place in the theme of this rather conventional story from Universal which was found apparently mildly entertaining by an audience at the Paramount in New York.

The screen narrative revolves about Frances Dee and Sidney Fox, as the unsophisticated and sophisticated daughters, respectively, of hard working and moderately circumstanced James Durkin and fortune-hunting, affected Lucille Webster Gleason; Allan Mowbray, wealthy employer of Durkin, and Russell Gleason, young, ambitious and in love with Miss Dee.

The mother and the "all-too-wise" Miss Fox force Miss Dee into accepting the proposal of Mowbray at the moment when the girl returns with the news of her engagement to Gleason. The motive, money, the excuse, the family's finances, cloaking the selfishness of the mother. Gleason walks in unexpectedly and Miss Fox carries off the situation in Mowbray's presence, by claiming Gleason a "boy friend."

Mowbray seeks to patch a quarrel by inviting Gleason to a dinner party at his apartment. Against the wish of Miss Dee, the boy arrives, and, in a moment of candidness, the two admit the truth, to the consternation of the mother and daughter. Mowbray does the right thing, even to the point of arranging the marriage, the honeymoon trip and a substantial cash gift to Gleason. Mowbray, at home, is persuaded to take with him, on the trip to Europe he plans immediately, Carmel Myers, an important feature of his bachelor past, it is understood. Miss Fox suddenly appears, offering to make amends for the shabby manner in which Mowbray has been handled by the family. They suddenly discover that they are in love, and the picture concludes with their avowal and the departure of Miss Myers in defeat.

An effective bit of dialogue which pleased the audience takes place in the home of Miss Fox, when she is unexpectedly visited by Miss Myers, seeking Miss Dee. The smart child puts to rout the older women by the expert use of a ready tongue. The settings are almost entirely confined to interiors, with the plot development much along the lines of the stage play from which it has been adapted. Little effort is made to carry the play out of the stage technique.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Edwin H. Knopf. From the play of the same name by William A. Drew. Screen play by Edwin H. Knopf. Continuity by Gladys Lehman. Cameraman, Charles Stumar. Release date, November 28, 1931. Running time, 68 minutes.

Beauty and the Boss

(Warners)

Comedy-Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

When all the world's attention is focussed on finances in one measure or another, Warners break forth with a timely background for its theme "Beauty and the Boss." Expert direction in the handling of the characters and situations develops it into a highly entertaining piece of comedy romance.

This statement was unanimously attested by a capacity audience attending the picture the other night at the Forum, where the film received a perpetual round of applause from the time Marian Marsh appeared on the screen until the end.

Miss Marsh was given, it was agreed, capable assistance by Warren William, Charles Butterworth, David Manners, Frederic Kerr, Mary Doran and Yola D'Avril.

The picture gives a graphic description of the inside workings of an International banking institution with Berlin as the home base, with a romantic element woven into this serious phase of business.

Marian Marsh reaches the pinnacle of her performance when she discovers there is something more in life than being a capable secretary. This sudden awakening transforms her into another character, yet retaining that wholesome quality of unsophistication. Several lines of dialogue given to Butterworth become lost through extended applause of previous humorous situations. Gauged by audience reaction, the film contains elements making for a pleasant evening's entertainment.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Adapted by Joseph Jackson. Photographed by Barney McGill. Release date, March 19, 1932.

One D. C. Girl Who Won Beauty Contest Goes in for Stage and Movie Career

Marjorie Joesting Won in 1927 and Became Famous 'Ad' Girl; May Wed Producer

(NOTE: This is the second of a series of stories about Washington's national beauty contest winners; what they're doing today. Thinking local newspaper readers still are interested in these young women. The News treated them and found most of them right here in Washington.

By MARTHA STRAYER

SINCE pretty Marjorie Joesting was Miss Washington of 1927 you've seen her looking pretty in hundreds of magazines and newspaper ads.

You also may have seen her in small moving picture parts, and in the chorus of "Honeymoon Lane" from 1926 to 1927.

Capitalized Title

Miss Joesting was one of the last of the Capital's prize-winning beauties, and is the only one who has capitalized her title with a stage, screen and commercial art career.

Since 1928 she has been in Hollywood, where she has appeared in many pictures. She recently concluded a contract with Metro-Goldwyn and signed a new one with RKO.

After finishing second in the Atlantic City beauty pageant of 1927 Miss Joesting was given a year's contract to appear in "Honeymoon Lane."

Earned $500 a Week

At the same time she began posing for artists and for commercial art photographs, and her popularity increased until she was earning nearly $500 a week by commercial art. Her blond hair and lovely skin boosted beauty preparations, tooth paste, etc. Her bathing suit figure accented the advantages of step-ins, corsolets, negligees. The demand for her services was so great that she had to hire an agent to make her bookings.

Then she went to Hollywood.

Marjorie Joesting—1927

Marjorie Joesting—now

Out there, while she hasn't set the world ablaze, she has worked constantly. Also, she has ambitiously studied singing, foreign languages, to boost herself in pictures.

She has met many of the "big shots" in both Hollywood and New York. He's rumored that she will soon marry a man who's one of the stars behind the stars; one of the men who watch big names come and go, and from the background help make them big and pictures successful.

She'll have her own Spanish villa, butler, lady's maid, chauffeur.

And she's just as pretty as she was in 1927.

Darrow Makes Last Plea to Save Life of Young Murderer

Russell McWilliams, 17, Was to Have Been Electrocuted Dec. 11 but Appeal Was Granted

By United Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—The Illinois Supreme Court gave Russell McWilliams, 17, Rockford, slayer of a street car motorman, his last chance today to escape death by electrocution. Hearings were set on the appeal of the youth's case.

Clarence Darrow, veteran criminal attorney, was in Springfield, ready "to argue all week, if necessary," against the extremity of the punishment ordered for McWilliams.

Prisoner in Cell at Joliet

Darrow arrived here yesterday and secluded himself. He had stricken all other engagements from his calendar this week to appear in the McWilliams case as a volunteer, one of a half dozen notables who have interested themselves.

McWilliams is in the state prison at Joliet, in a narrow cell, whose iron cot stands between walls on which hang photographs of his mother and of an unidentified woman who has been his benefactress. He was sentenced in the slaying of William Sayles, street car motorman, which he admitted.

Darrow Pleaded Before

Once before Darrow pleaded for the youth's life, but the state board of pardons and paroles recommended that McWilliams pay the extreme penalty, and Gov. Louis L. Emmerson concurred. The Supreme Court appeal was taken after the boy's execution had been set for Dec. 10.

Darrow's weapon before the prison board was the argument that McWilliams was too young.

Before the Supreme Court, reversible errors in the trial are cited. Stress also is expected to be laid on the undisputed fact that McWilliams had no motive for robbery. He was working steadily and had collected his wages on the Saturday that he drank a bottle of gin and tried to hold up Sayles' street car.

and almost wrecks his romance, and Guy Kibbee as the big league team manager.

Joe is the local fire chief, star pitcher on the firemen's baseball team and very much taken up with his bomb fire extinguisher, for which he is seeking backing. An offer from the St. Louis Cardinals takes him to the "big time," where he pitches with skill, but goes into a complete trance whenever he hears a fire engine siren. Miss Bond is wished on him by two team-mates who are tired of acting fish for her hook. She proceeds with neatness and dispatch to take his money, which he draws from the account which he and Miss Knapp have been saving for the wedding knot. The pretext is a patent for Joe's extinguisher bomb.

Joe gets a letter to appear at the office of a company president to demonstrate his bomb. After waiting all night on the curb and half the day in the office, he gets his audience. When he sets fire to the wastebasket and most of the office, he discovers that he has the wrong bag. Before he gets the right one and succeeds in quenching the fire, there are a few humorous moments. In the meanwhile the final game of the world series is on, and Kibbee is approaching insanity because of Joe's absence. The fire chief recognizes him and drives him to the ball park, arriving in the ninth inning. Joe saves the day, first by striking out the opposition, then by stealing home, when the fire siren sounds and he goes into a trance between third base and the home-plate. The audience enjoyed the third base sequence. Made a deputy chief, Joe drives to his wedding with screaming siren and a shining new chief's cap.

The Final Edition

(Columbia)

Newspaper Melodrama

Columbia offers a contribution to the cycle of newspaper dramas or melodramas with Pat O'Brien, dynamic young man, as the city editor and Mae Clarke as the girl he thought he had fired until she shows him she is a better newspaper woman than he had any idea.

The crook element takes an important place in the film, which, by reason of its suspensive moments and unremitting action, held an audience at the RKO Hippodrome in New York tight in their seats from start to finish.

O'Brien fires Miss Clarke after she had told him a few truths about himself. At the moment Wallis Clark, as new police commissioner, is murdered, after it is indicated that Morgan Wallace and Bradley Page are at Clark's mercy as leaders of the city's underworld as a result of paper-evidence Clark has in his possession. Miss Clarke, despite her discharge, goes to police headquarters, and then home with Bertha Mann, playing Clarke's wife. Information which she gathers there gives the paper a break on inside clues to the murder, after Miss Clarke is re-hired at a larger salary.

Assigned to a railroad station, she accidentally comes upon Page buying a ticket to a resort. She follows, on the chance that something may be doing, and succeeds in getting enough evidence to convict Page. The papers which she steals from Page are recovered by him and two gunmen when she returns to the city, but not before she is able to put through a cryptic telephone call to O'Brien, transmitted to him by the tabloid's photographer, who, in the person of James Donlin, affords a good bit of amusement with his perpetual state of approaching sleep. O'Brien makes good time to the apartment where the crook leaders are holding Miss Clarke, and is himself cornered. It works out when Donlin climbs a fire escape, pictures the group and puts in a riot call which results in the crooks being arrested as they attempt to escape. O'Brien and Miss Clarke decide to hire each other to conclude a fast-moving bit of action melodrama.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Howard Higgin. Story by Roy Chanslor. Adaptation and dialogue by Dorothy Howell. Editor, Jack Dennis. Cameraman, Benjamin Kline. Sound, Edward Bernds. Release date, February 20, 1932. Running time, 66 minutes.

Play Girl

(Warners)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

An audience at the Forum theatre recently accorded favorable reception to "Play Girl," Loretta Young's latest picture for Warners.

The story concerns a shop girl who is determined not to consider matrimony and to become "somebody" on her own initiative. A handsome lad in the person of Norman Foster sweeps the girl off her feet with his romantic pleas. They marry and are happy until the girl discovers that her husband's income comes from gambling and not from the weekly pay check. She begs him to give up his habit and settle down to a steady job. He makes promises and goes on gambling. They separate. The shop girl goes back to her shop, knitting baby clothes after hours. She loses her job. Broke, and with the "blessed event" soon to arrive, she takes a chance and bets her last dollars on "Baby Mine," at the horse races. She wins, but is about to be cheated of her winnings when her missing husband appears and saves the situation. They are united and the closing sequence shows them proudly exhibiting their twins.

The story was thought to have been aided by fast dialogue, a good cast, and cleverly handled race scenes which add the needed suspense.

Performances well received are given by Norman Foster, Dorothy Burgess, in a sarcastic character, Noel Madison as the crooked gambler, Guy Kibbee as a sentimental business man, and John Ellison as a cop. Winnie Lightner as Miss Young's hardboiled girl friend received many laughs.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by Ray Enright. Story by Frederick Hazlett Brennan. Screen play by Maurine Watkins. Adaptation and dialogue by Maude Fulton and Browne Holmes. Film editor, Owen Marks. Photographed by Greig Toland. Release date, March 12, 1932.

Sein Scheidungsgrund

His Grounds for Divorce

(Ufa)

Musical Comedy

The personal charm and youthful spontaneity of Lien Deyers, brought out by Fritz Lang, the director, contributes to this light musical piece. So does the naturalness of Johannes Riemann, leading man. And the same is true of the music by Otto Stransky, a lilting melody that connects the action throughout. Miss Deyers' dialogue is in short takes, faithful to the teen age she represents.

Liane Roland (Miss Deyers) has her student friends help her celebrate her eighteenth birthday. She plays bits from the tango which she is submitting in a thousand mark prize contest.

Moving into the apartment below is Sperling, assistant to Robert Lueder, manufacturer. Sperling (Julius Falkenstein) lends distinct color to the picture by his unique mannerisms. Sperling has seen Lueder and Mrs. Lueder, in their many spats, and these end in divorce after Lueder has walked out on a boresome musicale. Liane, who had been expecting an inheritance, hears that all is lost because of her guardian's speculation. The attorney ushers her into another room when Lueder enters. Lueder wants to find a co-respondent so that his wife may have her divorce. The attorney sees this as a way to provide funds for Liane, and she earns 500 marks simply by appearing at court. She does not see Lueders, and he does not know her identity when he later meets her. He likes her and arranges that she receive the 1,000 marks as ostensibly from the contest committee. But later she learns this and she resolves to sell everything in order to pay him back. All she has left is the radio. He comes to see her just as an announcer reports that a new secretary of state has been elected to succeed the enemy of Lueder, and now he can wed his co-respondent.

Produced and directed by Alfred Zeisler for Ufa. Story and scenario by Franz Arnold and Max Jungk. Cameramen: Frank Planer and Bernard Wentzel. Sound: Dr. Gerhard Goldbaum. Music by Otto Stransky. Running time, 79 minutes. Released February 19, 1932.

Perils of the Desert

(Harold Austin)

Splendid

Harold Austin followed his "Duck Hunter's Paradise" with a preview of "Perils of the Desert" as the second subject in a series of one reel novelty adventure shorts and received an equal measure of enthusiastic applause as at his previous offering.

This picture takes one through the barren wastes of Mexico in search of a Russian settlement nestled in the fertile valley of Guadalupe and in the travels the party is confronted with a fight between two huge land turtles, which is dramatic and exciting in its natural background.

This is followed by recording other desert animal life and their habits until the party reaches the settlement, photographed for the first time by any motion picture company. As the party leaves this settlement attention is focussed on a fight between a desert rat and a rattlesnake, which climaxes a natural drama.

Bridge Wives

Lots of Fun

There's plenty of rich burlesque on the historic Culbertson-Lenz tournament in this Cameo Comedy in which Al St. John plays the part of the bridge-pecked husband who tries in vain to destroy the radio bearing the tidings of the marathon tourney to his wife after he has made her return to the sink and her knitting. When he digs a grave and his wife, thinking she is be fitted into it, calls the police, he buries the radio—only to find that its propinquity to a water pipe carries the broadcast right through the faucet in the kitchen. He finds the policemen engaged in a foursome with the wife and he starts out to find the river. He finds surcease by leaping down a manhole. Running time, 16 minutes.

AND SO — — "THE BALL IS OVER"

Film Executives in the East Try Their Hand at Staging a "Movie Ball" a la Hollywood Style

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The first "movie" ball and dinner ever to be held by the New York Motion Picture Club is now but a memory. So is a sizeable portion of the Club's worrisome 1931 deficit and the melodious strains of orchestras galore. Nothing else matters.

As had been previously and widely announced: Dazzling stars dazzled; numerous important executives—and many not so important—dined and danced 'til dawn, after which the higher moguls continued frolicing at Reuben's, while the lesser dignitaries retired to other institutions of the sandwich, or to Child's for wheatcakes. Washington's Birthday on Monday was especially welcome: it gave all an extra day to recuperate.

Mayor Walker put in a belated appearance and Tammany Young was allowed to pass the Waldorf Astoria's sacred portals unmolested, both, thereby, upholding the dignity of reputations which have long since been firmly established.

The affair might well be classed as a marathon, at least insofar as the time element was involved. It started Saturday night and continued until Sunday, the hour depending on the capabilities of the celebrant.

Abe Lyman and Harold Stern provided dance music, although for a moment or more it did appear that neither one of these two masters of the baton would see the night through, due to a "professional" argument of some kind or another. Claude Hopkins and his orchestra "showed."

We were surprised to learn later that one song rendered by Sophie Tucker was permitted to be broadcast without interference by the radio "monitor." Little Miss Tucker actually stole the show both from Maurice Chevalier and Rudy ("crooner") Vallee, proving that the recent Palace Theatre fire did not bother in the least the self-styled "Last of the Red Hot Mammas."

Miss Tucker, incidentally, appeared in better form than at any time since her old vaudevillain days. Or was it the new acoustical system in the Waldorf's grand ballroom.

Georgie Jessel's continued relation of jokes (?), told last week at the Columbia affair and the week previously at the AMPA luncheon, etc., etc., probably dampened the ardor of his listeners, who gave Georgie a bigger "hand" upon his introduction than at the conclusion of his performance. Which proves . . .

Regardless of the since-published opinions of certain tabloid columnists, who, by the way, were among the very, very few who received free dinner checks, the affair was a brilliant one. Perhaps not as brilliant as the thickly-spread adjectives of a group of high-powered praise agents had us expecting, but brilliant, nevertheless, as proven by the hundreds of idol worshipping fans, who, having heard of the event, cluttered up the Waldorf lobby to catch a peek of their favorite stellar lights.

Sam Berger, of MGM, returned to New York from Mexico City on the day previous. And was he glad to get back home.

Tickets were priced at $25 the pair. We heard one Club official say that the Waldorf collected $22 of it. It would!

Who was that well known advertising manager who tripped over a lady's skirt and went sprawling on the ballroom floor? And the name of that popular actor—an "idol" of the "working girls"—who stepped out on the stage without his toupe?

One of the sequences appearing in the burlesque reel was taken by Lubitsch just 18 years ago.

Harry Buxbaum brought along his son. It was the lad's first dress suit, his first picture party and his first 16th birthday.

Joe Lee, Fox manager, stopped all on the floor to inform friend and stranger that on the morrow he would sail to the West Indies.

Fanny Ward appeared just as young as ever. The same might be said of Rian James, Helen Chandler, Charles Caballero, Albertina Rasch, Harry Hold, Arnold Van Lear, Dimitri Tiomkin and Nat Liebeskind.

Whenever Arthur Stebbins had time to spare from a huddle with Mayor "Jimmy" and A. C. Blumenthal, he posed for photographic representatives of the various news associations. Artie succeeded in "making" 14 shots.

We saw Director Ernst Lubitsch dancing with Jeanette MacDonald. And Gabriel L. Hess and his pretty bride, Linda Watkins, both still on the receiving end of congratulatory wishes.

Milton Cohen appeared to be having a great time. But who can say that Carmen Barnes did not do likewise? And B. B. Kahane, Al Lichtman, Jacqueline Logan, Bert Moeller, Hank Linet, Don Mersereau, the Picker Family of Loew's, Inc.; Al Sherman, George Skouras, Max Weisfeld, the Reichenbachs—Walter and Howard; Charles Lewis, Herbert Fecke, Roy Chartier, Joe Lee, Joe Lifton, George Gerhard, the Kanns—Solly and Maurice and Marcelle Edwards?

Who saw Tammany Young carrying a basket of unmentionables, trailing the Mayor? And Pat Garyn refusing to depart even after the very last strains of "Home Sweet Home"? Ditto Leo Ochs and George Morris?

Someone introduced Gus Edwards during the stage show and Gus was almost speechless—we said almost. He traced the history of the show business right up to the day—many years ago—when he protege-d Al Jolson, Jessel, et al., and closed with the details of . . . oh, well!

Jack Hess, Marjorie King, Syd Bartlett and Grace Menken were there. Ditto Mabel Barry, Bernice Petkers, Hope Sutherland, Dorothy and Frances Miller, Ben Barry, Frank Hughes, S. N. Burger, Regina Crewe, Julius Cohen, Irene Thirer, William Brandt, Louis Blumenthal, Leo Brecher, Ned Depinet, Millard Webb, Mary Eaton, Martin Dickstein, Irving Hoffman, Jules Levy, Charles O'Reilly, Joe Pollack, Claude Hopkins and Lou Rydell.

The stars did come out that night. We saw Fifi D'Orsay, Barbara Stanwyck, Edmund Lowe, Sally O'Neil, Conrad Nagel, Johnny Walker, besides scores of others.

Walter Wanger played host to one of the most distinguished groups in attendance, including Maurice Chevalier, Ernst Lubitsch, Dimitri Tiomkin, Albertina Rasch, Jeanette MacDonald and Henry Wanger.

To Jack Alicoate and Club President Lee Ochs: Congratulations! For effecting a schedule which worked with clock-like precision.

Billy Ferguson extended invitations to vacation at his newly-purchased Florida estate. (Accepted). Billy rushed away from the party—when it ended—just in time to change clothes and depart on a trip upstate.

What a thrill for the ladies as they witnessed the style parade of "a million dollars worth of furs." (Monetary) figures by Maison Simone, Inc.

And the laughs from a burlesque reel which "kidded" aplenty you and you and you—particularly the shot which revealed General Hays, Major Zanft, Colonel Lichtman, Major Warner, Colonel Schiller, Major Bowes, et al., "at the front."

Rich-looking Ruth Roland was there. And so were William Rabell, searching for BIP franchise holders; Tom Moore, who promised a "startling announcement" soon concerning laboratory practice; Harry Langdon, accorded a splendid ovation when introduced from the stage, but who later went unnoticed throughout most of the whole evening—he wore glasses.

Bert Lytell did the unexpected—from the stage he publicly offered to his mother-in-law, who was seated in a box, an impressive and very flowery verbal bouquet.

At about the same time, Si Seadler was seen explaining—with gestures—the fallacy of depression. He cited "The Champ," "Hell Divers," "Mati Hari," "Emma," et al.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 30 key cities over the country fell off $59,921 during the calendar week ended February 20, when 180 theatres drew a total of $2,324,413 at the box office. This compares with a total figure of $2,384,334 from 181 theatres in 30 cities during the previous calendar week, ended February 13. Two new high individual house records were established during the later week, at the Astor in Minneapolis and the RKO Albee in Providence, with "The Guardsman" and "Panama Flo," respectively, while nine new low house records were reported. During the preceding week one new "high" and again nine new "lows" were recorded.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

NATURAL vs. ARTIFICIAL!

THERE is oftimes a tendency on the part of many showmen to create selling ideas for a picture that have no direct or even indirect bearing on the plot or picture at all. In other words they make the picture fit the idea rather than the idea fit the picture.

There is really no excuse for this type of show-selling and all too often it results in a lot of good energy and money going to waste. On the face of it you will agree that it is a peculiar way of tackling the exploitation or advertising of an attraction. The fact that the idea you want to use happens to be exceptionally good doesn't make the results successful if it doesn't work in with the picture.

When your picture is first dated that is the time for you to find out everything you can about it. Read the trade reviews, the short synopsis of the story, get the press book and study the cast, the ad layouts, the advance stories; in other words, learn everything there is to know about the picture before you start to work out a single selling idea in connection with it.

Such careful investigation and study will immediately reveal the natural selling resources of the picture. Ideas will start to form in your mind as you get to know more and more about it. These skeleton ideas can then be worked into as large or impressive a campaign as the attraction warrants.

Artificial merchandising is always questionable and dangerous because it leaves the wrong impression on the minds of your prospective patrons, they form opinions about the picture that may be entirely opposite to what the picture is really about and in that way you take a chance of keeping them away from the theatre for the run of that attraction. Besides, you take the risk of selling them an idea about a picture that is not true and can act as a boomerang after they fall for your "swell" campaign.

It is well to keep in mind that artificial respiration should never be used except in extreme cases and only with the type of pictures that require artificial stimulants to get them over at the b. o., but they should be used with great caution or they will affect the heart of your theatre—the box office.

There are enough practical ideas in showbusiness to keep an average theatre well supplied without resorting to the same identical idea within a period of four to six months. Then that idea can be dressed in new clothes and made "original" by reason of the treatment accorded it for the newer attraction to be sold.

ONCE again our worst enemy, "Dame Rumor," is hard at work. This time in connection with the houses on the Pacific Coast involved in a change of operating heads and management.

It is catastrophical (good word that) that such things must happen and destroy the marvelous morale of splendid organizations and we certainly wish we could do something to offset it, but facts are facts and in the face of what has been happening within the industry in the past few years you can hardly blame some of the managers for experiencing a sickening feeling in the pit of their stomachs when they hear about further circuit changes.

However, some of those very close to the new operators of the coast outfit have insisted that they are the "whitest" men in the business, bar none, and would give every man a square deal. So, in the face of such a statement we can only urge each and every man to stick to his guns and plug as hard as he can. Results will write the final verdict for everyone of you. If your house is not being run properly then you must expect something drastic to happen. If on the other hand you are doing everything possible to run it right and profitable then the rest is in the hands of fate, or whatever else one calls their immediate superiors.

Don't let rumors floor you for the count of ten. Make up your mind that nothing can happen so long as you discharge your duties and responsibilities to the best of your ability and when someone starts whispering in your ear, stuff a piece of cotton into that ear and go on about your business.

Showbusiness needs good showmen, even the big circuits are aware of that fact, and they would be nothing short of idiots if they were to fire men indiscriminately and let their theatres suffer as a result.

They not only need good men but they must get to know which of the good men are capable of handling supervisory jobs. That's where the smart showmen will get the breaks. They'll be plugging to make a decided impression on those new bosses and won't be satisfied until they feel sure that they are as well or better set than ever before.

Work—and more of it. That's the answer to all the rumors. You'll be supervising a district while the scandal mongers are sweeping up the lobbies, if you just make up your mind that everything is O. K. and prove it by actions and results at the box office.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

"The voice with the smile wins"; so herewith we present the voice minus the smile when friend manager receives one of those telephone calls we love to talk about when we meet at the exchanges. Intelligent answers must always be ready for all inquiries. You will note that Manager Gilch, in this exclusive picture is quite versed in the art of explanations.

WHYTE DISCOVERED BEST DANCE TEAM IN RIVERHEAD, L. I.

Due to the efforts of William "Bill" Whyte, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Riverhead, Long Island, identity of his town's best dance team was recently disclosed when this enterprising showman staged a contest in connection with the engagement of "Dance Team." The picture was booked in for Sunday and Monday and out of regard for the church-going members in the town, it was decided to hold the affair on Monday night.

The first thing Whyte did was to sell a few local merchants the idea of donating awards for the teams as a return for advertising credits. Being a Rotarian he picked out business men who were members of the club and succeeded in securing gratis a loving cup, two pairs of shoes, a smoking set and a silver compact. These at hand he shot in copy for a trailer, gave the merchants a line of credit in a story about the affair and sold the editor of the local newspaper on the value of photographing the leading team and running same after the decision was rendered. To make a long story short, the stunt went over like hot cakes and sent Monday business 'way over Sunday, or an increase of $150. Total cost to theatre was $11.

As we write this Whyte has a commercial exhibit under way on the mezzanine floor, of which we'll tell you more at a later date. Briefly, leading dealers will display articles of merchandise each week, with an attendant in charge to answer questions.

In addition to heralding the discovery of Riverhead's best dance team and the attendant success of this affair, we're also pleased to relate that this Round Tabler secured additional prestige with local newspapers by inviting employees of both papers to witness a showing of "Five Star Final." All of which bears out previous assertions that this member is plugging away at business and getting his share. More about Whyte and Riverhead in future issues.

VIDUMSKY PROBABLY DODGING THE JAPS INSTEAD OF D. M.'s

Things have happened at such a rapid rate the past few weeks over in Shanghai, China, that we've lost contact with Round Tabler, Jacob Vidumsky, manager of the Nanking Theatre in that city. All we know is that we last heard from him a couple of months ago, when he was eagerly awaiting the arrival of the film "Bad Girl."

For this occasion he tied up with the largest cabaret in the city, a place owned by the well known band leader "Whitey" Smith, for a "Bad Girl Night" to coincide with the opening of the film. On that night patrons of the cabaret were presented with dolls which were supposed to represent bad girls. This move was made for reason that in Shanghai there is a very large audience of cabaret girls—best described as female gigolos—and enough of them to fill most any theatre. Needless to state, the picture went over great.

What has happened to trade at the Nanking since we last heard from this member only Vidumsky can tell us and we'll venture the opinion that the next communication from this member will be interesting. Not many managers have the experience of dodging sniper's bullets, etc., and we can guess that's just about what he's been doing. So let's hear from you, Jake, if the situation is still under your control when this reaches you.

BROWN MADE A GOOD CAMPAIGN ON TRAVEL FILM WITHOUT COST

A simple and effective method of dressing the front of his theatre brought excellent results on "Around The World in 80 Minutes" to H. C. Brown, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Greenville, S. C.

While the lobby front pictured here may appear faint as to detail on account of lack of light when the photo was taken, it was made of used beaverboard covered with cheap poster paper and decorated with stills and cutouts from one-sheets, etc. The flags, strung from marquee to roof of building, were borrowed. Practically all nations were represented and the flag display was in keeping with the theme of the picture.

Tie-ups were also made with golf stores, luggage shops, book stores, with attractive window displays showing advertising matter on the picture. Those who have seen this picture will recall Fairbanks' crack about the camels when three or four of these animals were shown traveling the desert; to wit, "they generally come in packs of 20." This, of course, was a great plug for cigarettes of that name, intentional or otherwise, and the gag gave Brown an opportunity to arrange a number of corking windows with Camel distributors.

All of the above cost Brown almost nothing in the shape of money to put over, which is what all the big shots are howling for these days. Business was good in this case, and we also understand that general business conditions are not too bad down his way, despite the fact that banks are bursting like bombs in certain communities near Greenville. Anyway, Brown, keep the old chin up for it cannot last forever. It's "just around the corner," you know. And let's hear more from you.

FIX UP A "WASHINGTON" ROOM!

An appropriate tribute to the Washington Bicentennial Celebration commemorating the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Father of our Country, would be for each theatre to dress one of their lounge rooms or a space on the mezzanine as a George Washington Room.

A modest display of flags with an inexpensive bust of Washington or a large Medallion—standing about eighteen inches to two feet in height—could likewise be set within such a room.

From your local book shop and picture store you should promote books and pictures about Washington. These can be placed on tables and walls around the room.

You will find that much favorable reaction will result from this inexpensive gesture while the celebration is in progress and you may even find that it will result in good newspaper stories depending a great deal on how effective your room or corner is fixed up.

McCLURE STAFF IN TOPEKA TURNING OUT SOME FINE DISPLAYS

In line with activities of the poster artist members of this organization we are submitting a reproduction of one of two very striking shadow boxes recently used in the lobby of the Fox-Jayhawk Theatre at Topeka, Kas., and sent to us by H. A. McClure, city manager.

As the photo was very gray it does not at all do justice to the general attractiveness of the display pictured here. This was made quite striking by use of different colored lights between each layer of wall board, with a white light on the attraction cut in the back. Naturally, the background is changed as the attractions come and go.

This display was constructed under the supervision of Dick Ross, head of the Fox poster department in Topeka, and we hope it is but a forerunner of others from the same source. Space in this department devoted to reproduction of posters continues to grow from week to week and Ross is cordially invited to make further contributions which can be published for the benefit of others in this Club.

QUARTEMONT EDITS A BREEZY HOUSE ORGAN FOR MILWAUKEE PLAZA

In addition to the job of managing the Plaza Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., H. J. Quartemont edits a breezy house organ entitled "Fox-Plaza Movinews," in which is carried his column, "Reeling Around with Henry."

He chats pleasantly about this and that happening in Movieland throughout the column and occasionally gives some advertiser a little pat on the back as a plug for some article of merchandise. This is done in such an intimate manner that the taint of direct advertising is entirely missing.

There is an editorial on the second page and the balance of the spread is devoted to screen notes, ads and institutional copy. The last page carries other ads and announcements of attractions at the theatre. The whole affair measures about 9 x 12 and has four column make-up. It is published every Thursday.

Latta Promoted

C. J. Latta, well known division manager of Warner Theatres in Ohio, was recently promoted to a position in the home office. He has made his headquarters in Cleveland for the past year and a half and leaves immediately to take up his new duties.

Hamlin Quits Films

Fred Hamlin, long associated with the film industry and lately publicity manager for Paramount Publix in Salt Lake City and the Intermountain district, has resigned and will give full time to new duties with the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce.

WARNER MANAGERS IN CHICAGO HAVE BEEN DOING WELL

A number of the Warner boys out in Chicago have been stepping along at a fast pace, according to reports, and among them were the managers in Charles Ryan's district where numerous activities are reported.

Take the Buckingham, for instance, where one of fifteen costly fur coats promoted by the Warner Chicago Advertising Department, became the means of vastly increasing patronage during the period allotted to the give-away. At the Buckingham, as well as at the Oakland Square, where William O'Connell holds forth as manager, attractive foyer displays of sample coats with appropriate backgrounds, further enhanced the popularity of the stunt.

A hand-painted street scene done in miniature was an effective selling aid for Joseph Luntz, manager of the Biltmore Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., when he played "Street Scene."

The work was done by his assistant, William Gross, and according to a description we have at hand, must have been very attractive. The foreground consisted of a portion of a city block of houses, with tall, lighted buildings for the background. Cutouts of Silvia Sidney and William Collier were placed on the "porch" of one house, with lighted windows. We have a small sketch at hand but color combinations forbid a faithful reproduction. We have been privileged to examine a number of atmospheric displays made for this picture and without a doubt this one measured up one hundred per cent.

There are still spots around the big city of New York where shows are sold and the Biltmore's neighborhood is one of them. Luntz and his staff are well known for their able efforts and it's always a pleasure to let the rest of the gang know what's going on out in New Lots. We'll be on the lookout for further information.

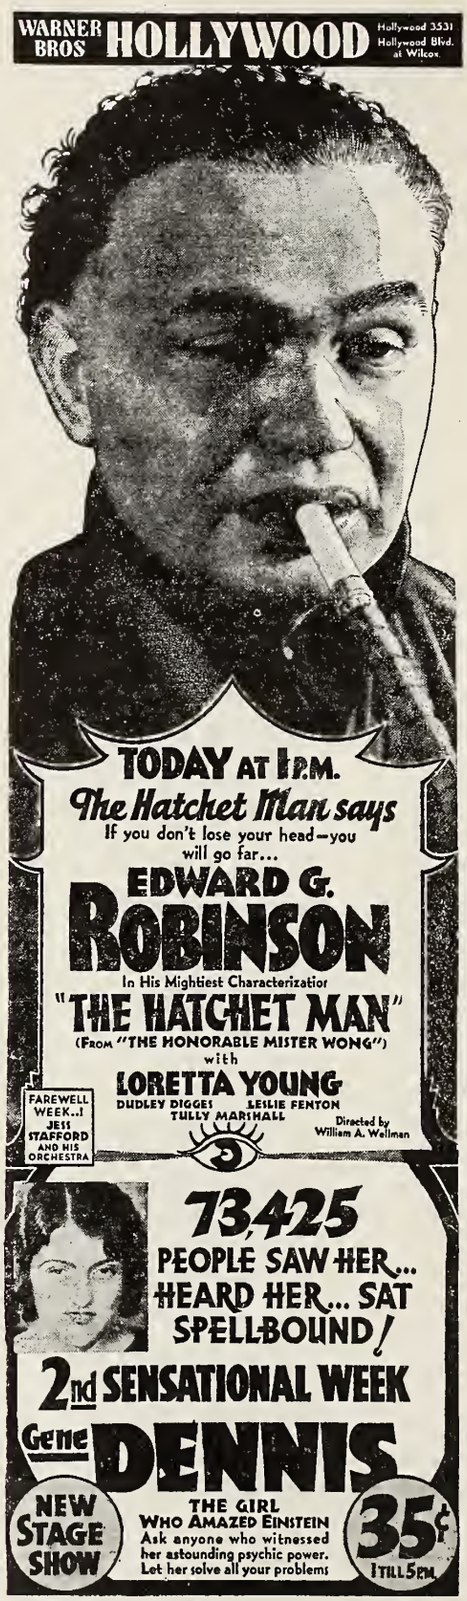
SHEWELL IS USING MONTHLY CALENDAR THAT IS PRACTICAL

It's been some time since Club members have heard from George Shewell, manager of the Cort and Ohio Theatres, Cambridge, Ohio, but we're glad to report that this showman is enjoying good health and on his toes with the job of selling shows in his recently adopted place of residence. George reached Cambridge a couple of months ago and prior to this transfer was working for the Warner Brothers in the East.

He got out a calendar about the first of the new year which appears to be a most practical little affair, in that it not only attractively illustrates feature attractions for the month but actually serves as a guide for days and dates. Actual size of the card measured about 6½ x 11½ inches. We hope that the small reproduction will convey the idea of layout.

It's gratifying to hear from Shewell again, after such a long silence, and we hope the new year will bring many other contributions from this hitherto active Round Tabler. We'll be looking forward, George, to your next communication.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES



Show-business claimed Victor Rosen for its own at the tender age of 17 years when he used spare time off from High School to act as ticket taker in a Chicago theatre. That, however, does not mean that he neglected his education for he attended several local institutions, among which were Nathaniel Green and Wendel Phillips High Schools.

Victor Rosen

In 1917 he acted as doorman for the Schoenstadts in one of their houses and two years later left for Los Angeles, where he went to work for the Goldwyn Film Exchange. He followed the distribution end of the business for five years, acting as booker, salesman and office manager. In 1924 he joined the Baird Theatre organization as manager of several theatres and during his connection with Baird had charge of booking for all theatres in that circuit. He went with Warner Bros. in 1930 as manager of the Forum Theatre and on June 15, '30, was appointed district manager of the four Warner houses in Santa Barbara, Calif.

Rosen tells us that if he had to start all over again show-business would again claim his attention, and so we take it he has no thought of leaving this game for another at this stage of his life. Yes, girls, he's a married man.

There is something about this ad which immediately catches and holds the eye. When we spotted it on the theatrical page of the newspaper it stood out like a beacon light against most of the other movie ads on the same page.

The style, while very effective, is simple from the angle of laying out such an ad. The Robinson head is available on mats from your local exchange. To get the Chinese pagoda effect you need only point out to the composing room foreman at your local paper how it can be done.

Selection of outstanding ads for special reproduction on the Club pages has been greeted with acclaim by many showmen who have a keen appreciation for good newspaper advertising and are eager to acquire new ideas along these lines.

TIE-UP WITH PHOTO DEALER BROUGHT IN RESULTS FOR NORMAN

When exploiting "Way Back Home" R. E. Norman, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Clarksdale, Miss., arranged a tie-up with a photographer that resulted in building up trade for that picture.

The photographer used a window display that carried photos of a young man and young girl with hand-painted window card between the two. A lettered card in the foreground read, "Be Sure To Send Your Photograph Way Back Home"—and other sales copy relating to the picture. In the front of the display was a hand-painted card on picture giving cast, sales copy, playdates, etc.

Other tie-ups were made with a sandwich shop, a drug store and laundry. The two former firms used imprinted paper napkins and the latter a window display that gave prominent mention to the picture. The laundry also mentioned the tie-up in newspaper advertising.

It's gratifying to hear again concerning Norman's activities down in Clarksdale and we hope that he will continue to make it possible for his Club to pass along showtips to his fellow members.

LITTLE NORWEGIANS, SWEDES AND DANES CAME OUT FOR GRADY

Whenever there's a Scandinavian to be exploited it ought to be a great idea to get in touch with all the Swedish, the Norwegians and the Danes, thought E. C. Grady, manager of the Hoosier Theatre, Whiting, Ind., and forthwith proceeded in that direction when selling "Spirit of Notre Dame."

First he contacted all schools which were quite full of Scandinavian descendants, for he thought it would also be a great idea for all the little Swedes, Norwegians and Danes to see this picture. Then he called at the Police Department where a Swede by name of Murphy assured him (Grady) that all possible assistance would be rendered by fellow Swedes in the department. So the date for a special matinee was set. School had been dismissed for the afternoon and at 12:15 the Norse invasion began.

Now Grady only has about 760 seats and by yumping jiminy if 1133 little Swedes, Norwegians and Danes didn't storm the doors! His friend Murphy helped him out by sending some of the boys around and through combined efforts of theatre staff and police the horde of youngsters were finally taken care of. Once inside, the little Swedes, Norwegians and Danes all joined in the Notre Dame Victory march and the childish appeal of their voices so affected Grady that he, too, just had to join in the chorus. This happened on the third day of the picture and produced the best paying day.

A letter to the local Scout executive also went a long way toward boosting attendance but as Grady will tell you, it takes a group of little Swedes, Norwegians and Danes to produce results. However, all kidding aside, the move brought about the desired publicity and lifted the last day's showing from regular run to a spectacular finish. And that's what counts, no matter what race of humans are called in to put over the kayo. Football news may be somewhat belated but we wanted to let you know that Grady was still up and doing.

These should be accompanied by a brief typewritten description of the campaign as a whole.

All entries must be received not later than Midnight, Saturday, April 2nd.

The judges will be S. Charles Einfeld, Director of Advertising and Publicity of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Frank Wilstach of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America; and Charles E. Lewis, Chairman of the Managers Round Table Club of the Motion Picture Herald. Their decision will be final.

This contest is open to everyone except employees of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and members of their families.

Campaigns based on Warner Bros.' Merchandising Plan for this picture are as eligible for the awards as are original ideas.

Warner Bros. cannot be responsible for the return of any material submitted.

In case of a tie, each contestant will receive the full amount of the prize tied for.

Address all entries to "Fireman, Save My Child" Advertising Contest, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 321 West 44th Street, New York City—or to Manager's Round Table Club, Motion Picture Herald, N.Y.C.

By GUY JONES

Offering for your inspection, and of course, approval, the well known type of boss who always has the manager's interests close to his heart (?). If you're still to meet him personally then congratulate yourself on having avoided him thus far. He's just a nice—pain-in-the-neck.

KOPPLIN ADVERTISED FILM HAD BAD TITLE AND GAG WENT OVER

After sitting through a screening of "Platinum Blonde" and concluding that the picture was good fare, Harold A. Kopplin, advertising manager of Wolfson-Meyer Theatres, Miami, Fla., decided that the title did not at all do justice to the subject and forthwith proceeded to advertise that contention.

We have a couple of his Capitol Theatre ads before us and note that one states in italics, "You Wouldn't Judge a Book by Its Cover. . . . So Don't Judge a Picture by Its Title. This One Is Entertainment with "Capitol" E——Take Our Word For That." That was the idea followed out in this advertising gag. The picture went over big and H. A. believes that it had something to do with the excellent business.

Another little gag he recently used to set off an ad on the same picture was a statement signed by the "Ad Ariter." It was headed with, ("As I Write This Advertisement) a quiver races up and down my funny bone. . . I, seeing at least 6 pictures a week. . . 52 weeks a year. . . finally saw a picture so funny. . . so witty. . . so smart. . . that it leaves bats in my belfry from laughter. . . and without the proper adjectives to explain it to you." Then in italics, "And if you wrote this advertisement, you'd say the same thing." Followed, title and copy, "the world's worst title for the year's funniest picture, etc."

That was certainly a novel slant Kopplin took to advertise what he thought a poorly titled picture and to all appearances the gag went over in good shape. So, fellow Club members, make your own book on this one if one of these occasions happens your way. Also the endorsement from "ad writer," but as many of our members will agree, only when a picture will stand a personal testimonial from a theatre executive. Kopplin was sure of his ground.

VARIETY OF SELLING GAGS RECENTLY USED BY TED HILGENDORF

Ballys, gags, kiddie stunts, novelty hand bills and benefit shows for the needy in his neighborhood have been taking up the working hours of Ted Hilgendorf, manager of the Ritz Theatre, North Milwaukee, Wis.

When ballyhooing "Flying High" his sign shop turned out a small model airplane which was mounted on top of a car and driven about town. The card was routed through the neighborhoods and buglers inside served as a means to lure the housewives away from the kitchens.

An airplane building gag for the boys was also used in connection with the above picture. These were displayed in the lobby several days prior to opening and during the engagement. Guest tickets served as awards.

Every home in his territory on the telephone list received the following message one day before "Ruling Voice" opened: "Listen, I am The Ruling Voice! Women Fear Me; Men Are Afraid of Me; But Nobody Has Ever Seen Me. Meet Me Face To Face at the Ritz, Tomorrow." The message was spoken in a low, rough voice and Hilgendorf later learned that there was considerable reaction—good or bad he does not state.

Some little time ago when he was arranging advertising for "Blonde Crazy" and accompanying program, he issued a neat little novelty herald. It was around Xmas time and the bill was headed, "Come And See Our Tree!". Under this there was a cut of Cagney with the upper part of the forehead cut off. This was captioned, "You'll Laugh Your Bloomin' Head Off." Underneath the cut graded in the form of a Xmas tree was the copy: "What This Country Needs Is a Good Laugh. . . Here It Is, —Not One But 3 In One Show—James Cagney in 'Blonde Crazy'—A Cyclone of Laughs—Laurel & Hardy in 'Come Clean' and—Mickey Mouse—in the 'Delivery Boy.' Ritz—Sun. Mon.——." Cuts of Laurel and Hardy and Mickey decorated the bottom portion of the bill. Plenty of white space appeared throughout and a black rule border was set all around. The entire layout was very attractive.

We have a small photo at hand showing a large crowd of kiddies waiting to contribute their offerings to a benefit show Hilgendorf put on for the poor families but it's too faint for clear reproduction. But we can tell you that food and old clothing served as admission tickets and that a packed house resulted from his efforts.

CUTTING THE ELECTRIC BILLS!

Since economy should be the key-note of your present operating methods we would particularly stress the great savings that can be effected in electric light consumption.

In a six hundred seat neighborhood theatre a saving of twelve dollars a week was realized in the following manner: Instead of using three rows of lights on the marquee border the center line was eliminated and dead bulbs screwed into the sockets. Under the marquee, which was arranged in squares, every other lamp on the inside squares of the ceiling was turned off. Inside the theatre a decorative dome was changed from twenty-five watt lamps to ten with very little noticeable difference in the general effect.

Similar savings in wattage was made all through the house with no sacrifice to brightness where brightness was needed. In other words; instead of just letting the usual wattage burn up a smart showman can cut down considerably, thereby saving a lot of money.

As a suggestion; take a morning in the very near future and start at the top of the house, work your way down through the auditorium, lobby and even the cellars; taking note of every socket where a lamp of smaller wattage can be substituted or the light turned off entirely. You'll be surprised to find how many pennies you can save.

Showmen Should Make a Careful Study of Advertising and Its Many Advantages for Effective Merchandising

By JACK HESS . .
Publix Theatres
Advertising Department

From comment already received we know that many showmen have found the Jack Hess advertising story both helpful and interesting, which is exactly what we expected. Now we give you the second and last installment. If you've read the first, you will be anxiously awaiting this one.

After reading the entire article we would appreciate some comment from many of the showmen who appreciate a discussion about advertising. "CHICK."

NOW, before I get down to giving some general ideas on what ads should actually be, it is necessary, first of all, to briefly analyze what psychologists and students of the human mind have discovered, for, as I said at the start, we are all students of a single subject; that is, the way of the public mind.

In almost every case the expert ad writer aims his data at an average 14-year-old mind. When the United States went to war, examining psychologists fixed the average mentality of the American soldier at 13 years of age. The similarity of their reactions to life were particularly amazing and are confirmed by statistics, all of which tend to show that human beings are emotionally alike.

This question of emotions is very important to us as I will set forth later, for that is what we are selling. The public have child-like minds, and when I explain at a later time, the need of simplicity in advertising, you will remember these governmental statistics.

A lesson which I would like to bring home by these charts is that, in the main, human beings are all alike, Managers are apt to claim that their particular town is entirely different from any other, but I believe this is usually an effort on their part to remove themselves as much as possible from the direction of the home office. There may be certain local conditions which he must watch, but people react emotionally the same everywhere. "Cimarron" was as big a picture in the smallest hamlet as in New York. The American people react to the same stimuli and therefore are affected by the same advertising.

Remember These Five!

According to Mr. Alexander Black, whose years of success as editor of newspaper features of almost unlimited circulation, gives him high authority, there are only five things in which every one is interested:

1. Sex.
2. Money, well-being, advancement.
3. Body.
4. Crisis of one.
5. Great outside.

These are listed in the relative order of their importance. Now with regard to the first—Sex—I want to make clear that I am not advocating the use of salacious copy, nor is the word used in the sense that it has been accepted in the last few years. The definition of the word "sex," as here given, is in its widest terms. It means the whole problem of man and woman; marriage, motherhood, as well as romance; it covers the baby and the evening gown; it means the fashions women use presumably to attract men. As far as our business is concerned, it is anything that has to do with the relationship between man and woman. I believe that the success of the majority of pictures of this kind prove Mr. Black right. The second—Money—relates to acquisition or loss; money and what one buys with it; whether it is a bargain or not; whether a man is successful in business or a woman socially; struggles for fame and fortune. The third deals with what goes into the stomach and what happens to the physical frame.

Under this heading come pictures of the Western type, in which the parties are in danger of injury, starvation, etc. It is "The Big House" type of picture and the overcoming of obstacles of this kind that represents the third choice in the minds of the American public. The fourth—Crisis of One—deals with the struggle of any single individual against superior forces. Examples of this as applied to pictures might be a person trying to overcome the snubs of society, one that is a victim of a lot engineered by powerful forces, a person encountering political opposition. "The Great Outside" is the last choice of the American public, and it is the thing that makes him want to guess at what comes after life. Under this group comes pictures of a religious nature and those dealing with ghosts and spirits. It was my intention to show you that these general statistics, as compiled by a leading newspaper man, actually applied in the the order named to particular pictures recently released. Having shown the emotions of the public in their order of importance, I will discuss them in relation to our ads.

Many Human Emotions!

It is stated by psychologists that there are 32 human emotions. Human beings are possessed by such feelings as fear, jealousy, love, anger, etc., and our business is to cater to and arouse these emotions. People come to our theatres to laugh at the antics of a comedian, to fear the dangers in which the hero is placed, and to admire and love the heroine. In other words, when we tell the public that we have great entertainment; what we really mean is that we have something that will arouse and stimulate their emotions. We are selling to the public an adjunct of something they already have.

All right, then! If we are dealing in emotions, it is necessary that our advertising also be emotional. We must make our public feel that this picture will stimulate and excite them. The ad copy must reflect the emotional appeal of the picture itself. It must have a quality which is generated by our own emotions, and that quality is enthusiasm. Not one thing in the promotion of entertainment can be accomplished in the way of advertising unless the campaign is backed up by a feeling of enthusiasm on the part of the man responsible for it. If you can't feel that a picture is great, that the performance of a particular artist deserves credit, or that a production is outstanding, you cannot make your public feel it. It is useless to say that this is a "great spectacle" or a "mighty picture," etc., unless you can put behind those hackneyed phrases the few simple sentences that will reflect your glory in the achievement of the producers. We sell a different set of emotions with every picture and for that reason every picture must be sold differently.

Public Is High-Strung!

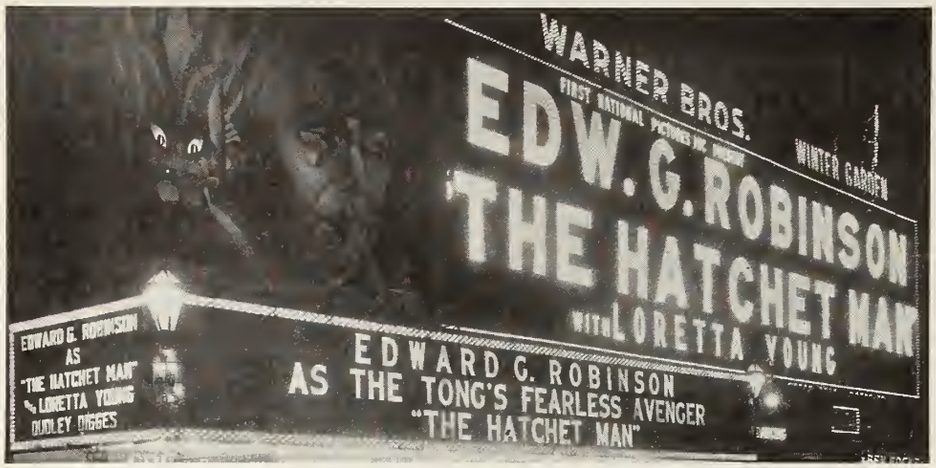
Furthermore, our advertising must become every day more active, quick in appeal, and with emotional contents. It is undoubtedly true and substantiated by neurologists that the modern motion picture, the modern novel, and jazz have so reacted upon the nerves of the American public that they have become strung to a very high pitch. Therefore ads must be alive with illustrations that depict people in action. This point was brought to my personal attention some time ago by an advertising executive of one of the large department stores in Chicago. He pointed out that motion pictures had materially affected their style of advertising and copy. He said the screen had helped to create the type of advertising which will alone arouse the public interest. Our own motion pictures have had their effect on the public mind. Twelve to 15 millions of people seeing movies every day have given the public a certain viewpoint; that is, the short staccato—pictures and title—quick, flashy technique, which should act as a cue for our illustration and copy.

The Ability to Inject Appeal Into Your Ad Campaigns Can Attract Many Extra Patrons to the Theatre

I wish to make a few general remarks on what should be done with layout and copy. I have shown the level of the public mind to be about 14 years of age. We must, therefore, remember, first of all, in soliciting their patronage with a display ad, that it is most important you express yourself simply and naturally. The most successful advertisers are those who understand humble folk—"the man in the street." If your language is too involved or too conspicuous, you will scare people. People who like "Abie's Irish Rose" and Maxfield Parrish will not appreciate good writing. They usually fear over-influence. They are shrewd and anything that is high-grow or over their heads arouses suspicion. An appeal which seems to come from a higher class is apt to arouse resentment. Let your ideas be good, but express them simply as possible. Aim them at the emotions, substitute enthusiasm for fine writing. A man who can write a good letter can write a good ad.

Another Five Points!

Make your ads easily understood. There are five points that command attention. I have them on this chart:



1. Must attract attention.
2. Must be readable.
3. Must be understandable.
4. Must be convincing.
5. Must create desire to see show.

If your ad attracts attention, if the eyes of the potential patrons are drawn to it, but it is difficult to read, their eye will travel on. If it is readable and understandable, but they are not convinced, you will not get their money. After they have read, understood, and been convinced, the ad should have an urge line to create a desire in their minds to see that particular show.

The backbone of any theatre ad is contained in the words "What, Where and When"? What the attraction is! Where it is playing! When it is playing! To this must be added the policy of the theatre: the time the doors open, the price of admission, etc. Our statistics show that we must not overestimate the intelligence of the public. This gets us back to simplicity, for if an ad is simple, it can easily be both effective and informative. Anything that is too involved, containing too much copy,

BROADWAY FRONT ATTRACTED ATTENTION

When showing "Hatchet Man" at the Winter Garden, Warner Brothers erected one of the most elaborate displays seen along the Main Stem for a long time. To make the display still more effective a forty foot dragon, seen at the left, had a steam pipe connected with the mouth, giving it the appearance of breathing steam.

HESS' TREATISE ON ADVERTISING!

or broken into too many small boxes is doomed to failure. Of all the five points mentioned on this chart the most important is readability, for without this all others must fail.

Pictures—Not Horses!

The same attention should be given to every picture regardless of its reputation. No manager should be like a certain king of Siam who was invited to attend a horse race near Paris. He said: "Why should I go to do that? Everybody knows that one horse is faster than another. I will see nothing new. It doesn't matter which one wins!" This particular king was rated as one of the weakest and most ineffectual his small country ever had. The reason I tell the story is to make an analogy. We all know that one picture is better than another, but it is our duty to point out the reason why, so that we can lend intelligent assistance to those that are not good. A slow race horse is treated as well as a good one on the theory that if it is worth while entering the race, it is worth while keeping in condition to give it a chance of winning. Gentlemen, that is what we have to do with pictures, treat them all alike regardless of what the betting odds might be.

Before closing I would like to come to a phase of advertising that touches theatre operation; that is, good will. It is a most powerful advertising medium which costs us nothing. Well-conducted theatres selling themselves as an institution are far more convincing than a campaign of institutional advertising. To pay for space in the newspapers to tell the public of the "service," "comfort," "romance," etc., is a way of buying good will. It is effective, but good will can be brought to the theatre without its costing the theatre a penny.

Nothing is more asinine than the efforts of a theatre to bring patrons to its doors by advertising only to treat them so badly they go away disgruntled. As I said, this touched upon something away from my department, but as every patron is also an advertising unit, giving his views to his family and friends, mouthing good or bad institutional copy for the theatre, I felt it necessary to show this connection.

A Proven Benefit!

The points I have tried to bring home can be summed up in a few sentences: Advertising is a proven benefit to any business, including the theatre; to get the best results the copy must be carefully chosen; that because the public are in the main very simple folk, the advertising must not be highbrow that every picture, good or bad, can benefit by advertising; that it really is the "life blood" of the theatre.

All publicity and advertising is essentially a matter of common sense and the art of understanding common people. We must try to estimate and then anticipate their preferences and emotions; then we must place copy in our ads that will bring them in. Theatre advertising that is effective is that which is comprehensive to the extent of analyzing what people want and how to supply it. You are selling the public romance, joy and entertainment. You have within the four walls of your theatre the means of satisfying their dreams, their ideals, and their emotions. In preparing a campaign try to project yourselves into the minds and the beliefs of ordinary human beings. Put yourself in their place, and try to imagine just what their feelings will be when they read your copy. If you want your theatre advertising to win, it must be shrewder and must contain more strategy than that of your competitor. Try to do something different whenever you can. Search for new angles. Make your campaigns refreshing to yourself, and they will be refreshing and attractive to your patrons.

THOUGHTS FOR THE SPRING!

"In the spring a young man's fancy may turn to thoughts of love"—etc., etc., but at the first sign of spring a theatre manager's thoughts start turning towards his annual spring clean-up and attention to his ventilating plant.

Now is the time to make certain that your air-conditioning apparatus, blower fans and wall fans are all in perfect order and ready to go through a hard summer's work. Many theatres will have minor or major repairs to their ventilating systems requiring several weeks or a month to complete. Others may have to have motors rewound, commutators turned down and various other work which takes quite a bit of time to complete.

Remember, your ventilating plant must start working long before the actual hot weather arrives. During the spring when sudden warm days come upon us expectedly we must be ready to keep the house from getting warm and stuffy. That's when you'll be kicking yourself for letting the ventilating repairs go until it's too late.

Better be safe. Not sorry. Check up on your equipment and see that everything is in perfect running order now, before spring and summer catch you unprepared.

JOHN FANNING HAS SOME IDEAS ON HOW TO SELL TEXAN TOWN

Building of Good Will the year 'round rather than constant use of a variety of exploitation stunts is considered good showmanship in Brownsville, Texas, by John C. Fanning, city manager at the Capitol Theatre. In other words, exploitation becomes a seasonable proposition, due to many changes of pictures during the week and that it has been found both expensive and detrimental to exploit one picture over another.

Four good will builders have been established during as many seasons that have been instrumental in boosting the Capitol to the position it now occupies as one of the city's foremost institutions. There is a charity event at Xmas time for the poor; a tie-up with the Chamber of Commerce for a Fourth of July celebration; a gala affair for the Irish on the 17th of March, and formation of an organization known as a "Salesmanship Club." Recently, certain gift nights have also brought good box-office returns.

On Xmas morning Santa Claus appears every year on the stage of the theatre to give a talk to a house full of children who have paid admission rates ranging from one cent to one dollar—any amount they wanted to donate. The proceeds are turned over to the Charity Home to provide food for the poor. On Xmas Eve Santa appears in front of the theatre and distributes some two or three thousand minor gifts. An elaborate stage is erected on the street and a Brownie announcer makes every minute announcements, relayed either by Postal or Western Union, concerning the progress of Santa to the city. This serves to key up excitement for at least 15 minutes before St. Nick arrives. On arrival the orchestra gets busy, folk songs are sung by attendants and a general spirit of good will prevails.

Fourth of July!

People from all over the neighborhood are invited to be guests of the theatre on the Fourth of July. In cooperation with the Chamber of Commerce it is arranged with merchants for the donation of money to cover cost of an elaborate fireworks display that is held in some prominent place in the evening. Other daytime amusements are also arranged, such as last 4th when merchant advertising was featured in a morning street parade of gayly decorated floats, beautiful girls, bands, etc. A committee appointed by the Chamber of Commerce solicited subscriptions from the various merchants and an average of eight hours' work has resulted year after year in over-subscription.

St. Patrick's Day!

All the Irish in the "valley" come into their own on St. Patrick's Day through the efforts made by Fanning. Citizens make donations to cover expenses attached to the holding of this gala event, which is the occasion for a monster barbecue and outlet for Celtic high vocal pressure. The gag of inviting such prominent personalities as Jimmy Walker and Al Smith were good for column stories in the local paper when tied in with the celebration.

The Salesmanship Club is composed of newsboys and its object is to make the youngsters realize the importance of being salesmen instead of just newsboys. Each week Fanning convenes with them and makes an address on acquisition of those characteristics important to manhood. This moral influence has without doubt improved the manners and habits of these boys 100 per cent. Instruction on various subjects relating to Brownsville, such as climate, population, schools, churches, lodges, amusement places, and other places of interest, enables every one of them to make proper answers to strangers in the city.

Give-aways!

Deploring over-emphasis on give-aways, he has found dignified effort along these lines a profitable source for the box-office. During the past two months he has tried out giving different articles from the stage on Saturday and Sunday evenings. One of the largest jewelry stores in the city donates a $15 award for Saturdays and the staunchest bank in town contributes a $10 gold piece. Sufficient credit is bestowed the donors during the give-away ceremonies from stage to make them more than content for incurred expense. Recently he tied up with a hardware store for the give-away of a boy's bicycle.

Every now and then a letter is sent out by Fanning to the Club requesting that all members be guests of the theatre on the occasion of some appropriate picture. In the sample which we have at hand it was suggested that the boys all meet a circulation man at the Herald office so that they could come to the theatre en masse.

Develops Business!

To sum up, it has always been Fanning's aim to develop the theatre to a point where it is just as essential an institution as post-office, schools or churches—to making the people feel that they needed the theatre more than they felt he needed their trade. At all times he and his staff endeavor to prove their worth as useful citizens, taking part in civic activities and often appearing before luncheon clubs when, with a few humorous stories, an excellent opportunity is presented to snare valuable publicity for current or coming attractions. In conjunction with all his activities there is ample evidence of newspaper support.

As we digest the activities of Fanning it becomes evident that he has developed himself and theatre as important factors in Brownsville civic life. We also think that managers who are similarly situated as to community and weekly changes will give more than passing heed to his views on exploitation. His treatment of give-aways and his "Salesmanship" Club, which appears to be a most worthwhile organization, should also come in for like consideration from many of our members. It has been a real pleasure to hear from this Round Tabler again, after several weeks of silence, and it is to be hoped that he will submit other constructive ideas.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

This one fooled us. In reducing it it lost some of the resemblance of the star, nevertheless it would make a mighty attractive poster, so we're passing it along as the contribution of Harry Atwell, poster artist, who has found this series of great help in his work.

We'd like to get some more of Benton James posters. He started the series, and his contributions were certainly marvelous. How about it Benton? We'll be expecting some more from you.

Laby Promoted

George Laby, well known contributor to this department and for a long time in charge of the Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass., has been appointed managing director of the New Paramount Theatre, Boston, latest and most modern addition to Publix theatre properties in that city.

PERSONALITIES

LEO ROSEN, formerly manager of the Warner-Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., has been advanced to the post of city manager of all Warner houses in Troy, N. Y. He will make his headquarters at the Troy Theatre.

LESTER FRUCHT is acting-manager of the Tremont Theatre, Bronx, New York City, succeeding Martin Messinger, who has been placed in charge of Brandt's Lyric.

DAVID L. CANTOR, newly appointed manager of the Warner Theatre at Aberdeen, Wash., hasn't lost any time swinging into city activities. He's already a member of the local Legion Post and he followed up by entertaining the entire local organization at the theatre.

EUGENE C. O'KEEFE and Max Fregger, who a year ago sold the Babcock and Billings Theatres, Billings, Mont., to the H-F circuit, recently returned from Los Angeles, where they went to negotiate return of these properties. Plans have been completed for reopening under the old banner.

FLOYD MAXWELL, manager of the new deluxe Fox house in Spokane, Wash., recently announced the arrival of Tommy Sandvall to take charge of the stage presentation policy inaugurated at that house. Sandvall was formerly with George Olsen and replaces Merlin Nagler, who will probably be transferred to another Fox unit.

J. S. HALL, JR., of Hall Industries Theatres, Inc., recently assumed charge of the Rialto and Rex Theatres at Kennedy, Texas, replacing A. F. Avery, who has taken up his residence in San Marcos.

LOUIS HELLBORN, manager of the new Silver Orpheum Theatre, new Denver RKO house, put over a good publicity job on occasion of the premiere of this playhouse. He was ably assisted by assistant manager Charles Wislon and publicity director Gardner Wilson. The Orpheum seats 2,600.

CHARLES ROSE, formerly manager of the Jefferson Theatre, Auburn, N. Y., is now in charge of the Colonial Theatre, Norwich, N. Y. Morris Rosenthal has succeeded to the Jefferson post.

FRED HAMLIN, long identified with the exhibition end of the film industry, recently resigned his post of publicity manager for Paramount Publix in Salt Lake City and has taken up new duties with the local chamber of commerce.

STONER HADDEN has replaced Earl Baughman as manager of the Victory Theatre, Salt Lake City. Hadden was formerly with Publix at Denver.

RICHARD "DICK" OLDER has been appointed manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

GEORGE BRESSON has taken over the Belvedere Theatre, Pomona, Calif., from the H-F Circuit.

JACK FLANAGAN, head of the Tri-State Motion Picture Company, has returned from a month's vacation in the South.

CHARLES ZACK, former publicity man for the Penn-State Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., has taken over operation of the Rex Theatre, Mt. Gilead, Ohio. H. C. Seebohm will be retained as manager.

EDMOND YARBOROUGH has assumed his duties as manager of the RKO State Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, succeeding Dick Wright who is now in charge of the Warner Strand in Akron. Yarborough formerly handled publicity and his old job is being filled by A. J. Kennedy.

FRANK PORZINSKI, operator of the Garfield and New Victory Theatres, Cleveland, is spending a few weeks in Florida on vacation.

J. F. HIGGINS has purchased the Torrence Theatre, Torrence, Calif., from Pacific National.

H. C. KYLE recently announced that his Palace Theatre, Portales, N. M., would be closed for an indefinite period.

MORGAN AMES, Omaha district manager for RKO, attended the opening of the new RKO Orpheum, Denver, Col.

ARCHIE MacARTHUR has succeeded K. L. Adams as manager of the Liberty Theatre, Toppenish, Wash., under Arch Bartholet, manager of the Mercy Theatre at Yakima. MacArthur was a former operator.

FRANK SCHEUR has purchased the Delray Theatre, Detroit suburban house, from the Klatt Land Co. The house has been dark for about a year.

WILLIAM GUENSCHE, owner of the Lakewood Theatre, Detroit, Mich., has taken over management of the house following the death of manager R. H. Stubbs.

HAROLD MacMAHON has received the assignment to manage the new million dollar Loew house, 72nd street and 3rd avenue, New York City. The house held its premiere last Saturday. MacMahon was formerly manager of the Valencia, Jamaica.

SAM REICHBLUM has leased the Colonial Theatre, Wheeling, West Va., for a ten year period.

FLOWERS FOR EASTER!

A lavish floral display should certainly be arranged for every theatre in cooperation with local florists for the week of Easter.

In addition to fresh flowers and plants, a generous supply of greens and ferns can be spotted around the lobby and foyers. Fresh cut flowers, especially those that are fragrant, should be placed in vases and bowls in the ladies lounge rooms during the week.

Generally the only cost involved on the part of the theatre is the making of a credit card or two to be placed with the plants. Otherwise you have nothing else to pay for, yet it gives your theatre a fine break at this particular time of the year.

CARLTON DUFFUS, formerly with the Publix publicity office at Minneapolis, has succeeded Don O'Neill as assistant to Don Alexander, Publix publicity manager in St. Paul, Minn. O'Neill has returned to college.

W. S. VANDERLIP has taken over operation of the Tivoli Theatre, Sawtelle, Calif., from T. S. McManus. Vanderlip was formerly in business at Inglewood.

J. J. CLUXTON is operating the Imperial Theatre, Stockton, Calif.

RICHARD BECK, manager of the Castle Theatre, Chicago, Ill., has been on the sick list.

F. H. STARR, operator of the Rialto Theatre, Monticello, N. Y., has taken over the Lyndhurst Theatre, Lyndhurst, N. Y.

JACK SARDINO, brother of Frank Sardino of Syracuse, N. Y., will have charge of the Capitol Theatre, East Syracuse, a house recently taken over by Frank from James Kernan. The Sardinos are veteran theatre operators in Syracuse. Kernan, also, has been operating a string of neighborhood houses for a number of years.

MILO OWENS, operator of the Garrick in Milan, recently took over the Ecorse, in Ecorse, a suburb of Detroit, Mich.

EMMA DINGWALL has purchased the Mack Theatre, Detroit East Side, from T. A. Yager.

ROBERT JONASSON and William Chesney have been acting managers of Publix houses in Plainfield, N. J., since the old Blue laws were enacted on Sunday shows and these boys have also come in for a share of trouble. Last week the City Judge imposed fines totalling $150. The scrap is still on.

C. ZOST, formerly operator of the Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, and who sold the house several months ago to C. C. Crowder, has reacquired the property. At present he is operating on a grind policy.

CHARLES BURKE, operator of the Summit Theatre, Kansas City, and ex-president of an independent group of exhibitors, is confined to the hospital.

H. C. BROWN, formerly connected with the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., is now in charge of the Rivoli Theatre, Greenville, S. C.

EDWARD KANE, formerly manager of the Central Theatre, Newark, N. J., has been promoted to take charge of the Cranford Theatre, Canford, N. J.

EDWARD MILLSTEIN is another New Jersey assistant manager to gain a promotion. Formerly at the Mosque, in Newark, he is now in charge of the Central.

MITCHELL FITZER, well known exhibitor of Syracuse, N. Y., is said to have completed plans for taking over operation of the Dewitt Theatre, formerly known as the Empire, North Salina street.

WASHINGTON IN THE MOVIES

By JAMES HAY, Jr.
Publicity Division
Bicentennial Commisson

AS the time for the celebration of the George Washington Bicentennial in 1932 draws nearer, the motion picture business shows an increasing interest in the Father of His Country. At this writing (October 15, 1931), two sets of pictures with Washington as the hero are being made, and a report to the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, with headquarters in the national capital, is that a third series of films on the same theme will be produced in the near future.

Eastman Teaching Films, Inc., a subsidiary of the Eastman Kodak Company, is making a four reel film covering the entire life of Washington. This picture, although made primarily for classroom use on narrow gauge film, will also be available on standard size film for auditorium showings.

The scenario for this "George Washington" was done by Dr. Edgar Dawson, former professor of history at Princeton University and now at Hunter College, New York, and Dr. John Clement Fitzpatrick of the Library of Congress, an authority on the history of Washington.

THE cast will be headed by Ellsworth Woods, an actor of long experience, taking the part of Washington. His resemblance in face and figure to the First President of the United States is very marked. Washington as a youth and young man will be played by John Ferguson, selected for the role because of his resemblance to Charles Willson Peale's portrait of the hero in his younger years.

For the making of this picture, for the first time in all its history, Mount Vernon has been thrown open to photographers. The United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, being a government organization, persuaded the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association, which has control of this patriotic shrine, to allow the camera men to take any and all exterior and interior views of the mansion that might be needed in the development of the story.

Other scenes in addition to those at Mount Vernon are being shot at Kenmore, the home of Washington's sister in Fredericksburg, Va., and at the nearby house in the same town which was bought by Washington for his mother during the Revolution. Washington made this purchase so that his mother might move from the family farm in the country to the safer and more congenial atmosphere of the town.

In producing the picture the actors use some of the furniture, silver, cut glass, and other articles which Washington himself used. In the military scenes detachments from the Third Cavalry and the Twelfth Infantry of the United States Army are employed. Horses, cannon and other military equipment are supplied by the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, Va. These soldier scenes occur in the sequences relating to Washington's expedition with General Braddock against the French and in episodes of the Revolutionary War.

THE celebration has been planned by the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, with the following outstanding features:

The commemoration will last nine months, from February 22, 1932, until the following Thanksgiving Day.

Instead of a big show or entertainment being given exclusively in one place to mark the observance, appropriate ceremonies and festivities will be held in every city, town and village in the country. That is to say, every American community will set aside, within the designated nine months, a number of patriotic days on which it will stage Bicentennial exercises, in this way insuring that the celebration will literally blanket the United States.

By October 15, 1931, 10,000 cities and towns had appointed their local commissions to cooperate with the national organization.

Many foreign countries have also announced that they will take part in the observance. Moreover, every community of Americans in foreign countries will put on a series of exercises appropriate to the event. Thus, in a very real sense, this commemoration will girdle the globe.

WITH the community festivities and ceremonies being emphasized as the typical and chief mode of observing the Bicentennial, it is obvious that motion pictures will be invaluable to organizations and municipalities planning their celebration programs. In addition to these dramatic representations of Washington and his times, many communities are planning to produce plays and to put on pageants, each one based on a dramatic event in the history of the first President.

Any community which desires help or advice in planning its Bicentennial program can secure it by applying to the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission for its comprehensive list of suggestions as to how the Bicentennial exercises can best be managed.

MAGAZZU PROMOTED PAGE COOPERATIVE WITH GAG OF WORDS

A novel and attractive full page co-op featuring "Two Kinds of Women" was recently promoted by P. A. Magazzu, manager of the Grand Theatre in Hazleton, Pa. The theatre ad occupied the top center portion, in addition to a banner head on title, one advertiser took the entire lower half, and either side flanking the theatre ad was equally divided between four merchants.

The gag used in connection with the page was to supply the missing letters of a word in each ad, such as T————G, and the notice further went on to explain that these words represented the opposite quality of bold, sarcastic, inconsiderate, deceitful, etc. It was advised that the words be listed in two columns, those that went together in one and those of the opposite qualities in the other.

With the absence of a lot of small sized type and use of a number of striking mats, the page presented a very attractive appearance. Magazzu's word gag appears different from the usual run and we're therefore taking the liberty of passing it along for the use of other Club members, and at the same time wish to congratulate him for promoting such a fine looking ad.

Here's the way Balaban & Katz announced their fifteenth anniversary to Chicago in particular and the whole United States in general. A smashing ad occupying the better part of a page combined all the houses under the B & K banner in Chicago. Not even the small neighborhood theatres were overlooked in the combination ad. You'll find them sandwiched in among the others.

Don't criticise the crowded appearance of the copy. It's typical of Chicago's theatrical advertising and always gets a rise out of ad men who are hounds for plenty of white space. But just the same, Chicago certainly knew, through this ad, that Balaban & Katz were to have a birthday to celebrate their many years as dispensers of entertainment for the masses.

In line with this season's relief activities, we note that three Wichita Falls, Texas, managers made a handsome donation not long ago to the P. T. A. City Council Lunch Fund and consequently made the front page of a local newspaper with photos of themselves and check. This contribution was made the first day the drive went into effect and the theatres' contribution led the list.

This is not the first instance during the depression that these managers went to bat for the needy in their town and the generous publicity tendered these testimonials of their interest in community affairs by the newspaper is ample evidence that efforts were appreciated. We are glad to record that these Club members did their share of all the good work that's been going on.

TOM PHELAN HELD FIRST ANNIVERSARY DOWN IN NEW JERSEY

Just to let fellow showmen know that Thomas Phelan has been accomplishing other feats than becoming the father of a brand new baby, we're taking this occasion to set down the fact that the front page in a recent issue of a Long Branch, N. J. newspaper carried a two column story on his theatre's first anniversary. Thomas manages the Paramount in that well known Jersey resort city and the boys who covered the story told readers all about the fine house and the part it's playing among the city's important institutions.

We also noted that this same paper gave publicity to a "Fear Moment" gag that was recently run by the Paramount in connection with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." The readers were asked to write an account of the most fearsome experience in their life and submit it to the paper. Ten of the contributors were awarded guest tickets for the picture.

All of which goes to show that Tom Phelan is on the job and not spending the greater portion of his time pushing a baby carriage up and down the famous board walk. We'll be on the lookout for further news concerning this member's activities and in the meantime, and on behalf of all his fellow Round Tablers, pass along best wishes to Baby Phelan and parents.

BICKFORD TIED-UP WITH RADIO STORE FOR COSTLESS ADV.

Promotion of costless ads is a popular subject these days so it's therefore most timely to mention one recently put over by George D. Bickford, manager of the Garden Theatre, Davenport, Iowa.

This ad was made possible through a hook-up with a dealer in radios and a half portion of a ten inch by three column deep space was devoted to the theatre, with top portion dressed with head cuts of two featured players. Names of stars, title of picture, admission price and play dates were mentioned.

If you're a circuit man and want to win a smile from the boss we don't have to remind any one that this type of ad makes a big hit with the Home Office, or for that matter, it ought also bring the same feeling to a manager who is on his own. At any rate, Bickford, like many of our members, is demonstrating right along that some contact work among local merchants will produce results.

SPRING FASHION SHOW AND REVUE!

An early buying season for spring apparel has been predicted, due to the exceptionally mild winter. Therefore, if you are one of the showmen who cashes in on this great box-office bet, you ought to be starting your plans and preparations for your Spring Fashion Show now.

Although it is customary to publish a full campaign showing how to engineer one of these shows, it ought to be so well known by this time that no one should require a primer on how to put it over.

However, for the benefit of those who have never had an experience along such lines we are preparing a Fashion Show and Revue article which will appear in next week's issue of the Club pages. In the meantime you ought to be meeting your merchants and newspaper advertising manager and getting things moving. The actual staging of the event is not a difficult task if you have any sort of a stage or platform to work with.

PRYTZ ANNIVERSARY CAMPAIGN BASED ON RESULTS AT LOW COST

Theatre anniversaries are always cropping up all over the country and for this reason we feel sure that readers will be interested to know how this event was observed by Roy Prytz, manager of the Granada Theatre, Duluth, Minn.

Two weeks in advance he started off with the first trailer, with complete change of copy at the end of the first week. For appropriate lobby atmosphere he secured large prop cakes, each with a candle to designate what anniversary. Suitable copy on cards explained the props.

A number of barrels, one of which is shown in the small photo, were effectively used with the old curiosity gag. These were placed at prominent intersections throughout the city and carried signs reading, "Don't Look In This Barrel." The barrels were painted a la clown costume to present a circus appearance. Unless we're mistaken, that's Roy himself standing alongside.

Through a tie-up made with a sign shop he succeeded in getting up a very attractive front at minimum cost. The entrance was completely built in with large cutout cakes set in relief and mammoth banners covered both sides of the marquee. Wires from popular stars also occupied prominent positions.

Other activities included the stuffing of 5,000 "Liberty Magazines" just before opening day and special showing for "Liberty" boys, which included the usual street parade; tie-ups with practically every department store, drug store and soda fountain which offered ideas of an "Anniversary Special," ranging from a five cent drink to a complete luncheon. All of which was backed up with regular weekly routine advertising.

Prytz's Anniversary campaign is particularly interesting in that he had to obtain maximum results at minimum cost and to all appearances he put over an excellent job. We'd like to hear from other members concerning their campaigns.

MARCH POSSIBILITIES!

Here is a month that requires an unusual display of smart showmanship, plus money-making ideas, to get across in great shape. But at least it provides you with ample opportunities to make it a profitable month by reason of its fruitful calendar.

Lent continues until Palm Sunday, when it plunges into one of showbusiness's toughest spells—Holy Week. But analyzing it a bit farther reveals business tie-ups on its many historical and religious dates.

Turn to the "Showman's Calendar" on the third page of the Club section and study each and every date. You'll find plenty of good reasons to pep up business and come through with a neat profit, too.

Incidently, this is a good month for one of those whirlwind auto giveaways terminating right after Lent. Ditto for other special nights involving merchant tie-ups for the distribution of donated merchandise.

Yep, there is plenty to be done in the month of March, and the early Lent gives you a great chance to grab off two good months of business before the first of the warm weather comes along to disturb your peaceful slumbers. So make hay while the sun shines and make some money for your theatre during March.

Hall, Jr., In Charge

J. S. Hall, Jr., of Hall Industries Theatres, Inc., has taken over management of company properties in Kennedy, Tex., which include the Rialto and Rex Theatres. A. F. Avey, manager of these houses for the past six months, has gone to San Marcos, Tex.

BUILDER OF GOOD WILL!

Hillyer and School Combine for Showing of Short Films During Regular Class Hours

SEVERAL weeks ago it was related in this department how a "Safety Club" was organized by Earle Holden, city manager for E. J. Sparks theatres in Ocala, Fla., and in line with this idea we are reporting a somewhat similar move recently made by M. N. Hillyer, manager of the Downs Theatre, Downs, Kan.

Holden's scheme, you will undoubtedly recall, was inaugurated solely as a builder of community good will in a town where the prevailing low admission rate for children did not necessitate any particular stimulus in that direction. He worked through a tie-up made with the Chamber of Commerce and gave a free Saturday morning show based upon the Safety idea. Special reels were secured gratis from one of the big film distributing companies, the Y. M. C. A. and the Department of Agriculture. The idea was sold to all schools within a reasonable radius of the theatre.

Hillyer's scheme was brought to mind by Holden's and while there is a great deal in common between the two as to peculiarity of local conditions and recruiting of students, Hillyer's appears rather unique in that he actually invaded class hours to put across his stunt.

TO begin with, relations between theatre and schools were unsatisfactory, due to a tendency on the part of a few citizens to still hold motion pictures an undesirable fare for the younger element. This breech was further widened by a bitterly contested battle over Sunday movies. With these facts in mind, Hillyer sallied forth to effect a worthwhile contact with the school authorities and to convince doubting Thomases that the theatre was and could be made a powerful educational force in any community.

He gathered what information was at hand on educational subjects and entered into innumerable discussions with the superintendant of schools and other members of the Board of Education. Eventually convincing these people as to sincerity, he proposed to present a regular schedule of motion pictures in the theatre as part of the school curriculum, timed during school hours.

Obtaining consent from authorities for a try-out of the plan, his next move was to contact all sources of suitable films for the experimental showing and as a result arranged a program consisting of several reels of educational subjects, including Curiosities, Travel films, Pictorials and Scenics. The national distributors agreed to supply older releases of this type gratis.

THE first program consisted entirely of standard releases furnished by a leading film distributor and was presented during the High School's regular assembly at 11 A.M. The subject matter was so strikingly educational that it was received with obvious enthusiasm, and arrangements were immediately made to continue the programs at the rate of one each month. At this writing the second of the series has been run, consisting of several subjects from the General Electric library of sound films, together with standard releases from one of the film companies.

The theatre supplies the house, equipment and necessary personnel at no cost to the school. The school authorities pay all incidental expenses such as transportation of film, etc. Hillyer takes care of booking details, after going over the lists of available subjects with the school superintendant. All students are required to attend, the same as with regular classes, and the teachers have the privilege of incorporating the subject matter of the programs in their classroom activities.

THE plan has met with such decided approval from all sources that the theatre is now looked upon by students and faculty as an integral part of the community. Any semblance of advertising the theatre's regular shows is avoided but this result is obtained by bringing the entire enrollment through the lobby and past the front, where every effort has been made to effectively sell current and coming attractions.

As a sidelight developing from the plan, the matter of funds for carrying out the programs suggested the desirability of promoting a benefit show to be sponsored by the student organization, and plans are being carried for a special attraction to be scheduled in the near future. For this occasion it is planned to use an "arty" picture rather than some release classed as an all-around attraction.

THUS far Hillyer has concluded that the institutional value of the scheme exceeds any he has yet tried out. In addition, the entire school has become "picture-conscious" and ready access has been found to the classrooms with various attractions that meet with approval of the instructors. No revenue is derived directly, but the cost of the educational programs to the theatre is negligible and it is figured that benefits will accrue steadily from month to month.

Hillyer's and Holden's schemes to overcome certain local prejudice appear to have much in common, with the possible exception that Hillyer's move may be unique in its field. At any rate, to our knowledge, it is the first time that a theatre has ever invaded regular classroom hours over an extended period and it may be a forerunner of the present trend among schools to adopt visual education as a portion of the regular educational courses.

To say the least, his success up to the present stage is most interesting and we would like to hear further about how the plan eventually turns out. Hillyer gives due credit to one of the major film companies for providing such acceptable film material. These were standard releases with a strong element of audience appeal and aided materially to the effectiveness and popularity of the programs. We will be glad to furnish the name of this distributor upon request from any other Club member who may contemplate making a similar move. If any other Round Tabler already has such a plan in effect, we would be interested to learn his views on this interesting subject.

CARL MILLER GAVE PATRONS LAFF WEEK TO PEP UP SPIRITS

Basing his idea on the popular notion that what this country needs is a lot of laughs, Carl Miller, manager of the West Coast Theatre, San Bernardino, Calif., contributed to the general state of hilarity by putting on no less than a "Laff Week," a whole week of laughs, if you please, and during which the good citizens of his town were treated to a round of the laughingist films that Carl could dig up.

You will note from the accompanying photo that the lobby and front were given special treatment for the occasion. Large, illuminated cutout letters were strung across the entire length of the marquee, and frames with posters and stills helped carry out the general scheme. Marx Brothers and Winnie Lightner features made up the heaviest portion of the program for the week, along with Laurel & Hardy and other comedies.

We are also illustrating the type of herald used by Miller to back up his "Laff" show. Brevity of copy, a goodly assortment of mats and plenty of white space all combined to make it an attractive piece of work. The heralds were given wide distribution throughout the theatre's territory.

As Carl states, it was just a case of putting the shoulders behind an old gag at an opportune time, and to all appearances his patrons got their share of laughs. So, we might put the question, "Have You Had Your Laff Week Yet" to others, and hint that some of our members might be gainers by following out the same intensive methods used by Miller.

DOESN'T COST A NICKEL TO JOIN!

AL GRAVEL manages no other than the Gravel Theatre and this new member's house is located out in the town of Goodland, Ind. At this writing Al may consider himself officially introduced to the several thousand other Round Tablers in this organization and it is our sincere hope that he will observe rules and regulations, which obligate him to the extent of telling us all about what's going on in show-business out his way. We'll be on the lookout for further news from Goodland.

T. M. BARRON is the assistant manager of the Palace Theatre in Lockport, N. Y., a house managed by V. E. Hudson, who writes in glowing terms concerning the ability of his helper and predicts that we'll hear more about this newly-elected member of our Club. Thanks, Hudson, for sponsoring assistant manager Barron, and we also hope that he'll give a good account of himself. With both of you fellows from the Palace in our ranks, there's no reason why Lockport show-doings shouldn't get a break in these columns.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. ELIAS both owns and manages the Evangeline Theatre down South in New Iberia, La., and he is also in line for introduction to his host of fellow showmen. A cordial welcome is also extended this new member from Dixie and we would like to have him fall in line with the rest of the boys who are devoting a portion of their time to keeping their Club informed about show business. What was that last stunt you used to good results, Elias? Let us know.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. R. LONG hails from Sunny Alabam' where, in the city of Fort Payne, he owns and manages the Rivoli Theatre. Shake hands with the rest of the boys, Long, and make yourself at home around the "Table." We're glad to have you for a representative down in Fort Payne and hope you'll do your bit in the matter of telling us what methods you are using to sell shows in your town. Shoot along some ideas and we'll see that others are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SIDNEY LARSCHAN is the managing director of the Meserole Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., but on his membership application modestly describes himself as "common garden variety of house manager." At any rate, the Meserole is a 2,000 seat house that belongs to the Randforce Circuit and is a job for any one man to tackle. We have an idea Greenpoint is a fertile section for exploitation activities and will therefore rely on Larschan to keep the Club informed on what's doing in show business in that neck of the big town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE L. JONAS is in charge of the New Melba Theatre in Houston, Mo., and this new Round Tabler is also in line for introduction to this large army of fellow showmen. In case you don't know, George, there's a little more to membership in this organization than just joining, and that is to regularly send along a live show tip that your brother Round Tablers can use to advantage. So do your bit and help this Club maintain its reputation of being the greatest source of assistance to showmen all over the world.

M. H. EDWARDS is a Tennessean who came North several months ago to fill the job of chief projectionist at the Ritz Theatre, Phillipsburg, N. J., and since that time has been promoted to the post of manager. He was associated in the South with the Crescent Amusement Company and has had varied experience in theatres for the past five years. He's twenty-five years old at this writing and well along the way to a successful career in show-business. We feel that this new member will do his utmost to help keep these pages filled with interesting slants on how to swell box office receipts.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BERNARD LASSACK manages the Elite Theatre out in Milwaukee, Wis., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this constantly-growing organization of showmen. With Lassack in the Milwaukee group our Club must almost rate one hundred per cent representation out in that city and if we're wrong in this contention, it is our hope that any stragglers will heed these words. This new member's contributions will always find space in these pages and all he has to do now is to shoot some along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NORRIS NELSON has the job of assisting Charles Clark with the management of the Metropolitan Theatre in Baltimore, Md., and with his application at hand this organization now rates one hundred per cent at this well known house. They do considerable show-selling in this Baltimore neighborhood and with both Clark and Nelson to depend upon, we should be able to keep all the boys informed on what's going on down there. Welcome to this outfit, Norris, and do your bit.

DAVE DAVIDSON has the job of promoting advertising and publicity for Publix Greater Talkie theatres in Detroit, Birmingham, Redford and Royal Oak, Mich., which is a man's size task any way you look at it. His work takes in ten houses seating approximately 25,000, eight with weekly change, one twice-weekly and one every week. So all Dave has to do when he finishes—when he finishes his work—is to get a little sleep now and then. However, if he can find the time we hope he'll send along some of those live show-selling ideas that he and his staff are using to lure Detroiters away from firesides and Fords.

EDWARD HARRIS hails from down South in Georgia, suh, where he manages the DeKalb Theatre on Ponce DeLeon Avenue in the city of Decatur. Once again we make room around this ever-growing Table to seat another gentleman from the South, and hope that he will uphold the reputation his brother Georgians have established in the matter of making contributions to this department. A word to the wise, Edward. We'll be looking for an account of that last live stunt you put over.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. E. "JOHNNY" MANUEL is the manager of the Warner Ohio Theatre in Sandusky, Ohio, one of the houses under the supervision of that well known Round Tabler Walter Morris, of whom most all of you have heard through these pages. Manuel has been at the Ohio for about four months and during that time found the weekly meetings of this Club both interesting and profitable. Now he's one of us and proposes to repay his fellow showmen by sending in some of his own ideas. That's the spirit, Johnny, and you can start in any minute.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

T. TESCHNER was recently promoted from the post of doorman to the assistant managership of the Mall Theatre, a Loew house in Cleveland managed by William Weiss. He is twenty-two years of age and has been with the Loew organization for two years, which is hitting a nice pace of advancement. We are glad to enroll Teschner in this Club and will expect to hear further from both representatives at the Mall.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM WEISS has been in show-business for fifteen years and cannot think of any good reason why he did not join this organization when it first started, for he admits that it's been a source of inspiration on many occasions. Okay, Bill, we don't know why either, but you're in now and please see that the lost time is made up by regularly sending along some tips on show-selling. And we know that this new Round Tabler will do this, just as soon as he can find the time.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. B. McFARLING is the owner and manager of the Gem Theatre in Cairo, Ill., and we're mighty glad to introduce this newly-elected Round Tabler to his host of fellow showmen. In his capacity of owner-manager there's no strings attached to Mack's activities in show-business and we'll be looking forward to some interesting contributions concerning conditions out in Cairo.

THE JUNIOR SHOW

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE best way to tell a story is to illustrate it. We, who have a professional and prideful interest in motion pictures, know something about that! For several months this department has been accumulating and dispensing information on the building of the Junior Show and the Family Audience Nights to encourage the exhibitor on his way to the building up of new audiences. The young people of today are the adults of tomorrow and tomorrow is never so very far off. In these months of our experimenting we have found many enthusiastic theatre men who are averaging a thousand children a week in their theatres. They realize that this number multiplies four times over through the week in adult reaction; that the child is the best booster the theatre man could have. The following story from the Loew's National Theatre of Boston, Massachusetts, from L. W. Richmond the manager, is an illustration in point.

"You Can't Kid the Kids"

Here is the finely philosophical viewpoint of the manager of Boston's National theatre, who has developed a constructive program and has watched it flower to a splendid success. He says:

"Try to kid the kids and you will find that you are only kidding yourself, or your box office. The average theatre today has to depend on the children's trade to keep the house 'out of the red,' but since the talkies have been produced the attendance has been dropping off more and more. With few exceptions, the pictures that are being produced today are not appealing to the children and they not only know it, but they let you know it as well. 'Skippy's' and 'Sooky's' are few and far between, and the theatre manager who depends on pictures of this type will have plenty of idle seats on Saturday matinees.

"Give the youngsters an inducement. Start a Booster Club at your theatre and double or triple your business in no time. It is a natural magnet for the youngsters, if organized and conducted in a business-like manner.

HOW TO ORGANIZE AND CONDUCT A BOOSTER CLUB TO KEEP THE CHILDREN INTERESTED

1—Application Blanks

"Application blanks as pictured above are distributed to the children, filled out, and kept on file alphabetically for future reference. This makes an ideal mailing list and can be used for various purposes.

2—Membership Cards

"After application blanks are distributed, children are asked to bring them in on some designated day, properly filled out, and they receive their membership card. The children consider these of great value and keep them, knowing that certain privileges are granted to members of the Booster Club.

"Printed on the reverse side of membership card is the club creed, which is as follows:

I will always be a good honest child, in my home, in school, on the playgrounds, in the theatre or wherever I may be.

I will strive, always, to make myself a better and more useful little citizen.

I will respect my elders and help the aged and crippled whenever possible.

I will respect and assist children smaller than myself. In short, I will be a good American Booster.

"Every Saturday Matince, names of members having birthdays during the week are called from the stage, and every boy or girl whose name is called comes on the stage and receives a pair of passes so that he can invite his mother or father to any performance the boy or girl might desire. Birthday lists are made up from the application blanks which are kept on file.

Meeting During School Vacations

"Special Booster Club meetings are called on certain mornings during school vacations. Various matters are discussed with the children, special films shown, special speakers. For instance, last meeting's speaker was the manager of Massachusetts Safety Council, with special film instructing children how to be careful to avoid accidents, etc. Refreshments are served free through tieup with candy and ice cream manufacturers. These meetings draw big crowds and are great advertisements.

Special Awards for Children Getting Best Report Cards

"Special prizes or passes are given to children receiving the best marks in school. Of course, this meets with the approval of your local schools, and at the same time keeps your theatre in the mind of the child.

Poor Children Admitted Free

"Booster Club members are asked to report to the Chief Booster if they know of any children in the neighborhood that are being deprived of theatre entertainment because their parents are too poor to give them the price of admission. Arrangements are made whereby the poor children are admitted free.

Free Show to All Members After School Every Tuesday

"Children are admitted free every Tuesday after school merely by showing their membership cards at the door. Special announcements are made at this time about coming attractions, etc.

Season Pass Contest

"Conduct a contest with a special prize of a season pass to be awarded the winner. Contest on essay of certain number of words: 'What suggestions would you make for the betterment of the Booster Clubs?' This creates a lot of talk and gets the children more interested in the Booster Club.

Booster Amateur Club

"I believe the most interesting part of the Booster Club is our special amateur shows conducted on the stage every Saturday Matinee. Make an announcement on your screen asking for names and addresses of amateur talent. You will really be surprised to know how many children there are in your community that have possibilities for a stage career. These amateurs will make up a show of five or six acts once a week that will be entertaining to the adults as well as the children. In my opinion it is one of the best box office attractions for children today.

"The Booster Club was started at the National Theatre in Boston, with 300 members about three months ago. Today we have a membership of 1100 and are still growing.

"Boost your box office receipts with a Booster Club.

"Make sure that you don't promise the children anything that you cannot fulfill. Remember—'You can't kid the kids!'"

Oregon's Story

Miss Myrtle Buckmiller, president of the Baker Theatres Co., Inc., of Baker, Ore., sends the following forthright story which adds one more colorful bit to the mosaic pattern of this whole plan. Miss Buckmiller is not engaged in an experimentation. She has demonstrated a fact, and it is an engaging fact worthy of your serious consideration. She says:

"We have a completely successful children's club in our town, and I am very glad to give you the detailed workings of it, for if we know of anything these days that will help our fellow exhibitor, I think it is a duty to pass it along. Here is the essential fact. Our town has a population of 7,000. Out of this number we draw a children's matinee of 1,000.

"One year ago the first of November, I organized a Mickey Mouse Club. Up to that time our children's patronage had been very small in the 50 cent house. It worried me considerably, so I thought best to organize something. At that time the cities were going strong for the Mickey Mouse Clubs. Our club has been a huge success. We have over 800 members and the patronage keeps up in the summer as well as in the winter. By organizing the kiddies club we have increased the afternoon and night performances at least 60 per cent and haven't hurt the smaller house at all.

"I personally supervise the club, direct the orchestra and produce stage attractions out of the club members. Keep them all working and make them all feel the club is theirs and they are needed to carry it on. It is surprising the talent one finds among the kiddies.

"We are getting great cooperation from the Service Clubs and various organizations and the parents are with us 100 per cent. Our club furnishes entertainment for Kiwanis, American Legion and ever so many affairs. We were called upon to furnish the parade for last Fourth of July Celebration and it was a great success.

"I arrange to have about thirty minutes of stage entertainment put on by the children, such as puppet shows, songs, dances, music, and all in costume and the stage set nicely for the occasion. Then I show them such pictures as Mickey Mouse each week even if we do repeat the picture; serials such as 'Buffalo Bill,' 'Heroes of the Flames,' 'Mystery Trooper,' 'Vanishing Legion' and 'Spell of the Circus'; features such as 'Huckleberry Finn,' 'Sooky,' 'Tom Sawyer,' 'Alice in Wonderland,' Aesop's Fables, Chimp Comedies, Gang Comedies, in fact, anything that greatly appeals to children.

"About once a month I give them something; in the summer, popcicles or ice cream bars and candy packages or popcorn, and by working with the dealers of the town I get them for a cost not to exceed three cents apiece. I gave them star photos from Paramount that cost once cent apiece, in fact, just a gift of any kind, as children are very easily pleased."

Miss Buckmiller's opinion on this whole subject is professionally important. She is the president of three theatres, the Clarick, Orpheum and Empire, operating in Baker, Ore. This department welcomes the stories of exhibitors who are finding the selected program a profit or a problem. Send us your side of the question. We believe we can help.

THE EMBLEM OF RCA PERFECT SOUND
PHOTOPHONE
INC SOUND EQUIPMENT

J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE IN ARIZONA.

My dear "J. C.":

Your reference to "service" in last week's letter to Motion Picture Herald readers, prompts me to dwell briefly upon the subject, because it has proven to have been one of the most important factors that has contributed to the continued successful and highly efficient performance of RCA Photophone sound reproducing equipment in upwards of 3,000 theatres in this and foreign countries. We place the greatest emphasis upon the service that is rendered by our installation and service department and pride ourselves upon the constant attention its representatives give to equipment in their respective territories. For instance, read the following from Hollis Drew, manager of the new Strand Theatre at Lowell, Michigan: "Although it has been more than a year since installation of our equipment was made, we continue to enjoy sound reproduction as excellent as during the first period of use. It is obvious that the above condition is due to your efficient service department." And here is another example: In the Philadelphia territory, which is dotted with RCA Photophone installations, emergency calls in six months were at the rate of one call for each theatre in ten months. This means that exhibitors in that territory may expect to operate their equipment for five years with not to exceed six calls for emergency service. Take the situation in the Hawaiian Islands as another example. Of the 41 RCA Photophone installations there, Louis Chappelle, service manager of the Consolidated Amusement Company, writes as follows: "This department feels that the RCA Photophone Standard Size is the finest sound reproducing equipment yet placed on the market." So there you are, "J. C." That's what they all say.

Yours truly,

G. K. RUDULPH.

JENKINS' COLYUM

LOS ANGELES

DEAR HERALD:

Producers are taking some of their pictures out to Pasadena for their previews in order to get the audience reaction, the reason being, presumably, that Pasadena is said to have more millionaires than any other city on the Pacific coast.

If they want to take the public pulse as to the merits of their pictures why don't they preview them in towns of from twenty thousand down where the audiences are representative of 90 per cent of the people who support this business rather than the 10 per cent who support art galleries, grand opera, exclusive golf clubs and yachts?

The people who earn their living by the sweat of their brows are the ones who provide the sinews of war that keep this business on its feet rather than those whose chief occupation is shearing lambs on Wall Street.

The picture business would go without food and shelter were it not for the merchant, the banker, the farmer, the laborer, the man of every-day affairs and the girls behind the counters and in the cafes, and they are the ones who should pass judgment on the entertainment value of pictures.

Somehow this business seems determined to go wrong end to, but since it's none of our durn business we are not going to try to do a thing about it except to call attention to it occasionally.

Ordinarily we have an angelic disposition that is the envy of every Sunday School superintendent and clergyman in the land. We have been complimented on our simple vocabulary. We have said "doggone it" when one more temperamental would have used stronger language. We have applied the "milk of kindness" to some pretty low-down ornery whelps, but right now, were we to use such expressions as would best ease our minds it would subject this magazine to an infraction of the postal regulations.

We refer particularly to a low-down, pusillanimous, lousy, yellow-bellied skunk who stole our tire cover while April Shower was parked on one of the main streets at Santa Monica yesterday in broad daylight while we were down on the pier visiting Professor Condra of the geological department of the state university at Lincoln, Nebraska.

Our tire cover bore this inscription, "J. C. Jenkins, Motion Picture Herald. It Covers the Field Like An April Shower." Now, just why a chicken thief who is half bootlegger and half crocodile would want to steal a tire cover bearing that legend is more than we can understand, unless it was to satisfy an innate desire to steal something.

Right now we are only partially peeved, but you ought to have heard us when we found that that tire cover had been stolen. The pavement down there is all warped and bulged up.

A few days ago we went out to Warner Bros.' studio and had lunch with Chic Sale, and afterward had our picture taken with him, and say, Gertie, what a boy that Chic is. Chic will rate 100 per cent on the stage, on the screen, on the street or in the bathtub. He's our kind of a citizen wherever we meet him, but the trouble is we can't meet him often enough. You know that every once in a while the human race produces something out of the ordinary, and Chic is it. Chic was born at Huron, South Dakota, and that's what makes South Dakota such a great state for brilliant people, and some grasshoppers. Had Chic remained in Huron and gone into the carpenter business as a "specialist" it would have saved that town a lot of expense, but the movies called and Chic obeyed and we should all be thankful for that.

"Soak the Movies" seems to be the slogan down in Washington right now, and if Congress followed the Administration's proposal it is likely that the theatre men will be saddled with another revenue tax. We've got some pretty strong convictions with reference to that kind of a tax. We operated a theatre when we were compelled to collect revenue on admissions and we recall that two revenue men took a whole day to go over our books, only to find in the end that we had overpaid the Government 49 cents.

Our guess is that 60 cents or better out of every dollar collected goes to pay the expenses of collecting it, and our theory is that if the Government will stop the steam shovel from shoveling the dough out of the U. S. treasury for a while, there will be less need for loading the tax-ridden people with this needless expense.

Out here you can get instructions on any subject and any ism on earth. One place they teach you toe dancing. Another place teaches manicuring. Another place you can get instructions in higher spiritualism. An ad in one of the windows advises you of a lecture on the important subject, "The Importance of the Solar Plexus to right living" (whatever that is) and you can get your dog or cat treated for mange and other disorders in several places. The only thing we can see that they lack out here to make this community complete is the Dukhobors, Alexander Dowie and the House of David, but for all we like the town and might be induced to move out here were it not for the rumpus it would kick up back in our home state, and we couldn't think of deserting the state and letting it go to the dogs while Charlie Bryan is governor; it wouldn't be fair, and Hollywood will have to try and be patient.

We wish to express our thanks to Mr. G. K. Rudluph for the many open letters he has addressed to us on this page. It is very nice of him, and after hearing the splendid reproduction of sound by a number of RCA's Sound Equipment we don't wonder that that institution employed just such a man as he is. As we remarked once before, it seems that the best things in this magazine have been bunched up on this page. How's that, Ernie?

That sentiment is not a lacking quality among the folk on Film Row was demonstrated last week at the Columbia office when the five-year-old son of Clarence Phillips required a blood transfusion to help him over a serious illness. Practically every man in the Columbia office went to the hospital to offer his blood for the child. Fortunately the youngster took a turn for the better and the transfusion was not necessary.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Capitol

Week ending February 25

The stage-show, "Cuban Holiday," devised and staged by Chester Hale, under Mr. Louis K. Sidney's personal supervision, featured Arthur Tracy, popularly known to radio fans as "The Street Singer." It is without a doubt one of the most fast-moving and entertaining shows put on here for some time.

The show opened with a novel set, that of two scenes in one. One side of the stage was a beach set with eight Chester Hale girls and four boys in bathing attire and the other half a typically Cuban setting with eight girls and four boys in Spanish dress. During the first number, which was played by the orchestra in the pit, the two sets of dancers did different routines.

The three Gobs, colored hoofers, followed with a routine of tapping that was outstanding, from both a showmanship and dancing angle. The boys have added a number of new steps to their routine and they certainly put their act over.

The next scene, a full stage set commonly known as a "dive" scene, had most of the company in gaily colored costumes as background for the "hootch" and rumba dancing of O'Hanlon and Zambuni. Following this, Jack Reid depicted in song the life of "Minnie the Moocher" with the girl of the aforementioned team playing the part of "Minnie.' A dramatic close for this scene is enacted by Jack Reid, suported by the entire ensemble, when he sings "Glad When You're Dead, You Rascal You," as O'Hanlon and Zambuni do a rough and tumble apache, in which "Minnie" is shot at the finish of the song and dance. This part of the show was the most outstanding and received the most applause.

Arthur Tracy, the Street Singer, with a piano accompanist and a microphone, enters to a load of applause and goes into the singing of popular numbers which have made him so popular with radio listeners. His program consisted of "When I Find You're Gone," "If I Were King," "Call Me Darling," (this one in English and German) "Now That You're Gone," and an encore of "Eli, Eli." The applause after each song was tremendous, and as far as this audience was concerned, Tracy could have stayed on indefinitely. The Picchiani Family of seven men entertained (for a certain length of time with spring-board antics and acrobatics, but this reviewer could see no reason for their being in the show at all. The show closed with Arthur Tracy singing "Cuban Love Song," as the dance team and the Chester Hale girls and boys offered snappy dance routines. Show caught Friday afternoon.

Firm Checks Effectiveness Of Sponsors' Radio Programs

Radio Network Surveys, Inc., conducts a unique service in the checking of commercial radio programs for the sponsors. The organization, employing 300 "broadcast reporters," concentrating on 174 stations of NBC and CBS, check all factors affecting the commercial value of the broadcast.

Data on popularity of programs, receiving conditions, station ranges and other matters is recorded and analyzed. The service operates seven days each week.

WILL OAKLAND

Popular radio star and owner of "Will Oakland's Terrace," he is now president of the Willow Music Publishing Company, New York. Mr. Oakland has been in the theatrical business for the past 25 years, making a name for himself in every phase of it. His nightly radio broadcasts over stations WOR and WMCA, from his "Terrace" have resulted in a nation wide popularity. So many requests for the singing of his own compositions have come in from his fans that Will decided on going into the music publishing business, himself, instead of placing them elsewhere. He has engaged the best help available and the five good songs he has to start with will get him off to a good start.

Station WINS Increases Time On Air in Succeeding Months

During February, Station WINS, owned and operated by the American Radio News Corporation, New York, will sign off at 7:45 P. M. instead of at 7:30 as in January, by authority of the Federal Radio Commission. Time is increased during each succeeding month.

WINS is operated with a new type of broadcasting equipment, according to W. H. G. Finch, chief engineer of the company. The system consists of two units, so compact that they occupy only slightly more than 12 feet of floor space. One unit is the transmitter, capable of broadcasting with a power of 100 watts; the other an amplifier, capable of bringing the station to its licensed power, 500 watts.

Publix Signs Dancer

Hinda Wausau, dancer, will be featured for a period of 34 weeks over the Publix circuit. Her first appearance is set for the Minnesota in Minneapolis, February 26.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Fox

Week ending February 16

With Frank Jenks as master of ceremonies, Fanchon and Marco present their "Five Races Idea" at the Fox, and right good entertainment it proves, although one does miss the Sunkist Beauties and the usual elaborate tableaux.

Jenks is no newcomer to San Francisco, having been seen here before as band director and master of ceremonies, and gets a good hand as soon as he comes on the stage. He is a show in himself, but has a lot of assistance and a well rounded bill is offered.

The five races turn out to be divisions of the human family, with white, Indian, Negro, Japanese and Hawaiian represented. They present their turns in a novel stage set featured by a huge globe above the orchestra, from which the performers appear.

The red race is represented by Chief Clearsky, the "Indian Al Jolson," who sings and dances well. He tells the story of being accused in a theatre lobby of being an impostor and merely painted for the part. He laughs when he confides that the girl had paint on "a half an inch thick."

The Hawaiian race is represented by the Adams Sisters, but the color of their skin suggests that they might have come from Sweden. Still, they do well with their guitars and grass skirts.

Glenn and Jenkins, old vaudeville favorites, do their sweeping act and cavort around with brushes and brooms like a couple of floor flushers. Their act has a lot of new gags and gets over in a big way.

The Kanazawa troupe of Oriental tumblers provides a lot of thrills and captures headline honors. Their work as foot jugglers is especially fine and is all the more amazing in that a young man takes the place of the usual barrel or box and is thrown around as such.

Jenks is well known as a player of the trombone and demonstrates that he still has his old-time skill, mixing in a little music with his fun. He comes on frequently throughout the show and as the curtain goes down is seen spinning around on the upturned feet of one of the nimble Japanese performers.

San Antonio Majestic

Week ending February 17

Kluting's Animal Stars, consisting of 15 or so of rabbits, dogs, pigeons and cats, reach a climax when the cats leap to and from a prop ascension balloon.

The Forum Boys' Chinese number and their medley of popular airs are well received. The speed and personality of the quartet proved a big asset.

Beth and Betty Dodge do a classy song, dance and whistling act, assisted by Kent and Allen, hoofers. The girls open with an old-fashioned song-dance number, following with their French and German numbers. The boys offer taps. The bird-whistling-dance finale is colorful Sammy Cohen is preceded by a short trailer on his motion picture performances. His hokum impersonation of Al Jolson, burlesqued boxing match and a comedy snake dance prove winners. An attractive girl, introduced as the missus, comes on for two songs and to assist in the gags.

The feature picture was "Ladies of the Jury."

HELLO EVERYBODY!

From the West Coast comes news to the effect that there is a lot of keen hunting for talent going on out thataway. . . . Lester Hammel is out there looking over talent situation. . . . Max Hart is expected to leave New Yawk in a few days to book acts for circuits there. . . . Art Holt, New York advertising representative of The Chicagoan, is now in the home office of this publication. . . . Bettye Lee Taylor, popular radio and theatre organist of Schenectady, still is convalescing from a recent auto accident which occurred when her car skidded into a crossing girder in the city of Albany. . . . Bettye broadcasts from station WGY and is featured at the RKO Plaza in that city. . . . Guss Farney, the Flying Organist of the Paramount Capitol, Salt Lake City, informs me that the union of that city provided free orchestras of from 15 to 25 pieces for all the theatres in the city for 2 days, 3 shows a day, in an effort to inspire the return of musicians to the theatres out there. . . . The way the audience reacted to this is distinctly favorable. . . . (I sure hope some other union officials note this carefully and follow suit). . . .

That new music publishing outfit, the Willow Music Publishing Company, of which Will Oakland is president, Harry Pearl, general and sales manager, Billy Berke and Phil Sandler, band and orchestras, and Georgette Morrison, secretary, sure has a grand set of tunes to start with. . . . Here they are. . . . "The World Won't be the Same," "Another Song of Love," "Let's Grow Old Together," "Down in My Heart," and "Laughing the Blues Away." . . . Frank Skinner is making all the dance arrangements for these tunes. . . .

Al Gullickson, Warner's ace organist at the Milwaukee Warner, also is being featured every night from 12:30 to 1:00, and from 10:00 to 10:15 a.m. the first four days of the week on radio station WTMJ. . . . Art Brown, "Brownie" organist at the Charlottesville, Va., Paramount took Dan Daniels' recent article in Better Theatres as a challenge and is doing Bach-Gounod's "Ave Maria" in one of his organ solos. . . . I'd like to know how many other fellows took it the same way. . . .

That new Charlotte Kent and Louis Alter composition, "What A Life (Trying to Live Without You)" published by Harms is sure a peach. . . . Debonair Bill Rockwell is touching the heights again and you can rest assured that if hard plugging means a thing, this tune will be "amongst 'em," pronto. . . . George Marlo and Sam Wigler of the Marlo Music Corp. are following up their hit tune, "Home," with a song called "When the Stars Come Peeping Through," which Jack Miller recently completed. . . . Hey, . . . You Organists. . . . Be sure to read the Feist and DeSylva Brown & Henderson advertisements on this page. . . . They both have great tunes for you to feature in community sings. . . . Duke Ellington and Cab Calloway have a new home. Their sponsor, Irving Mills, has removed the offices of Mills Dance Orchestra, Inc., from the old quarters at 150 W. Forty-sixth street to the suite formerly occupied by the Brunswick company on the sixth floor at 799 Seventh avenue. Expansion of the organization, increased activity in the field of stage production, music and broadcasting, accompanied by several additions in personnel, made the change to larger quarters imperative. . . .

STAGE SHOWS

Spokane Spokane

Week ending February 10

Greater Stage Season was opened at the Fox with Fanchon and Marco's "Cherry Blossom" Idea, and Tommy Sandvall, the new master of ceremonies fresh from winning laurels on the Coast; also the rejuvenated Fox Melody Boys. Tommy regaled his friends in the interludes with solos on the clarinet and oboe and several vocal selections.

With the show were Jue Fong, Chinese baritone, who gave several solos, including one grand opera number. He also proved a most capable m. c. and introduced his friends, the Eno Japanese troop of balancers, indicating the trouble in China has not hit the show business.

Frank Gaby proved a most clever ventriloquist with a really new line of chatter.

The 14 attractive chorus girls formed a cherry tree rich in blossom. Their closing number with parasols also scored.

Denver Orpheum

Week ending February 17

For the premiere week of the RKO Orpheum a new unit was organized and sent out from New York to fill in the extra week caused by the opening of the vaudeville house. Nick Lucas headlined and pleased with his crooning, as evidenced by the fact that the crowd made him sing two encores and give a curtain speech. He should sing more new numbers and not repeat some he already sang when at the Denver here about a year ago. Jackie Beekman acted as master of ceremonies for Earl Lindsay's revue of 1932. The girls danced and sang to please all. Sidney Marion and Marie Du Val strung out their chatter and song stunt. The Four Ortons closed and pleased with their tight rope and comedy act. The trained goose with its tail light was a panic. Denver is glad to have RKO vaudeville back after an absence of nearly two years and will patronize it if it is kept to a high standard.

"Previews" Radio Programs

Station WINS, New York, has instituted the idea of "previewing" radio programs, trying them out on audiences without previous announcement. Unusual reactions are said to have resulted.

Joe E. Brown has been booked for a return series of personal appearances in Warner houses in Jersey City, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, during March.

ORGAN SOLOS

HENRI MONNET (Los Angeles Paramount). It seems that some misguided managers have the idea that an organ is no longer a novelty, so think the only way to put it over is either for the organist to sing or to work with a singer. What with crooners, etcetra, on the ether at every turn of the dial, these managers defeat their own purpose. Henri Monnet is forced to submerge his own excellent playing every week and accompany a crooning megophone singer.

If theatres must use singers, why can't they use ones who do not use megaphones? The singer, Max Lerner, was not bad, but a dreadful effect is lent when the audience sees nothing but a moving set of teeth through a big horn. The number offered was "Dianne," and Monnet's accompaniment was splendid, but the number just didn't mean a thing, and the applause was in accordance. Here, another marvelous organ and a very fine musician's efforts are going to waste.

WILL GILROY (Brooklyn Pitkin) presented "A selection of Broadway Hits," as the title of his most recent solo. Interspersed in the solo were many laughable gags on slides but the main thing, at this house, apparently is the singing of songs, and the audience did very well. The numbers used were "Can't Stop Me from Loving You," "Was That the Human Thing to Do," "Call Me Darling," a whistling chorus on "Time to Fall in Love," four choruses of tongue-twisters to the tune "Anchors Aweigh," and a final chorus of "Guilty." Gilroy plays the organ so the audience can sing and they surely take advantage of it. Generous applause is given him.

TED CRAWFORD (Oxnard Hughes Franklin) offered a beautiful medley of old favorites in his solo entitled "Immortal Waltzes," Three O'Clock in the Morning," "After the Ball," "Naughty Waltz," "Merry Widow," and a finale of the new waltz, "When the Rest of the Crowd Goes Home." Ted told the audience of this new number in well selected words. The solo was very well done and earned this popular organist tremendous applause, and an encore of the last named number.

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) started his solo with announcement on the curtain of his specialty, "Singing in High." He had all join in singing "Bend Down Sister." A colored cartoon slide was used to introduce each number; then came "Old Playmate," "The Curse of an Aching Heart" and "Down by the Sycamore Tree."

GUSS FARNEY and Jewel (Salt Lake City Capitol) at the twin consoles, entertained with cleverly conceived and attractively presented organ and piano duets. They offered Farney's own arrangements of "Blue of the Night," played on both organs, "Spring Fever," done on two grand pianos, and "Canadian Capers," played by Farney at piano and Jewel at organ. This audience does not go for song fests but it does like novelties and classics. Farney, who is a capable and versatile musician, is gaining a great popularity for his efforts.

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) is an organist with a number of tricks up his sleeve. He offers "Schoolology," the first selection in connection with which is "River Stay 'Way From My Door." Rollcall is presented to the tune of "Collegiate," and the patrons get a big kick as it sees flashed upon the screens names with which they are familiar. "Faded Summer Love," and substituting the word "asthma" for "love" in "I Call It Love," follow with gusto. A word lesson in which all words flashed upon the screen begin with "s" draws heavy laughs. It is followed by "Call Me Darling," portions of which are shown on the screen in German, and "When the Blue of the Night Meets the Gold of the Day."

JOHN HAMMOND (Brooklyn Strand) offered another of his topical musical novelties which he calls "Singing the News Away." Hammond tells the audience, orally, of current events and then chooses appropriate tunes that fit in with the news. This week he played and the audience sang "Sleepy Down South," "Why Did it Have to be Me," "Where the Lilies of the Valley Grow," "Baby Smiles at Me," "Crosby, Columbo and Vallee," and a final chorus of "River Stay 'Way." The song "Lillies," was first played in a rhythmic style and then Hammond led them in singing the second chorus. This organist is building up a big following through not only his novelties but his fine organ playing.

BOB STAMBAUGH (Milwaukee Modjeska) presented one of the most interesting and novel organ solos since he has been at this house. It was entitled "Home," and featured songs with the name "home" or the thought of "home" in them. The solo opened with the song "Building a Home." As the audience sang, a prop house behind a scrim curtain slowly formed itself into a complete building. The songs were "Home," "Old Kentucky Home," "Old Fashioned Home in New Hampshire" and "River Stay 'Way from My Door."

From one of the windows in the prop house, a charming voiced girl sang "Old Fashioned Home," and the closing number was built up with river effects on the screen as a stout colored "Mammy" and two colored lads assisted in the singing. This solo drew great applause.

FLOYD WRIGHT (Berkeley Fox California) offered a distinct novelty in conjunction with the playing of selections from "Rose Marie." The performance had real artistic qualities.

OVERTURES

PHIL SPITALNY (New York Capitol) and Grand Orchestra. The guest conductor's offering, arranged and compiled by himself, proved his capability and his knowledge of what makes an entertaining overture. The first half of it was devoted to a compilation of Hungarian melodies, introduced as "Hungariana." Outstanding in this bit was a violin solo, with vibraphone and harp accompaniment. Lighting effects to fit the mood of the music fitted in perfectly and enhanced the program. The last half featured the George M. Cohan composition, "Father of the Land We Love," as a tribute to George Washington. As the orchestra played this soul-stirring melody, still pictures depicting the life of Washington were flashed on the screen. Following this, word slides with a vocal accompaniment took the place of the pictures, with the orchestra bringing it to a close with a thunderous crescendo. Very good applause was given this popular radio director and the orchestra.

MIRON ROMAN (Cleveland State) and his Orchestra are a sensation here. This week they offer their overture from the stage, and feature selections from "Girl Crazy," next week's attraction. Novel arrangements of "Embraceable You," "I Got Rhythm," and "Sam and Dililah," were played by the orchestra, under Roman's capable leadership, and as a surprise finish they played a number on what apparently were Royal typewriters. Instead of typing out letters, these typewriters sounded bells, and the audience were so mystified that they kept on applauding until Roman and the boys took another bow.

JOE CANDULLO (Baltimore Keith's) directed his thirty Jass Friends through a fast moving overture with numerous novelty effects. Joe sang "The Cuban Love Song," as the orchestra played and then did a violin solo of "Dancing In the Dark," with a guitar and then joined by three violins. Finished to good applause then Edgar W. Hunt took the baton for the vaudeville while Candullo acted as master of ceremonies.

FRED SCHMITT (Denver at Denver) and his orchestra played an overture of "Musical Gems from India" that proved exceedingly popular. You could close your eyes and imagine yourself in India. The presentation closed with the lively strains of "Galloping Dervishes" and included parts of "March of the Hindus," "Hymn to the Sun," "India Slave Market," "March of the Slaves" and "Song of India."

DOUBLE BILLS CODE IS ADOPTED BY EXHIBITORS AT KANSAS CITY

Use of Twin Showings Restricted to One Day a Week, with One Additional for 10c Admission Houses; Chicago Move Fails

The motion picture industry succeeded this week in laying a foundation for a solution to double featuring in towns where it is considered to be an "evil." Exhibitors at Kansas City agreed to a "Code of Ethics" regulating the practice.

In Chicago, however, efforts to stave off triple featuring as a citywide threat, together with a move to prevent a growing tendency toward admission reductions, have failed thus far, despite several meetings and overtures to draw up regulatory measures and suggestions. With circuit houses and distributors taking the initiative, accomplishments to date have been nil, and current opinion is that the matter may as well be abandoned.

Dime Admissions Increase

A half dozen houses are triple-featuring while ten cent admissions are being adopted in increasing number by neighborhood houses playing twin bills. Morale is being hurt further by elaborate gift nights at many houses. A draft of proposed methods for correcting the situation is in the hands of Balaban and Katz, Warner Brothers, and circuit houses and bookers, but the feeling prevails that the industry cannot look to this proposal to bring a solution.

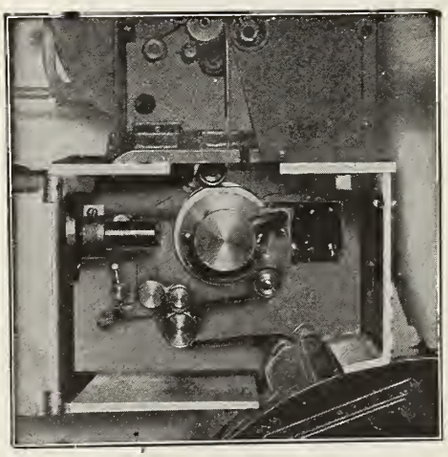
On November 14 and on November 21, 1931, Motion Picture Herald presented the result of a nationwide checkup of the extent of double featuring. The adverse effects reported in the summary were: Decreased patronage; decreased grosses; increased theatre overhead due to increased film rentals in total and increased advertising required; decreased distributors' revenue by lowered individual film rentals and reduced short subject sales; eliminated live entertainment (stage and organ) from the theatre.

Favoring dual bills, a limited number of theatres set forth these advantages: Sustained patronage; increased patronage; avoidance of admission reductions; decreased theatre overhead by eliminating stage shows, stage hands, electricians, etc., organists, short subjects.

Limited to One Day a Week

Approximately 40 suburban theatres in Kansas City agreed to a voluntary regulation of the double bill practice. Beginning February 22, the exhibitors agree to double bill only one day a week, allowing houses charging 10 cents admission the privilege of an additional dual feature program each week. The agreement excludes double bills on Sunday. Exhibitors also agree to less protection on pictures run on two-for-one nights or when similar inducement are given.

While much of the country is agitated over the double bill situation and many exchange centers are seeking means of curbing what is conceded an "evil" and a growing menace, the Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City took the "bull by the horns" and in conferences with the Fox Midwest circuit arrived at a "Code of Ethics" which is intended to regulate the practice indiscriminately.



Averted Price War

A double bill and price slashing war was considered imminent with independents dual-featuring at least twice weekly and several independents reducing admission prices, in some instances as much as 30 per cent. To meet this competition in suburban spots, the Fox circuit was ready to declare "war" and had already begun a double feature policy in two or three instances and had likewise reduced admissions.

At this point, Charles Burkey, until recently president of the Independent Theatre Owners, called conferences of the independents and the "Code of Ethics" is the result. The parleys were attended by Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox division manager, who has subscribed to the agreement.

All members of the Independent Theatre Owners have promised to abide by the code, but not all independent houses in Kansas City are affiliated with the organization. It is believed, however, they will abide by the regulations, though carry no penalties for infraction.

All Independents Are Expected to Abide by "Gentlemen's Agreement"; Previews Not Affected by Exhibitors' Plan

Text of the Code

The "Code of Ethics" is to remain in effect, "until modified by a regular meeting of the Kansas City Independent Theatre Owners" and follows in full:

It is agreed that the term "double bill" is to apply when two feature length productions of five reels or over are run consecutively on the same program. It is agreed that when a "double bill" is booked, one feature picture will be played in the regular date of availability. The added feature must have reached the 10-cent availability date; with the exception that when a "double bill" program runs first run, then both pictures can be run on the regular date of availability.

A feature production exhibited following a regular show, not starting earlier than 10:30 p. m., shall not be constituted as a "double bill."

It is agreed that only one "double bill" will be exhibited in one week, and same is not to be exhibited on Sunday. Theatres charging a regular admission price of 10 cents will be allowed two "double bills" per week, as long as the change is two weeks behind the 10-cent spot, and provided that the exhibitor advertises but one "double bill" change per week in the Kansas City newspapers.

All pictures running on "merchants nights," "two for one nights," "pal nights" or when other inducements of this nature are given, should run on the next available spot below the regular admissions. Gift nights will not be included in this classification.

Previews Permitted

Under provisions of this agreement, houses will be allowed to run a preview at 10:30 o'clock without interfering with the double bill privilege. This was stipulated as for the past several weeks, several theatres, including Fox suburbans, have been giving "encore shows" sometimes called "old favorites" or "request" shows in which last year's product is run in addition to the regular feature. This innovation was originated by an independent exhibitor and is being taken up throughout the territory. Some exhibitors say this is an effective means of getting around the double bill situation.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 117.—(A) Why must the crater of the high intensity arc be much deeper than that of the ordinary arc? (B) Why is it possible to heat the high intensity gas to a far higher temperature than it is possible to heat carbon? (C) Of what is high intensity gas composed? (D) Why does the flame of a horizontal arc lean toward the negative carbon at low amperage, but swing farther and farther back toward the positive as amperage is increased?

Bluebook School Question No. 113 was: "(A) What extremely important factor enters into all electrical action problems, particularly as concerns the production of light by electrical action? (B) Does the floor of the crater of an electric arc present a surface of even luminosity? (C) At the spot, the image of the crater floor, or other light source is inverted. Why is this so?"

I find a goodly number of correct answers to this bunch of questions—also a surprising number who fell down flat in Section B. Those answering all three acceptably were: S. Evans and C. Rau*, Lester Borst* (also three excellent answers with no name attached—always place your name on the sheets containing the answer), Lewis Goldman, G. E. Doe*, Roy J. Arntson*, James J. Hobdell*, Bill Doe*, S. Evans*, James McGuire*, Pat O'Brien*, S. R. Anderson*, Tom Turk*, T. Van Vaulkenburg, James Davoy*, George Thompson*, John Williams*, Richard L. Lomax*, S. T. Jones*, Andrew McPherson*, Andy Bailey*, T. Wylie*, D. Hoatling*, Cyrus Wentworth*, John Flynn, Thomas Rodney, D. R. Robbins, John Tanney, James Dringe and Phillip Ball, H. G. Tonlin, J. T. Loat, D. L. Raildon, W. D. Samuels, Frank Sander, Dan Graby and Lon Shotts, Larry James, George Daniels, Frank Olliver, D. Lantry, James Young, William Sudbury and Tom Blanchard, Lewis A. Goldman, Frank Peters, D. L. Little, Dave Love, S. T. Jones and Frank Tubel, Henry Davis, T. L. Davidson, Tom Wignath, Tom Murphy, Bert Johnson, W. D. Singleton, O. Granby, Frank D. True, Andrew McPherson, William Edwards, K. L. Knight, William Bogert, P. H. Bondom, Harry Lidding, Sam and Andrew Wells, R. L. Little, A. Rnagor, F. G. Garrison, Mike McGuire, T. L. May, Dan Roxbury, Thomas McGruder, Abe Lichtman, John G. Farmann, John Cermak, Kent Garman, Sackman and Tracy, Henry Sicmann, William Broadbent and Chick Peters.

There are many excellent answers, but, after all, it seems to me that of James J. Hobdell is the most excellent and complete. He says:

"A.—Resistance is an extremely important factor entering into all electrical action problems, especially in so far as concerns production of light.

"In the incandescent lamp, light is produced by a continuous conductor (filament) of small diameter and high resistance. It is heated to high temperature by the current forced through it against resistance by voltage. The voltage consumed in forcing the current against the high resistance of the filament appears in the form of heat of such incandescence that it may be and is utilized for illumination purposes.

"In the case of the electric arc, the conductor is not continuous. There is a short gap between the electrodes (conductors), and because of the resistance involved, the floor of the positive carbon is heated to a high degree of incandescence, hence becomes available for light.

"B.—The floor of the crater of an electric arc does not present a surface of even luminosity. When a cored positive carbon is used, the core is of a softer mixture than the outer shell and is vaporized with salts that vaporize at very high temperatures, thus presenting a surface of greater luminosity than is presented by the area of the crater immediatey surrounding it.

"Impurities in the carbon also interfere with the actual even luminosity of crater floors, for the reason that they vaporize at higher or lower temperatures than normal and thus tend to alter the luminosity values of such points until the impurity has been burned out.

"In the alternating current arc, unevenness of the crater floor is more pronounced than is the case in the d. c. arc, for the reason that there is a greater tendency for the arc to wander over the surface of the crater. In any carbon arc it cannot be expected that the entire crater floor will have exactly the same resistance at all times at every point of its surface. It then follows that the current flow and the temperature will not be exactly the same throughout the area of the crater floor, hence the luminosity of the area will vary. [Note: I'm not quite certain, and there is not sufficient time to ascertain the exact facts, but I think in his remarks about cores, Brother Hobdell had in mind the H. I. arc, though what he says is to some degree true of the straight arc as well.—F. H. R.]

"(C) The image of the crater (very much out-of-focus image, by the way) is inverted at the spot (cooling plate plane), due to the fact that the outer rays of light projected by the converging lens of the condenser, or the mirror, for that matter, cross at a point between the condenser or mirror and the cooling plate. Past this crossing point the image is, of course, inverted."

The reason I like this answer is because it is quite complete. So many men answer correctly enough, but ink seems to be scarce in their locality, or they haven't many words to spare.

Lester Borst, however, expanded his remarks in replying to Section B, as follows:

"Practically speaking, the floor of an arc crater is known to be of even luminosity, provided, of course, the arc be operating at normal current values. As is known, no two parts of any carbon have exactly the same resistance ([Pretty broad statement—but maybe.—F. H. R.], hence theoretically the crater floor varies in luminosity. This is particularly true of the silicate low resistance core used in nearly all carbons. This means that the points of highest brilliancy on a crater floor will vary constantly as the carbon burns away. Considering the intense brilliancy of the crater floor, viewed as a whole, however, these variations in luminosity are, it seems to me, almost completely overshadowed and obliterated, though this would, I believe, only hold true when carbons of high quality are used."

I believe what Friend Borst says is very largely correct. Theoretically and actually there undoubtedly are variations in every crater floor (I am not considering the core, but the shell floor only), but notwithstanding that fact, it seems to me these minor variations must be pretty thoroughly obliterated by the surrounding incandescent surface, so that for all practical purposes the crater floor of the shell of the carbon is of even luminosity.

I would highly appreciate it if the National Carbon Company engineering department would comment on this—also, advise us as to the actual difference as between the core and shell luminosity of the ordinary straight d. c. arc.

Projection Light Source Discussed At Special Meeting

[The following is a report by F. H. Richardson of a special meeting of the New York Branch of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.]

The New York Branch of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was invited to attend the regular February meeting of the Society of Illuminating Engineers, at the plant of the Sperry Gyroscope Company. The attendance of the SMPE branch was not very large, and the absentees missed something they may never again have the opportunity to view.

The first paper or talk was by our old friend Bassett, long connected with the development of motion picture projection light sources, but now with the Sperry Gyroscope Company, engaged in both research and development work. The talk was on arc light sources and was accompanied by rather amazing motion pictures of arc lights, both straight arc and high intensity.

By motion pictures I mean that side views of the actual arcs were projected successively upon a screen. The arc itself was far back in another room, the light beam coming forward through an opening in the wall. The colors developed on the screen were nothing less than beautiful. The opportunity actually to examine arcs in operation at a magnification of around 50, was a very real treat. The various gas streams were visible, and their paths could be followed. Even the electronic stream was visible at high amperages.

We were given what seemed to be visible proof that the action or current flow is from negative to positive. We watched the action of the gas streams, of the crater floor and of the flame as the current flow was gradually increased from low to as high as about 150 amperes, though this action was not altogether a true action, for the reason that it was impractical to stop and change carbons, hence one carbon diameter was made to serve for all amperages.

The talk of Bassett was most enlightening and interesting, particularly with regard to the high intensity arc. It was the first time the projectionist has ever been afforded the opportunity to have a really visual examination of arc action, or to hear a really lucid, understandable explanation of high intensity arc action.

In addition to all this, we were privileged to see the demonstration of huge searchlights, etc., and were given much valuable information. For example, we were told that, whereas the ordinary old-fashioned crater floor could give only from 150 to 160 candlepower per square millimeter, the high intensity light source can develop from 500 to 1,000 candlepower per square millimeter, while the sun at noon on a clear day, gives only about 900 candlepower per square millimeter.

Palmer Stilson Resigns as Traffic Manager of Paramount

Palmer Hall Stilson, for the past 15 years general traffic manager of Paramount Publix, has resigned. He was in charge of exports and imports worldwide, supervised domestic, mail, express, freight shipments and carloads to theatres, and devised, formed and installed systems which have been used by Paramount throughout the world.

For several years he was chairman of transportation for the old National Association, during which time he standardized the type of film shipping cases presently in vogue and systematized label requirements, acceptance of scrap films for freight shipment without mutilation and numberless other improvements.

His committee was successful in having international postal authorities accept film for mailing to foreign countries.

Sanabria To Extend Public Poll on Use of Television

The Sanabria Television Corporation has decided to continue the test vote inaugurated at the recent Chicago radio show, along national lines, as a result of the previous reaction, when 20,000 people indicated their willingness to pay for television programs on a basis similar to payment for gas or electricity.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Troubles of an Exhibitor

I HAVE BEEN MANAGING A THEATRE for the last seven years and in that time have encountered many perplexing problems and always managed to combat them successfully.

I have been up against a tough proposition for the last year and do not seem to get anywhere near a solution.

My theatre is in the town of Sturgis, S. D. and the Fort Mead Army Post theatre is located about a mile from town. They erected this theatre about a year ago and show talking pictures to civilian trade at an admission of 20 and 25 cents. They make four to five changes a week, mostly first run pictures. I have tried everything that I know of to stop this unfair and unjust treatment by the Government of this United States but get blocked at every turn.

I would very much like to hear from other exhibitors that have theatres adjacent to an army post or any one else that can enlighten me. This is a rotten practice and I would like to have a stop put to it.

From what I hear they have made a check of the civilians that attend the shows at the Army Post theatre and claim that there is only an average of six civilians to a show. If that was a fact, I would not be writing this letter. I personally attended a show one Sunday eve and checked 117 civilians and it was not a big production. The ticket seller had two rolls of tickets, one 20 cents, the other 25 cents. I was charged 25 cents. I also questioned other civilians and some paid 25 cents, others 20 cents. This happened at the time that they were being checked.

It looked like there was something rotten in Denmark. From what I understand, the Government pays the film company about one-half the film rental that I pay, with the understanding that they are not to show to civilians but they still carry on. I have taken this matter up with two film companies but do not get any relief. The Commercial Club were unanimous in their efforts to stop this practice, but they did not get to first base. I also had a talk with the colonel at the Army Post. This is his story. The taxpayers paid for the building of the theatre, therefore are entitled to come to the shows. I said if that is the case, the taxpayers also pay for the canteen supplies and why not let them come here and buy their groceries and other supplies and put the merchants out of business. You can purchase tickets at half price. Well, summing it all up, I make no headway. I want to see if I cannot receive a solution to this problem through your columns.

Also wish to state that I have had several years experience in the show business at Fall River, Mass. I am a citizen of the United States. My investment here represents my All. Is it to be jeopardized by the Government?

I have been an ardent reader of the HERALD for many years, and find the HERALD very helpful in many ways.

This is the toughest proposition that I have ever encountered. Hoping to get some response to this letter.—A. J. ARCHER, Majestic theatre, Sturgis, S. D.

Service Charges

HAVING JUST READ IN YOUR JOURnal about service charges and the statement made by Erpi. Being one who has bought and suffered, I feel privileged to express my sentiments in the matter of their broad statement.

The $750,000 service charge reduction, claimed to have been given last year, was even more beneficial to Erpi than for the exhibitors who received the reduction, in the way of free publicity from the trade journals and the aid in sales.

The service charge has been the greatest drawback in the sales of this equipment, and the reduction made last year only served to guide many in their purchases. It is seen that Erpi placed the reduction where it benefited themselves the most and the purchasers the least, while the exhibitor who had paid the first year's service charge of $25 and $20 received none of the benefits, and the balance of the nine-year payments of $15 weekly goes on without any change, but the exhibitor is serviced only twice monthly and pays regularly each week.

Erpi should have made the reduction on the nine-year service payments instead of the first; then it would have placed the help where it was the most needed and none would have been favored, individually.

If the service charge is not for the purpose of gain and only for the upkeep of the equipment, why was servicing reduced to every other week instead of every week as it was started with, and if it is not necessary to service the equipment so often, why would it not be as reasonable to only service the equipment once each month with men available at the headquarters in case of troubles that cannot be remedied by the operator? Then there would be no plausible reason as to why the lower servicing charge could not be cut half in two.

However, if the servicing charge is for a financial gain and not more purposely for the upkeep of the equipment, then we can better understand the reason for the statement: "Who are they that think they are in position to determine whether or not a company should go out of business." It would probably be more preferable to determine just how long the exhibitor can stay in business.—W. J. WILKE, Proprietor, Liberty Theatre, Graham, Texas.

10-Year White Elephant Put in Black by Loew

Wilmington, Del.—After being a 'white elephant' since its erection ten years ago, the former Parkway has been turned into a paying proposition by Loew's, Inc. The 1,200-seat residential house has undergone many changes of management and policy, including a try at indoor golf, but never was able to draw. Loew bought the house a few months ago. put M-G-M pictures into it, with George A. Jones as manager, and it is now doing practically capacity business. Even matinees have been built up to the point where they beat downtown houses. Prices are the same as the main houses. Exploitation stunts have been an important factor in the success of the theater.

EVOLVING ETHICS

IN the refusal of Paramount to make available old prints of its silent production "Fireman, Save My Child" in response to demand inspired by First National's new picture of this title with Joe E. Brown, one may observe a token of a recognition of a community of interest which has been developing down the years. Rivalry and competition are as keen as ever, but methods and ethics have evolved. This incident of today contrasts interestingly with the period when a Theda Bara "Carmen" was rushed into production for simultaneous release in competition with the Lasky version, and the day when there were not less than three shameless imitators of Charles Chaplin on the market.

THE "ECONOMY" WAVE

WHAT James W. Young, professor of advertising at the University of Chicago calls "social pressure" is undoubtedly today something of a factor in box office picture merchandising. The tendency of social pressure these days in most communities is toward not only economies but appearances of economy. It is somewhat a fashion now. Some merchandisers fear that it is now so smart to be thrifty that a good many persons are seeking to be super-smart by being stingy. Commuter conversation boasts of making the old car do another season and a lot of last spring's hats are being reblocked.

This social pressure may have not a little to do with the apparent wave of success which has attended admission price cutting in some regions. It has become a habit in the last few months to look for reductions everywhere, automatically and regardless of value levels.

In this connection there is something of an opportunity for the motion picture to reassert to its public the large measure of value in entertainment which the mechanical processes of the medium not only permit and encourage but also demand. It was to be sure this inherent capacity and quality which made the motion picture the dominant instrument of the amusement industry. The miracle of the motion picture is the print making machine, not the camera.

It is not amiss either to emphasize again that a decidedly larger proportion of the box office dollar stays in the hometown than is popularly supposed. A fortnight ago Arthur Reuter, manager of the Regent at Norwalk in Connecticut, addressing a local organization, remarked that 64 per cent of the box office dollar at that theatre was spent in Norwalk. Measured against the margins on which many lines of merchandise are sold it becomes evident that the box office dollar is more of a hometown dollar than in most expenditures in stores and shops.

Largely because the motion picture film comes from remote exotic Hollywood, by way of boasting Broadway, with emphatic publicity along the way, the public is given to thinking of it as foreign enterprise. Few indeed among box office patrons would guess that on the average rather less than 30 per cent of the admission dollar goes for film.

The local butcher and grocer have to send a higher proportion of their gross receipts away to the big city jobbers, the wholesalers, and to packingtown and the prairies of the West than the motion picture theatre sends to New York and Hollywood.

When the "buy at home" speeches are made at the Commercial, the Rotary and the Kiwanis clubs the motion picture exhibitor is entitled to stand up and sing the chorus.

COLOR IN THE PAPERS

THE newspaper industry appears on the brink of a new color printing invasion, what with the Chicago Tribune offering advertisers three colors in run-of-the-paper news pages, and the Des Moines Register and Tribune purveying black-and-one-color daily and Sunday in the news section. This is almost certain to set a pace in the battle for attention with which the motion picture advertiser will have to catch step.

The color development in the speedy news pages is the inevitable sequel, produced by competition and improvement in presses, to the colored Sunday supplements born more than thirty years ago and the rotogravure sections which were begun in 1914. The time element in the closing of programs and the preparation of theatre copy has prevented any considerable use of color and rotogravure media up to this time.

Color in news sections is now, however, up to motion picture speed. It will surely increase expenditure but may prove worth it. It is interesting to observe that in the re-evaluations and revisions of theatre operating schedules of this year of 1932, newspaper advertising schedules have been in the main cut less proportionately than other items related to operation. In one sizeable city of the South the exhibitors recently refused to accept a reduction in the amusement space rate from the newspapers when it was offered along with a decision to also reduce the space given to editorial attention to the pictures. There is a decided common interest between the newspaper and the motion picture.

INDEPENDENT MANPOWER

THE announcement of Mr. Joseph I. Schnitzer's decision to engage in independent production is of promise for this most promising element of the industry. The basic significance of the "unit production" idea still exists even if the phrase has disappeared from the press and the conversations of Broadway. Mr. Schnitzer, with his long intimate experience with large organizations, is representative of the material of which a strong independent production element can be built for the industry.

COPYRIGHT BUREAU AND MUSIC TAX UNDER FIRE AT HEARINGS OVER BILL

Myers Heads Allied Delegation; Committee Chair'n Declares An Identical Charge to Small and Large Theatres Is Unfair

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Headed by Abram F. Myers, general counsel, representatives of Allied States appeared on Wednesday before the House Patents Committee to protest against the workings of the Copyright Protection Bureau and alleged triple charges for music.

Outlining the situation which now prevails in the industry, Myers told the committee that exhibitors contend holdovers to be violations of contract and not infringements of copyright, and should be dealt with accordingly. The great majority of holdover cases, he said, are short subjects held over under verbal agreement with exchange salesmen or managers. In the new bill a distinct difference should be drawn between such cases and deliberate holdover or bicycling, he declared.

Myers was assured by Representative William I. Sirovich, chairman of the committee, that the new bill will contain a provision "making it impossible for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, to collect a seat tax from the theatre owners for the reproduction of music where they have paid a regular seating tax for general license."

Detailed Cases Presented

Following Myers, a parade of Allied executives detailed cases brought by the Copyright Protection Bureau charging holdover infringement, declaring that shorts renting for a few dollars a day usually were involved. The Bureau, it was declared, asks damages amounting to thousands of dollars, usually settling for a much smaller sum on the ground that it is cheaper for the exhibitors to settle than to fight the suit. Holdover infringement, it was alleged by Sidney E. Samuelson of New Jersey, is "deliberately incited" by film salesmen. He presented evidence of a number of cases to show the method of operation of the Film Boards and the Copyright Bureau.

Representatives appearing before the committee asked that the new bill make specific provision for cases of innocent infringement or that holdover be construed a violation of contract.

Testimony on individual cases were read into the record also by Fred J. Herrington of the Western Pennsylvania unit, George P. Aarons of Eastern Pennsylvania, and others.

Calls Charge Unfair

Crossing swords with Gene Buck, president of the society, Mr. Sirovich stated in no uncertain terms the dissatisfaction felt by many members of Congress with the charges imposed upon small theatres by the organization and declared that the seat tax must be revised in favor of the small exhibitor.

"When your organization started out with the motion picture industry," he asserted, "there were 20,000 houses representing 12,000,000 seats and you made a charge of 10 cents a seat a year throughout the United States—little theatres and big theatres. Can you tell me by what right or justice you can charge a little fellow in a little country town who plays music once a night, and then go into our big cities where they are playing two or three or four million selections a year and charge the same 10 cents? Is it fair? It is a most unfair imposition on the small man to have the big fellow pay the same amount."

"I heartily agree with you," Buck replied, "but we had to find out a lot of things and there were no such big houses in 1914 as now."

The motion picture industry itself, Buck contended, agreed with the society on the 10-cent charge, promising that the matter would have the attention of the organization.

Hints Boost for Large Houses

Any change made in the seating tax, Buck indicated, will be in the nature of an upward revision for the large metropolitan theatres, it being felt that the tax on small houses is not too much.

Much of the time of the hearing was devoted to discussion of salaries paid by the society. It was disclosed by Buck that for a number of years he and Nathan Burkan, chief counsel, worked for nothing, but that, when he was "broke" and could not longer afford to give the time to the organization, a salary of $25,000 was voted him voluntarily, which has since been increased to $35,000. Burkan, he said, gets $15,000, and E. C. Mills, general manager of the society, gets $50,000, having left a $74,000-job with the Radio Corporation to return to the organization.

E. C. Mills, general manager, declared on Tuesday in New York that the society at no time in the future contemplates a reduction of the music seat tax. He made the statement in connection with the assertion of Buck before the House patents committee that the matter of reduction would be taken up by the board of directors of the society.

Mills said: "I am not aware that any relief is needed. In fact, we have received no request for relief from either small or large exhibitors."

Judge in Theatre Case Says Unions Have Right to Strike

Judge Akerman, federal court, Miami, Florida, has signed an order enjoining unions of former employes of theatres operated by Wometco Theatres, Inc., Miami, from maintaining pickets within two and one-half blocks of the company's houses.

The order carries out an opinion stated by Judge Akerman just prior to signing the order, in which he indicated that labor unions have every right to call their members out on strike and may use "legitimate" means to prevent others taking their jobs, so long as they do not interfere with the liberties of the public.

Decision Upholds Distributor Angle On Copyright Law

United States district judge William FitzHenry, in the southern district of Illinois, last week handed down a decision holding that the unauthorized exhibition of copyrighted motion pictures is a violation of the Copyright Law.

The decision of Judge FitzHenry marks the eighth finding sustaining that position which has been returned from the bench in various parts of the country, and follows the decision of United States district judge Coleman in the case of Tiffany Productions vs. Dewing.

On the single contrary decision, handed down in Massachusetts recently, an appeal is now pending before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, first district. Judge FitzHenry's decision coincides with those of United States district judges Bondy of New York, Raymond of Michigan, Coleman of Maryland, Meekins of North Carolina, Mack of New York, Clarke of New Jersey, Williams of Oklahoma, Munger of Nebraska.

Alien Bill Is Unfair, Schulberg Charges

B. P. Schulberg, Paramount Coast production chief, has entered an emphatic answer to the contentions of Chairman Dickstein of the House immigration committee, whose bill would exclude foreign actors from the country, unless they were of recognized and acknowledged rating under the designation of "star."

All foreign actors except the recognized stars, would be placed under the jurisdiction of the labor law, by the Dickstein measure, which claims that native talent is discriminated against.

Schulberg said in part: "Any legislation to exclude foreign acting talent from Hollywood would be unfair to that privilege of selecting its film favorites which the American public has always held inviolate." He went on to point out that foreign players are popular only because the public likes them, and contended that it is from the rank and file of foreign actors that the producer develops talent, in refutation of Dickstein's belief that the rank and file of foreign actors should be excluded. Schulberg concludes: " . . . the condition is far less alarming than painted. The percentage of foreign players in films compared with Americans is astonishingly low."

Hearings on the Dickstein bill are now being held at Washington before the House immigration committee.

ADMISSION TAX MAY BE REDUCED IF NEW LEVY ON RENTALS IS PASSED

Gross Receipts from Film Leases Would Be Taxed 2¼ Per Cent Under General Sales Levy Before House Committee

Admissions to 25 cents will be exempt from taxation under terms of a tentative agreement reached this week by the House ways and means committee at Washington. It is thought possible that later discussion may raise the exemption to 35 cents. The smaller exhibitor is seen at the capital as coming through the taxation crisis practically unscathed.

By F. L. BURT, Washington

A tax of 2¼ per cent of the gross receipts from the leasing and licensing of films will be imposed upon motion picture producers and distributors under the general sales tax now being drafted by the House ways and means committee for inclusion in the new revenue bill.

No definite determination has yet been reached with respect to the proposed reduction of the exemption from admission taxes to 10 cents, but one report was that this will be eliminated on the ground that its retention would subject exhibitors to double taxation.

Submission of the revenue bill to the House of Representatives is expected within a week or 10 days. Besides the general sales tax, from which $600,000,000 is expected to be derived, the measure will provide for a corporation income tax of 13 per cent, one per cent greater than at present; individual normal income tax rates of two, four and six per cent, instead of the existing one and one-half, three and five per cent; surtax rates with a minimum of 40 per cent instead of 20 per cent, and possibly taxes upon the domestic consumption of electricity and gas and, remotely, a tax on gasoline.

Sales Tax for Two Years

With this program the committee hopes to benefit the Treasury to the extent of $1,241,000,000 during the fiscal year beginning July 1, next. With a view to relieving the country of this tax burden at the earliest possible moment, the committee is expected to incorporate in the bill a provision that the sales tax shall be in force for two years only and then repealed unless then existing conditions make extension necessary.

But whether the bill as presented to the House will be adequate to meet the Treasury's needs will depend largely upon the tax payments to be made between now and March 15, the final date for the filing of income returns for the calendar year 1931. Shortly after the middle of the month the Treasury will know whether its frequently revised estimates of collections are anywhere near accurate. Indications are that collections will be very light, possibly as low as $200,000,000, although it is hoped by the Administration they will be higher.

If March 15 experiences show that more than the nearly one and one-quarter billion dollars now sought will be necessary, it is probable Congress will pocket its compunctions, declare the country to be in a state of war, so to speak, and slap taxes on everything.

If necessary, it is indicated, the 10 cent admission tax exemption will be pushed, regardless of the tax on films. Both taxes, it is pointed out, were imposed during the war period.

State Seat Tax Threatened

In the meantime, the industry in New York State finds itself face-to-face with another battle against taxation. A temporary 10 per cent admission levy is being considered by Governor Roosevelt and legislative leaders as a means of obtaining an additional $20,000,000 to continue unemployment relief. Such a levy would cover one year only and would be identical with the war-time measure. Exhibitors throughout the state immediately began to gather en masse in principal cities to formulate plans for opposition. Circuit leaders in New York City, and at Albany and Buffalo have joined with independents in waging concerted action against the proposed measure and they are being aided in turn by interests in the legitimate field and in other phases of amusement.

At a meeting held in New York City at the Hotel Astor, combined exhibitor forces framed an appeal to Governor Roosevelt and to legislative leaders, in opposition to the proposed tax measure. Those in attendance were asked to rush telegrams of opposition to the legislators, incorporating one or all of the following facts:

"1. 25 per cent of the theatres in our city are dark due to the depression.

"2. Your proposal to tax 10 per cent of the gross receipts of our theatres is jeopardizing the employment of hundreds of men and women working in our theatres.

"3. Our investments in real property which are heavily taxed now will become confiscated by your tax proposal.

"4. Neither my theatre nor any other that I know of is making 2 per cent of the gross receipts.

"5. The proposed tax will hurt not only us but also every merchant in the vicinity who is dependent upon the number of people we can draw to the theatre for their customers.

"6. We are barely able to keep our theatres running. Since we can not carry this tax ourselves, we will have to pass it to the public, and the public will not pay increased admissions. The result will be a positive shut-down, with loss of our employees' jobs and our investments."

All independent and affiliated circuit heads attended a meeting Wednesday at the Hays office to hear reports of the industry committee in Albany. The bill did not come up in the legislature on Tuesday as expected.

Mayor J. J. Walker and Charles L. O'Reilley of the TOCC went to Albany Wednesday to confer with Governor Roosevelt.

Warners Answer Charges in Suit

Warners have $3,500,000 in cash and an established bank credit for "a large amount," the company states in denying charges of insolvency in receivership suit filed in chancery court at Wilmington by Maurice Newcastle, holder of 1,000 shares of common.

This bank credit, says the answer filed on Wednesday is not being made use of and therefore the company has no bank loans outstanding. A general denial of virtually all allegations is made in the answer.

INDEPENDENT STUDIO AND SALES AGENCIES IN "CLEARING HOUSE"

Myers Invites Leaders to 'Avert Industry Turmoil'

The following statement, in advance of the national convention of Allied States exhibitors at Detroit, March 8, 9 and 10, was received this week from Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of Allied, from Washington:

"Advance indications are that the Allied convention will be well attended and will be an aggressive but constructive gathering. Responsibility for the fighting mood of the exhibitors must rest with those who have refused to heed the exhibitors claims to consideration or to cooperate with their more moderate leadership during the past three years.

"Exhibitors whose situation has grown steadily worse under intolerable practices feel that they must adopt radical means for bringing their condition to the attention of the industry and the public.

"I have urged President Steffes to invite those in ultimate authority in the industry, as distinguished from those who are blindly maintaining the status quo, to attend the convention and receive first hand information as to the views, suggestions and grievances of thousands of their customers, the independent exhibitors. Mr. Steffes, I am informed, has acted on this advice and I hope the HERALD will urge these industry leaders to attend, not as a matter of convention ballyhoo but with the thought that it may lead to constructive results, which will head off a long and bitter struggle.

"I am sure that the results of the convention, if submitted to any group of impartial economists or business experts, would be pronounced and practical.

"Can not a last attempt be made to bring about consideration of those measures by the industry in the way suggested?"

Butterfield Circuit Not to Use German Films in Houses

Due to misinformation supplied by a distributor of foreign language pictures in New York, it was mistakenly reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of February 6 that of 38 closed theatres in Michigan and Ohio belonging to W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., 10 to 15 would be reopened with foreign dialogue pictures.

According to E. C. Beatty, general manager of Butterfield Theatres, "The Butterfield circuit operates no houses in Ohio or any other state outside of Michigan, and secondly, we have not 38 houses dark and we do not intend to open any houses whatever with German pictures. It is true that we played a few German pictures in a couple of spots—unsuccessfully, I regret to say—and have no intention of going in for this type of picture on even a limited scale."

Official Action on Formation of Eastern Association Is Set for April 1; Sponsors Hope National Society Will Result

A national and mutually cooperative clearing house is in the offing for independent producers and distributors and exchanges.

Official action on the formation of an Eastern association of independent producers and distributors is planned for April 1, when invitations will be extended officially to every independent exchange in the country, and to distributors and producers of independent motion pictures, to organize a cooperative association which, its sponsors hope, will eventually be joined with the independent organization formed some few weeks ago on the West Coast. If the Hollywood group agrees to such an amalgamation, sponsors of the proposed Eastern unit predict one great national society, the basic purpose of which will be to work for the betterment of independents everywhere.

Includes Independent Exchanges

If prospective members in the exchange field and in the Eastern group respond favorably to the invitation in April, a meeting will be arranged for immediately in New York, somewhat similar to a "convention," at which the problems of independents will be discussed, and a platform adopted, officers elected, a plan of financing effected and organization work completed.

Original plans, published one month ago, specified independent producers and distributors. Since then, the scope of the proposed unit has been widened so as to include independent exchanges in all key cities.

Seek National Clearing House

The backers hope to set up the machinery for a national clearing house, through which will be handled on a wholesale scale many of the costly and time-spending details now involved in state rights distribution. A complete record would be made of all requirements of independent exchanges, and of available territories. A credit system would aid producers in gauging the stability of exchanges, and it is even predicted that eventually the "clearing house" would be developed to the point where it might serve as an official contact between exchange and producer. The producer would try to dispose of his product directly through this channel, it is said.

A "central casting office" for use of independents is also mentioned for producer members, although nothing definite along these lines has been worked out.

As mentioned previously, the Coast unit immediately set to work to effect economies in production, including lower labor rates.

Whitbeck Better, Returns to "U"

Frank Whitbeck, in charge of press relations at Universal City, has fully recovered from an attack of influenza which lasted six weeks. He has returned to the studio.

Hays Unable to Be At Allied Meet; Ask Film Stockholders

Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, who is now in California in conferences with producers, will not be able to attend the convention of Allied States Association, scheduled to be held at Detroit next week. W. A. Steffes, Allied's national president, invited Hays to "sit-in" on the sessions, but Hays says he has notified Steffes he could not leave Hollywood in time to attend.

Owners of picture stocks and bonds will be welcome at the Allied convention, according to H. M. Richey, Detroit, Allied business manager. In quoting from a letter received this week from Steffes, Richey said that "bond and stockholders will be permitted to sit in on all sessions so that they can get a clearer idea of the workings of the larger producing and distributing organizations in their dealings with the independent organization."

Allied directors met Tuesday at Detroit to conclude details of plans for the meeting which opens on Tuesday next. Initial business sessions will get under way on Wednesday morning and will terminate Thursday, to be followed by a banquet in the evening.

Studio Working Contracts Agreement Still Far Off

Committees representing studio unions and leading producers conferring since February 9 in Los Angeles on new working contracts are still far from agreement and indications are that several more weeks of conferences remain to be held, according to Coast reports.

A new agreement fixing wage scales and modified hours per week for the next two years is sought by representatives of the IATSE, studio carpenters, electricians and cameramen's unions. Scenic artists are awaiting results of the conferences before advancing their own proposal for a minimum wage scale of $18 a day and shorter working hours.

In the event the producers fail to renew the two-year working agreement with the IATSE and the cameramen, the scenic artists will present an ultimatum which would mean either a direct settlement or a strike, it is reported.

EXHIBITOR MUST TREAT COMMUNITY AS PARTNER, SPARKS TELLS RAMSAYE

You Can't Keep the People Away from Florida—And So They'll Be Back, Asseverates Blithe Circuit Operator

By TERRY RAMSAYE
Editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD

About the year 1513 the noble Ponce de Leon went searching for the Fountain of Youth and a flowery life of ease, which in a degree he discovered in the country he called Florida. The highly mobile editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, cruising by motor southward, has followed in de Leon's footsteps and finds this provocation enough to keep him away from the cares of Broadway, on pretext of first hand study of the amusement situation in the field. The editorial technique is the same as that which positively compels our J. C. Jenkins to make a study of California, Hollywood and the Southwest at the first touch of a cold wind over the midwest prairies. The juice of the Florida orange is famous for its blending properties and the editor will likely be back in the Spring.

Florida may have been founded by the Spaniards, but E. J. Sparks appears to run it, in so far as the industry of the motion picture is concerned. For these one and twenty years he has been a showman. A few years ago he sold out most of his picture theatre interest to Publix and concentrated on real estate. Everybody knows what happened to Florida real estate. After that came the Mediterranean fruit fly, the hurricanes, and the bank failures. It was then said, "But after all they can't take away Florida's climate." This year "they," meaning Fate, took the climate, too, and gave a Florida winter to all the Atlantic seaboard. Incidentally phosphate, fruit and vegetables are selling somewhere below the alleged cost of production and the usual $200,000,000 tourist crop is off between 50 and 60 per cent. Aside from that, everything is fine in Florida—that is it was, until the state legalized dog racing by the parimutuel system, so that the box office loss to that sport in Jacksonville alone is guessed at about $3,000 a week.

So it comes that Ed Sparks is not so heavily interested in real estate now and so it comes that he is, what with the realignment of national schemes in circuit management, increasingly the center of executive responsibility for Publix and his own theatre enterprises in Florida.

"It is a job of stopping losses and standing by for a turn in the tide of affairs," remarked Mr. Sparks, from the vantage of his desk at the end of a long and imposing array of offices in the magnificent Florida Theatre building in Jacksonville.

So with a gay kerchief in his breast pocket and a blithe Florida smile, Mr. Sparks has set himself about a task of salvage and reconstruction.

"There are some things about the picture situation down here that parallel the cotton crop and market. We have been telling the cotton planter to plough every third row under. We perhaps shall have to do something like that."

And in fact that is just about what Mr. Sparks is doing with theatres in Florida. The state as a whole has its operating seating capacity cut to a summer schedule, of say about 40 per cent total capacity. By the time this page gets into print the great Florida, Jacksonville's "million dollar theatre," will be dark, for "an indefinite period." Jacksonville will then have seven of its eleven thousand seats dark. The theory of this move is that by shutting down the costly Florida with its 2200 seats, the strong pictures which it requires will be allocated to the several houses of lesser size but equal standard of equipment and comfort and so more broadly and ably serve the community and the industry than could be achieved by closing a number of the other exhibition plants.

There are evidences aplenty that the motion picture theatre building boom in Florida was strongly touched with the general mania which beset the state some years ago. There is, for instance, one situation in a minor Florida city where the theatre has a seating capacity of close to a tenth of the population and where the cost of operating the cooling system is about equivalent to the gross at the box office. That house, needless to say, will be dark soon.

But even about that Florida bubble period, Sparks has his merry moments. "You fairly could have spread a tent over the state and called it 'The Asylum'," he observed, "but that spree is over. We can build business in a sane way now.

"You just can not keep the people away from Florida and it will come back just as fast as the world comes out of its economic difficulties. Florida is sold to the world and the people will come here when they can afford it. There is no guessing to be done about the ultimate outcome, but meanwhile we have to have patience and do a lot of trimming of the extravagances of the flush days.

"Florida is just as good as it ever was and all its natural and human assets are still here."

Meanwhile the offices of Mr. Sparks are a considerable exhibit of an experienced showman and his staff hard at work. Between the chief executive and the outside world sits Frank Rogers, buffer, contact and contract man, with a solemn poker face and a sardonic line of observations calculated to keep the film salesman in hand.

Just the other day Sparks had his district managers into Jacksonville, for a conference of some two days, including: B. B. Garner, Guy Kenimer of Jacksonville, Jesse L. Clark of Tampa and Claude Lee of Gainesville, After that session they went back into the field with a tight new operating policy to apply, to apply of course with Southern suavity. It looks as though they would be ploughing under that third row soon.

Jacksonville Mayor, Particular Friend of Industry, Now Busy With Committee on Bringing Producers Back to State

Mr. Sparks started his career of showmanship two decades ago as the manager of the little "Bonita" in Augusta, Ga. He was enterprising enough to get into the business on his own at an early date and opened "The Modjeska" out of admiration for that great star. When he decided to add a soda fountain to the establishment he inquired for the Russian word for it and thereupon announced the "Modjeska Lavka." He is still a bit in doubt and curious yet about the correctness of the term. However the "Lavka" was a marked success and there are in consequence a great many Sparks theatres.

Sparks merrily recalled the other day a bit of daring showmanship of those early days. He had a production in three parts, a tremendous feature it was then, entitled "The Little Minister." He ran two parts at the "Bonita" and announced to the audience that part three would be presented five minutes later at the adjacent "Modjeska." He played to 244 admissions with parts one and two and collected 243 admissions for part three. That is the process known as "making two blades of grass grow where but one grew before."

The office of Ed Sparks is in the nature of a rendezvous for visiting magnates of Broadway who pass by on the comings and goings of their several and frequent Florida vacations. To many of them Sparks is the evangel of the sporting life of the wilds of the Everglades. He opines there is more fun to be had up the backwaters in a canoe than has yet been found in a casino or on a golf course. His fishing expeditions, by land and sea, are events of excitement. Tenderfeet are, however, warned, that in playful mood the host had been known to put the unwary guest into the same bed occupied by a slightly tethered three-foot alligator.

The Sparks offices are decorated with some handsome specimens of the sailfish and other picturesque fauna of Florida waters. His idea of a good time is a day's hard work at the end of a tarpon rod—and after landing "the big un" you turn him back into the sea. It seems that Sparks never kills a big fish unless some visitor wants to have his picture taken alongside it. In all probability there is a Sparks-Tarpon pact to show the boys from Broadway excitement on the high seas.

Every motion picture expedition passing through Florida is in honor bound to call at the office of Mayor John T. Alsop, Jr., of Jacksonville to pay respects. For these many, many years Mayor Alsop has been the particular friend of the motion picture in Florida. Jacksonville formed the habit of electing him mayor about ten years ago and just now he is a busy candidate for the post of congressman-at-large. It is possibly unnecessary to remark that he is a Democrat.

This week, aside from addressing a number of political meetings and holding some sessions on the unemployment problem, he was agog with interest in the affairs of the Florida committee which has been named to set to work to bring the motion picture producers back to Florida, including: Trenton C. Collins of Tampa, chairman; D. A. Smith, mayor of Sarasota, and close to the Ringling interests; R. G. Patterson of Pensacola, Cliff Reeder of Miami; and Walter Rose of Orlando. They are just now planning to get a state appropriation with which to proclaim the charms of Florida to the picture makers.

These Florida enthusiasts are apparently still influenced of the notion that motion pictures are in part made of sunshine and climate, and unaware that Hollywood and California are in the nature of an inherited habit from which all utility has departed. One may agree, however, that motion pictures, under present technique, might quite as well be made in Florida, where the telephone tolls from Times Square are rather less.

My able and more persistently itinerant colleague, Mr. J. C. Jenkins, I have often observed while in the discharge of my editorial duties, makes much comment on the groceries of the regions which he visits. It is then perhaps proper for me to set down here some comment for the possible guidance of other motor tourists to the Southland. If you will go by the highland country inland it will not be amiss for some three hundred miles to carry a pound of butter. There are communities where it is looked upon as mere foppery and not a necessary element of a man's meal. Also at the more top-lofty tourist hotels be in nowise deceived by the typographical similarity with the menus of the Ritz in New York and the sundry capitals of Europe. Many items are decorations. Beef of merit is to be had in regions where corn grows tall and cows are kept contented. In the South the products of the pig pen and poultry yard are superior. Give me Virginia for ham, but Chicago for beefsteak.

It may be treason to my hosts, but beware the Florida lobster. He is an overgrown shrimp and comes to the table in a humor that suggests he gave up life grudgingly. Better far the snapper, or the pompano. Also better the yam than the potato called Irish because it came from America.

One is to be content with the product of the country, and what with gumbo and soups, chicken creole, pecan and sweet potato pie and the like, life may be supported in happiness and glory. Whole-wheat bread is mentioned, but not demonstrated. You will eat cornbread, waffles galore and hot-bread of all kinds, and like it.

Beautiful old Charleston, like the rest of the South Atlantic coast and all Florida, is, in terms of the amusement industry, on what amounts to the summer schedule, the somnolent summer schedule, when the little traffic seeks the shade and the air hangs heavy between the magnolias. Tourists are as few as in the summer now, and the few who pass through are buying little except oil and gasoline.

Mostly the theatre enterprises of the city are under the control of the Pastime Amusement Company, which arose in the days of 1908, to end disastrous competition among the nickelodeons of that period. The company continues, with some five theatres, under the management of Albert Sottile, a brother of the founder. The company has the Gloria, with a 50-cent top, the Garden, 30 and 40 cents, the Majestic, 25 cents, and keeps dark most of the time; the Victory, a one-time vaudeville house, and the Academy of Music, an old legitimate theatre surviving former glories of Charleston. The Pastime's competition is the Palace with 900 seats, owned and operated by B. R. Kerr. There is also the Lincoln, playing exclusively to colored patrons.

Charleston has a total population of some 62,000, half of which are negroes. The city compactly occupies the peninsula between the estuaries of the Ashley and the Cooper rivers and with historic Fort Sumter, a remote blue dot off in view from the fashionable Murray boulevard along the Battery. The city is self-contained and alone on the coast, with no sizeable community from Savannah on the south and Wilmington, two hundred miles away, on the north, and nothing in the hinterland for the hundred miles to Columbia. The rural population is small and its contribution to the box offices negligible. Saturday, which is farmers' day in many Southern cities, is as quiet as Sunday in Charleston.

> "The conduct of motion picture theatres is a community business, to be carried on in the intimate spirit of a part of the community. What we do in this business is always to take into our confidence, with good spirit and honest intent, our partners in business, which means our employees, the newspapers, and also our patrons. What we set out to do we have reasons for and we make those reasons plain to 'the partners.' One needs to be a part of the people and the community he serves. Every region has its customs, its methods and its ways of thinking. Nothing can be had by going against the grain, everything by going with it. Here in Florida we keep out of politics, and in our campaigns we never contradict the other fellow. We try to state our own case and to win or lose on the merits of what we stand for, not what's wrong on the other side. We may have issues but not controversies."
> —From the comment of E. J. Sparks on circuit operation.

"So we have nothing big and do not expect anything big or remarkable in the theatre business here," observes Mr. Sottile. "We play to the same people all of the time and we are very directly responsible to our patrons. They are given to holding us and our managers personally responsible when a picture offends, or falls short of expectations.

"Just now the complaint is that with dialogue the pictures are very much alike and tend to fall into about three categories, mostly gangster-racket productions, sex triangle stories, and smart, over-sophisticated, society material.

"The people are getting tired of the sound picture much more rapidly than they did the silent picture. And, what is more serious, while the pictures have become articulate with speech, so have the patrons. In the silent days there was latitude for a good deal of argument and evasion, but now when they do not like a picture they know it very precisely and just why, and say so. Since the talking picture leaves almost nothing to the imagination, its shortcomings cannot be made up by the fancies of the audience.

> "I would like very much now to have an opportunity to play some pictures made by the deft, fast moving technique of the best of the old silent product, with little or no talk, but with a first class musical score on the sound track.
> "I believe our audiences were more thoroughly entertained when they were served with that sort of production and presentation. I mean the quality of picture that was made at the best by Cecil DeMille, Thomas Ince, Raoul Walsh and other able directors of the action school. Talk has too thoroughly limited the scope of the motion picture. Action now seems always to be restricted to areas and distances such as make it logical to be able to hear every word and whisper. It is all played so close-up. I think the audiences would like to see the picture get out of doors and get action again.

"I am not posing as an authority, but I venture this as a suggestion. I think it would be an experiment worth while to the industry if each of the larger companies would seriously make one such picture, not in a tentative lukewarm sort of way, but really up to the standard of the best pictures of the silent era. That would give us enough product of that character to permit the audiences of the country to register a real verdict, and it might be of large value in the guidance of producers."

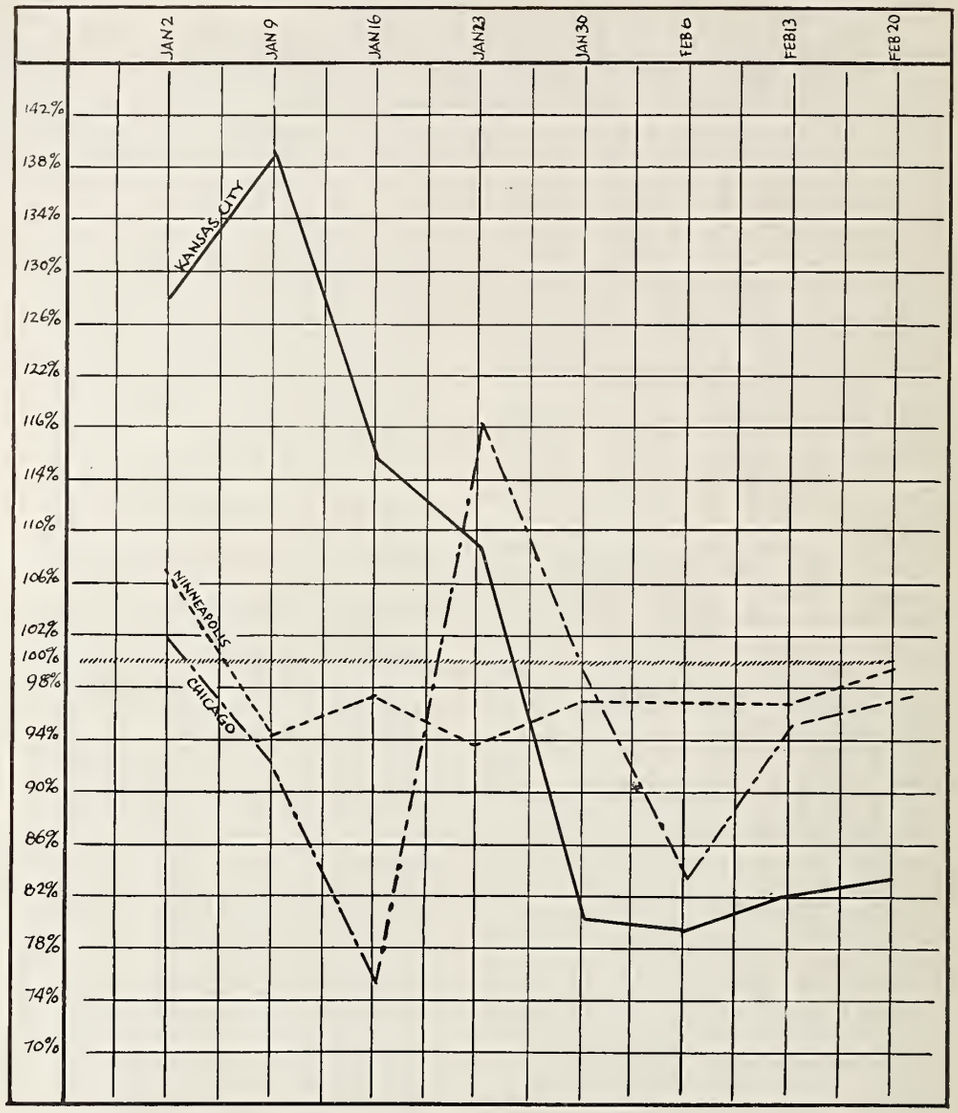
Yankee touches of commercialization are creeping in among the glories of this seaport capital of the Old South. There are up and down the streets of midtown "tea rooms" and "shoppes" galore, and there are not less than 10 antique stores. For ever so many years there was just one "antique" dealer in Charleston, so deftly able in craftsmanship that a half a century of his sales did not deplete the supply or invade the jealously guarded old estates. He made better worm holes than any worm and in weeks he could age a piece more completely than Father Time could in a century or two. He prospered many years and there was no complaint on Charleston antiques.

Today smart tourist traffic goes down by the Battery, where the yacht landings are, and where Woodstock and Provincetown artists display their winter labors among the vistas of the South to the promenading visitors in the hotel galleries. The site of the grand old Planters Hotel of ancient fame is up for sale, and in a brighter economic day the price might well have been doubled by the sale of the handsome iron grilles, now thick with corrosion and age, for some Long Island villa.

A few manufacturers, fertilizers and cigars, constitute the industrial life of the town. The shipping terminals have little to do these days and the U. S. Navy Yard, rather amply equipped, seems to have gone quite to sleep. The work for the navy goes to Norfolk and Brooklyn. There is an occasional piece in the papers about getting somebody to do something in Washington about sending ships to Charleston.



A fleet of destroyers, anchored in Charleston harbor until early in January, with its considerable array of seamen, kept box office figures healthy and close to normal. Then with sailing day came the slump to summer status.

Twenty miles up Ashley river are Magnolia Gardens, probably the most famed of the floral estates of the South, a great acreage of plantation with avenues of live oaks deep with Spanish moss and endless vistas, literal miles, of azaleas—now (in keeping with the whimsies of this difficult year) blooming two months ahead of the normal season, thereby contributing less than their usual quota to the tourist attendance of the region.

Films Included in Tariff Wall Erected in England

Motion picture importations into England are included in the sweeping 10 per cent tariff which was put into effect on Tuesday, March 1, marking the end of free trade in one of its last strongholds, Great Britain.

The American motion picture producers will be seriously affected by the new tariff wall now erected in England. Heretofore, the most serious problem of English distribution facing the American producer, was that presented by existing quota regulations, a Hays office spokesman recently indicated.

In this graph are compared the box office receipts in three cities of the Middle West—Chicago, Kansas City and Minneapolis—for the eight weeks in January and February of this year, based upon the weekly compilation in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The 100 per cent dotted horizontal line represents average weekly receipts in the same cities during the year 1931.

Senator J. J. Davis To Address MPTOA

Final plans for the annual convention of the MPTOA, opening March 14 in Washington, were being completed this week and included arrangements for the appearance of U. S. Senator James J. Davis of Pennsylvania, to speak on the motion picture as a factor in the growth of commerce.

Plans for establishment of a national family theatre night as a business building project will be a highlight of the convention. President M. A. Lightman will offer a plan for national application of the idea.

The convention's observance of the George Washington Bi-Centennial anniversary will take place at the opening of the meeting and will be in charge of Congressman Sol Bloom, director of the U. S. Commission. The convention banquet will be at the Mayflower Hotel, March 15, and arrangements are being made to accommodate 1,700. United States congressmen and senators will attend. Stars of stage and screen will participate in the entertainment, with Eddie Dowling in charge. William James of Columbus will be toastmaster.

Open discussion of all leading problems will feature the business sessions. The national meeting will be petitioned by delegates of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois to go on record in favor of elimination of score charges and a reduction of service charges by Erpi and RCA Photophone. The same delegates will ask recommendation for a bill to repeal the music tax clause in the Copyright law. Relations between exhibitor and community will be advanced for discussion by this group, with Fred Wehrenberg, chairman and J. C. Hewitt, Lewis K. Ansell and Oscar C. Lehr.

Expectation that the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware soon will affiliate with the MPTOA was brought about with the naming of delegates with power to act. No delegates were named to the Allied convention at Detroit. The delegates are David Barrist, George P. Aarons, Alan Benn, Milton Rogasner, Herbert Elliott, Lewen Pizor.

WHAT THEY SAY OF MR. BROOKHART

The utterances of Mr. Senator S. Wildman Brookhart before the United States Senate, demanding an investigation of the motion picture industry, and accompanying his demand with sundry charges pertaining to commercial and artistic practices and standards is receiving extraordinary attention from the public press. With a high degree of unanimity the newspapers, editorially, find themselves at variance with the senator from Iowa. The discussions reveal a newspaper attitude toward the institution of the screen, toward its personnel and its products, which the industry may well consider friendly and encouraging.

—THE EDITOR.

THE LOS ANGELES TIMES

Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa continues to justify the uncanny foresight exhibited by his parents at his christening. After being quiet so long that the country had begun to think he might have attained a modicum of wisdom, he has burst out again, this time with a demand for a Senate investigation of the motion picture industry. This demand is not much more absurd than most of Brookhart's ideas for remaking the universe. It might be pointed out that the Senate has a good many more important things to do in a period that is slowly recovering from the worst industrial crisis in the nation's history, with grave internatonal problems n the offing, but these matters are seemingly of relative insignificance to Mr. Brookhart.

There are, doubtless, things the matter with the motion picture industry, since it has been in the dumps along with other businesses, but it is more than doubtful if the national legislature can supply a remedy, and it is pretty certain that Brookhart has not succeeded in putting his finger on any real difficulties from which producers, distributors, exhibitors or the public are suffering. It is equally probable that Brookhart would not succeed in discovering what the real difficulties are, much less in remedying them. * * *

He asserts that the code of ethics of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association is "admittedly a failure." Admitted by whom? Perhaps the Senator's clients concede as much, but the rest of the public has thought it was working reasonably well. The Senator declares the industry has become a monopoly. Most people familiar with the facts seem to think it is the most fiercely competitive industry on earth. * * *

He objects to "block booking," the merits and demerits of which are being tried out in court, and the courts are capable of handling the matter without Congressional interference. He things there is something wrong in the financial set-up of the producing companies. That, too, is a matter for experts, of which there are few in the Senate.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

* * * Well, even Brookhart must know that art, like nature, abhors a vacuum. The talkies aren't made in a vacuum. Their raw material is taken from life. They feature gangsters because there are gangsters in present-day America; and they feature free and easy young ladies because we have such ladies today. Moviegoers are interested in those people, and will pay to see talkies about them. * * *

We don't think, either, that a gangster picture ever turned a normal boy into a criminal; or that a picture showing the wages of sin to be ermine coats and penthouses ever inspired a good girl to become a gold digger.

The talkie theatres are about the last places left to which Americans can retire for a couple of hours and forget the chains with which the bureaucrats have bound them; and where everybody can imagine himself or herself young, rich, lovely and beloved.

BOONE (IA.) NEWS-REPUBLICAN

* * * The Senator didn't exactly hit the right key. In our opinion the movies have improved since Will H. Hays was put at the helm. * * *

What the Iowa Senator should have done was to demand an investigation of the spoken drama. There is hardly a play on the boards in New York at the present time which is not full of sexual filth, and the worst of it is these theatres are full of people. * * *

BRIDGEPORT (CONN.) POST

* * * If the arts of a nation including drama and motion pictures are to be entrusted to men of the limited vision and outlook of the Senator from I-o-way, then Heaven help the artistic future of that nation. * * *

* * * The best proof that regulation is not needed is the fact that those movies which have sex and nothing more to recommend them, are generally box office failures.

* * * The public can take care of its own censoring.

JERSEY CITY (N. J.) JOURNAL

It would probably be a good thing for the movies if Senator Brookhart's proposed investigation of the motion picture industry were to take place. * * *

Perhaps the Senator can cite instances of immoral films, but generally the business seems to have been considerably cleaned up during the last few years . . . anybody who attends the movies regularly must have been impressed by the improvement in the selection of stories and plots for the pictures. * * *

PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Most of our political leaders relegate public business to subordinates and devote their own talents to denouncing their favorite menace. Even so intelligent a progressive as Senator Brookhart has succumbed to the vice. * * *

We leave it to you. Judge the effect upon those plastic minds if they did know more 'about those who run this Government,' less about the mimes of Hollywood. Our moving pictures may have certain bad influences, but how much worse if our average boy or girl knew what REALLY went on behind the scenes in Washington?

WORCESTER (MASS.) TELEGRAM

* * * It would be foolish to argue that the motion picture producers were without faults. There is reason to deplore the way in which independent producers and exhibitors have been restricted by the more powerful organizations. There is reason to criticize some of the goody-goody propaganda spread by Mr. Hays and his lieutenants. But Mr. Brookhart's apparent belief that the whole film industry is exploiting and degrading the public for the sake of gold is not justified by the facts.

BALTIMORE EVENING SUN

Senator Brookhart's indictment of the movies culminates with the declaration that: "The average boy or girl knows as much about these actors—sometimes more—than they know about those who run the Government."

The truth of this allegation is not likely to be denied by any informed person. Indeed, Senator Brookhart might have gone further. He might have said that the average man or woman knows more about movie actors than about the people who run the Government. When movie actors and actresses are so much better worth knowing about than are the men who run the Government, it is bound to be so—and not many movie people are worth knowing about, at that.

NEW LONDON (CONN.) DAY

* * * While holding no brief for the movie producers, impartial observers will feel that the ease with which Senator Brookhart allows himself to become "all steamed up" over rumors and unsupported statements is more theatrical than righteous. Brookhart can register indignation, about something he is only indifferently informed upon, better than any other man in the Senate, with the possible exception of the notable Mr. Norris.

* * * Is it possible that the publicity bestowed on screen idols has caused jealousy? * * *

Perhaps a movement can be started whereby our Representatives and Senators will attract as much attention and provide as much entertainment as the motion picture stars. Senator Brookhart has made a good start.

BOSTON POST

* * * Senator Brookhart . . . seems to regard it as shocking that the younger generation should know more about Greta Garbo and Charlie Chaplin than they do about the senior Senator from Iowa, but what law could be passed to prevent it?

FLINT (MICH.) JOURNAL

Brookhart is famous for his scathing attacks upon his pet targets; hence, his statements must be discounted to that extent. Will H. Hays, known as the movie 'czar' because of his position at the head of the producers' organization, is not the type of man to have betrayed the public. * * *

FOX AND HEARST NEWSREELS GIVE FULL REPORT OF SHANGHAI BATTLE

Calls from Press for Still Enlargements from War Negative Place Material Before Millions in Hundreds of Papers

By TERRY RAMSAYE

[Pictures in Pictorial Section]

Only rarely does big news happen in the presence of reporters, of the press photographers or the newsreel camera. All too often despite the diligence and enterprise of journalism the eye witness accounts are synthetic and the pictorial records reduced to post-mortem surveys of the personalities and the place where it all happened. So by contrast the current performance of Fox Movietone News and its colleague contemporary, Hearst Metrotone News, in delivering the screen firing line re-creations of the Sino-Japanese conflict in Shanghai becomes remarkable.

Truman Talley

The last three issues of these newsreels have presented a continuous and comprehensive motion picture report of this great Battle of Shanghai in what Truman Talley, general manager of the Fox news organization, calls "the undeclared war."

Press Calls for Stills

The performance has with it the flavor, so delectable to newsmen, of a "scoop," not alone in the screen field but in pictorial journalism of the printed page, too. The result has been calls from the press for still picture enlargements from the war negative with the result that the newsreel pictorial material has been spread before millions of readers in some hundreds of newspapers.

Not since the coming of sound to revolutionize, not to say disrupt, newsreel technique, has the screen seen such a signal news performance.

Most importantly too it has chanced that this remarkable performance of coverage has been achieved in the greatest news development since the World War. The thunder of the guns and detonations of bombs, the black menace of death and destruction, in this undeclared war are made real despite the evasions of diplomats and the polite words of Geneva. It has long been said that "the camera cannot lie," and it may well be added now that the microphone has a way of telling its part of the terrible truth, also.

Such product, so expensively produced, under the desperate high pressures of the news field, may well be appreciated by the industry and its public as an evidence of some of the larger, more intangible services that can be achieved by the motion picture. It is worth recalling that in the early days of the republic it was thought best to encourage the wide dissemination of education, news and information by such expedients as special postal rates for periodicals and the like, also by the recognition of certain necessary privileges and prerogatives of the press. The motion picture newsreel, despite some decades of service and achievement, is taken too much as a matter of course within the industry and is classified quite too much as a mere commercial entertainment item by laymen and legislators.

Service to Industry

It is most unlikely that the motion picture exhibitor can buy in other product nearly so much box office value, so much screen merchandise of continuous institutional value to his theatre, as in the newsreel. There is a very important and influential fraction of the motion picture audience of every community which esteems the newsreel above all other screen offering.

The achievement of Mr. Talley and his organization comes at a time, too, when it can be of service not alone to the special institution which they serve but to the whole of the industry and all newsreel enterprise. Newsreels, plainly and frankly, have been much in the doldrums of late. Perchance now an era of the sort of news activity and excitement which means real reporting and real showmanship is about to dawn.

The Fox and Hearst reels, produced by what is in effect the same field organization, have released on the Sino-Japanese conflict in regular and special editions enough footage in the last two weeks to make a respectably long feature report of the war.

What They've Shown

Chronologically, these newsreels have shown the bombardment of the Chapei district in Shanghai by Japanese airplanes, the devastating explosions of the bombs in the civilian areas, destruction by fire of the strategic points which were the targets of the bombers as well as wide areas of homes and small shops set afire and leveled, the panic of the inhabitants, warfare against snipers, the search and seizure of Chinese civilians, vast panoramas showing the wide extent of the bombardment and fire, an actual Chinese counter-attack over the ruins and smoking debris of Chapei, Chinese anti-aircraft guns attempting to repel the air invaders, the flight of refugees into the country and into the International Settlement where the troops of various foreign powers are attempting to cope with the greatest problem in their experience, an interview with the Mayor of Shanghai on this modern tragedy, and the arrival of British and more particularly American troops rushed from Manila to protect foreign interests. As a corollary, but in the minds of the American public closely associated with the Far Eastern crisis, the latest pictures of the American Fleet in maneuvers in the Pacific have been presented.

Evidence of More Intangible Services by Motion Picture as Well as of Newsreel Enterprise in Day of Doldrums

The story behind the scoop, according to Truman Talley is one of organization. With camera and sound units located strategically throughout the world, a newsreel is naturally prepared for coverage and protection in the event of emergencies, but with the appearance of war clouds in the Far East some months ago, Mr. Talley began augmenting of camera strength in that part of the world. The attack upon Shanghai by the Japanese found Movietonews prepared and the photographing of the last month's fighting and all the activities attendant upon military operations became more or less a matter of routine.

Eight at Work at Front

A staff of eight men representing Movietonews, Inc., are now at work on the various phases and fronts of the Sino-Japanese conflict, according to Mr. Talley. Bonney Powell, a veteran newsreel cameraman as well as executive, and formerly an officer in the United States Navy, is in charge of the Far Eastern division. Powell's several trips around the world on camera and newsreel assignments, together with his several years experience in China, qualify him as competent to direct the pictorial activities of the newsreel in this present crisis. In Mr. Powell's division are a number of camera and sound men of long and varied newsreel experience. Captain Ariel Varges, recently assigned to Tokyo, and Lewis Tappan, sound engineer, were on the job early in the "Battle of Shanghai." A. P. Alexander, one of the best known flying cameramen in the newsreel field and Paul Heise, sound engineer, are teamed together with another camera and sound outfit. U. K. Whipple, cameraman, and James Gleason, soundman, have been and are still with the American Fleet, whose share in the Far Eastern drama still remains to be developed. Last but certainly not least, there is the famous "Newsreel" Wong, a Chinese cameraman educated in America, many of whose newsreel pictures have appeared in years past on American screens and who was in the thick of the attack upon Shanghai.

Warner Theatre in Ridgewood Is Due for Opening Next May

Warners new theatre, nearing completion in Ridgewood, N. J., is expected to be ready for opening in May. Construction up to the present is ahead of schedule.

Other Warner construction work in various stages of progress includes the 12-story office building being erected at Nashville, Tenn., and the two-story commercial building at Mansfield, Ohio.

IN HIGH POST. J. L. Schlaifer, who has been appointed general manager of Universal. He will include sales direction among his duties.

CAST. (Left) Dorothy Revier, one of the screen's most enduring celebrities, who has been cast importantly in Universal's narrative study of cabaret life, "Night World."

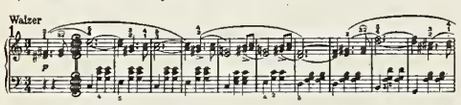
PRIZE WINNER. (Below) Betty Warner, daughter of H. M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, with Brondo, her St. Bernard which won all prizes in its class in New York.

HOW IT'S DONE. Joan Bennett writing a letter for the screen, which will show her hand penning the message. The camera photographs her hand as it writes, and the footage is inserted.

JOHANN STRAUSS RETURNS—IN FILM

Music factor in motivation of action and character revelation in screen romance

By JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN



After all is said and done, it cannot be denied that the Germans are a persistent and consistent people. They stick to their own musical forms and their own dance—the waltz—with tenacity. They exalt them—they glorify them, and they transcribe them to the sound screen in a thorough, workmanlike manner. For all of which they deserve commendation.

It was more than a century ago that George Gordon—sometimes known as Lord Byron—wrote a scathing satire on what was then the latest dance novelty just "imported from the Rhine," and facetiously thanked Germany for the contribution:

"Who sent us—so be pardoned all her faults—
A dozen dukes, some kings, a queen—
and Waltz."

But the undaunted Teutons went right on composing waltzes ad lib, and shuffled their feet at the depressions, if any. Then about 1845 Johann Strauss, the younger took up the baton of his illustrious father and for fifty years reigned the undisputed "Waltz King" of gay Vienna, and the Austrian capital has ever since been the most prolific progenitor of these seductive rhythms. Although for the past two decades the waltz, as a divertisement, has been shunted aside in favor of the more exuberant, if less elegant, syncopations, the graceful music of the lilting three-four rhythm still weaves a melodic spell over the philistine and the sophisticate alike.

WIENER BLUT Johann Strauss Op. 354
(Vienna Blood) Walzer

Wiener Blut, one of the most popular of all the Strauss waltzes, is utilized in the picture at the debut of young Johann Strauss in Vienna, which marked the advent of the new "Waltz King." The music adds verity and color to the typical Viennese scene and action.

It is, therefore, in keeping with the best Teutonic traditions that the latest German motion picture importation, "Ein Walzer vom Strauss" ("A Waltz by Strauss"), which has been showing at the Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York City, and which comes to us with the endorsement of Vienna, Berlin and London, should be an exposition of that favorite dance-music form and a glorification of its most famous protagonist.

To those whose tympani have not been dulled by the cacophony of epileptic saxophones and the moaning of lachrymose larynxes, the sweet strains of a Strauss waltz are a refreshing relief from the too-often synthetic and over-conscious product of our present-day melody makers. These Teutonic tunes, like their vintages, seem to mellow and grow more luscious with the passing of the years.

It is a simple story, that of "Ein Walzer vom Strauss," told with the glamour that the period demands, but it is doubtful if the picture would register convincingly were it not for the colorful musical pattern that weaves through the dramatic texture of the narrative. The music does not tell the story. There is little attempt to usurp, or even reinforce, the spoken word with musical material. It is in the motivation of action and in character revelation that the music functions, and in this respect the production may be said to strike a new and distinctive note.

The story is built around the early career of Johann Strauss, the younger, who despite the opposition of his father (the then outstanding composer of waltzes in Vienna), pursues the musical muse surreptitiously, eventually to eclipse even the reputation of his illustrious sire. It is only when the father, unable to reconcile his testy temperament to the petty annoyances of family life, leaves his home and takes up with a popular danseuse, that the young Strauss, encouraged by his mother and his sweetheart, develops the talent for musical creation that is the heritage of the family of Strauss.

Young Johann makes a triumphal debut as director-composer, and the youthful genius is here shown directing Wiener Blut (Vienna Blood), one of the most popular of all the Strauss waltzes. (As the opus number of this piece is 354, it is evident that the composer had mastered the essentials of waltz writing by the time he reached Wiener Blut).

Following his successful debut, Johann accepts an offer from St. Petersburg, where he becomes the musical lion of the hour. The Russian ladies worship him when he directs his Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald. A Grand Duchess drapes herself around his neck and whispers in his ear that he must remain in Russia and she will obtain for him the post of Royal Concert Master. This is all very delightful to young Johann, until the court routine becomes monotonous and the Duchess' sweetness becomes saccharine. Then nostalgia for that dear old Vienna and his winsome Viennese sweetheart grips the youthful musician. He returns to his native city all aflame in the anticipation of being reunited with his beloved one—to learn that she is just on the point of marrying—a baker!

Despite Johann's pleading, the sensible maedchen persuades him that his life and talent belong to the Vienna public; that he must be free from marital shackles.

The final scene in the picture shows young Johann reconciled with his father to the strains of The Beautiful Blue Danube. When the old man who is about ready to pass on, asks his son why he persisted in following a musical career against his father's will, the lad replies: "Because I am a Strauss!"

SO LANG NOCH EIN WALZER VOM STRAUSS ERKLINGT
Arthur Guttmann
(As Long as a Waltz by Strauss Resounds)

Arthur Guttmann, under whose musical direction the picture was produced, wrote this waltz especially for the production. It is used thematically, vocally and instrumentally, and serves to reinforce significant moments in the career of the elder Strauss.

GESCHICHTEN AUS DEM WIENER WALD Johann Strauss Op. 325
(Stories from the Vienna Woods)

At St. Petersburg, where he became the idol of the Russian aristocracy, the youthful genius is shown leading the orchestra in this hauntingly beautiful composition, at the Grand Duke's concert. It was here the Grand Duchess persuaded young Johann to remain and accept the post of Royal Concert Master.

And Johann's reason seems to epitomize the reason why the Germans and the Austrians persist in making music in their own intelligent way, and in producing motion pictures in which music is combined with speech and action in a manner that is often distinctive and invariably delightful.

A special waltz written for the production by Arthur Guttman, who was responsible for the musical direction of the picture, is called So Lang Noch Ein Walzer vom Strauss Erklingt (As Long as a Waltz by Strauss Resounds). It is sung and played thematically at effective moments.

It is easy to understand why A Waltz by Strauss made such a favorable impression abroad, where the traditions of music and the traditions of Strauss are venerated. While there is a minority of our American public (albeit they are under suspicion) who welcome such pictures as this, there is scant likelihood that our own producers will yield to this minority by emulating such productions as A Waltz by Strauss.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The word "depression" is barred from the stage, screen or any other place or being connected with RKO theatres, according to Ray Stevens, managing the company's Orpheum at New Orleans, who says he has instructions to "fire" immediately any act using the word "depression" on the stage and also, he admits that a "gentle hint" has also been received from headquarters that managers in turn are warned that if they permit the word to be used on the screen, in their offices, or even by their employes in the theatre, they will be let out, too.

The manager of a certain large downtown theatre in Kansas City is still "howling" because his competitor pulled a fast one, although he has no proof. The cause of the complaint rests in the fact that cards advertising the competitor's show were found hung on the complaining theatre's light globes above the outside displays.

When the Orpheum theatre brought vaudeville back to Spokane, the other day, after an absence of two years, the management literally blew the roof off the theatre.

Joe Cooper, manager, had arranged a celebration worthy of the occasion and it included the firing of a cannon on the theatre roof as a signal that the big moment had arrived. Harry's enthusiasm, however, got the better of him. He fired not one, but a dozen heavy shots. The repeated bombardment shattered the skylight and for a few moments the back-stage area took on all the atmosphere of war-torn Shanghai.

Successful independent producer-distributors quite frequently earn more on their investment, proportionately, than do many larger concerns. One reason for this is limited overhead and rapid-fire production activities, a perfect example of which now exists on the West Coast, where George Weeks has a single studio unit turning out on an average of two features monthly.

A peculiar mixup of personalities has just been straightened out by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood. The organization has an arbitration board, and this is one of the first occasions when its services have been requisitioned by member companies.

It seems that a number of producers went to see "Sea Gull" when this legitimate piece opened the other day at Pasadena, and Junior Laemmle felt that both leading man and leading woman should have screen tests. Accordingly, arrangements were made and the tests were given. On the same evening, Paramount also made a test of the leading lady, Gloria Stuart, and that company claimed her services when that concern's tests came through ahead of Universal's.

Universal protested and the matter was brought to the attention of the board, which awarded priority to Laemmle's corporation.

An important executive resigned recently and as yet he has not found a new berth. He is a likeable chap and knows his picture business quite thoroughly.

Certain individuals who are interested in his future have been working vigorously to turn the trade spotlight on him, hoping that the favorable attention of some national organization might be directed toward him, resulting possibly in negotiations. They have even gone so far as to try to circulate in the trade press false rumors popularizing this chap's executive ability and mentioning a flood of offers which he is supposed to be considering.

Publix seeks to eliminate much of the temptation for dishonesty attendant upon the handling of theatre tickets and box office receipts. In a blanket order, managers have been warned to eliminate all unnecessary conversation between doormen, ushers and cashiers; make certain that cashiers do not have an unnecessary amount of cash exposed to view; "let nothing keep you" from quickly making bank deposits; reduce petty cash on hand; make certain that tickets are torn in half promptly by doormen, and check the stock of tickets to make sure they are properly guarded and properly accounted for, realizing that they are the same as money in so far as accountability is concerned.

Water barrels and stove grates played an important part in laying the foundation for the industry, according to our correspondent in Oklahoma, Wesley Trout, whose career in motion pictures dates back some 22 years since he started in Kansas.

"Little thought was given in those days to fire hazards," reports Trout. "The current rheostat equipment usually consisted of a large barrel filled with water (salt added), and a couple of store grates hung on the end of each wire to the arc lamp. 'Amperes' were increased and decreased by the amount of water and the depth of one of the stove grates."

Former world powers now stripped of rank, industrial giants of another day and numerous one-time millionaires stormed the doors of Paramount's lot in Hollywood the other day for the opportunity to collect $7.50 daily during the filming of a new story of Red buccaneering. Four hundred former members of Russia's aristocracy, who were forced to flee their native land in the revolution of 1920, were placed on the payroll.

The Russian colony in Hollywood, virtually all of whom were exiled from Russia in 1920, number about 1,500, of whom 500 depend upon picture work for their livelihood.

On the Paramount lot one may now see any number of ex-generals and majors, captains, lieutenants and what not of the old czarist regime. There are former "commandants of the port," impresarios, attaches to the Imperial court and daughters of fathers who were once the richest in Central Russia; widows of officers and landlords and many former government leaders who were lucky enough to escape with their scalps and who now are satisfied with an occasional day or two at $7.50.

The Mayor's Committee works hand-in-hand with the Women's Cooperative Alliance, and it appears quite probable that executives of the Alliance were at least partially instrumental in awarding the $11,000 check to the deserving cause for which it has been used.

The blackout to this incident appears in the fact that one of the most active members of the Alliance is Mrs. Robbins Gilman, who for many years has made a major lifework of "lambasting" motion pictures.

AMATEUR SUPERVISION HURTS, SAYS WRITER

Entire Concept of Censorship Reduced to Absurdity, Declares E. M. Barrows, Writing in "Review of Reviews"

"No business can stand the intrusion of amateur supervision backed by arbitrary authority instead of knowledge, no matter how well meaning that supervision may be," says Edward M. Barrows, writer on various industries, in the March issue of Review of Reviews.

Mr. Barrows, in his article headed "Motion Pictures: Success through Self-Regulation," declares that the variance of ideas in different parts of the country reduces the entire concept of censorship to absurdity.

The writer urges "more organized cooperation and less organized opposition" between the industry and "those sincerely interested in pictures from the social point of view," at the same time noting that 3,000 social organizations are cooperating.

Points to Accomplishments

Mr. Barrows says that the "future historians will not wonder at the shortcomings of the motion picture so much as the marvels of the industry's accomplishments."

"Educational use of motion pictures," Mr. Barrows writes, "has never been given a fair chance. The motion picture began its existence as a form of recreation exploited by commercial recreation men; hence, education has been a side issue. The initiative of the Hays organization should be followed, but it is neither good business nor good public policy to burden it with sole responsibility. Here, if anywhere, government cooperation might help. Many important departments at Washington maintain their own motion picture bureaus, but have inadequate funds for proper work. The Government might well afford to have these pictures professionally produced and then made available for public educational work, or else arrange with the motion picture industry to do the distributing."

Cites Censorship Error

"Censorship cannot make films," the writer points out. "The function of official censorship comes down to the exclusion of scenes that do not agree with the censor's personal ethics. Here we have so wide a field for varying opinion that the producers complain that the censorship boards rarely make the same cuts in a given picture.

"These are the problems which Congress and various state governments are constantly being urged to settle by new laws and by tax-supported commissions. The belief seems to be that bestowal of public office upon the ordinary citizen, generally untrained in any line except his own, miraculously qualifies him to solve problems that have been the life study of experts in their own profession.

"Laws are pending in various states and in Congress which propose more official regulation and aim at the prohibition of block-booking without offering any effective substitute. In addition, admission-tax bills are threatened in several states and at Washington, which a theatre-goer must pay. The industry is already paying $100,000,000 annually in various taxes. If past experience counts for anything, most of these bills should fail unless they are worked out on the basis of the industry's announced needs. No business can stand the intrusion of amateur supervision backed by arbitrary authority instead of knowledge, no matter how well meaning that supervision may be."

Editor Points to Progress

Dr. Albert Shaw, in an editorial summing up the Barrows conclusions and headed "Will Hays: A Ten Year Record," finds much of hope in the progress pictures have made.

"We have no reason to think," Dr. Shaw says, "that all the great inventions which are combined in the making and exhibition of motion pictures are conspiring to undermine what is best in our civilization. Exactly the opposite is true. The socalled 'sound' pictures or 'talkies' are at the beginning of a marvellous success. In the years to come they will improve the vocabulary, accent and conversation of millions of listeners. They will react favorably upon the legitimate drama. They will influence pulpit methods and political speaking. They will have an international influence in lessening barriers of language.

"It is because Mr. Hays sees these things so clearly that he begins another decade of his association with the motion picture industry without any sense of disappointment, and with enthusiasm even greater than that which has sustained him through the 10 years that have passed.

"We can but congratulate him, and at the same time express confidence in the validity and permanence of the motion picture as a contribution to the resources of life. Like every other industry, motion pictures have had to come through their periods of experiment and difficulty, but they rest upon better foundations than many other kinds of business enterprise. Regarded as a social institution, they have earned full acceptance."

Carl Laemmle, Jr., Confers On "U.'s" Serial Program

Carl Laemmle, Jr., is conferring with other Universal officials in New York this week on the company's 1932-33 serial program. It is expected that this year's schedule of four serial plays will be maintained. Two of them, "The Lost Express" and "Heroes of the West," already have been decided on, it is understood. Junior will remain in New York for several weeks, taking treatments for sinus trouble.

Carl Laemmle leaves for the Coast on Friday. After six weeks, he will return to New York en route to Europe, sailing late in April. The Universal chief will remain in Europe for six weeks.

Reisman Linked To RKO; Depinet Has Schnitzer's Work

The resignation of Phil Reisman as general sales manager at Universal becomes effective on Saturday. He says he has made no plans for the future, although his name has been linked with RKO as film buyer for that circuit. The promotion last week of Jules Levy from film buyer for RKO to general sales manager for Radio Pictures left vacant the post for which Reisman has been mentioned. In the meantime, Joseph I. Schnitzer, who likewise resigned last week as president of Radio, launched plans for an independent production enterprise, from his new headquarters in the Loew State Building on Broadway. Ned Depinet, vice-president in charge of sales, has also assumed Schnitzer's presidential duties without that title, however, and no decision has been made for a successor.

Harold B. Franklin, recently appointed executive at RKO, is preparing to leave for Hollywood over the week-end to delve into the situation on the Coast for Hiram Brown.

The resignations of Dan Dougher as RKO's purchasing agent and of Captain Harold Auten as foreign representative, became effective this week. Likewise the appointment of George Godfrey as an executive in the theatre division. Godfrey was formerly with the concern and he will concentrate his attention on the Palace in New York and on other circuit matters.

On Wednesday night, at the St. Moritz Sky Grill, Universal chiefs in New York tendered a dinner to Phil Reisman and J. L. Schlaifer, his successor.

R. H. Cochrane was the toastmaster, and speeches were made by Carl Laemmle, Carl Laemmle, Jr., J. L. Schlaifer, Phil Reisman, Ted Schlanger, Harry Lorch and Charles B. Paine. The dinner was strictly a family affair and was attended by the following officials and heads of departments: P. D. Cochrane, Harry Milstein, E. McEvoy, Sam Sedran, Willard S. McKay, John Ward, Joe Weil, Sydney Singerman, Ben Grimm, Julius Singer, Harry Zehner, Frank Mastroly, Paul Gulick, Leo Abrams, Nat Goldberg, George Cochrane, Sam Jacobson, Oscar Binder, Eugene Walsh, Nate Manheim, Charles Kirby, Dave Werner, Herman Stern, A. TRADE-SUPPORTED BRITISH CENSOR, ON TRIAL FOR LIFE, BARS 34 FILMS

Warns That Raciness Will Bring Even Heavier Use of Scissors; National Censorship Threatened Unless Change Is Made

By W. H. MOORING, London

American executives will study with interest (if they are wise), the report of the British Board of Film Censors for the year 1931. But they will not read there the whole story, for since the report was framed a matter of weeks ago, the shadows of "Frankenstein" and "Jekyll and Hyde" have added to the horrors which sex soaked celluloid had already struck to the hearts of the British censors.

As it stands, the report, (issued February 17) bases an ultimatum to the trade on the undue exploitation of sex in pictures and gives out a solemn warning to producers that in future the scissors will be much more liberally applied than in the past.

Present Censorship on Trial

The fact is that the present censorship—supported by the trade and with no statutory authority—is on trial for its life. Public agitation has now passed the point of irresponsible criticism, and under strong local pressure licensing authorities in various areas are insisting on "cuts" and special conditions as to the admission of children to see those films which have been passed for exhibition by the censor.

There is also a weighty move afoot to secure a national censorship, and the fact that the present home secretary has intimated the Government's desire to keep out of the matter for the time being, there are strong pointers that Parliamentary influence will force him to change his mind unless something is done to clean up the screen.

"Frankenstein" Going Strong

The new chain of American horrors could not therefore have arrived at a more unpropitious moment. Already notwithstanding that "Frankenstein" during its first week at the London Tivoli took between £7,000 and £8,000—well above the average—and is still going strong after four weeks run, exhibitors all over the country are nervous of booking the film because of the strong likelihood of local bars being put up against its exhibition. The same may be said of "Jekyll and Hyde," which is playing at the Paramount Carlton, London. It is being unwisely exploited as a "Film for Adults Only—with Strong Nerves," and exhibitors are not only influenced by the chance of unhappy reactions among local magistrates and police, and so forth, but by the fact that if they must warn a certain part of their patronage of the unsuitability of the film for general exhibition, their box-office takings will drop. They are using this argument to effect in talking percentages, and this angle may induce the studio executives to consider how far they should go in piling on the "horrors." Incidentally "Frankenstein" was three times cut about by the censor before passing, and is jumpy in the extreme. Over 1,000 feet were cut from "Jekyll," which some British critics declare has been ruined by the censor.

Dealing with sex and other objectionable features of recent pictures, the British censor says that although the number of features submitted during 1931 was 324 less than in 1930, a drop of 1,623,398 in footage, the number of eliminations increased very much, and now totals 17.83 per cent of the total film submitted.

Thirty-four Pictures Rejected

Thirty-four films were totally rejected, the reasons given including the following:

Materialized figure of Christ.
Blasphemy and comic treatment of religious subjects.
Travesty of religious rites.
Treating marriage with contempt.
Death treated with vulgar flippancy.
Gross and brutal travesty of prison life.
Hospital scenes treated with vulgar levity.
Physiological enormities.
Suggestive theme acted by children.
Unrelieved sordid scenes.
Prolonged and gross brutality and bloodshed.
Scenes in houses of ill-repute.
Lives of thoroughly immoral people.
Collusive divorce.
Stories in which the criminal element is predominant.
Objectionable bedroom scenes.
Habitual youthful depravity.
Habitual immorality.
Offensive political propaganda.
Gross and objectionable dialogue.

The report states that the examiners have on first viewing considered 72 subjects to be unsuitable for exhibition in this country and only by drastic eliminations in dealing in some cases and refilming of certain portions have certain subjects been so amended as to pass.

The report says that "there has unquestionably been a tendency of late for films to become more and more daring. Subjects coming under the category termed 'sex' films, others containing various phases of immorality and incidents which tend to bring the institution of marriage into contempt show a marked increase in number.

Threatens More Drastic Action

"It cannot be denied that this tendency is much to be deplored and that it is distinctly harmful to the best interests of the screen. Even when the story is not in itself wholly immoral there appears to be a desire to stress the unpleasant aspect which is best described as 'sex appeal' with a wealth of details which is altogether prohibitive for public exhibition.

"The board has always taken exception to stories in which the main theme is either lust or the development of erotic passions, but the president has come to the definite conclusion that more drastic action will have to be taken with regard to such films in the future. This opportunity is taken of notifying the whole trade of the standpoint he proposes to adopt . . . the board is confident that it will have the full support of the cinema-going public in its attitude and that the president's note of warning will be loyally exploited by the trade, resulting in a considerable reduction next year in the type of film which has given so much anxiety during the current year."

There are certainly some producers who delight to show the female form divine in a state of undress and during the year their numbers have appeared to increase. There has also been a move in a similar direction so far as men are concerned. The objectionable aspect is the tendency upon every conceivable occasion to drag in scenes of undressing, bathroom scenes, and the exhibition of feminine underclothing which are solely introduced for the purpose of giving the film what is termed in the trade "a spicy flavor."

When sound films were first introduced it was necessary that scripts should be submitted with films. The script is of very great assistance to the examiners but in most cases recently it has not been available. The board requests that in future scripts will be submitted with all films. The practice of the board with a view to preventing money from being unnecessarily expended has been to consider production material before films have been actually produced. Increasing advantage has been taken of this system although expressions of opinion in the preliminary stage did not affect the decision of the board upon the completed film. During the past year 46 subjects have been considered in this way and of these only two have required modification afterwards.

So-called 'Horror Pictures' Going Strong Despite the Sharp Cuts; Local Authorities Ask Special Deletion for Children

Wanger, Cohn To Talk on Product

[Picture in Pictorial Section]

Walter Wanger, newly appointed vice-president of Columbia, left the home office late last week for the Coast to confer with company president Harry Cohn on production matters. Wanger took "Washington Merry Go Round" and "The Bitter Tea of General Yen," two recent story purchases of the company, as well as several works on which Columbia has obtained options. Fiction and plays are included.

"The Bitter Tea of General Yen" is a novel by Grace Zaring Stone, set in civil war-torn China. Harlan Thompson, playwright, screen writer and "legitimate" director, who has been signed to write and direct, accompanied Wanger to the Coast. The company has also added Allen Dwan and Irving Cummings to its directors.

Dan Lederman, former general manager of Universal's Chain Theatrical Enterprises, has been appointed Columbia foreign representative for Australia and New Zealand. He leaves New York this week to take up his headquarters in Sydney.

MAYFAIR PICTURES IS NEW NAME OF ACTION

Air Express Rates Sharply Decreased

The Railway Express Agency, Inc., has materially reduced its rates on air express shipments, in a campaign designed to capture the business of film companies for deliveries over the country. It is pointed out that coast-to-coast air express, via connecting lines, is speedy and inexpensive, in view of the new rates now in effect.

The five-pound package rate, under the new schedule, for shipments between Los Angeles and New York, has been reduced from $13 to $6.90, and from New York to Chicago from $5 to $2.20. Proportional reductions have been set for all intermediate points throughout the country.

Under the Railway Express Agency agreement with the air lines the following features are included:

1. Pick-up and special delivery in principal cities at no extra cost.

2. Duplicate system of receipts to shipper and from consignee insuring safety.

3. Shipments accepted prepaid, collect or C. O. D. Prompt remittances.

4. Practically all types of merchandise accepted up to $5,000 in value, 200 lbs. in weight and 106 inches in length and girth.

5. Railway Express Agency includes $50 free liability for 100 lbs. or less in rates. Additional liability insurance costs 15 cents per $100.

6. Prompt notice to shipper and consignee if shipment can not be delivered.

"Film Daily's" Year Book is Distributed

The "Yearbook of Motion Pictures," an annual encyclopedic volume compiled by Film Daily, Jack Alicoate, publisher, was distributed to the trade this week.

Replete with many and divers records and statistical material concerning production, distribution and exhibition, the volume is the 14th annual presentation and contains 1,056 pages.

Turnbull Leaves Paramount After Ten-Year Association

Hector Turnbull on Tuesday resigned from the Paramount studio executive staff at Hollywood, where for the past 10 years he has acted in various capacities and in late years as an associate producer. He plans a month's rest on the Coast, after which he will tour Europe.

Edward Montague has resigned as Paramount's scenario chief, effective April 9.

George Weeks Named President and Claude MacGowan Executive Vice-President at Convention; Others Elected

Action Pictures, Inc., one of the more important independent producer-distributors, hereafter will be known as Mayfair Pictures Corporation. This was decided upon at the first annual convention of executives and exchange franchise holders, held in New York on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. George Weeks was named president and Claude MacGowan was promoted to executive vice-president, in addition to his present duties as general manager. Elevation of Cliff Broughton to a vice-presidency and the announcement of 24 feature productions for 1932-33 also were announced. Broughton is production supervisor.

In next year's lineup, exchange managers were told, there will be four "specials," and the balance will be divided evenly between melodramas and society dramas. MacGowan, in an address, stressed the need for closer cooperation between producer and independent distributor.

The convention opened with a luncheon at the Park Central Hotel. MacGowan made the welcoming address, mentioning the fact that the company has not attempted to tie up distributors, or exhibitors, to five or 10-year franchises, promising better pictures or greater profit, with consequent greater working capital for the company, but has simply asked its distributors to take its product for one year, guaranteeing to deliver productions as specified and on the dates scheduled.

"We had intended producing 36 pictures during the new season, but will work on a schedule of 24 until we can ascertain just how many of the independent series announced by other companies can possibly be delivered," said MacGowan. "If we find out, and I believe we will in August or September, that some of these other independent production announcements were made purely in the hope of the declarers that their announcements would bring advance contracts which could be promoted into production loans, and have failed, then we will put into work an additional 12 pictures for which we are fully financed."

In attendance were: Melvin Hirsch, Bert Kulick and Lester Adler of New York City, Al Friedlander of Buffalo, Marcel Mackelberg of Boston, Louis Korson, E. I. Boreth and George J. Gill of Philadelphia and Washington, D. C., Irving Mandel of Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis, R. Wintraub of Omaha and Kansas City, Thomas McKean and John Walsh of St. Louis, and C. M. White of the AmerAnglo Corporation, New York, foreign distributors.

The home office delegation was comprised of Claude MacGowan, M. C. Howard, Robert Mapletoft, Harold Flavin, H. C. McCormick, P. E. Holman, and Nat Saland, Jack Troys and Harry Glickman, of Craft Film Laboratories.

End of Paramount Block Booking Case Is Expected Soon

Culmination of the 10-year-old case of the Federal Trade Commission against Famous Players-Lasky (Paramount-Publix) is expected with hearings on the commission's appeal for enforcement of its order issued in 1927 to cease and desist from block booking. The hearings open in the U. S. circuit court of appeals for the second circuit (New York) on Monday.

Famous-Lasky ignored the commission's order to cease and desist from block booking and, as is customary, the commission applied for a court affirmation of its order in 1928, which is necessary for the enforcement of an order of the Federal Trade Commission. Hearings on the commission's application were held in abeyance while attorneys for both petitioner and defendant were at work reducing the records of the case to a reasonable length. This was accomplished recently and the petition set for hearing March 7.

Federal Judge Martin T. Maton is the presiding magistrate before whom the case will be heard. Associates are Judges Swan, Chase, A. N. Hand and Lernard Hand.

Kent Home, Says He's "Biding Time"

Sidney R. Kent returned to New York early this week following a brief Florida vacation with the statement that he is in no hurry to make a new association in the industry.

"Just biding my time and watching developments," he said, in reply to inquiries as to his plans.

When Kent's projected association with RKO failed to materialize, and David Sarnoff, chairman of the board of RKO, announced last week that further negotiations would not be held, his name was linked with Fox Films, but Kent refused to comment on the likelihood of this development.

Reports that Kent would form his own company were described by him as "the bunk."

Forbes Opening at Lithonia, Ga.

Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Forbes, formerly of Ocala, Fla., are opening the New Capitol theatre at Lithonia, Ga., with the latest sound equipment. The theatre is being remodeled and repainted and will have a new ventilating system. Mr. and Mrs. Forbes have just returned from Europe, where Mr. Forbes, as sound engineer of Talking Picture Equipment Corporation of America, supervised a number of installations.

Warners, Schine Pay Dividends

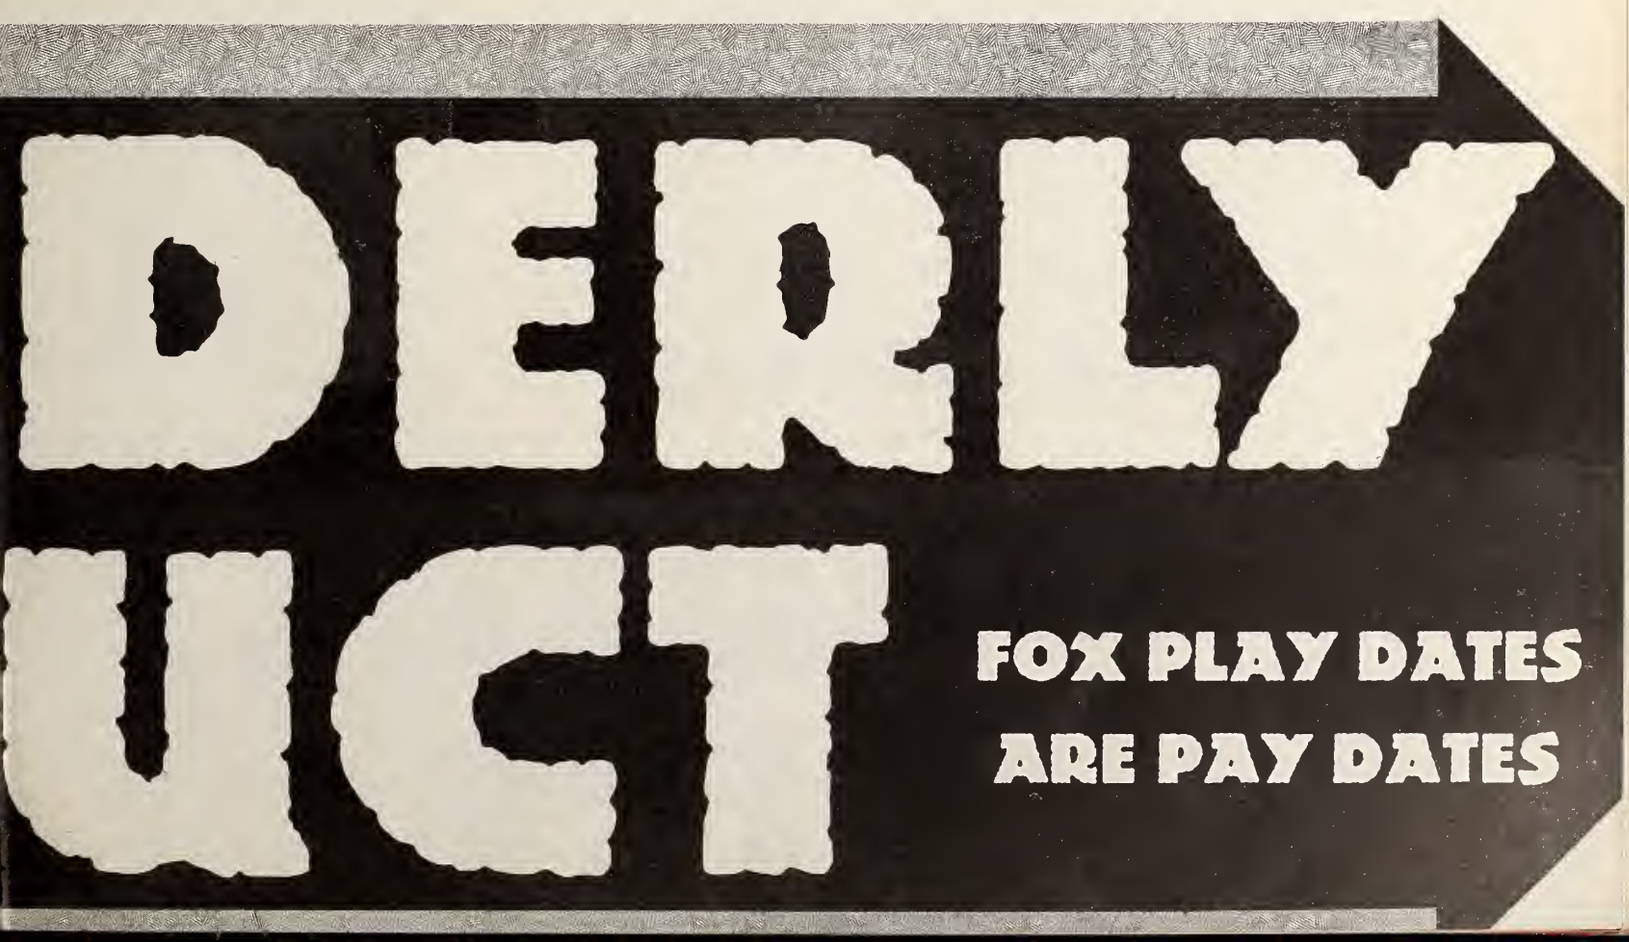
Warner Brothers Pictures regular quarterly dividend of 96¼ cents on the preferred stock was payable on Tuesday of this week. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents on the $3.00 preferred stock also was payable on Tuesday.

HOLLYWOOD SENSES A HIT

CROWDS WOWED

"Disorderly Conduct" is a fast moving, well directed, highly entertaining screen play that gave the audience at the Santa Monica Criterion plenty of laughs and thrills the other night when it was given to them as a surprise preview.

Bill McGuire had a hand in piling up success for the picture by turning in a logical well motivated story. Del Andrews furnished some snappy dialogue. Spencer Tracy and Ralph Bellamy look like a new team for Fox. They carried the action along in a first class manner.



"Disorderly Conduct" will be good news to the managers of Fox theatres throughout the land.

HOLLYWOOD RISING TO DEMANDS OF REVISION IN ECONOMIC ORDER

Genuine Improvements in Production Conditions Seen and Studio Forces Apply Maximum Determination to Help

Business Methods of Operation Are Imposed; Cabinet Control Is Another Definite Trend; Coasts in Closer Relationship

By LEO MEEHAN

Effects of the general economic readjustment of motion picture production activities and methods are now beginning to be evident in Hollywood. Most of the radical retrenchment as to personnel, salaries and operating expenses has taken place, and the studios are now settling down to the business of putting their new alignments into smooth running order.

As will follow any major operation, there have been a certain number of headaches, suffered by many of those affected. To some it has been sharp salary restriction, to others humble pie in swallowing pride to take smaller jobs, or less authority. And there are always those who, through egotism or ignorance, are unable to accept new conditions gracefully, but proceed to yell to high heaven.

Maximum of Determination

Nevertheless, we look out today upon a Hollywood somewhat saddened, but, generally speaking, a community taking its share of the troubles with a minimum of grumbling, and a maximum of determination to do all it can to help make the new order succeed. Many are beginning to realize that possibly out of it all will come some genuine improvements in production conditions which ultimately will work to the advantage of the competent ones, while eliminating many of those who were not so capable.

Business methods of operation are being strictly imposed, whether the creative workers like it or not. And by this I do not mean that those who sign the payrolls are trying to convert the studios into stamping mills or box factories. They are insisting upon systems of budget control under which they can keep the outgo within reasonable neighborliness to the income. No matter how much they may be tempted to spend $500,000 on a given production, if there is only $300,000 available, then it must be made for that amount. Furthermore, preliminary budget figures are being worked out just as accurately and completely as is humanly possible, so that there will be a minimum of the old practice of running over the estimated cost. In fact, those responsible for costs today, including directors, supervisors, studio managers, scenic artists, costumers, property men and the like, understand fully that their jobs are not safe if they trifle with the financial outlay specified by the management.

Trend to Cabinet Production

It was an old Hollywood tradition that "if you bring in a good picture, they will forget all about its cost." Not so, today. Dollars are altogether too valuable, and too scarce. The best looking picture in the world which cost more than it can possibly gross looks like a lemon to those responsible for money expended. The road is now a hard one for the producer, director or other executive who formerly aimed to make a picture for his own personal aggrandizement, without regard for what it would show on the company books at the end of the year.

Cabinet control of production matters, rather than one-man control, seems to be another definite trend. President Tinker of Fox has set up such a system at Movietone City. There is a board responsible for general executive management, and another production board directly concerned with the actual mechanics of turning out the pictures. The latter, of course, is responsible to the former. Paramount already has been working under a somewhat similar system, with a management cabinet and a story cabinet. The day of "production czars" who were the alpha and omega no matter who else had a hand in the matter, is definitely on the wane.

Coasts in Closer Relations

Another result of the readjustment is a very decided effort to maintain closer relations between eastern and studio executives. Important men are being designated to maintain constant and intelligent communication between the executive and sales officers in New York and the production heads in Hollywood. Men like Richard Rowland for Fox, Lee Marcus for Radio, Emanuel Cohen for Paramount and Walter Wanger for Columbia, to mention a few, have been designated to act as liaison officers between production, distribution and finance, so that the heads of each of these important branches may fully understand the other's problems and requirements for successful operation.

It was not so long ago when it was commonly assumed in New York, among many picture people, that Hollywood was inhabited by a lot of uncontrollable Indians who turned out what they pleased, to suit themselves, irrespective of what business judgment—from New York—might dictate. And on the other hand, there were plenty in Hollywood who looked upon the home offices as being populated by a crowd who did everything they could to ruin picture production, probably so they could ultimately take it over themselves. Nowadays, it is becoming thoroughly understood, in Hollywood at least, that unless the home offices and the production offices function jointly and effectively, the whole outfit may land in trouble. And it is a fact that many of the more long-sighted production executives are welcoming the appointment by the home offices of capable men to keep in touch with production and production problems. They believe it will result in better product, as well as a better appreciation of the hazards which do, and always will, surround the making of motion picture entertainment, no matter how many kinds of safeguards may be adopted.

Not Sacrificing Quality

There is, however, a determination not to sacrifice quality to economy. Negative costs will be reduced on the whole; in fact, they already are being cut. But this is being done, not by rushing through half-baked product on breakneck shooting schedules, but by longer and more careful preparation before shooting begins, by general reductions of salaries in all departments commensurate with present conditions, and by vigilant budget control which demands a dollar's worth of results on the screen for a dollar expended. The percentage will be in favor of good entertainment, made at a reasonable cost, because all in Hollywood are beginning to understand that unless such product is forthcoming, the big sound stages are likely to be turned into airplane hangars or nests for bats!

It is a little too early to tell yet just how many pictures will be available. Probably, so far as the major companies are concerned, the grand total will be smaller than last year. However, present signs would indicate that the number will not be very materially smaller. Then, too, the independents are extremely active, and this year they are aiming at the big houses and the big circuits; they are not out to make a bundle of "quickies" suitable only for cheap houses or side-street shooting galleries. They believe they have an opportunity to get plenty of circuit playing time, provided they have quality product, and they are working vigorously to get the necessary quality.

Yes, the old hurricane of Depression hit Hollywood, all right. Now there is something of the wellknown "lull after the storm." But it seems really to presage renewed activity, with a lot of the deadwood cleared away and the stage set for quality product made as reasonably as it is possible in a business where the yardstick cannot always be applied to measure the results.

Fox Convention Program Is Set

Plans have been completed for the Fox 1932-33 sales convention, to be held on May 2, at the home office in New York, according to James R. Grainger, vice-president in charge of distribution, who arrived at the Coast plant last week for conferences with executives on next season's product.

Grainger expects that six to eight pictures for 1932-33 release will be ready to show to the convention of branch managers and executive sales personnel. Convention headquarters will be at the Park Central Hotel, with Roger Ferri again in charge of arrangements. Edward R. Tinker, Fox president, will open the meeting with an address. Sessions will be held twice daily, concluding on May 7. Grainger expects to return to the home office late in March.

ENGLAND'S THEATRE BUSINESS IMPROVES

Endorsements of Arliss Film Continue

According to Warner Brothers, "The Man Who Played God" is enjoying "the amazing and gratifying experience of having ministers and newspaper editors come out point blank in support of the George Arliss film. The support of people with the influence wielded over public opinion by the clergy and the newspaper editors, is not being confined to a mere expression of approval in the form of a letter to the theatre managers. The endorsements are taking a more beneficial form," it is said. "Ministers are delivering sermons from the pulpits and recommending that their congregations see the film. One minister in Cleveland, Ralph Walker of the Baptist Church, actually bought space in all Cleveland newspapers to urge people to see the picture and then hear his sermon on it. Miles J. Snyder, minister of the First Presbyterian Church in Perrysburg, Ohio, wrote John F. Kumler, owner of the Pantheon in Toledo after seeing a private showing that 'I shall do the rather unusual thing of commending this picture to my congregation.' P. C. Wolf, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in Toledo wrote Kumler the same sort of a letter after seeing the picture.

"And neither is this type of support confined to any one section of the country," Warners state. "In Connecticut, the Protestant ministers, who had voted to pass on all pictures and recommend those considered free from objectionable material, began its work by giving favorable notice to 'The Man Who Played God.'

"In Charlotte, N. C.," it is said, "the picture was shown at a private screening for ministers, teachers and civic leaders at the Broadway theatre. A concrete illustration of the effect the picture had was seen in a letter from one of the ministers to the editor of the Charlotte Observer. In the letter, which was published right on the editorial page although it ran almost two columns in length, the minister, S. B. McLean, pointed out the great good a picture of the type of the Arliss film can do. The editor, himself, wrote an editorial calling attention to the minister's letter. In addition several Charlotte ministers called the attention of their congregations to the picture.

"Other instances of worthwhile support can be cited in Columbus, where a prominent rabbi, Dr. Tarshish, not only praised the picture at length in a radio talk but also spoke about it in his Temple. And there is the editor of the Memphis News-Scimitar who devoted a lengthy editorial to the merits of 'The Man Who Played God'."

Heads Warner Wisconsin Houses

Jack Keegan has been named manager of the Warner circuit in Wisconsin, under a realignment. Eugene Arnstein has been succeeded as booker by George Warick; Arthur Siegel is city manager in Milwaukee, and various house managers have shifted posts.

Sam Morris Pays Tribute to Public Spirit of Britons; Says Musical Productions Best Meet Europe's Demands Now

Marked improvement in theatre business in England was reported by Sam E. Morris, Warner Brothers vice president in charge of distribution, on his return to New York from an extended European visit. Much of Morris' time abroad was spent at the company's London headquarters and the Teddington studios, where European distribution problems were discussed with foreign representatives of the company from various capitals.

Morris paid tribute to the public spirit in England, which, he believes, is doing much to alleviate economic stress in that country, and insures England's early return to conditions approaching economic normalcy.

Working Way Out

"Economically, England is as sorely tried as America," Morris said, "yet there is no public talk of 'depression' and no apparent widespread complaining. England is quietly working its way out of its difficulties. A maximum number of people are given some work to do by shortening working hours. The result is that the public state of mind is a cheerful and optimistic one, and business in England is benefiting from it. English theatres are doing a noticeably better business now than they were doing last fall."

Morris said the European demand for American pictures can be met best with musical productions at this time. He cited the success of Warner's "Viennese Nights," a musical, in England and on the Continent, and various production efforts of foreign studios to prove that problems of dialogue are offset by productions having important elements consisting in music.

Less Editing and Adapting

"There is less editing and adapting to be done in preparing musicals for foreign markets than on any other type of picture," he said. "Music is an international language, and if stories which can be carried primarily by music are obtained they will make the best export pictures for some time to come. European audiences want American pictures which they can understand. They would rather see a musical, which is easily understood, than some lavish production that is overburdened with unintelligible dialogue."

Warner will make both English and French versions at the Teddington studios, where six pictures on the current schedule remain to be made. Next season's plans call for about fifteen pictures, Morris said. Details of the new schedule await a visit from Jack Warner, production chief, who probably will visit the company's studios in England early this spring.

'32 Kinematograph Year Book Is Both Compact, Complete

The nineteenth annual issue of The Kinematograph Year Book, a copy of which has just reached this office, presents a compact yet complete and orderly array of facts and information of the industry in England. S. G. Rayment, editor of Kinematograph Weekly, introduces the volume with an article covering the outstanding developments of the year, under the heading "Fighting Difficulties." There are also separate articles on the year in America, Australia and Canada.

Data are classified in general under these headings: Foreign and colonial trade directory, films section, films registered under the Act, trade organizations, legal section, financial section, equipment and technical, "who's what and where in the trade and in the studio," and directory section.

For Ready Reference

The trade directory gives names and addresses of producers, distributors, supply dealers and trade publications in the various countries, with the listings in a form to make them readily accessible for reference.

Following a listing of productions trade-shown and reviewed in 1931 comes a summarization of pictures offered, by companies, and then of productions registered under the new Films Act, this in chronological order.

A dozen pages are devoted to trade organizations' personnel, after which is given legal information, first a digest of acts and regulations, then home office regulations, cinematograph films act, and a review of principal law cases of the year.

Handy Technical Section

New companies registered during the year are catalogued alphabetically within a chronological order by months. There is also information as to bankruptcies and liquidations.

There are 29 pages of the exhaustive equipment and technical section, including highly technical data for technicians of the motion picture industry, such as tables of lens focus, and relative efficiency of opaque screens.

Biographical material, which, it is pointed out, "has been supplied by the persons concerned," is divided into panoramas of the trade at large, of the studio, and finally of cameramen.

The trade directory, general and classified, as well as of the leading companies in Great Britain, provides a most practicable listing of companies, with address and telephone number—and that is exactly what is desired by the busy individual who desires only the correct name of the company and how to reach it by letter or phone.

Activities Classified

The classified directory takes in the many fields of industry activity, giving only the name of company or individual. Official details and personnel of leading companies then are given under separate heading.

The final subject is a listing of theatres in the United Kingdom and Ireland, alphabetically by towns, except for circuits.

Rita McGoldrick Discusses Films In Midwest City

Rita C. McGoldrick, editor of Motion Picture's School and Screen, Junior Show and Your Public departments, was guest speaker at several important meetings in Chicago last week. Monday, February 22, Mrs. McGoldrick appeared on the forum program of the Loyola Community theatre where she addressed club women and organized groups on the subject, "School and Screen." Following the talk, in which she outlined the power of intelligently organized group activity in support of better pictures. there was forum discussion. Representatives of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Film Board of Trade, the Ciscora representing the organized student body of Chicago with a membership of 40,000, small clubs and Sodality units, all participated in the discussion.

During Mrs. McGoldrick's stay in Chicago she addressed the convention of the Ciscora, representing the organized student body of the Catholic high schools and colleges of the city. At the convention the motion picture chairman, Miss Jane Spaulding, arranged to have a motion picture chairman appointed in every high school and college in the city, this combined group to work under the direction of Mrs. McGoldrick in support of better pictures. Endorsed lists of pictures will be distributed through these groups by the chairman and the School and Screen service made actively operable through the entire student body. Broadcasts over a local radio station will be attempted as a development of the whole service.

On Tuesday, February 23, Mrs. McGoldrick addressed the student body, faculty and guests at Rosary College, River Forest, Illinois, and the students, faculty and alumnae of the Madames of the Sacred Heart, Sheridan Road, Chicago.

State Institutions Plan Sound Shows

Fourteen Massachusetts state institutions, including 11 hospitals and three schools, will provide sound pictures for the entertainment of inmates and staffs. Contracts have been drawn and purchase orders have gone forward for the installation of Photophone apparatus of RCA Victor Company, which claims this is the largest contract of its kind ever consummated and closely follows one recently awarded to the same company for the installation of 12 similar sound reproducing units in schools and hospitals by the State Board of Control of Texas.

Mississippi Taxes Theatres

The Mississippi House of Representatives has passed a bill levying a tax of one cent on each 10-cent admission at all theatres and places of amusement. Shows sponsored by charitable institutions only are exempt.

Wurtzel Stays As Fox Studio Head Under Contract Change

Announcement was made at the Fox studios in Hollywood Tuesday that under an adjustment of Sol Wurtzel's contract he would remain as general superintendent of the studio until May 25 and that continuation beyond that date would be subject to negotiation at that time. It is thought no final disposition of the matter will be made pending the return of Winfield Sheehan. It is understood that the original Wurtzel contract before adjustment had nearly three years to run..

In New York, President E. R. Tinker of Fox had nothing to say regarding the Wurtzel situation other than admitting that "the agreement was amicably adjusted before I departed from Hollywood."

Universal Shows $615,786 Profit Netted in a Year

A net profit of $615,786.64 for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1931, is reported by Universal Pictures Corporation. This reflects the result of the first full year's operations under the company's new policy of amortizing negative and positive costs on the basis of experience tables.

The change in the method of amortization was started with the pictures of the 1930-31 season. There was, therefore, included in the income for the fiscal year, revenue on pictures of prior seasons' releases, the cost of which had already been completely written off.

The current and working assets as of October 31, 1931, were $8,873,344.31 and the current liabilities $2,270,606.43. The total surplus was $3,652,018.42 which includes $2,194,125.07 earned surplus; $1,354,000.00 surplus account revaluation of land and $103,893.35 discount on first preferred stock acquired for sinking fund.

Canavan Appointed to Public Relations Post in Paramount

William F. Canavan, who recently resigned as president of the IATSE and Motion Picture Machine Operators, has been appointed to a public relations post with Paramount Publix.

Canavan had been president of the union for eight years, his resignation following his failure to obtain support from the various locals of the country when he sought to have instituted a temporary wage reduction as an economic measure.

Resigns from Universal for A Mascot Distribution Post

Morris Goodman, for several years with Universal, has resigned to accept a distribution post with Mascot Pictures, independent.

Mascot will produce four 12-episode serials for 1932-33, equaling the schedule for 1931-32. Preparations for placing the first of the new group in work are now in progress on the Coast under the direction of Nat Levine, company president.

Name Receiver for General Theatres Equipment Concern

U. S. Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware was appointed receiver on Monday of this week for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., in chancery court at Wilmington, Del. General Theatres Equipment, of which Harley L. Clarke is president, is a holding company controlling Fox Film Corporation, Fox Theatres Corporation and other Fox interests.

The corporation filed an answer admitting insolvency and consenting to the appointment of the receiver because, according to Clarke, it believed this action was in the interests of conserving the assets of the company pending the development of a contemplated reorganization plan.

Clarke further declared that none of the corporations in which G. T. E. holds a controlling interest will be adversely affected by the receivership proceedings, since G. T. E. is a "holding and non-operating company." In addition to the Fox interests, G. T. E. controls International Projector Corporation, National Theatre Supply Co., J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Co., Theatre Equipment Acceptance Corporation, Strong Electric Co., Ashcraft Automatic Arc Co., Hall & Connolly, J. M. Wall Machine Co., Fearless Camera Co., and Cinema Building Corporation.

The receiver was appointed on application of Gordon B. Affleck of New York, a creditor of the corporation in the amount of $11,124.

Harley Clarke said the interest on the large indebtedness of the corporation, created mainly in connection with financing of the purchase of Fox Film Corporation control in April, 1930, cannot be paid while these stocks are unable to pay dividends. Accordingly, he said, the formation of a reorganization plan became necessary.

Saperstein Retains Illinois Allied Post

Reported dissatisfaction with the regime of Aaron Saperstein as head of the Illinois Allied Theatre Owners disappeared with his re-election to the presidency of the organization this week.

Reports had it that an insurgent group sought to have W. A. Steffes, president of the Allied States, assume the direction of the Illinois unit at a salary of $250 a week. Saperstein's salary of $5,000 a year had not been paid him. Efforts of the insurgent group to finance an opposition ticket failed, and the only other name on the ballot opposing Saperstein was that of Verne Langdon.

Other officers elected were: E. E. Alger, Peru, Ill., vice president; Ed Hafferkamp, vice president; Harry Lasker, secretary, and Sidney Selig, treasurer. The officers are also members of the board of directors. Additional directors elected are: Nate Wolf, Floyd Brockell, Ben Lasker, Verne Langdon, Ludwig Sussman, M. O. Wells, Louis Rudolph, Walter Sabitz, Abe Ostrowsky, A. L. Christy, Fred Guilford, Steve Bennis and Edward Zorn.

U. S. TO BE ASKED TO REBUILD ARMY HOUSES

Movement to Rehabilitate 100 Theatres Would Require Large Outlay in Equipment and Construction Needs; Start Petition

A movement launched this week on the West Coast may bring about a theatre reconstruction program by the United States Government which would embrace a tremendous expenditure in rehabilitating approximately 100 theatres at army posts and at veterans' homes, and would aid considerably in further bolstering the general theatre equipment and theatre construction markets.

At present, the movement has reached the petition stage and started when the theatre at Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, near Hollywood, was condemned as a firetrap. A petition will be presented to the Administration at Washington and its sponsors are said to be of the opinion that, if granted, it will mean a general reconstruction of picture houses maintained in other army camps and army homes throughout the nation. In addition to dozens of homes where films are screened regularly for soldiers, and also at hospitals and recuperation places, the Government shows features regularly on from two to seven nights weekly, at 14 army posts and camps in Dallas territory, 17 in St. Louis territory, 16 in New York territory and seven and 20 in and about Seattle and Washington, D. C., respectively.

If the aid of the American Legion and other national veterans' and militaristic organizations of a like nature is enlisted, the movement might be further assured of fulfillment. A Congressional appropriation would be necessary.

Theatres have been in operation at the 74 army camps and posts for some few years. Operated by the adjutant general of the Army, a civilian army director and a director of bookings handle physical activities directly from special headquarters in New York. Each territorial division has a branch manager, usually a civilian, who books and supplies product to the camps in his respective territory. They play sound films, which are purchased en bloc.

Roxy Voting Trust To Be Formed Soon

With the passing of management control of the Roxy theatre, New York, from the Fox Theatres Corporation to the Class A stockholders of the Roxy, a voting trust representing the new majority stockholders will be formed some time this month to act on extension of financial obligations maturing and on renewal of a Fox product contract which expires about April 1.

Managing control of the Roxy passed from Fox Theatres to Roxy Class A stockholders with the passing of the dividend on the theatre's stock, due March 1. The Roxy's charter of incorporation provides that the theatre is to pay dividends of $3.50 a share per year on the Class A cumulative preferred, but that if four such dividends are passed by the directorate, managing control passes to the Class A shareholders. For the first three-quarters of the company's first fiscal year the dividends were not paid. In 1928, and since then, checks were mailed regularly until the current quarter, when the existing board determined to pass it.

The minority directors representing the Class A shareholders are now preparing for the holding of a meeting at which the Class A shareholders will elect a majority of directors and assume management of the Roxy. The minority directors are F. Pope, F. L. Robbins and W. C. Chanler, who represent 125,000 Class A shares. The 360,000 shares of common also outstanding has heretofore been represented by nine directors. Most of the common is controlled by Roxy Circuit, Inc., which in turn is controlled by Fox Theatres Corporation under terms of a deal with Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, two of the original sponsors of the theatre.

Renewal of the Roxy's first-run film contract with Fox, which expires April 1, and action on a $1,500,000 obligation, maturing in July, will be among the first business to be transacted by the Class A directorate upon assuming managing control of the Roxy. In a letter to Class A shareholders, the minority directors express optimism over the favorable outcome of both emergencies.

Their letter says in part: "We have sound reason for our belief that the mortgage can be extended or refinanced and that a satisfactory film contract can be secured if continuous control can be assured for a substantial period of time. That can be done only through a voting trust. With such a voting trust as we are now suggesting to you we are confident of being able to secure complete management having no interest but successful operation of the theatre. Without the assurance of such unit control, neither bondholders nor film producers can safely contract with the corporation."

Much of the Class A stock is scattered in small lots. For that reason, it is understood, the voting trust proposed by the Class A directorate is reported to be regarded as feasible to handle the management end of the theatre's business.

Columbus, O., Group Charges Inefficient Censor Operation

The Parent-Teachers' Association is registering strong opposition at the alleged inefficient operation of the censor board in Columbus, Ohio. The group charges the board with "cheating the citizens of Ohio" and exposing the children to contamination by allowing objectionable action and dialogue to be presented in films.

It is charged that the board's present system of inspection to insure carrying out of the board's edicts, is wholly inadequate, resulting in the showing by exhibitors of films eliminated wholly or in part by the state censor. Three inspectors, previously employed, were recently dispensed with in a policy of retrenchment.

Two Attacks On Motion Pictures Answered Sharply

Two attacks recently leveled at the motion picture by the Reverend George Reid Andrews, one time chairman of the drama committee of the Federal Council of Churches, at present a Bridgeport, Conn., minister, have been answered; first by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and the other, editorially, by The Danbury Times, of Danbury, Conn.

Late in January, Reverend Andrews, addressing a group in Brooklyn, claimed he had been offered improper employment by the producers' association. Milliken denounced the statement as "wholly untrue" and explained the circumstances which led to the claim by the minister. In 1926, according to Milliken, the cooperation of church representatives was solicited for the production of Cecil B. deMille's "The King of Kings." Mr. Andrews, designated by the Federal Council of Churches, and, says Milliken, without the knowledge of the organization's officers, set certain conditions upon which his cooperation depended. Milliken said: "Mr. Andrews is making a wholly false statement when he says that either Mr. Hays or I made him the offers of employment alleged in his address."

In the other instance, Andrews, addressing a group of the clergy at Danbury said in part: "The producers' sole motive is profit . . . they claim the greater interests of the people are centered around sex, crime and love (of the movie variety). They have accepted utterly the theory that the mental age of the average observer is 12 years: that is, that most of the adults who attend the movies are morons."

The Danbury newspaper editorially refuted these remarks on February 2, saying in part, under the caption "The Movie Drama is Mostly Good," Andrews "seems to lack consciousness of the nature of the drama. Some of his remarks are not quite in understanding, are not even in good taste." The editorial refutes his contention that only certain themes are used in films, with the remark that if his advice were taken all theatres must close their doors and all library shelves be swept bare of books. It continues: "Few thoughtful persons, and none of the thoughtless will agree with him. Pictures are as nearly a permanency as any institution of the sort can be. They are growing in power and appeal. They have given the people the best stage it ever had, and, all in all, a higher type of plays than they used to get."

State Report Shows a Trend Upward in Hiring of Extras

The California state department of industrial relations reports an upward trend in the employment of women extras in films since the first of the year.

The hiring of extras during the month of January reached a total of 4,186, according to the report, compared with 3,655 during December. The wages of these extras during January were $31,065.50, while in December they were $29,407.50.

Bunn Tells What Service Dollar to Erpi Is Used For

The service dollar pays for trouble-preventing inspections, appointment and emergency calls, replacement part inventories in key cities, free replacements, repairs and improvements, general administrative expenses and protection against fire loss, C. W. Bunn, general sales manager of Electrical Research Products, Inc., said Wednesday in pointing out that service charges have been brought to a minimum consistent with the maintenance of high quality of reproduction and continuous, dependable operation.

Only 4.3 cents of every dollar goes to administrative and engineering expenses.

The regular inspection service takes 54.1 cents and emergency and appointment calls account for 13 cents. The former comprise the regular trouble preventing inspection made by a field force of 600 who travel 5,720,000 miles annually among 5,500 Western Electric equipped theatres. Appointment and emergency calls are additional visits.

Experience gained in contact with 8,000 theatres has demonstrated, Mr. Bunn said, that a definite relationship exists between the number of inspection and emergency calls. The latter at present average one per theatre every 18 months. Cutting down the inspection calls would bring a larger number of more costly emergency calls, he explained. Even more important, he pointed out, would be the menace of interrupted and cancelled shows.

Thirteen cents out of every dollar go for the maintenance of $750,000 replacement part inventories in 35 key cities and of 173 other service points.

Out of every service dollar 4.6 cents go for free replacements, repairs and improvements made by Erpi without charge to exhibitors, he said, at an estimated saving of $750,000 to exhibitors in one year. It also finances the Inquiry Bureau in New York.

The final 11 cents out of the dollar goes for protection against fire loss, Mr. Bunn said.

Moray Touring Country

Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, who left last week for a tour of all Warner exchanges, has decided to strike through the Middlewest on his way to the Coast and to return via the Southwest.

Returns to United Artists

Harry D. Wilson has returned to the United Artists Coast studio in a publicity post, after an absence of two years. He replaces Harry Brand during his trip in exploiting "Arrowsmith" in the Northwest.

All Censors Pass Sale Film

"The Expert," Warner film starring "Chic" Sale, has been passed by every censor board in the country without a single elimination, according to the company.

BRITISH OFFICIALS TO SEEK FILM STIMULANT

Quota for British Films Will Be One Subject Before Imperial Conference in July, Says One M.P.; Last Effort Was Shelved

The Imperial Conference, opening at Ottawa, Ontario, on July 18, with leading statesmen of the British Isles and the Dominions in attendance, will study the question of stimulating the motion picture industry throughout the Empire. Delegates to the conference are being asked to bring film proposals for the consideration of the Empire assembly. What these proposals will be remains to be seen but a broad hint has been given by W. H. Ireland, member of Parliament for Hastings, Ontario, who is Conservative.

"A quota of British films will be one of the subjects discussed at the Imperial Conference," Mr. Ireland said. "I think that we, in Canada, should have more British films. The picture business is a great business and I, for one, feel that Great Britain should be well represented in the films shown in Canada."

Not the First Time

This is not the first time that film quota measures will have been discussed at Empire meetings. At the last Imperial Conference, held in London, the picture situation was dealt with by committee and also in the general meeting but the progress with the subject was slight. It was hinted that Canada had proved somewhat of a stumbling block in the matter, but the subject is to be revived and, this time, right on Canadian territory.

The Conference next July is considered all important from an Empire viewpoint because of the complexity of International relations, particularly with regard to tariffs, differences in currency and national economies. Much preparation is in hand at Ottawa for the Imperial sessions and, despite wholesale slashes in Government estimates for the year, an appropiation of $25,000 has been made for local conference expenses.

Film quota developments in Canada have been practically at a standstill for months. One year ago, the Province of Ontario adopted a film quota law, favoring British pictures, but the statute immediately was placed on the legislative shelf. The warning was given, however, that it would and could be brought into play when necessary. The exact percentage of required British films and other details were left open for the pleasure of the Ontario Government.

Pressure in British Columbia

Legislators of British Columbia have done much talking, over a period of ten years or more, of the desirability of a film quota regulation but nothing much has been done about it. Pressure has been brought to bear upon the British Columbia Government from various sources, both for and against. One rather convincing argument has always been that there were not sufficient available British features to round out a practical quota limit for any theatre. Against this has been the assertion that certain film exchanges in Canada had quantities of British films in their vaults which could not be marketed.

Much has been heard in Canada about British films, particularly at election time and also from patriotic women's organizations. Almost any politician, inclined to flag-waving, would shout something about British films, but it always has seemed that the idea, whatever it was, died with the cheers.

But now we have an Imperial Conference in the offing for Ottawa and there are indications that Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and other portions of the Empire, including the Mother Country, will suggest something tangible — particularly with English pictures really proving of value and the pound sterling underrated in comparison with the American dollar.

Studios, Circuits Adopt Frame Size

Columbia, Educational—Metropolitan, Fox, Hal Roach, MGM, Paramount, RKO Radio, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National are among the major studios to put into effect the new Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences specifications for a uniform practice governing the image area on 35 mm. film for both photography and projection. Major circuits have also adopted the specifications, according to the Academy in Hollywood, of which Lester Cowan is executive secretary.

The change is noted as completing one of the final equipment steps in the transition from silent to sound pictures, and is seen as resulting in an important improvement in photographic quality. Specifications and instructions for adapting apertures, lenses and screen masks will be distributed to the projectionists of all theatres in the country during the next two months.

Studio camera apertures will be immediately adjusted to photograph an image .868 inches by .631 inches on the negative, with center line .7445 inches from the control edge, to be correlated to theatre projector apertures .600 inches by .825 inches, with center line .7380 inches from the control edge, the difference being necessary allowances for shrinkage and mechanical tolerances.

Teachers Blame Parents for Films Unsuitable For Child

Parents, and not theatre managers, are to blame if unsuitable pictures are shown for children, since exhibitors seek to satisfy the public, it was concluded by members of the Buffalo Council of Parents and Teachers, meeting last week.

Pictures with a special appeal to children were praised by the group at the session.

BUYING PRICES ON RISE

Purchasing Agent of RKO Radio Studio Indicates General Advance of 7 Per Cent in Prices

A steady incline toward normalcy in buying of commodities for use at the studios in production of pictures is the general trend, in the opinion of Dick Wilde, purchasing agent of the RKO Radio studios in Hollywood.

7 Per Cent Price Gain

With studio commodity purchases given as above $1,000,000, Wilde points to an indicated 7 per cent general advance in prices of such items as building materials and furniture and incidentals pertinent to production. Wilde also called attention to the wide range of materials used in production as placing the studio purchasing department in a strategic position to feel fluctuations of prices for commodities.

More than 10,000 items were pooled in Wilde's estimate of a 7 per cent increase in wholesale prices, RKO Radio said.

Among Wilde's observations are these:

Building plaster, of the type used in set construction, has advanced the most within the past year, with a total ascendancy of 40 per cent.

Rock, sand and cement have increased 10 per cent.

Furniture, which reached a rock bottom five months ago, has become stabilized as to price, with an early advance of 5 to 10 per cent indicated.

Lumber Up 10 Per Cent

Electric supplies have maintained their price levels of the past year with the exception of copper wire, which was forced down to new low marks because of deflated copper valuations.

Lumber, of which the studio purchases 3,000,000 feet annually, has increased approximately 10 per cent, going up in some cases to three dollars extra a thousand feet.

More pessimistic, however, was the report in respect to cotton goods and stationery. Cotton materials have fallen to their lowest levels, while paper prices have decreased 25 per cent.

Censor Sees 10% Less Films in '31

The Kansas state censor board, whose 1931 report has just been issued at Kansas City, indicates that 10 per cent less films were viewed than in 1930. During 1931 the board viewed 4,812 reels, or approximately 4,812,000 feet, compared with "more than 1,012 miles" in 1930. Fees dropped off from $31,693 in 1930, to $27,740, representing amounts paid by distributors for having films pre-viewed.

The board is self-sustaining, and turns over to the state's general fund 10 per cent of its earnings. Salaries of 13 employees come out of the balance. The board received for approval "4,362 reels of original prints which had to be reviewed, 18,547 reels of prints of such pictures and 1,877 reels of cartoons, educational pictures and pictures on which tags had been lost."

Distributors pay for every reel scanned by the censors, regardless of the number of prints. The fee is $2 per reel for "first prints" of features and short subjects and 25 cents each for cartoons, one-reel educational films and all tags replacing those lost on pictures already censored. A charge of $1 is made on all copies of features and short subjects which must be tagged before they can be shown in Kansas theatres.

Smith Named to RCA Board

Harold Smith, vice-president of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, has been elected a member of the board of directors of the Radio Corporation of America, to fill the vacancy caused by the recent death of H. P. Davis.

Midwest Trend Is Upward: Freuler

John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, who recently returned from a trip through the Middlewest, sees the easing of farmer credit reflected at the box offices of the exhibitors.

Freuler notes that former circuit houses in the Middlewest are being taken over by independent circuit owners, and records as "encouraging" the number of reopened dark theatres in the territory through which he passed.

"Although losses since October have been continuous and cumulative up to the end of last year," said Freuler, "a general change for the better has been evident for the past two months and if the weather and crop situation meet expectations the improvement should be sustained." Freuler pointed out that one house, which had cost $150,000 to build, had been given over to the owner of an independent circuit for $10,000. He sees theatre operation again on a paying basis when the real estate situation is adjusted.

Operators Open Convention at Columbus, Ohio, on June 6

An estimated attendance of 900 delegates and 3,000 visitors to the biennial convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators, to be held the week of June 6, at Columbus, is predicted by officials of the union. An invitation to attend one of the sessions has been extended Will H. Hays. William C. Elliott, formerly of Cincinnati, recently elected international president, will attend the convention with his entire New York office staff.

10. Red-Headed Woman, by Katharine Brush.

Distributors May Drop Their Exchanges in Portland, Ore.

It is reported that some distributors are seriously considering closing Portland, Ore., exchanges, with the territory to be served from Seattle. The move is seen as resulting in a definite saving to distributors, but an inconvenience to exhibitors because of inadequate distribution for the territory. Columbia, Fox, MGM, Paramount, Radio, Tiffany, Universal, Warner-First National have Portland exchanges.

It has been indicated, however, that the distributors are divided on the move, in the belief that express shipments handled from Seattle would, in many cases, cost almost as much as film rentals secured in smaller towns of the Northwest territory. Portland covers all of Oregon and a few towns along the Columbia River in Washington.

Loew's Declares Dividend

The board of directors of Loew's, Inc., has declared a quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the common stock, payable March 31, 1932, to stockholders of record on March 15.

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Family Suitability

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE
Fox VERY GOOD

Will Rogers' latest picture, based on Booth Tarkington's novel, "The Plutocrat," tells the story of a wealthy razor blade manufacturer, who takes his wife and daughter to Europe on a combined "Business and Pleasure" trip. Their experiences and adventures will provide an evening of fun for the entire family. (Will Rogers, Jetta Goudal, Joel McCrea, Dorothy Peterson.)

CARNIVAL BOAT GOOD
RKO Pathe

Against the realistic background of an active logging camp, an old logger realizes his dream of having his son take his place. A charming romance with a girl on a Carnival Boat, and a villain in the person of the head loader, add interest and suspense to this thrilling picture. Unusually well photographed, cast and directed. (Bill Boyd, Ginger Rogers, Fred Kohler, Hobart Bosworth, Edgar Kennedy, Marie Prevost.)

CAVALIER OF THE WEST GOOD
Tec-Art

The captain of a troop of U. S. cavalry, stationed in the West during the Eighties, loves a ranchman's daughter, but gives her up to his young brother when, after a series of exciting episodes, the younger one proves he is worthy of the trust. The cast is adequate and the story a typical Western. (Harry Carey, Carmen Laroux, Kane Richmond.)

CHEATERS AT PLAY GOOD
Fox

Drama—Thomas Meighan plays the role of "The Lone Wolf," hero of a series of successful stories. The picture deals with incidents after his reformation, when as a detective he endeavors to prevent his son from following his early career as a crook. It has been interestingly told and is capably acted. (Thomas Meighan and Charlotte Greenwood.)

THE EXPERT VERY GOOD
Warner

An adaptation of Edna Ferber's "Old Man Minnick." It is a study of the difficulties of the adjustment of two generations living together and is full of human interest. Entertainment value is good. Chic Sale is human as the wise, lovable and pathetic character of "Old Man Minnick." (Chic Sale, Dickie Moore, Lois Wilson, Earle Fox.)

FIREMAN SAVE MY CHILD GOOD
First National

Comedy—With a story that is pure nonsense and a star admirably fitted for the part of a bush league ball player who makes good, but who cannot rid himself of his mania for chasing fire engines, this picture will prove amusing to the average audience. (Joe E. Brown.)

GAY CABALLERO GOOD
Fox

A Mexican border story of love and intrigue, with the usual bandit hero. The continuity is uneven and the plot an old one, but the tempo is swift; there are hairbreadth escapes and thrilling riding, against a romantic background. (George O'Brien and Victor McLaglen.)

LIGHTNING WARRIOR GOOD
Chapters 10, 11, 12
Mascot

A continuation of the serial with Rin-Tin-Tin. It is good of its kind, though many involved episodes leave one a bit incredulous.

THE LOST SQUADRON VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

An intensely interesting portrayal of the story of three friends who have been aviators, their return and attempted adjustment to civilian life, their work in the "Squadron of Death" in Hollywood and the love and tragedy of their private lives. The part of a mad director of aerial pictures, ready to sacrifice human lives for picture thrills, is remarkably well acted by von Stroheim. Excellent entertainment value. (Richard Dix, Mary Astor, Erich von Stroheim, Joel McCrea.)

MARK OF THE SPUR, THE GOOD
Big Four

A routine Western. Nevertheless, it deserves a place on a list because of its spirit of adventure and daring and the thrilling riding of the star, Bob Custer.

ONE MAN LAW VERY GOOD
Columbia

Buck Jones as the sheriff works hard to save the rancher's property when the villain seizes it. He upholds the law although his own interests suffer. A Western that offers good entertainment. The horse, Silver, is well worth seeing.

THE SADDLE BUSTER VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

A thoroughly delightful out-of-door picture which might be used as a model for future Westerns. Of interest to all who love horses, beautiful mountain scenery and a simple story of courage and fineness. A family picture for all except the ultra-sophisticated. (Tom Keane, Robert Frazer, Marie Quillan, Mary Foster.)

SKY DEVILS GOOD
United Artists

Two lifeguards enter the war and are taught to fly. Their escapades form the basis of a light story which has fair entertainment value. There are some excellent air scenes. (Spencer Tracy, William Boyd, George Cooper, Ann Dvorak.)

SUNSHINE SUSIE VERY GOOD
Gaumont British

The charm of simplicity, light hearted gaiety, and an appealing human interest story, make this Viennese picture, which has been produced by a British company, a finely acceptable family audience feature. (Reah Miller, Jack Halbert.)

TARZAN, THE APE MAN GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Edgar Rice Burroughs has thrilled old and young with his Tarzan stories for some years and it is a satisfaction to see this one on the screen. The startling beauty of the jungle forms the background and the perfect physique of the famous swimmer, Johnny Weismuller, offers a believable Tarzan. Exciting and enjoyable entertainment. (Johnny Weismuller, Neil Hamilton, Maureen O'Sullivan, C. Aubrey Smith.)

TEXAS CYCLONE VERY GOOD
Columbia

A Western in which there is a case of mistaken identity leading to the eradication of a band of cattle rustlers. (Tim McCoy.)

TEXAS GUN FIGHTER GOOD
Tiffany

There is fine action in this story of two members of an outlaw gang who become law-abiding and help to rid a Western mining center of thieves who have been stealing bullion. Wonderful riding, a believable plot and convincing characterizations make it enjoyable entertainment. (Ken Maynard, Shelia Mannors, Lloyd Ingraham, Harry Woods.)

TRAPPED IN A SUBMARINE GOOD
British International

An exciting, but harrowing, depiction of the dangers of life in a submarine. It has been excellently produced under the supervision of the British Admiralty. (Sydney Seaward and John Batten.)

ZANE GREY'S SOUTH SEA ADVENTURES VERY GOOD
Sol Lesser

This picture of Zane Grey's recent voyage to the South Seas in search of the marlin swordfish is full of interest, thrills and unusual views of out-of-the-way places. The accompanying comments add much to the dramatic entertainment of this adventure of the sea. (Zane Grey, Romer Grey, Tom Geraghty, Wedgwood Norvell.)

Adult Suitability

ARSENE LUPIN VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

This picture is strictly adult entertainment in the mystery class—amusing, witty and clever in its presentation. It is, of course, noteworthy for the acting of the Barrymores who carry the picture with their usual brilliance.

BEAST OF THE CITY, THE Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer VERY GOOD

A counteractant to gangster heroics, this is the story of a captain in the police department who, through conscientious work, is rewarded by the appointment to police inspector. His aim is to bring justice to those who are brought before him. (Walter Huston, Wallace Ford, and Jean Harlow.)

FILE NO. 113 VERY GOOD
Allied

A mystery story of Paris based on the novel by Emil Gaboriau. The suave and forceful detective, M. Le Coq, accomplishes the seemingly impossible in ferreting out crime and exposing the criminals. The story is complicated and not always clear, but it is well acted and has some exceptionally exciting parts. (Lew Cody, Mary Nolan, Clara Kimball Young, George E. Stone, William Collier, Jr.)

HEART OF NEW YORK, THE Paramount VERY GOOD

This is the stage play, "Mendel, Inc.," transferred to the screen. The background of primitive country life changes to the bewildering one of New York City and the multiplied problems of a Jewish family arouse sympathy. The

RITA C. McGOLDRICK'S SELECTIONS

humor is clean and altogether enjoyable. (Smith and Dale, George Sidney, Ruth Hall.)

HELL'S HOUSE GOOD
B. F. Zeidman

This film, originally named "Juvenile Court," deals with the brutalizing hardships of young boys in a state reformatory. It is, of course, unpleasant because of the subject matter, but it presents serious material for those interested in the protection and training of the wayward young. It misses being a great picture but it is believable and the poignancy of the theme is inescapable. (Junior Durkin, Pat O'Brien, Bette Davis, Junior Coghlan.)

IN LINE OF DUTY GOOD
Monogram

A fugitive from justice because of the murder of a man who had wronged him, a Canadian woodsman is compelled by pity to save the life of a Royal Mounted policeman who is hunting him. The "Mountie" falls in love with the woodsman's daughter, but despite this, intends to take the fugitive back with him. A dramatic finish saves the feelings of all concerned even though it brings tragedy with it. (Noah Beery, Sue Carol, James Murray.)

INTIMATE GOOD
Paramount

The title "Intimate" is misleading and precludes this picture for juvenile audiences. It is not a sex theme, but a story of the intrigue of twin brothers who are identical in appearance but entirely different in character. The plot has to do with the forging of a will and the eventual triumph of the brother who has suffered. (Fredric March, Kay Francis.)

THE LAST RIDE GOOD
Universal

A young newspaper reporter is sent to get information about a racketeer. The latter, who is killed, proves to be the reporter's loved brother. Real suspense, an absorbing if familiar story and good acting mark the picture. (Tom Santschi, Dorothy Revier, Charles Morton, Frank Mayo, Francis Ford, Virginia Brown Faire.)

MURDERS IN THE RUE MORGUE
Universal GOOD

A gripping mystery film based on the story of the same name by Edgar Allen Poe. More or less gruesome, abounding in thrills and horrors, but ingenious entertainment. (Bela Lugosi and Sidney Fox.)

POLLY OF THE CIRCUS GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

The conflicting standards of the circus and the church are the story basis for this drama. A trapeze performer, injured, is cared for at a minister's home and a romance develops between them. When the affair threatens him with the loss of his church, Polly is ready to sacrifice her life to save him. The acting is sincere, but one is left wondering why it was felt necessary to insert a jazz element into a story as old and beautiful as "Polly of the Circus." (Marion Davies, Clark Gable, C. Aubrey Smith.)

STEADY COMPANY VERY GOOD
Universal

A story of simple people and their daily difficultics. A boy's ambition to become a fighter; the pathetic Italian shoemaker who inadvertently causes him to lose his first fight; the loyal sweetheart are all faithfully presented. (Norman Foster, June Clyde, Henry Armetta and J. Farrell MacDonald.)

Foreign Films

CHARLOTTE LOEWENSKOELD GOOD
Swedish Film

This is an adaptation of the latest novel by Selma Lagerloef, the Swedish Nobel prize winner. It is a serious study of a girl whose love for a young minister is destroyed because of his narrowness and fanaticism. It is almost entirely a silent film with titles in Swedish. The photography, showing Sweden in winter, is excellent. (Birgit Sergelius, Eric Barclay, Urho Somersalmis, Pauline Brunius.)

DAS EKEL (The Grouch) GOOD
Ufa

A comedy of German family life with the well-known character actor, Max Adelbert, giving an excellent characterization as the grouchy father whom wife and children fear. He is jailed after offending the chief magistrate. His experience changes him and he returns home a new man. (Max Adelbert, Emilia Unda, Evelyn Holt, Heinz Wagner.)

DAS LIED IST AUS VERY GOOD
(The Song is Over)
Ufa

Another typical German operetta with a haunting air, "The Song is Over." The plot concerns a prima donna, the toast of the town, and a young man engaged to be her private secretary. The picture is charming and offers good entertainment. (Liane Haid, Willy Forst, Margarete Schlegel, Otto Wallburg.)

DIE GROSSE LIEBE VERY GOOD
(The Great Love)
Allianz of Vienna

An unusually interesting study of mistaken identity and mother love in this picture made in Vienna. A young Austrian, imprisoned in Russia for ten years, returns to Vienna. Mistaking him for her missing son, a motherly shopkeeper takes him in. There are amusing complications with a happy ending. (Hansi Niese, Attila Horbiger, Betty Bird, Hugo Thimig.)

MEN LIKE THESE EXCELLENT
British International

A tragic record of men trapped in a submarine sunk in a collision. There are forceful scenes showing the way in which they conduct themselves when faced with death. Through the intelligence and self-control of a petty officer, the men escape. There is a genuineness about the film that would indicate it had been taken from real life. (John Batten, Sidney Seaward, James Enstone.)

SEIN SCHEIDUNGSGRUND GOOD
(Grounds for Divorce)
Ufa

A regulation German light comedy with a domestic triangle that is cleared after a series of amusing and very human situations. It is capably acted and carefully directed. (Johannes Riemann, Blandine Ebinger, Lien Deyers, Heinz Salfner.)

EIN WALZER VOM STRAUSS GOOD
Splendid Film Company

A fiction story of the life of Johann Strauss, the Waltz King, son of a musician, who tried to keep him from the hardships of his own life. It is an appealing and well acted picture of the joys and sorrows in a great artist's life. Lovers of Strauss music will enjoy this and English titles make the German story understandable. (Hans Junkermann, Julia Serda, Gustav Froelich, Maria Paudler.)

ZWEI MENSCHEN EXCELLENT
(Two Souls)
Cicero Film Company

A drama adapted from Richard Voss' novel of the same name. It is the most admirably produced of all German films. The photography is exceptional, the music excellent and the acting reveals understanding and sincerity. (Gustav Froelich and Charlotte Susa.)

WARWANDLUNGSKUENSTLER IN DER NATUR VERY GOOD
Ufa—2 reels

An interesting educational short made by a foreign company, tells the story of children in a nature study class watching a moth emerge from the cocoon; a Chameleon bursting from its encasing shell, and various other forms of insect life in the processes of development. This being one of the first of this kind of picture to come to us from foreign studios. It is exceptionally interesting.

Short Subjects

ANYBODY'S GOAT GOOD
Educational

This story centers on the activities of a trio of robbers who use a goat to further their crooked schemes. Amusing for all ages.

ANY OLD PORT VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Those clever comedians, Laurel and Hardy, as two sailors who try to interfere with the wedding of a gentle girl and a tough prize fighting groom. Very amusing.

ARABIAN SHRIEKS VERY GOOD
Paramount (Adult)

Two New York Jews, shop-keepers, find themselves in the Foreign Legion where they are immediately appointed to be spies. In spite of themselves they become heroes, saving the Legion Post through their mistakes.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT No. 1336
Vitaphone EXCELLENT

The usual Ripley showing in which he presents the proof of many strange facts gathered from Ecuador and Morocco.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT No. 1346
Vitaphone EXCELLENT

Mr. Ripley in this reel shows strange balancing boulders; featherless chickens, and Indians who carry pianos over mountains.

BIG TOP CHAMPIONS VERY GOOD
RKO-Pathe

An interesting series of pictures showing circus animals and the methods used in training them.

THE BIRD STORE VERY GOOD
Columbia

With twinkling eye and craning neck the birds amuse with singing and dancing in this Walt Disney Sound Cartoon.

SELECTION OF PICTURE SELECTIONS

BOB WHITE EXCELLENT
RKO Pathe
A Grantland Rice Sportlight. The methods of hunting for quail with the assistance of pointers are beautifully demonstrated. The dogs' positions while pointing and the further showing of the black Labrador dog retrieving the fallen birds, are instructive.

BON VOYAGE VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe
Another of the Average Man Comedies, with the terrible tempered Mr. Kennedy and his difficult family on a sea trip. There is nothing more genuinely funny on the screen than Mr. Kennedy's constant and evident effort to control himself. To see him try to take all the pins out of a new shirt is worth the admission price. (Edgar Kennedy, Florence Lake, Dot Farley.)

THE CIRCUS SHOWUP VERY GOOD
Universal
One of the Shadow Detective Series improved by fewer sepulchral warnings from the Shadow. The setting is a circus, the mystery good, and the suspense well sustained.

COWSLIPS VERY GOOD
RKO Radio
Another Chic Sale comedy in which he is the slow thinking and acting brother-in-law whose plans always seem to work out. A proposed wedding is broken up to everyone's satisfaction.

CURIOSITIES VERY GOOD
Columbia
An unusually interesting and original number in the Walter Futter series. Lady bugs as killers of orange bugs, and a canary singing Yankee Doodle with a phonograph record accompaniment are especially to be noted.

DUCK HUNT, THE VERY GOOD
Columbia
A Mickey Mouse cartoon. Amusingly conceived, expertly executed, this cartoon concerns itself with Mickey's adventures on a duck hunt. (Synchronized.)

FANCY CURVES

GROCERY BOY VERY GOOD
Columbia
Cartoon—Mickey Mouse as the grocery boy calls on Minnie and helps her prepare a dinner. The usual standard of these cartoons is upheld. (Synchronized.)

HURRY CALL VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe
Wishing to make a good impression on a prospective buyer for a hotel Chic Sale negotiates a horse trade and the fun begins. Amusing for all ages.

LAND OF THE SHALIMAR
Capital Films EXCELLENT
A beautiful pictorial story of India in which Dahl Lake, the Mogul Gardens, the Gardens of Gladness of Cashmir, have been brought to the screen with selective artistry. The picture, 2 reels in length, presents the story of the famous Taj Mahal. This short feature has distinction and real beauty.

MAGIC CARPET SERIES EXCELLENT
Fox
Big Game of the Sea.—A Japanese whaling station and a thrilling whale hunt.
By-ways of France.—The lovely countryside in France.
Fires of Vulcan.—Dangerous ventures into volcanic areas.
Incredible India.—Scenes in a country that is in the foreground of our thoughts today.
Manhattan Melody.—Impressions of New York City (outstanding production).
Over the Yukon Trail.—The 1898 trek for gold is retraced.
With the Foreign Legion.—France gave special permission for these photographs.
Zanzibar.—The colorful atmosphere of this port.

MECHANICAL COW GOOD
Universal
Oswald the Rabbit and a mechanical cow offer some amusing entertainment.

MOTHER'S HOLIDAY VERY GOOD
Educational
With more than an atom of truth, this satirical short shows the farce of a "Mother's Day" when mother is the victim of all the world.

NOT SO DUMB VERY GOOD
Paramount Pictorial Review
Major Dawley gives a brief history of marionettes and shows how they are made to act. Clever and informative.

OBERAMMERGAU VERY GOOD
Warner
This short subject is of particular interest for the Lenten season. It is one of E. M. Newman's "Travel Talks" and is an authentic reproduction of the original "Passion Play" which is played every ten years as a great religious spectacle in the little town of Oberammergau in Southern Germany. (Sound.)

ONE GOOD DEED VERY GOOD
Vitaphone
A Booth Tarkington story of children with action by children. They take their dog to a doctor for treatment and learn of escaped robbers and a kidnapped doctor. They rescue the doctor and receive the reward.

OVER THE FENCE EXCELLENT
Universal
Babe Ruth showing his young admirers how to make a double, a squeeze play and a sacrifice hit. Picture ends with Babe knocking a home run up to a window in the "Home" to a sick boy.

PARAMOUNT NEWS GOOD
Paramount
In this newsreel there are some of the first pictures from the war area of the China Japanese War, and other timely topics of the week.

PEASANTS' PARADISE EXCELLENT
Educational
A Claude Fleming "Romantic Journey" to Southern Germany that offers marvelous scenery and intimate views of peasant life. It is done in Multicolor.

REEF BUILDERS OF THE TROPICS
Paramount Pictorial Review EXCELLENT
By arrangement with the New York Museum of Natural History strange and beautiful views of coral are shown.

THE RED RED ROBIN VERY GOOD
Vitaphone
The old adage of the early bird catching the worm and the one about the turning of said worm are graphically portrayed in this musical battle between Robin and his worm.

REMEMBER WHEN EXCELLENT
Vitaphone
Shots of the "Gay Nineties." Interesting events of 1900 and the campaign of 1912.

RHYTHM ON THE RIVER VERY GOOD
Paramount
A colored crew on board ship sing "Rhythm on the River" and "When I'm Away From You," with George Dewey Washington taking the solo parts.

RUNNING WITH CHARLES PADDOCK Universal VERY GOOD
One of a series of sport pictures. In this one Charles Paddock, famous long distance runner, shows the proper technique.

SLIDE, BABE, SLIDE EXCELLENT
Universal
A very natural and instructive story with Babe Ruth demonstrating some of the fine points of baseball.

SLIM FIGURING VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe
Interesting examples of ways in which American women keep down their weight in various sports. A Grantland Rice Sportlight.

SONGS OF THE ORGAN EXCELLENT
Paramount
Ann Leaf at the organ plays Liebestraum, while beautiful scenes of falling water are shown. Very effective.

TORCHY RAISES THE AUNTY Educational VERY GOOD
In this adventure, Torchy helps entertain the New England Aunty of the "boss." The mixture of laughing-gas and charged water brings about surprising and hilarious results. A laugh for everyone.

TORCHY'S TWO TOOTS VERY GOOD
Educational
Due to a realistic dream, Torchy proves useful to his employer, getting the bonds to him on time, by airplane.

UNEMPLOYED GHOSTS VERY GOOD
Paramount
A haunted hotel offers a setting for Tom Howard and his actions which are original and amusing.

THE SIGN OF THE WOLF GOOD
Metropolitan
Two mystic chains stolen from a Hindu temple and sold to an American start this plot which continues through 10 episodes. Freedom from love-making, a bit of oriental mysticism, interesting scenery, daring riding and the marvelous acting of the dog, King, are all elements of interest to children, and seen one episode at a time, this serial will not prove harmful. However, the story is chaotic and the entire production very crude. (Rex Lease, Virginia Faire, Joe Bonomo, King, the Wonder Dog.)

5 out of 6

The inquiring reporter of the Chicago Daily Times gets the real lowdown on what the paying customers think of double features. And what they think is plenty!

Here is the voice of the Public saying, five out of six want variety.

THE TIMES TALKIES

Each Day a Reporter Photographer Shoots Questions and Pictures

The DAILY TIMES pays $5 for each question submitted and used. Mail questions to Times Talkies, 15 S. Market st.

THE QUESTION

Are you in favor of the double feature programs presented at movie theaters?

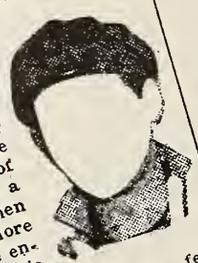
(Submitted by Reinhard Huebbers, Elmhurst, Ill.)

THE PLACE

23rd St. and Cottage Grove Ave

THE ANSWERS

[redacted], stenographer: "The double feature programs presented at movie theaters are most disconcerting. I am not in favor of them. Pictures get monotonous when you must sit in a theater too long and I lose interest. A picture is appreciated more if it is the only one shown for then the spectator concentrates on its theme and carries away the impression it was intended to give."



[redacted], salesman: "I would rather go to a theater where only one feature picture is presented. It is very uncomfortable to sit for hours watching movie plays. When both the plays are over I always wish I had not gone to the show at all. One good picture is a complete entertainment. If we don't like it we can leave the theater. Often we have to sit through one we don't like in order to see another."

[redacted], secretary: "I always enjoy double feature programs. They offer twice as much entertainment for the same price. [illegible]ne picture isn't [illegible]tly what we [illegible]it would [illegible]er one is [illegible]ease us. [illegible] leave [illegible]ssatis- [illegible]no object to tw[illegible]

[redacted], brake mechanic: "Double feature programs are terrible. Who enjoys sitting in a theater for four hours? I find it tiresome. I would rather see just one picture with a couple of vaudeville acts or a comedy act. Then the program is more varied and more entertaining. There is such a thing as too much of a good thing and one feature film often destroys the pleasure of another."

[redacted], Brookfield, clerical work: "Whenever I go to a theater where they present a double feature program, I always leave with a splitting headache because of the strain on my eyes. I don't like these double feature bills, even though it is less expensive to see them than just one feature picture. I think vaudeville acts with one feature is a far better arrangement."

[redacted], chauffeur: "Double feature programs are senseless. It is most uncomfortable to sit for four hours in a theater. I would rather see just one feature and a little comedy or news along with it. The time it takes to show two feature pictures seems like a lifetime and I lose interest in the plot and everything. I usually leave the theater roughly disgusted when I stay for h films."

WANT VARIETY

Five out of six want variety in their entertainment. And five out of six theaters show by their records that there is one sure way of giving the public variety and quality all through the show.

Play the Short Features that, through all changing fads of entertainment, have continued to be "the spice of the program."

Educational Pictures

Never have Educational Pictures offered a better variety of Short Feature entertainment . . . comedy, novelty, beauty, sports, thrills. Never have they brought you better entertainment . . . the cream of the short subject crop, from MACK SENNETT, AL CHRISTIE, E. H. ALLEN and EDUCATIONAL STUDIOS, C. C. BURR, BROWN-NAGEL, MOSER AND TERRY. And their box-office names are known everywhere—BING CROSBY . . . HARRY BARRIS . . . ANDY CLYDE . . .

Here is the variety that five out of six want . . . and the quality that everybody wants.

When 169 railroads failed in 1898 John H. Patterson said:

"The year has been unparalleled in the history of the United States. Great questions were to be solved, every industry was stagnant. Some closed down, some lost courage, while a few pushed ahead and worked harder than ever with confidence in the future. We did not let the hard times interfere with our work. When times got duller, we advertised the more and worked the harder."

When pig iron dropped 50% in 1907 Andrew Carnegie declared:

"This panic will soon run its course and pass away, leaving no impediment to the return of another period of wholesome, because needed, expansion of our resources. We have had the greatest expansion in modern times. Reaction had to come, will prove healthful. Nothing can stay the rapid progress of the Republic. She is all right."

When deep, dark gloom ruled in 1921 Thomas Fortune Ryan said:

"Our merchants have been buying only what they can sell quickly for cash. The consumer has had to listen to so much pessimistic talk that he buys only what is necessary. People have been scared. They are getting over that. Our people are the greatest consumers of food and manufactured articles in the world in normal times—and normal times are coming back."

"As the most nearly self-contained nation we have within our own boundaries the elemental factors for recovery."

AMERICA CAME THROUGH!

¶ In 1893 stark ruin stalked through the land. Four hundred and sixty-seven banks failed in a few months. Mills, furnaces and factories shut down everywhere. Bankruptcy was on every hand. America had twice as many unemployed per thousand population as she has today. But she put them all back to work.

¶ In 1907 panic broke loose. The production of pig iron dropped 50% in less than a year. All but the strongest men lost heart—"We are ruined," they declared, "recovery cannot come in our time." Yet in two years prosperity had returned.

¶ In 1921, when many honest and thoughtful people were predicting worse conditions, the country was already beginning to climb to the greatest era of prosperity it had ever experienced.

¶ History tells how America has fought and won 19 major depressions. Good times always follow hard times, as surely as day follows night. Prosperity always comes back. It is coming back this time, too.

¶ Above all things, let us have faith.

America has beaten 19 depressions—She will beat this one!

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"ARSENE LUPIN" possesses many unusually good selling slants for the showmen who know how to take full advantage of every medium to make a picture produce far above average receipts. The title is from an internationally famous story; it has the two Barrymores and it's a lot of very good entertainment. Add to these your own ability to sell this type of picture and you leave little to be desired.

The title, as mentioned, is very well known in most every spot in the country. If they don't know about it, you tell them. Add to the title the two stars and you should certainly have a b.o. magnet to pull them in with.

"Audience value" is far above average. It is interesting and absorbing entertainment of the better kind and probably will be well received in every theatre regardless of the type of patronage. John Barrymore emerges as a human, likable character and one can almost hear a sigh of relief when he makes his first appearance minus black tights. It should boost his personal following considerably. Lionel scores, as usual, a triumph with his remarkably fine acting and convincing dialogue. Others in the cast all help by contributing excellent performances, especially Karen Morley.

We can conceive no reason why this picture, plus good showmanship, should not enjoy very profitable grosses; most showmen will find it so themselves, but those who give this picture the type of campaign worthy of its stars and its entertaining values will more than rejoice in the highly satisfactory receipts.

Kids will get a great kick out of it and we can see little to draw objections from the Sabbath preservers, so spot it where you please and make it count for one of your profitable engagements of the season. Good show-selling on an attraction like this can more than turn the trick for you.

"CHEATERS AT PLAY" is slightly above average as most program pictures are judged.

The title possesses many slants and suggestions for merchandising. How to select the ones best suited for your individual situation is what you are called a showman for. So pick the best angles and go to work. Perhaps you will do the job so well that your receipts will take a healthy jump exceeding your conservative estimates. You have a few names to sell along with it—Thomas Meighan, James Kirkwood and Charlotte Greenwood. Others include Barbara Weeks (very likable), Linda Watkins, and William Bakewell.

Its "audience value" is quite satisfactory. It should hold the average patron's interest and get at few laughs besides. Other than that they will not find themselves overtaxed following the plot or action of this story.

Most engagements are going to be either very good or very bad. But it will be chiefly a show-selling proposition. The live-wire manager can really take a picture like this and build it up to good proportions by giving it a real send-off campaign that the title and names permit. He can do this without any fear of a comeback because if he succeeds in getting them to the theatre they will never register a kick about the picture. The problem is to get them there and that should be comparatively easy for men who know their business.

Not very uplifting for the kids but since it will hardly make any decided impression on them you can spot it where you please. But regardless of where you finally decide to use it, try pushing it over with a real mystery campaign of the sort that piques the public's interest.

An Index to Showman's Evaluations

"LAW AND ORDER" is probably one of the best pictures of its kind made in this or several seasons. But its selling possibilities present something of a problem for many reasons. First; it has no women in the cast other than one or two who are more background than anything else. Second; it is the type of picture that may easily be mistaken for "just another western" and it certainly deserves a darned sight better reputation than that. And then, the wholesale killings may not register any too strong in some communities.

The title holds very little "meat" other than what you inject into it yourself. But you have Walter Huston to sell along with it and by using extremely good judgment in the handling and treatment of that title you stand a good chance of making them curious enough to come out and buy a ticket. That's where your trouble ceases. They will find the picture itself excellent entertainment.

Its "audience value," as pointed out, is excellent, but that will be according to the type of audience you draw from. The average fans, and by average we mean those who never miss their Garbos', or Gaynors', will enjoy the picture as it unreels and feel that they have witnessed a fine piece of screen fare. But if they prefer the sophisticated kind they may feel a little different about it.

I suggest that every showman playing this attraction get a screening of it first. He will then be far better able to appreciate it than by our trying to tell him about it. Such screenings are always a great help to showmen who prefer to select their own selling angles and every theatre—with the possible exception of the subsequent or last runs—ought to make it a steady practice.

Kids always love this Huston characterization but there again you can judge whether you want to spot it on the kids days after you have a look at it. This much is certain: "Law and Order" is one fine picture and worthy of doing business everywhere.

The Lost Squadron

(RKO Radio)

Air Spectacle

Stunt flying and a motion picture within a motion picture, in the taking of scenes of a battle between American bombers and German land forces in the World War, provide the highlights of this production, in which Erich von Stroheim, director, plays the role of a director. The picture, viewed in the projection room prior to Broadway showing, was made from the story by Dick Grace, flier, who participated in the actual flying with Art Goebel, Leo Nomis and Frank Clark.

Richard Dix, Robert Armstrong and Joel McCrea play the roles of fliers from the World War who, with Hugh Herbert, mechanic, find things different after the plaudits for returning heroes come to an end. Woody (Armstrong) goes to Hollywood to hunt up his sister (Dorothy Jordan), and when the three come out there Woody is finding flying "for the movies" so easy that he has no particular worries about mixing cocktails with stunting. The three others also join the air circus of von Furst (von Stroheim), who's willing to sacrifice anyone else's life for thrill shots.

Captain Gibson (Dix) was in love with Fol-

lette Marsh (Mary Astor) before the war but learns that her ambition has led her to become the bride of von Furst. The director applies acid to a strut of the plane in which Gibson is to fly in the next scene. Woody saved once from death by Gibson, decides to fly the plane. Red had detected von Furst's plot too late to prevent the takeoff. Gibson goes up to warn Woody but Woody plunges to his death. In the meantime Red has tied up von Furst in his room with the sworn intent to kill him if Woody loses his life. Gibson divines the plan. When the howling wind blows a shutter off the window in the hangar sleeping quarters. von Furst makes a break for the stairway and is shot by Red. The homicide squad, headed by Ralph Ince, arrives just after the body has been secreted in a corner. Woody's sister won by Red though Gibson had fallen in love with her, has seen this through a window and prevents the detectives from making the discovery. Gibson and Fritz carry the body into a plane, Gibson takes it up and drives it straight down to earth. The act costs Gibson his life but also clears Red.

George Archainbaud, the director, has made use of storm effects to add realism to the events of the night of tragedy.

Produced by RKO-Radio. Louis Sarecky, associate producer. Directed by George Archainbaud. Art director, Max Ree. Story by Dick Grace. Screen play by Wallace Smith with added dialogue by Herman Mankiewicz and Robert Presnell. Assistant director, James Anderson. Cameraman, Eddie Cronjager. Air cameramen, Rob Robison and Elmer Dyer. Sound recorder, Hugh McDowell. Film editor, William Hamilton. Running time, 79 minutes. Release date March 12, 1932.

After Tomorrow

(Fox)

Drama

The Frank Borzage flair for making screen folk do little humdrum things in a very human natural way, and an acknowledged splendid performance by Marian Nixon, were seen responsible for the excellent reception accorded Fox's latest production, "After Tomorrow."

The film is another slice from the life of the underdog, the men and women, old and young, who slave long and earnestly, but never seem quite to make ends meet. Frank Borzage has always been at his best with this type of story, and there are millions in America who will thoroughly understand and appreciate the way he and Sonya Levien, who did the screen play, sketched these common characters.

The romance, so often interrupted by poverty or duty, is tenderly carried along by Miss Nixon and Charles Farrell, the latter in the pleasant, happy-go-lucky vein, and the former with a most agreeable balance between her happy moments and her tragic ones. Miss Nixon might easily have overdone either, but she sketched her character with strong, sure strokes which made of it a thoroughly human, real person, certain comment indicated.

Josephine Hull, in the role of Farrell's doting mother as a good-intentioned but weepy person was extremely well received. Miss Hull brings many a laugh, though never turns the mother into a burlesque character. Contributing notably also are William Collier, Sr. and Minna Gombell, the latter, unfortunately, in an unsympathetic part. Others who do briefer roles well are William Pawley, Greta Granstedt, Ferdinand Munier and Nora Lane.

The story, based upon a stage play by John Golden and Hugh S. Stange, concerns a young working couple trying to save enough to marry. The boy's mother presents him with a problem, and so do the girl's parents. Through six long years they are compelled to await fulfillment of their dreams, and it is their patience, their unselfishness and their indomitable courage through this trying period which makes the story. The dialogue is very extensive, and while it tends to slow down the action at times, it is so very human and at times deeply moving that audience interest was well sustained throughout.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Frank Borzage. Based on the stage play by John Golden and Hugh S. Stange. Screen play by Sonya Levien. Cameraman, James Howe. Sound, George Leverett. Release date, March 13, 1932.

Are You Listening?

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has hewed close to J. P. McEvoy's story of "backstage" life in a radio studio and in doing so, succeeds in bringing to the screen a piece of entertainment under the title of "Are You Listening?" which was well received.

By virtue of staying on the human side of life throughout, the bulk of the picture rests upon the players rather than the story. The players get beneath their characters. The theme is a mixture of "Sally, Irene and Mary" and a misunderstood husband. The latter is played by William Haines who was thought to have added another mark to his list of achievements. Haines departs from the usual wise cracking American sophisticate, and delivers a more sympathetic and serious portrayal of a young man who made only one mistake in life, that of becoming matrimonially obliged to serve and please a nagging wife played in a very heavy vein by Karen Morley. This brings Haines to Madge Evans for consolation who participates very effectively in a three pointed love affair. All of this is intermingled with a graphic description of the comedy and drama that goes on daily inside any large radio broadcasting station.

The three sister element, participated in by Madge Evans, Anita Page and Joan Marsh, is gradually worked into the story with such force that it becomes separated from the main thread but in the end, both are connected for the conclusion. From the audience reaction, it is felt that Joan Marsh dominates throughout by her delineation of the youngster sister determined to help herself to a slice of life against the wishes of her older sisters. Jean Hersholt and Neil Hamilton were applauded as playboys.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Based on the novel by J. P. McEvoy. Adaptation by Dwight Taylor. Cameraman, Harold Rosson. Release date, March 19, 1932.

The Expert

(Warners)

Comedy Drama

Warners present the picturization of the well known Edna Ferber novel, "Old Man Minick," with Charles "Chic" Sale as the garrulous old man who makes life rather miserable for his daughter-in-law, but finds a good deal of happiness for his lonely old age in the companionship of a group of elderly and equally garrulous inmates of a home for aged men, and the guardianship of a newsboy-orphan, played with delightful appeal by young Dickie Moore, one of the youngest Warner stars.

The picture is the vehicle of Sale and Dickie, almost to the exclusion of all else, but the reaction of an audience at the New York Strand gave every evidence that that was completely sufficient. Sale's characterization of the old man won an excellent reception, unquestionably partly due to his expert attention to detail in the matter of mannerism and speech, while young Moore was, so to speak, taken unreservedly to the collective heart of the audience.

Old Minick comes to the city to live with his son, Earle Foxe, and his daughter-in-law, Lois Wilson, at their home, where he proceeds to make life quite unbearable for Miss Wilson and quite enjoyable for the audience by fixing things to the point where the services of a mechanic are required, and by breaking up Miss Wilson's important club meeting by taking the floor with such vigor as to disrupt proceedings and send the offended assemblage home in a huff. Sale meets Dickie accidentally and learns that he is living with Ralf Harolde and Adrienne Dore, two crooks who have taught the lad to take what he desires without thought of the consequences of stealing. Sale shows the boy his error and the two become fast friends. Overhearing Miss Wilson in just complaint against his meddling, Sale determines to enter the old men's home, to which he had been invited. He finds his life savings of $2,000 gone from his trunk, and is forced to suspect Dickie, who had taken a golden buckle from a prized wrestling belt of the old man in order to have it repaired. The youngster, however, tells him of having seen Harolde with the money and the old man calls his ancient wrestling skill into play and subdues Harolde until the police take him in charge.

An effective scene shows "the pals" reunited and their entrance in triumph into the old men's home. The work of the supporting cast was termed satisfactory.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by Archie Mayo. From the Edna Ferber novel, "Old Man Minick." Adaption and dialogue by Julian Josephson and Maude Howell. Editor, Jim Gibbon. Cameraman, Bob Kurrle. Art direction, Jack Okey. Release date, March 5, 1932. Running time, 69 minutes.

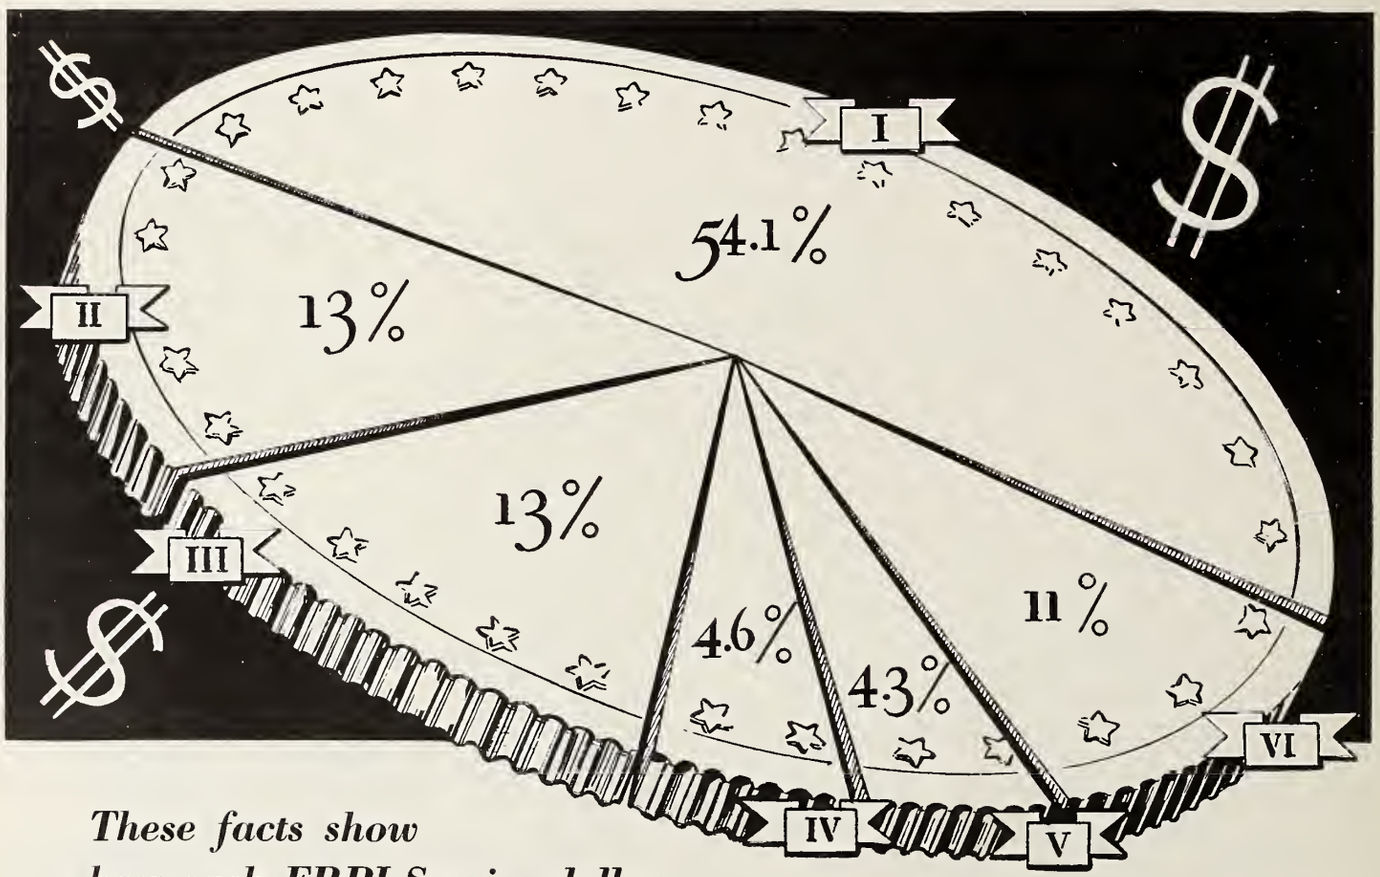
Ein Walzer vom Strauss (A Waltz by Strauss)

(Capital Film Exchange)



Waltz King Portrayed

At the Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York, one of the intimate cinemas, wherein are shown foreign films, for the most part in German or French, recently was opened "A Waltz by Strauss," produced in Germany by Splendid Film Company. Patrons whose knowledge of the German language is limited or lacking will find no difficulty following, since in the first place, action speaks well for itself, and second, English subtitles are here and there inserted, translating dialogue important to the sequence of the narrative.

At the performance resulting in this comment, a large, almost capacity group gave every indication of thorough enjoyment, deriving, apparently, particular pleasure from the good recording of the various waltzes which have made the name of Johann Strauss familiar the world over.

The narrative recounts the early development and startling success of young Strauss, played by Gustav Froelich. His father, the elder Strauss, is portrayed by Hans Junkermann, with what was conceded to be sincerity and appreciation of the role. The only other major parts are taken by Julia Serda as Johann's mother, and Maria Paudler as the boy's sweetheart. Junkermann, himself a composer of waltzes, has absolutely forbidden his son to think of music as a life-work, even re-

What your ERPI SERVICE dollar buys . . . .

These facts show how each ERPI Service dollar protects the exhibitor . . .

I 54.1% for the inspection service that prevents trouble — rendered by 600 men traveling 5,720,000 miles a year — to maintain highest standard of tonal quality.

II 13% for emergency and appointment calls which would be greater except for the preventive inspection service.

III 13% for maintenance of 35 branch offices, 173 other service points and $750,000 stock of spare parts which make possible immediate emergency repairs, quick replacements.

IV 4.6% for replacements, repairs and improvements made at ERPI cost and for maintenance of Bureau which reduced repair costs 46% in 1931 — saving exhibitors over $750,000!

V 4.3% for general administration and engineering which make possible efficient nationwide service and uniform quality operation.

VI 11% for protection against fire loss — assuring complete replacement immediately without cost to exhibitor.

. . 5 years of ERPI SERVICE experience made this economic dollar division possible

Experience with more than 8000 theatres proved to us that further reducing the number of preventive calls means increased emergency and appointment calls! ¶ To reduce branch points and stocks would endanger maintenance of service—which would prove costly to the exhibitor. ¶ ERPI's protection against fire loss by immediate replacement without loss of time is an economy of ERPI service. ¶ All economies made possible by five years of developing the present efficiency of ERPI Service have been reflected in repeated and voluntary adjustments of the service charge.

These ERPI economies have resulted in savings of more than $7,000,000 yearly to exhibitors—without impairing quality and performance.

fusing to permit him the study of the violin. Junkermann, caught in the spell of the youth of Vienna, shows himself sufficiently weak-willed to be drawn into an affair with a dancer of the day, for whom he eventually leaves wife and family. The mother permits Froelich to study music under the local padre, but the sacred music which is his lot drives him to rebellion, and waltzes.

Laughed at when he appears as conductor of his first composition, he plays his way to triumph. Miss Paudler persuades him to accept an offer to play at St. Petersburgh, where again he triumphs. Finally returning, he discovers that the girl is about to marry, realizing that his art and the world will permit no marriage for Johann. A final, most effective scene pictures the reconciliation of the dying father and the famous son, as the young master plays perhaps his most popular of all waltz compositions, "The Blue Danube." "Tales of the Vienna Woods" is also rendered with fine effect.

The work of the cast was generally acclaimed, while the production itself, comment indicated, was well mounted throughout.

The Blonde Captive

(Capital Films)

Exploration

Dr. Paul Withington led an expedition into the wilds of Australia, in search, he tells us, of the last survivors of that ancient species of man, the Neanderthal. The record of that long, and in a measure interesting journey, is reproduced on the screen of the old Liberty theatre, on New York's 42nd street, which has just been leased by Max Rudnick as a sound motion picture house. This film is the opening attraction of the theatre.

An introductory sequence points out the fact of the intended expedition, its purpose, and a small lecture on the origin of the species, in particular, the Neanderthal Man, long a favorite of science.

There is much in the film which is not new, much which has been done in previous films recently of the exploration type. However, there is enough which is new and interesting to hold an audience, as was that at the Liberty. The title is derived from the unusual discovery reputed to have been made by the expedition, that of a white woman living with the natives of the Australian bush and married to one of them. She was discovered, it is recounted and pictured, when a small blonde-haired boy was noticed among the black children of the natives. The woman, his mother, was the wife of a ship captain, whose vessel was wrecked on the rocky coast many years before. She was the sole survivor, the child was by the native.

The expedition which Dr. Withington headed was known as the Northern Australia Expedition, the film having been produced by the Northern Australia Expedition Syndicate. Louis Pizor is handling its distribution. The accompanyng narrative and descriptive matter is rendered, and is understood to have been prepared by Lowell Thomas. It is clear, interesting, occasionally slightly amusing, and withall quite effective, it was definitely indicated by the reaction of the audience.

The natives are pictured engaged in the regular habits of their kind. The ancient Neanderthal Man was found closely paralleled in one specimen among the native warriors. The scenic effects are in many cases unusual, and the several close-ups of native animal life in intimate concerns were found of real interest by the audience.

Produced by the Northern Australia Expedition Syndicate, under the direction of Dr. Paul Withington. Distributed by Capital Films. Dialogue and narrative by Lowell Thomas. Release date, February 26, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

Police Court

(Monogram)

Melodrama

(Seen in Hollywood)

An audience at the Forum recently gave every indication of welcoming back to the screen some oldtimers, once featured players. The attraction was "Police Court," produced by I. E. Chadwick, for Monogram release.

The story deals with an old stage and screen star who has fallen from fame through drink, (played by Henry B. Walthall,) and his son (Leon Janney) who determines to bring his father back to the place he once held. The father does not succeed, but the son wins fame and glory.

The picture brought tears to the audience. It seemed to ring true to many who have been closely associated with life in Hollywood.

Walthall was thought to have given a sincere performance and young Janney was well received, while Aileen Pringle revived her old time charming performance. King Baggott, Al St. John, and Edmund Breese all made the best of their roles. Observers felt the carnival scenes are a bit long and it was said more comedy could have been employed since the background is naturally rather sombre.

Produced by I. E. Chadwick. Distributed by Monogram. Directed by Louis King. Photographed by Carl Pierson. Story, continuity and dialogue by Stuart Anthony. Release date, March 1, 1932. Running time, 65 minutes.

(Allied Pictures)

Detective Mystery

M. H. Hoffman presents in this detective picture a cast which includes Lew Cody, Mary Nolan, Clara Kimball Young, George E. Stone, William Collier, Jr., June Clyde and others well known to the screen public.

It is a story of French criminals, extortion and thwarted love. Cody is the brilliant chief of Paris detectives, Gaston LeCoq, who nevertheless does not let his office duties interfere with his engagements with lady loves. William Collier, cashier for the banker, Fauvel, is planning to elope with Madeline Fauvel. Mme. Fauvel is blackmailed by her cousin, de Clameran. Fauvel, whose bank is in a shaky condition, learns of the elopement plans and discharges his cashier. Then the bank is robbed.

Collier confesses in order to shield the others. Mme. Fauvel confesses. LeCoq disbelieves both and finally gets from her the real story of how the blackmailers have forced her to get the keys and combination. And she admits that Madeline is not her daughter but that of de-Clameron, who forced the deception when her own daughter was killed in an auto accident.

LeCoq calls in Michele, suspected murderer, and gives him the keys and combination to plant in deClameran's room, then releases de-Clameran and his partner five minutes later. It works out as planned. Michele kills the pair, then in turn loses his life to the gendarmerie when he tries to escape with the bank money.

Produced by M. H. Hoffman. Story by Emile Gaboriau. Screen play by J. Francis Natteford. Directed by Chester M. Franklin. Assistant director: Wilbur McGaugh. Photographed by Harry Neumann and Tom Galligan. Settings by Mack d'Agostino. Recorded by L. E. Tope. Production manager: Sidney Algier. Associate producer: M. H. The Beast of the City

(MGM)

Gangster Theme

Versatile Walter Huston here offers the role of the police officer of the large city whose success in cleaning out the underworld element of the municipality is accomplished only at the cost of his own life.

The story concerns two brothers, one Huston, the other enacted by Wallace Ford. Huston, a police sergeant, is demoted by reason of political intrigue, but is later reinstated by popular demand. Ford, a detective, starts along the wrong trail when he commences to frequent bad company and comes under the influence of Jean Harlow, "girl" of a gang leader, Jean Hersholt. He is persuaded into framing a fictitous hold-up.

When Huston, now promoted to the position of captain, is informed of his brother's intimate connection with the undesirable element, he demands an accounting in full. The accounting, and the climax of the picture, is enacted in a night club, where Hersholt and his gang settle matters with guns with Huston and his force. Both Huston and Hersholt are found killed when the smoke and noise fade. The audience sat erect on the edges of its seats during the sharply dramatic gun battle sequence.

Others beside the principals who were thought to have handled themselves with skill included Dorothy Peterson, Tully Marshall, John Miljan as the district attorney, Emmett Corrigan as the chief of police.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Charles Brabin. Story by W. R. Burnett. Dialogue continuity by John L. Mahin. Editor, Anne Bauchens. Cameraman, Norbert Brodine. Release date, February 13, 1932. Running time, 90 minutes.

Bosko at the Zoo

(Vitaphone)

Amusing Cartoon

When Bosko and his feminine friend wend their animated way to the animated zoo, they find excitement and entertainment. The audience should experience the latter emotion, at least. When the six tentacles of the octopus are used as the arms of the maypole, the patrons at a New York neighborhood house had an enjoyable few moments.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Tabasco Kid

(MGM)

Fair Comedy

Charley Chase, in this Hal Roach effort, plays in double as an "almost-cowboy" and as a bandit. After the real bandit is neatly dispatched by Charley's feminine desire, the comedian attempts to pick up where the bandit left off abruptly. The result, involving a good deal of general excitement, has its amusing moments.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Hollywood Luck

Fast-Moving

This might be the answer to a film-struck maiden's prayer on breaking into pictures—but it's a comedy. It concerns a practical joke on a film aspirant, in fact, two of them. Of course, both are successful finally, but the two extras who conspire to pull themselves through to regular jobs by financing one of the girls experience plenty of trials and tribulations before their strategy succeeds, though their "buddy" has won the leading man as her husband. Comedy bits that stood out were these: the upsetting of the girls by the gusts from the whirling propellor of a plane, the acquisition of a complete breakfast by high financing with a "borrowed" bottle of cream, and a steam roller's trip over a trunk in which was supposed to be one of the girls who was let down via bedsheet from the window. In the comedy, one of the Ideal series, are Rita Flynn, Virginia Brooks, Frances Dean, Clarence Nordstrom, Fern Emmett and Addie McPhail.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Fire, Fire
(MGM)
Animatedly Good

Flip the Frog offers a few laughs for almost any audience, when, as a fireman, he goes to the rescue of the fair and animated damsel trapped in a burning building. He succeeds in his rescue efforts by means of various ingenious stunts, on the part of the artist. Of course, the checker game which opens the short is amusingly interrupted by a "kibitzer."—Running time, 6 minutes.

Barnyard Broadcasts
(Columbia)
Delightful

Delightfully amusing is this Mickey Mouse animated cartoon, with Mickey as chief announcer for the Barnyard Broadcasting Station. The melodic program is rendered by assorted animals, and the schedule is seriously interrupted by the cat and innumerable kittens with no respect for the situation. Mickey has his troubles, and it is all delightful, nonsensical and amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Alpine Echoes
(Fox Movietonews)
Engaging

Good yodling and unusual silhouettes provide the attractiveness in this scenic production, the picture opening with a view of a group of yodling singers appearing on their skis. The contrasts of light and shadow in the snow, with the singing figures moving through them, give "Alpine Echoes" a novel touch. Running time, 10 minutes.

Japanese Rome
(Capital)
Of Interest

Interesting, enlightening is this short depicting a cult of mendicants in Japan, who, dating the birth of their organization far back to a powerful cult of an earlier day in the country, still carry on, though in reduced circumstances. They wear strange headgear much resembling a basket, worn well down over the face, and they wander in groups playing odd music on simple instruments. The dole which they receive is apparently given in much the same manner as a religious offering by the donors.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Detectives
(Vitaphone)
Diverting

The youngsters do a little detective work in their own particular manner in this number of the Penrod and Sam series, taken from the famed boys' stories of Booth Tarkington. The lads track down two chicken thieves in a way that is always amusing. Bill Hayes and Dave Garcey respectively handle the roles of Penrod and Sam, while Jackie Kelk is the "mother's darling." Running time, 11 minutes.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

IS THE PRODUCT TO BLAME?

SINCE this writer started reviewing pictures for their box office and audience values he finds that to date over a hundred pictures were thus covered. Taking this list he divided it carefully into three box office classes as follows: pictures above par, ordinary and below par.

Here is what we find: twenty-five per cent of them were above par, twenty per cent below par and approximately fifty-five per cent average pictures. All of which may fit in with your own mental calculations about this season's product or on the other hand may be entirely contrary to your own personal or business views on the subject.

Taking these approximate percentages as a basis for discussion we are compelled to ask ourselves: "If only twenty per cent of the product thus far released has been below box office strength why hasn't business been holding up a lot better?"

There may be any number of logical reasons. Perhaps you have been slashing your budget for advertising and merchandising far too much. Possibly you have slowed up in your efforts and have been taking too much for granted and attributing the falling off in business to the much-discussed economic conditions now prevalent.

For our part we are willing to stand by our figures, and we further maintain that any theatre getting behind a fairly good picture and giving it the proper help along advertising and merchandising lines would not be affected by falling receipts. If, however, you have been just rolling along on the momentum of former good business, then it is reasonable for us to assume that the momentum has slowed up sufficiently to account for bad business.

Try the experiment yourself. Take the pictures you have played for the past five months and check them off carefully. See how many you would place within the three classifications outlined above. It may prove both interesting and educational. Possibly, too, it may prove that a curtailment of good showmanship can act as four-wheel brakes in your drive for business.

LATELY a lot of criticism has sprung up from national advertising men in commercial fields against motion picture advertising. So long as they confined their wordy attacks towards the industry in general we let it go by as just so much wind, but when they level their guns at theatre advertising then we're johnny-on-the-spot to have our own little say.

It's alright for those national ad men to find fault with theatre advertising because they do not have to contend with the same problems that we must contend with. They have large organizations behind them to help take their individual ideas and build them up into gorgeous four-color ads sprinkled with flowery phrases plus good hokum and hooey all dressed up in swell clothes, but we would like to see how far they would get if they had to dope out a different ad three hundred and sixty-five days of the year without repeating themselves or their ideas too often.

And then in the midst of such a tough task to have one of the bosses pop in and tell them that the ad budget has been slashed umty-umph per cent and they must do as well with the limited space as they did before. Perhaps they would soon find out that theatre ad writers are really the miracle men and that commercial ad men are clucks by comparison.

WHILE on the subject of advertising, we had a most interesting talk with several showmen from the middle west The question involved was: should an advertising bomb be set off without warning to make an effective campaign or should a long fuse be used before the bomb itself goes off?

This is no private argument so anybody can roll up their sleeves and jump right in. We'd like to get some reaction on the subject. Here's the question: Is it more advisable to lead up gradually to the opening smash of any big campaign or is it more effective to keep quiet and deliver it with a bang?

Put your own situation into the discussion and tell us how you would judge a question like that. Just remember the old-fashioned Fourth-of-July celebrations; whether you got a great kick out of watching the fuse splutter on that giant firecracker, or, whether you preferred to find out about that giant cracker after the explosion.

ONE of the recipes for putting over a theatre, according to George A. Jones of the Loew Theatre in Wilmington, Delaware, is to get acquainted with your patrons. He always spends as much time as possible in sight of the customers. Now he feels that he knows pretty near half of the customers and they get a great kick out of meeting and greeting him.

Not a bad idea if a lot of other managers would try the same recipe. The idea of keeping out of sight is not so hot. You should not only be accessible, but visible too. Your patrons are your bread and butter, try warming up to them. It's a great practice and you'll get as big a kick out of it as they do.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

"Dumb Dora" is always sure of a hearty welcome in any man's theatre. Not that we object to her innocent requests, but they are generally so original that we feel as though they ought to be copyrighted. For this particular type—pictured by Dick—we ought to have special tickets printed. It would avoid so much trouble.

MAIZLISH ENLISTED AID FROM FIRE DEPT. TO SELL NEW PICTURE

As a forerunner of what all of you may expect in the way of stunts on "Fireman Save My Child," we're letting you in on how Harry Maizlish, Warner exploiteer in Hollywood, ushered in this exploitation "natural."

You might know that if Joe Brown could be found he'd be called upon to lend a hand and if you'll cast an eye on the larger photo you'll get an eyefull of this well known comedian sitting on the driver's seat of the old-time fire engine truck, with hands on the reins of three white horses. On this occasion the Los Angeles Fire Department made Joe an honorary captain and gave him permission to drive any truck in the department. After trying out some modern equipment, they dug up the old-timer for him. It was, of course, a strange coincidence that Joe's route led him directly to the theatre.

The small photo shows another piece of equipment from the local fire department and this time it was the hook and ladder that found its way to the theatre. Joe climbed up to the fifth rung, no more no less, and had his picture shot in that daring pose. Note the right hind foot nonchalantly tucked around the side of the ladder.

You'll be playing this picture soon, Round Tablers, so take a tip from your Club headquarters and tell the Chief to prepare for one of the grandest chances he ever had to publicize the local fire department, to say nothing of an opportunity to lend a hand to show-business. You'll no doubt recall that there's a chance to earn serious money for the best campaign on this picture, so we repeat, now's the time to think up some original ideas. We'll set them down as fast as the postman brings them in. Incidentally, don't neglect the baseball angle in this picture. Maizlish invited all the baseball writers and ex-league players to be present as guests on opening night.

RANDFORCE AIDED BY MacLEVY PROMOTED 18 TONS FOOD FOR POOR

The needy families of Brooklyn, N. Y. will not want for food if all institutions of that city render a share in proportion to that turned in recently by the Randforce Amusement Corp., headed by Samuel Rinzier and Louis Frisch, with Monty MacLevy in charge of publicity.

The entire forty houses in the circuit participated in the staging of Canned Goods Matinees for kiddies who brought along some article of food in lieu of admission charge, and the net result was 18 tons of non-perishable food, including potatoes, crackers, cans of fruit, beans, onions, etc.

The matinees were held with the cooperation of a Brooklyn newspaper which gave daily contributions of publicity two weeks in advance and the move was also fostered by schools, churches, and parents of the youngsters. In each section the food was turned over to local charitable institutions by Randforce house managers. Approximately 35,000 attended the matinees.

That was indeed a splendid piece of work and unless we're otherwise advised will have to give a large share of credit for its success to Monty MacLevy, publicity manager of the circuit. If there is any reason why we shouldn't pin a medal on Monty, let the man speak. In the meantime, we'll be looking for further news from Randforce.

PHILLIP ENGEL IS BUSY AS EVER WITH JOB OVER IN JERSEY

Among a number of successful campaigns recently waged by Phillip Engel, manager of the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., was one on "Sin of Madelon Claudet," in which he used a variety of exploitation and advertising.

Advance work included a special teaser campaign of small ads and a a preview for Civic Club leaders, school teachers and newspapermen, both one week in advance. Favorable comment, along with an endorsement from the theatre management, was incorporated in a newspaper ad.

Tie-ups were arranged with a department store and a book store, the former featuring a special one sheet display at the music counter and an easel announcement which read, "The heart of music—always the human heart turns to the harp to find its counterpart for expressing emotion!—As the Hands of Genius sweep the Golden Harp Strings—So does "The Sin of Madelon Claudet sweep the heart strings." Stills and playdates were conspicuously displayed. The book store ran a six inch co-op ad on opening date of picture.

Other efforts included distribution of 2,500 special roto heralds on opening day; placing of giant easel in vacant store window at prominent location; 300 special letters signed by manager and placed in all hotels; 'phoning of patrons by theatre cashier; placing of 20 one-sheets in vacant stores; complete set of 11x14's in selected store windows, and a special easel for main floor of theatre.

Engel's work is keeping the Strand on top in the face of the general tough sledding and we're sorry that we cannot devote more space to the activities of this enterprising member of our Club. Next time, however, or just as soon as we get a line on more recent campaigns made for the Strand, we'll tell you more.

MEDD CONTINUES TO PRODUCE EXCELLENT RESULTS AT CAROLINA

Once again we are able to report that E. R. Medd, general manager of the Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C., is still hard at work down in his town, turning out his customary attractive foyer displays and effecting his usual contacts with local organizations.

We note from a newspaper clipping that Medd and the ladies of the American Legion auxiliary are all set to lure Mr. Will Rogers over to Lumberton when that famous personage makes his winter pilgrimage to Pinehurst. At any rate, the idea was good for the lead story on the society page and if Mr. Rogers escapes both ladies and Medd he'll be just as clever as rated.

Another recent activity concerning local affairs was the holding of a benefit show at the Carolina whereby half the proceeds of this show were turned over to the relief fund for the needy. The program included a screen address by the Governor of the state and appeals from local speakers. This was also good for a story in the paper, as were suggestions made by Medd for putting some of the unemployed at work cleaning up the streets and vacant lots of the town.

Still another little gag that Medd recently employed brought about a more cordial relationship between High School and theatre, when the entire local squad of football players were invited to be guests of the Carolina during a showing "Spirit of Notre Dame."

His displays are just as attractive as ever and we note that a 11 x 14 on "Free Soul" was surrounded by black and gold effect inset with two birds of paradise. He also used a very neat display frame of silver inlays in gold, silver, red, purple and green, with black foil paper. There is so much detail that reproductions would not at all do justice to the fine effect these must have created.

We're mighty glad to hear from Medd again, after a silence over the holiday season, and hope that his efforts during the new year will be productive of many ideas to pass along to fellow Round Table members.

Down In Carolina

Changes in the Carolina theatre line-up include the following:

Tague and Warren have taken over the Falls Theatre, Granite Falls, N. C., from Sherrill Brothers and have renamed it the Lyric.

W. A. Beckham is the new manager of the Cameo Theatre, Bellhaven, N. C., a house formerly under control of C. B. West.

C. B. Welch is now operating the Carthaginian Theatre, Carthage, N. C., formerly known as the Playhouse and managed by Dan Carter.

YOUNGSTERS HELPED 'BILL' RESNICK PUT OVER TWO MATINEES

Youngsters conspicuously figured in two stunts recently put over by William "Bill" Resnick, manager of the Old Colony Theatre, Plymouth, Mass., and both efforts materially aided in heavy matinee attendance.

When exploiting the arrival of a new serial, "Danger Island," he had thirty-odd kids from the neighborhood make their appearance at the theatre about nine o'clock in the morning, where they were made-up, arrayed in different colored garments and what-not. Two of the kids were handed Indian tom-toms.

About nine-thirty the kids left the theatre aboard a truck that carried "Danger Island" banners on each side. With the tom-toms going full blast and the kids making whoopee, it did not take the whole town long to find out what was going on. At a point about 1½ miles from the theatre the kids disembarked and lined up for a parade back to the theatre. En route they gave a "war dance" at points where traffic was not too thick and furnished plenty of amusement for the crowds that gathered. They arrived at the theatre about eleven o'clock, where the photo you see reproduced on this page was taken.

The other photo shows another group of youngsters who helped Resnick put over "Champ." A regulation boxing ring was constructed in front of the theatre and about two dozen kiddies fought it out for championship honors. Needless to state, a referee presided over the event. A herald, billing the boxing exhibition as a prologue to the feature, was given wide circulation about town.

Both the above stunts went over like a house on fire, we are reliably informed, and with Resnick's permission, are passing them along to his fellow Round Tablers.

FAIR PLAY—

If you work for a man, in Heaven's name, work for him. If he pays wages that supply you your bread and butter, work for him, speak well of him, think well of him, stand by him, and stand by the institution he represents. I think if I worked for a man, I would work for him. I would not work for him a part of the time, but all the time. I would give him an undivided service or none. If put to a pinch, an ounce of loyalty is worth a pound of cleverness.

If you must vilify, condemn and eternally disparage; resign your position, and, when you are outside, damn to your heart's content. But, I pray you, as long as you are part of an institution do not condemn it. Not that you will injure the institution, not that—but when you disparage the concern of which you are a part, you disparage yourself.

MANY MERCHANTS IN BOOSTING CAMPAIGN PUT ON BY MOFFETT

Fifty merchants participated in a business boosting campaign recently engineered by Irvin A. Moffett, city manager for Publix at Gardner, Mass., and while this stunt was used as a "Carnival Campaign" over the holidays, the idea is one that could be made practical at any time of the year.

Irvin A. Moffett

Deluxe articles, including a medium priced automobile, were promoted for this event, any one of them capable of exciting interest from the average patron. The cost of same was taken care of by the merchants as a group, each contributing to the general fund through purchase of special sales tickets for use over a period of six weeks. These were used only in cases where purchases of over one dollar were made and it was estimated that each lot of 1,000 tickets, which cost six dollars, set the storekeeper back one-half of one per cent of his cash receipts during the campaign. No tickets of this sort were issued at the theatre box office, the whole issue being confined to the several stores.

The automobile was displayed in the theatre lobby and the event was advertised locally and in nearby towns by operating the car with large banners attached to either side. Each merchant participating in the campaign carried a card in his window advertising that "This Is An Official Carnival Store."

In addition to an extensive newspaper advertising campaign laid out by the merchants and the Chamber of Commerce, all ads carrying theatre copy, the auto dealer furnished 15,000 heralds which also gave mention to the theatre. The only cost to the theatre was $4 for a small trailer, $3 for slogan cards in lobby and $3 for a banner to use on auto. As an added attraction on certain days, it was arranged to offer guest tickets with a view to exciting further interest in the campaign and as a means of boosting patronage.

The above campaign has been outlined as far as circumstances will permit and if there are any details lacking we feel sure that your imagination will provide the necessary pointers. Give-aways of all descriptions have been dwelt upon from time to time in this department and complete plans of same should be familiar to all our readers. One of the main points we'd like to stress here is that Moffett and his crew promoted a most extensive affair at practically no cost to the theatre.

If local conditions warrant an undertaking of this sort, we cheerfully subscribe to his method of conducting such a move. When Moffett pulls a give-away he apparently believes in going about it on a scale large enough to arouse community-wide interest. And we rather think he has the right idea. At any rate, both merchants and theatre shared a most profitable turnover of trade during the period.

Davison In Merger

Don W. Davison, former manager of the Varsity Theatre, Manhattan, Kas., can no longer be classed as an independent. Not long ago he married Miss Jean Ferguson, cashier at the Varsity during Davison's reign. The couple's new address is 1026 Kearney street, Manhattan. Incidentally, Davison is now conducting his own film publicity agency.

Breakfast On Stage

Gardner Wilson, publicity director of the new RKO Orpheum Theatre, Denver, recently pulled the stunt of inviting a local "breakfast club" to eat their weekly fare on the stage of the theatre.

HART REVIVED OLD CHAIN LETTER GAG WITH NEW WRINKLE

The old chain letter gag, somewhat revamped to suit the occasion, was recently used by E. M. Hart, manager of the Stanley Theatre, Utica, N. Y., to plug two attractions at his house. It reads as follows:

Dear Friend:

— DO NOT BREAK THE CHAIN —

This letter was not started in France during the World War—nor in the wilds of Alaska during a fierce blizzard—but it was started here in Utica—at the Stanley Theatre just before the showing of two great pictures.

February 4th, 5th and 6th: William Powell in "High Pressure"—the 1932 type of screen thrill. A great star shines with even more brilliance in this his greatest picture. And on the same bill—on the stage—Frank Richardson, "The Golden-Voiced Tenor," in Person. Late star of "Sunny Side Up," with Five other big Vaudeville Acts and the Stanley "Kings of Rhythm" Orchestra.

And then February 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th: Edward G. Robinson, in "The Hatchet Man" . . . Thrilling! powerful! breath-taking! with the screen's most versatile character actor scaling the highest peak of emotional portrayal. On The Stage—6 Acts of Big-Time Vaudeville in a "Naughtycal" Cruise among the Islands of Gaiety, Dancing and Songland.

And so we say—Don't Break the Chain. If you copy this letter nine times and send it to nine of your friends—we hope you will have Good Luck. If you don't copy it—we still hope you will have good luck.

But we know you will count yourself lucky—as will nine of your friends—if you bring them to the Stanley Theatre to see "High Pressure" and "The Hatchet Man"—and the finest vaudeville ever shown in Utica.

And You—If You Bring Nine Friends—and Buy Their Tickets All at One Time—Will Be Lucky—because we'll give you one ticket for yourself.

Yours in Good Luck,
E. M. Hart, Manager,
The Stanley Theatre.

There is such similarity in a chain letter credited to Joseph Feldman, advertising and publicity director of Warner theatres in the Albany, N. Y. district, that we cannot set this down without bringing his name up along with Ed Hart's. However, there's no evidence at hand that the latter claimed originality, so we hope we're being fair to all concerned and that others will benefit through reproduction of the letter.

HOW THEY DRESS 'EM DOWN IN DIXIE!

It will be just too bad if the above photo will not show the novel front engineered for the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., by Manager Howard Waugh, a showman who is always on the alert, does the right thing at the right time and who is now internationally recognized as the "Voice of the South." At any rate, a peppermint candy motif was faithfully carried out by the artist when constructing compo board enclosure for box office and on all panels.

VITAGRAPH, INC., DISTRIBUTORS

HERE ARE THE EASY RULES...READ THEM AND REAP!

Prizes will be awarded by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., to the Theatre Managers or Owners submitting the best all around promotion campaigns on Joe E. Brown in "Fireman, Save My Child." All phases of the campaign, including newspaper advertising, newspaper publicity, lobby display, exploitation stunts, etc., will be considered in determining the awards.

Proofs of advertising, tear sheets of publicity, photographs of the lobby, and photographs or samples of exploitation stunts should be submitted by each contestant.

These should be accompanied by a brief typewritten description of the campaign as a whole.

All entries must be received not later than Midnight, Saturday, April 2nd.

This contest is open to everyone except employees of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and members of their families.

Campaigns based on Warner Bros.' Merchandising Plan for this picture are as eligible for the awards as are original ideas.

Warner Bros. cannot be responsible for the return of any material submitted.

In case of a tie, each contestant will receive the full amount of the prize tied for.

Address all entries to "Fireman, Save My Child" Advertising Contest, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 321 West 44th Street, New York City.

HELP YOUR THEATRE TO EXTRA PROFITS VIA A FASHION SHOW!

Here's the Real Lowdown On Planning and Putting Over An Outstanding Show For Any Live-wire Showman!

THE increasing popularity of the Fashion Show, or Revue as it is often styled by some folks, is easily traced. Its first, and naturally greatest appeal, is in its tremendous box-office return. Few, if any, merchant tie-ups can compare in actual b. o. results to the Fashion Show.

Its second appeal is in the class of merchants attracted to the theatre through this co-operative attraction.

Third, is the many avenues to marvelous publicity and free advertising in which the theatre, over all others, gains the most in the long run.

There are numerous other fine slants, all tending to substantiate our statement that the Fashion Revue has few equals in advantageous stunts for the theatre.

Suggestions For Planning

For any individual to sit down and try to set forth, detail by detail or point by point the procedure to be followed in arranging a Fashion Show would be sheer folly. The reason is simple enough. Each and every town requires a different sort of approach, depending on the merchants and organizations to be tied into the Show. But it is not amiss to try and make suggestions which, with slight alterations, can be used as a basis on which you can decide on staging one of these b. o. smashes.

Newspaper First

Your first best bet should be the advertising manager and fashion editor (if the newspaper boasts of such a rarity as the latter). The advertising manager will be the easiest to get behind you because it is going to mean many extra thousands of lineage to his credit. Between you, you should be able to map out your next approach by selecting the most likely (and naturally the most representative) shops and merchants. Double truck dummies should be prepared in advance as well as stories. These will help convince the skeptical merchants that he's going to be in for some great publicity and, of course, that is one of the things every progressive merchant desires. If he cannot see how such a show will stimulate interest in his shop or recognize the advantages he will have in displaying his spring styles before a large audience or prospective buyers, then it's a waste of time to bother with that particular merchant.

What the Shop Gains

Briefly, here is what a merchant gains through working with the theatre and newspaper on such a Fashion Show:

a—Valuable newspaper space in advertising and readers.
b—Much valuable publicity and advertising through the theatre's screen and lobby.
c—Attention being directed to his shop through all mediums employed.
d—Announcement of his latest styles by utilization of his own and the theatre's large mailing list and through the newspaper.
e—Added interest in his general line of merchandise.
f—Emphasis of new models for spring.
g—Increased business and many new customers.

Avoid any "gags" in connection with this type of co-operative tie-up. On the contrary, surround your Show with all possible dignity. Any attempt to inject "hokum" will detract from the entire idea. Use good judgment at all times.

The requests for reprints of this article which was originally published on the Club pages about a year ago, was so great that we decided to publish it again for the benefit of those who did not receive reprints while they were still available and for those who might be considering one of these profitable tie-ups for their theatres.

In order that we may continue to improve on the suggestions contained in these special articles it would be a good idea for all showmen who engineer one of these shows to send us all the dope including tear-sheets and photos so that we can add whatever angles that would make them still more useful and valuable to readers of the Club pages.

Don't keep your best efforts a secret. Swap ideas with other live-wire showmen through the medium of the Club pages. Everyone gains by your doing so. Don't hide your light under a bushel.

Changing conditions always inject new ideas into these great box office stimulants and some merchant or newspaper man may offer an entirely new slant that would further enhance the great value of these Fashion Shows and Revues. We are confident that several thousand profitable Spring Revues will be staged between now and the first warm weather. Are you going to be one of the smart showmen to cash in on this great bet?

What the Theatre Gains

a—Unlimited extra patronage due to widespread interest in the Fashion Show.
b—Free advertising and publicity through merchants' ads and stories in the papers.
c—Fine window displays, all carrying institutional plugs for the theatre by reason of the Show.
d—Word-of-mouth publicity among the women-folks of the town.
e—Spreading of further publicity via special announcements, etc., from all of the merchants and stores participating in the Show.
f—Extra names for the mailing list.
g—New patrons from outlying communities.
h—Increased receipts for duration of Show.

The First Gun

We will assume for the moment that you have worked out your newspaper arrangements and tied up with the necessary merchants. Now we'll plan the actual start-off of the campaign.

The opening shot should be fired by all parties concerned. A special quarter, half or full page by the newspaper. Dignified copy and livened up with fashion mats to give it the necessary atmosphere. Theatre should announce it via a special trailer, lobby announcements and program. Merchants should carry it prominently in all their ads, through cards placed in the windows of their shops, and also at good spots throughout their stores.

In every announcement the theatre's name and dates of the Show should be displayed in good sized type.

Theatre should carry a large announcement card in the lobby and smaller ones in the ladies' lounge rooms, giving dates of the Fashion Show and the names of all merchants participating.

The follow-up to the opening shots should be in the form of interesting mailing pieces showing, if possible, some of the latest fashions which will be exhibited at the Show. These should be sent out by the merchants to their own mailing lists and can be included in the theatre's mailing list as well. In the meantime, the newspaper can be carrying many items of interest to the women-folks dealing with the styles, the various new modes, the materials being featured by the manufacturers and merchants. Interest can also be built up around a "masked model" who will be used in the exhibition of the latest in negligee and lingerie. (This for the male appeal.)

If the theatre's layout permits, several dummy models can be spotted in the lobby, foyer and mezzanine with several of the dresses, etc., which will be exhibited by live models during the Show. Credit cards, of course, must be carried all the time.

Revamp These Suggestions To Suit Local Conditions and Get Set For One of the Best Stunts of the Present Season!

Co-operative Advertising

One of the most important shots of the entire campaign will be the double truck of Fashion Show supplement of your newspaper. This will be just as impressive as your paper's advertising man is progressive. It's his part of the bargain and if he is a good promoter, stands in well with the merchants, and knows how to inject good angles, then the Fashion Show edition ought to be a fine piece of work.

At any rate, the theatre manager should be working with him all the time and can possibly influence the layout of the section. He must also make sure that the theatre's name and Fashion Show dates are given prominence.

Part of the newspaper's deal must be to give the theatre a certain definite amount of space gratis. See that you get your share for the theatre and that the copy is planned and laid out in accordance with your wishes.

The most important angles for your part of the section is the theatre name, the dates of the Show and the time it will be presented each day. Just getting one single performance out of a Fashion Show is old-fashioned. You should be able to run it for two, three or four days. If the entire event has been properly handled this should not be difficult at all.

Why shouldn't a Fashion Show stand up the same as an outstanding picture? It certainly should and if tackled from the right angles you will find that through this sort of co-operative tie-up you can round out two or more smashing days.

But you must lay your preliminary plans so that every point has been thoroughly covered. If you go about it in a haphazard way you can never tell when some unexpected development will pop up for which you will not be prepared.

As the publicity and public-interest campaign

The opening performance of your Fashion Show should feature invitations to the leading women folks of the community, heads of various women's organizations, committees from the Chamber of Commerce and the wives of the various civic leaders.

NEWSPAPERS AND MERCHANTS ARE ALWAYS GLAD TO CO-OPERATE!

gets well underway, you should get together frequently with the merchants and newspaper and work out new angles to building up the Show in the public's opinion so that the climax will be reached when the opening day of the Fashion Show rolls around.

Staging the Show

This is where you must do the lion's share of the work and worrying. Up to this point you have been the guy who has been pulling the strings and lending a hidden helping hand. Now you're the whole works. On your shoulders rests the responsibility for staging the Fashion Show with every ounce of showmanship you possess.

We will assume, for the present, that your theatre is equipped with a full stage. By full stage we mean a house built, and formerly operated, for stage attractions.

If such is the case you will find plenty of material to work with. Drops, backings, lighting effects, etc., etc. Try to arrange your stage so that the models are given every chance to make an impressive entrance. So much depends on this that you should plan it carefully.

A tabloid effect on a back-drop against a proper background, is one suggestion. A picture frame idea, is another. In any event, see that they make their entrance from a raised platform, down a flight of stairs. Sufficient space should be provided on the raised platform for the models to walk around a bit to display the gowns, etc., under proper lighting before the booth spot picks them for their walk down the stairs to the stage floor.

Travelers in front of the entrance frame or the dropping of the tabloid curtains will be necessary and a traveler in one.

Maintaining Interest

An important part of your staging arrangement should include a tie-up with a well-known local dancing school for some good talent. So important is this phase of your Show that if no such talent is available then you must figure on spending a few dollars for outside talent.

The dancing school angle is generally available so we will continue on the assumption that you will make the necessary arrangements.

You will need such a tie-up for the purpose of securing several neatly costumed girls for pages, a possible line-up of eight or more girls for a few precision numbers, and several specialties. The purpose of this talent is quite easily understood. You must break up the monotony of the constant parade of models in order to sustain interest and you will need a little time for the models to get a breathing spell and a chance to arrange for costume changes.

If possible, divide your Show into four parts. In the past other showmen have worked it out so that the first part of the Show consisted of lounging pajamas, morning wear, etc. Second part: luncheon and afternoon frocks, sport wear, etc. Third part: dinner dresses, formal evening gowns, etc. Fourth part, negligee, "undies," etc. Then for a finale, they staged an elaborate wedding scene which assumed the appearance of a gala parade of all the models from page girls right through to the bride, groom and attendants. This generally makes a corking finish for any Fashion Show or Revue.

Each part is broken up by the introduction of the talent from the dancing school. These dance numbers can be further improved by some of the models standing on the grand staircase as a sort of dressing for the scene.

It is advisable to print a special Fashion Show program carrying a complete description of each gown, who furnished it and such other credits that those co-operating are entitled to. If the dealers so agree, the price of each garment can be noted.

DON'T make promises you cannot keep. Remember, when tying up with the merchants and newspaper, the theatre has a certain part to play in the arrangements. Have everything clearly understood, both for your protection and to cover you in case of later misunderstandings.

If you must make foolish promises in order to get certain merchants, you will be better off without them. This applies all the way down the line.

What is expected of each and every one participating, should be put in the form of a friendly agreement or letter. Not that it is necessary to make it binding, but it will give all parties a sense of responsibility and insure better accord throughout.

The good-will you secure must endure long after the Fashion Show has been forgotten, and this will only be possible when each and every one have gone through with what they agreed to do. But you, as the theatre's representative, must show the way if you expect the others to do likewise.

Orchestra

In these days of all-sound theatre operation, the question of a pit orchestra for the Fashion Show is an important one. If you are a particularly good promoter you may be able to get the merchants to share some of the cost for the musicians. Or perhaps you can get a local orchestra to donate their services. This is so much of an individual situation that it is best left in the hands of the manager to work out.

But regardless of where, or how, you secure your pit music, be certain that the Show is properly cued. Appropriate numbers played for each individual entrance is as important as the lighting. They can work up great enthusiasm if they are competent and know their music.

Then again, they must be qualified to play for the dancing numbers. If not they may queer your entire Show and make a farce out of it. So pay attention to this part of your job. Under no circumstances do we recommend the use of non-sync. records for an elaborate Fashion Revue.

Credits

The page girls, in addition to be used for the opening of the travelers, should also carry the proper credit and description cards for each model. These cards should state where the gown is from and what it is called. Copy must be worked out in co-operation with the merchants.

They can also carry cards to announce the dance numbers. Carry the trains of the more elaborate evening gowns (if there are such things) and make themselves generally useful throughout your staging of the Show.

Be absolutely sure that your screen show for this event is an excellent one. Don't make the mistake that many have made in the past by assuming that because you are going to be sure of good crowds you can spot in a cheap picture. Keep in mind that you will be playing to many hundreds of, perhaps, new patrons. People will probably attend who have never been to your theatre before. You should make every effort to keep them as steady patrons by reason of the show you offer on your screen and the manner in which you conduct your theatre. It's a marvelous opportunity to cash in on this extra patronage and so we recommend an outstanding screen show. This combined with a fine Fashion Show ought to be the magnet to bring them back again.

Many Profitable Angles Are Presented to Those Who Know How to Take a Good Idea and See It Through

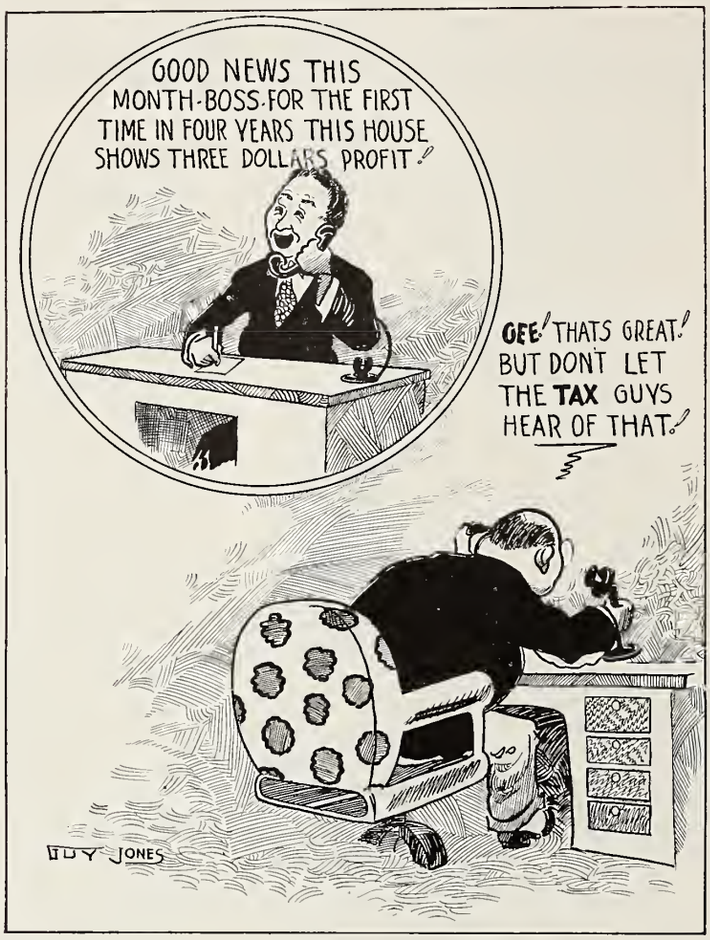
A Mailing List Slant

Here is a suggestion which may be worth trying: Hand out either plain printed cards or government postcards, self addressed to the theatre, asking for patron reaction and opinion about the entire Show. This should carry space for name and address. No matter which form you decide on, it will add many new names for your valuable mailing list.

Any other idea which suggests itself to you in this connection is worth working out. If you can pick up a few hundred names from outlying residents you stand a fair chance to eventually line them up as steady patrons. Besides, you can get their opinions about the show. If they are enthusiastic then you will feel all the more satisfied that your efforts have not been in vain. After all, whether you are staging a Fashion Show or anything else, the box-office receipts are not always the official barometer of your audience's satisfaction. If they leave the theatre with a displeased feeling then you are not paving the way for their future patronage or another event of a similar nature.

In Conclusion

Before you can ever hope to follow out any kind of a suggestion, whether it be Fashion Show or any other kind of business promotion, you must be broadminded in the sense of the word that you can take a suggestion and revamp it to fit your own particular requirements and conditions. Many a manager, with no more of a stage than a narrow apron, has staged these Fashion Revues every spring and fall. But they are showmen and know how to cope with a situation.



Every suggestion contained in this story can be modified or elaborated on to fit any theatre. If the spirit is willing the solution to every problem will be found. If you are willing to put in many extra hours of work and worry because you feel the results will warrant it, then a Fashion Show is going to click at your house. If, on the other hand, you hate the idea of extra work and worry, then nothing short of a bombshell will move you to action.

The Round Table Club pages of MOTION PICTURE HERALD have carried many fine details of successfully conducted Fashion Shows. We suggest you read them.

Simultaneously with the opening of your Fashion Show all merchants co-operating should feature Fashion Show Days in their shops. In this connection the theatre name can be worked in as part of the event. Window displays of Spring styles should also be featured.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

The big moment in the life of a theatre manager!

After years of hard work he is able to phone the boss and tell him that the house is finally out of the red. "Only three dollars," you say? Well, it's better than being out the three.

But the boss' advice is good. Don't shout your profits from the house-tops, it may attract some of the tax-addicts and provide them with good ammunition to use against you.

BIG CROWD GREETED JULIUS LAMM WHEN STAGING DANCE ACT

The photo showing the group of kids lined up on the stage does not by any means do justice to an occasion when Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, entertained his Kiddies-Club Free Dancing School, which was recently opened and attended by 90 per cent of the members.

The large crowd attracted by the event was lined up for three blocks waiting for the doors to open at 12.30 P.M., and at that time admitted to the theatre for the regular childrens' admission. They received their dancing instruction in groups until 2 P.M., when the afternoon show started, and those who wished to were allowed to sit through the balance of the show.

Through a tie-up with a local dancing school, which is one of the best in the city, these lessons are being put on without any cost to the theatre as a special Saturday afternoon feature. If you could look down into the pit you'd be able to see your fellow member Julius Lamm pounding the piano keys.

Lamm is enthusiastic over the success of his free dancing club and this is by no means the first occasion we've had for mentioning a stunt of this kind. From our observations clubs of this kind have been instrumental in obtaining a large amount of publicity and good will, to say nothing of off-shoots in the way of securing services of extra talent that develops.

The subject of organizing Kiddie Club Revues, etc., has often been brought up for discussion in this department. If others have worked, or are working, along similar lines, we would like to hear about their reactions.

BROWN ENTERTAINED PATRONS WITH LIVE MONK IN THE LOBBY

In search of something original in the way of a lobby display for "Monkey Business," William "Bill" Brown, manager of the Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., saw a live monkey in the window of a neighborhood pet shop and decided that the animal could supply the necessary atmosphere.

So "Bill" went into the store and sold the proprietor the idea of loaning the monk for one and one half weeks in advance of playdates and then set about constructing a cage of wood, chicken wire and screening. The sign shop turned out a large card about "Monkey Business," showing heads of the Marx Brothers, and this was placed at the bottom of the cage.

Well, you know the usual public reaction to viewing a monkey. From the time the animal was placed in the lobby there was a gathering of people in front of the cage, watching its antics and at the same time getting an eyeful of the card advertising the coming attraction. All the little stunt cost the house, including construction of the cage and painting cards, was $4.50. All the pet shop proprietor received for his share was a small credit card.

This is the first time we've heard from Brown in several weeks and it's gratifying to again have him on the active list. That the monk attracted attention there's no reason to doubt.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

John J. McKenzie has followed showbusiness for 22 years and seen a lot of the game during this span of time, both in legit and pictures.

He was born and brought up in New York City and received his education in public and business schools. When it came time to engage in work he picked out showbusiness because of its attraction and has been in it ever since. He started in at the box-office at the Lincoln Theatre, Broadway and 66th street, New York, when that house first opened, and since then has been connected with K. & E., the Strand Theatre Company and other firms. He has managed the Strand Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., the Duquesne Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., the Strand Theatre, Chicago, and his present house, the Fox Valley Stream, Valley Stream, N. Y.

Other executive positions held by McKenzie include an assistant treasurership at the Lincoln Square Theatre, New York City; secretary to the firm of Cohan & Harris; secretary in the Klaw & Erlanger office; five years' service as treasurer for John Cort; four years as booker for J. J. McCarthy on roadshows; an assistant managership at the Fox Glen Cove, Glen Cove, L. I., and then to his present position.

McKenzie is a married man, a member of the Elks and a Mason. He is very much interested in his chosen profession and tells us he's in it for the rest of his life.

JUST CUT OUT YOUR ADVERTISING— THEN YOU CAN TAKE IN WASHING!

Here Is Some Sound Advice From a House Manager Who Knows from Experience the Great Value of Advertising!

By EARLE HOLDEN
City Manager, Sparks Theatres
Ocala, Fla.

Earle Holden

After the two installments of the Jack Hess article on advertising we resume the series on "Is Advertising Necessary?" We have passed along the viewpoints of major company advertising managers, circuit publicity directors and other experts in this field. Now we let you peek into the thoughts of the typical house manager on a subject of such vital importance.

Earle Holden is already well-known to members and readers of the Club pages by reason of his many interesting and valuable contributions. He certainly knows what he's talking about and no doubt you will get a real kick out of the attitude he was in when he wrote this article. "CHICK"

WHEN I received a letter asking for my thought on this subject the first thing I did was to look at the calendar. I just wanted to be sure that it was not April 1. Even as I try and set forth just a few things that will come into my mind along these lines, I cannot help but think that there's a nigger in the woodpile, and that Chick is trying to play some sort of a nasty trick on me.

If I had gone through the horrors of war like those poor chaps in "The Last Flight" did, then my answer to this very funny question would be, "I'll take vanilla." And like Charlotte Greenwood who in "Flying High" went to the city to become a mother, if I thought that exploitation and advertising was not necessary, regardless of the picture, then I would go to the country and raise rabbits.

The last few words of the above paragraph will therefore express my views as to whether or not I think exploitation and advertising is necessary for pictures; yes, even if a theatre would run all hits all the time, provided they could get them.

Advertising Pays!

Should not the thought of the thousands of dollars spent each year by national advertisers on their produce, prove that advertising pays? A Lincoln car is much better than a Ford; that we all know; but does the Ford Motor Company let down in their advertising about their hit car, the Lincoln? Hundreds of other examples such as the above could be given.

Chick has stated in his letter that in answering the above question the idea was based on the thought, that would advertising and exploitation be necessary if a theatre would run all hits.

What makes a picture a hit in the first place? Just because Greta Crawford or Joan Garbo are in a picture, does that mean that picture is a hit? To my way of thinking, it does not.

Is it not a fact that those brilliant world premieres in Hollywood and New York, plus smash newspaper campaigns, have put more than one attraction in the hit class. Yet hundreds of dollars were spent in the exploitation and advertising of these pictures, to start them on their way to become hits. Put one of these pictures on Broadway cold and see what would happen. Put one of them in one of the smaller towns cold and see what would happen.

But Chick has not asked me to talk pro or con in regards to world premieres and the like. He wanted to know, was advertising and exploitation necessary to the average theatre, even should that theatre run all hits.

This Proved It!

Right here I can turn the pages of history a few months when I was located at the Fairfax in Miami. "The Vagabond King" came along. No one knew much about the cast. Dennis King had made a success on the New York stage, but not many people outside of New York had ever heard of him. This picture was certainly classed as a hit if ever there was one. We were expected to sell this picture and sell it in a big way. To this extent I put on one of the greatest campaigns in my career and succeeded, so they tell me, in setting a nation-wide record with this picture, seating capacity of the theatre and population of the city, of course, being used in making this comparison, and nothing in God's world put that picture across but hard work, plenty of exploitation and smash newspaper advertising. Yet in many places "The Vagabond King" was a flop. Was it because those particular managers were in the class that did not believe exploitation and advertising was necessary, because they had in their possession a hit?

Pictures and Cigarettes!

And that's just one example in my very short time that I have spent in the theatre field, about five and one-half years. Yet from the time I entered, until the present time, I have always had it drilled into me that advertising and exploitation was necessary, and naturally after seeing from results over this period of time, that it is necessary, I am in no mood to change my mind.

And as I keep writing and smoking my Chesterfields, I still believe that some one is trying to kid me in taking up my time in answering such a question. I mentioned Chesterfields because I smoke them. To me and to hundreds of others they're a hit cigarette and yet in every newspaper and magazine you read you see smash ads on Chesterfields. If a hit, therefore, doesn't need advertising and exploiting, why don't the cigarette manufacturers save money and stop running these ads? Competition did you say is the answer? All right. Then if I run four pictures a week and only one of them is a hit, and I plug the three and let the hit ride am I not almost saying that the hit picture is no hit at all—merely another picture? After all, like cigarettes, pictures are competition with each other, regardless of whose product it is. Those four pictures to be played that week are in competition with each other. And hit or no hit, they all have to be sold in some manner or other, and just because I have one hit out of the four is no reason why I should take a gambling chance and let it come in cold.

Experiment Proved Beyond All Doubt That Aggressive Showselling Could Make Doubtful Pictures Produce at the B.O.!

I heard one of our executives say the other day: "Any manager who does not believe that through due effort and constant work in the securing of advertising and exploitation of the product will not increase business, then I will make the remark that such a man as this should not be with this organization."

In making the above statement this executive, who knows more about the show business than I'll ever know, did not draw a class distinction. He did not mention anything about easing up on hits. His statement included each and every picture booked, regardless of whether it was in the hit class or not.

Doesn't Click Everywhere!

Right at this time it is very hard for me to set forth the facts that I would like. The question asked seems to appear so very unusual, because it is hard to designate just what exhibitors would class as a hit. Some pictures that go big in New York and other large cities are hailed and sent forth on their way as hits, but when shown in the smaller towns are complete flops. And the other way around, many flops from the big centers have proved good money pictures in the smaller towns, and naturally to the exhibitor running these they would be classed as hits.

I'd hate very much to have to operate a theatre, showing what would be termed all hits and not be allowed to advertise and exploit and have as competition down the street some exhibitor who was a live wire and knew how to advertise and exploit. And regardless of the product he would show, he could do me plenty of harm.

Hit or no hit, this is an age of advertising. The finest things are being advertised and exploited just as much as the smaller things. These are too numerous to mention. Pictures are no different from automobiles when it comes to the selling of them. The big car has to be sold just as much as the smaller one, and I believe this same thought applies to pictures, be they hit or no hit.

He Still Wants Vanilla!

As stated in the beginning of this brain storm, I'll still take vanilla. But tell me, please, where these so-called hit theatres are going to be able to get all hits to run, so they will not have to advertise and exploit. Is some miracle to happen? They tell me that motion pictures are twenty-five years old. Yet name me any one producing company that has ever put out a block of pictures, that each and every one could be classed as a hit. It would, of course, be a Godsend if all pictures put out could be hits, and then we'd really have something to shout about and advertise and exploit—yes, sir, a brand new angle. And when that time comes, the pages this article is printed on will be faded with the age, and Chick will be playing his round of golf with St. Peter or some one else.

They tell me that bread is the staff of life, and so is advertising and exploitation to the theatre. If you don't think so, try getting along without it and then go take in washing.

BOSTON'S NEW PARAMOUNT DEDICATED

A luncheon was tendered newspaper men and women of Boston by executives of the new Paramount Theatre, Boston, Mass., on the occasion of the dedication of this latest deluxe addition to that city's amusement district. Starting at the left, those in charge of the event were, Floyd L. Bell, publicity director of the Metropolitan Theatre; George Laby, managing director of the New Paramount; Edward A. Zorn, District Manager for Paramount Publix in Boston and Harry Brown, Jr., publicity director of the Paramount.

BINSTOCK AND HIGH SCHOOL AUTHORITIES ON EXCELLENT TERMS

Although the football season ended some time ago it's not too late to record that business was increased and good will fostered between school and theatre through a stunt engineered by Paul Binstock, manager of the Fortway Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Out in this Round Tabler's neighborhood is one of the city's largest High Schools, New Utrecht, and with the consent of the principal the entire football squad and executives were entertained at an "Official Football Night," the first ever sponsored by this school. The affair was in the nature of a rally and the team was accompanied by a forty-five piece field band in full uniform. The cheering squad also appeared in complete regalia.

The New Utrecht School gets out a full-size newspaper once a week and we note that on two occasions the above affair was accorded prominent mention on the front page. Pictures shown on "Football Night" included "Spirit of Notre Dame."

There can be no doubt that Binstock's move will greatly add to a better understanding between school executives, students and the theatre and will pave the way for future promotional activities. On the above occasion it also proved a means of boosting attendance 'way over the normal mark. Judging from the success of this affair and many others we've had occasion to note this past year, managers will not neglect to make connect with their schools in advance.

TOWN ALL STEAMED UP BY STUNT "OLEY" OLSON PERPETRATED

There was great excitement out in Peru, Ill., not long ago as the result of a hoax perpetrated by "Oley" Olson, manager of Alger's Peru Theatre and one of the charter members of this organization. At least we judge that there was excitement, according to a tear sheet of the local front page with banner head reading "Suicide Hoax Is Solved By Reporters."

Briefly, "Oley" was the instigator of a bang-up mystery that baffled police, citizens and reporters for several hours. Under cover of darkness he and his confederates smuggled certain articles of clothing past the gatekeeper of the river bridge and left them near the middle span. The clothing was in a bedraggled condition, of a cheap quality and was accompanied by the following note: "Lover come back, but you won't see me as you saw me last. If you don't want me, the devil does. Goodbye, C. C."

After the "levee district" and other questionable neighborhoods had been investigated and the whole town in general mystified, observing reporters noted a similarity between the note and some of "Oley's" copy advertising "Lover Come Back." Questioned over the telephone, E. E. Alger, head of the circuit, admitted that "there might be something to the idea" but would not elaborate. "Oley," however, when finally located, freely confessed that the stunt was the result of an idea formed in his fertile brain.

So there you are boys, if you want to pull something sensational in your home town. Take a leaf from Olsen's book if you have a good line on public reaction to a stunt of this nature. If it doesn't boomerang around and pick up some reverse English, you'll certainly reap a whale of a lot of front page copy, we venture. What else have you got up the sleeve, "Oley"?

ONE COLUMN ADVERTISING CREATED BY NAT HOLT & D. S. LAWLOR

(Fox Wichita Theatres, Wichita, Kansas)

This attractive group of small space ads are the product of two showmen with a real understanding of the type of advertising that not only attracts but creates the desire to see the picture too. A close study of each ad will reveal the fact that there is something in each of them to draw the eye. Maybe it's the art work; or perhaps the sensible use of a dark rule or circle; of some line of text or title. Proving that it is quite possible to make theatrical advertising worth while even where very little space is used to accomplish it.

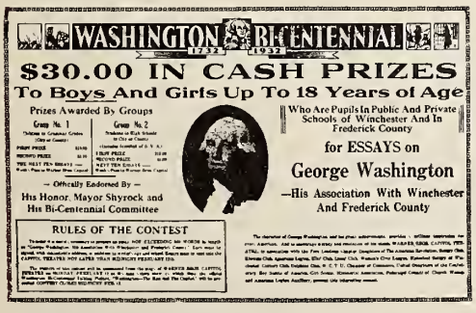
Another group of one-column ads from Holt and Lawlor will be reproduced next week. Other showmen who are using small single column material should send it along for use on these pages.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Here is the beginning of a new contributor's art work to the series.

Sid Smith is the Publix Art Chief down in Miami, Fla. (what a break for some guys) and from the first batch of material received we are quite certain that the many managers and artists who are following this series will find much food for thought and ideas.

Sid's art work is a little different from the general run because he does not seem to go in for the high-light style in his posters. This is rather unusual and we have only seen a few examples of art work not done in just that fashion.



As a contrast between this method and the other we suggest you place alongside of this work the two reproductions which will appear in next week's issue from the brush of Herb Simpson. You will then gain a much better idea as to which style you favor. Some artists claim that this straight art work is far more difficult than the high-light method. But since we are not artists we'll remain neutral.

We are in receipt of several contributions to this series without the name or address of the contributors. If those who were kind enough to send them will please divulge their identity we will gladly publish them. In the meantime we must withhold them pending the information we require.

BOUCHER CAPITALIZED ON LOCAL OBSERVANCE OF THE BI-CENTENNIAL

The big Washington Bi-Centennial push is on. From the city of Winchester, Va., seat of the Capitol Theatre, headquarters of well known showman Frank Boucher and fertile territory for Washingtoniana, comes first word to us of a wedge in a campaign that will get under way in all parts of the country during the next several months. It concerns the picture, "Washington—The Man and The Capitol," and possibilities for tie-ups with all leading civic and fraternal organizations.

His Honor, Mayor Shyrock and His Bi-Centennial Committee

RULES OF THE CONTEST

First, take a glance at the half page ad announcing the Washington essay contest among students of local schools. Note that it was endorsed by the Mayor and the Bi-Centennial Committee. It called for essays not to exceed 500 words on Washington and his association with Winchester and Frederick County. A time limit was set and notice given that winners would be announced when the picture was presented. Next, consider the local organizations tied-up with the affair, fraternal and otherwise. They're all there, from Elks to W. C. T. U's.

That your newspapers will stand behind you when you do your advance work on this picture there can be no doubt, judging from the number of stories that Boucher secured in the leading local papers, or for that matter, on any other move made by the theatre in observance of the Bi-Centennial celebration. The ad we mentioned in the preceding paragraph was paid for by the Committee, as well as another quarter page ad. Both mentioned the theatre.

For the live, energetic showman there appears much to be gained by closely following developments of this Bi-Centennial, such as sponsoring Kiddie shows, etc., in connection with the local celebration. The essay gag, as used above, will always go well with the local D. A. R. Schools, and kindred organizations, and there are many other ideas which will occur to the resourceful showman. We understand there will be several pictures available on the subject and these, together with the various festivities to be observed in all sections, should provide fertile material for the average theatre man to draw upon. Heads and mats, such as you see in the reproduction on this page, may be secured gratis by writing the Bi-Centennial Committee, Washington, D. C. It is quite fitting that the first contribution on the Bi-Centennial should come from Winchester, Va., since territory and state had so much in common with our country's first president. And we are obliged to Frank Boucher for sending it along.

Just a little reminder to Herbert Brenon, Jr., manager of the Joie Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., that he is still holding out on that "Whiz-Bang" stunt he told us he had up his sleeve. He stated that it took a little nerve to handle the proposition, so maybe he's scared to send it along. Try us out, Herb.

WEILER USING RADIO OPPORTUNITY NITE TO GOOD RESULTS ON L. I.

A Radio opportunity stunt is being employed to excellent results by Fred Weiler, managing director of the Victory Theatre, Bayside, L. I., N. Y., and as far as we know the idea is original as far as method of handling and policy is concerned.

Based on the premise of giving local talent a chance to be heard, auditions are heard each Tuesday night after regular performance and proper "mike" tests made of those thought eligible to participate. On Thursday night the chosen ones are taken to a studio especially rigged for the occasion and there do their bit unseen by the audience. After their performance they are brought on the stage and the audience acclaims the winner of a cash award by applause. To keep up interest the winner is then presented over a local radio station.

As an instance of the success of these broadcasts, a sixteen year old youngster who was the winner of a second event staged, happened to be heard by some vaudeville man and was signed for a 46 vaudeville tour at $40 per week.

Weiler's stunt appears to have all the earmarks of being an interesting attraction for theatre audiences, with the addition of possessing the local interest angle for young performers, their families and friends. It should be a comparatively simple matter for the projectionist to hook up the necessary "studio" connections for a house broadcast and then all you have to do is to sell the idea that there is an opportunity awaiting home talent. If this stunt is tried out by others and goes over as well for them as it did for Fred Weiler, we'd like to hear further on the subject.

HAVE YOU PLANNED THAT FLOWER SHOW? HERE'S HAUSCHILD'S

Lend us your ears for a few minutes, you Club members who may be thinking of putting on a flower show this Spring, for here's some dope on one held a short time ago by Thor Hauschild, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio. Easter is just in the offing and some florist in your town may be right in line for a tie-up.

In Hauschild's case he heard that a local florist, the largest shop in town, was about to celebrate with a Flower Festival. He immediately got in touch with the proprietor and sold him the idea of climaxing the affair with a festival on the stage of the theatre on the final night.

Then he went out and contacted several leading merchants to tie in with the idea of promoting an amateur stage show in connection with the event. A department store, a men's shop, a bank, a furniture store, a jeweler, shoe store, an electric company, the American Legion and a School of Dancing all got aboard the band wagon to put over the big show.

The florist distributed and paid for 5,000 cards that found their way into cars about town and a herald announcement of the stage show was given every person who visited the florist's shop and greenhouse during the festival. These heralds also pointed out that it would be well to save them in connection with the award of gifts donated by each firm represented in the tie-up. One of the participating firms, a clothing store, furnished girls, gowns, etc., to model the wedding and sport wear and to present the correct usage of flowers with dress clothes. The same outfit also donated a ladies' sport sweater, and like others, took space in the full page co-operative ad promoted by Hauschild for the occasion.

Other gifts included a suit of pajamas, a $5 gold piece from the bank, a console mirror, an expensive silver vase, shoes, an electric iron, talent from the dancing school, and a squad of men in uniform from the Legion.

The show started off with a bridal scene in which the last word in gowns for the bride, bridesmaid and flower girls were shown amid an appropriate setting of flowers. Attire of the moment in sports, dinner and dance wear, was also displayed by the clothing store models, all of whom wore corsages supplied by the florist.

The next scene brought out the "40 and 8" drum corps of the Legion, followed by juvenile dancers from the School of Dancing and music between numbers by a well known orchestra. Incidentally, this orchestra was furnished gratis to the theatre by the florist. Other little acts by the students, such as poses, singing numbers, etc., rounded out the program.

To sum up attractions furnished the theatre without cost, Hauschild had a fine orchestra in the pit; a stage attractively set with flowers; a military quartette, with squad of Legionaires; a style show with 10 good-looking girls and many modish gowns; four acts from the dancing school, and three professional singers for solo work between stage settings. The only cost to theatre was for extra stage hands, a very small amount of newspaper advertising and the cost of an advance trailer. It is also well to mention that all newspaper advertising done by merchants, aside from the cooperative, carried boxed notices of the theatre attraction. The newspapers also came across with many splendid stories.

Although the above show was staged in the late fall of the year, the general scheme appears to be one that can be put in effect at any time. Easter is the season for an opening drive on both flowers and spring styles in clothing and we therefore think Hauschild's plan of campaign both timely and adaptable to the average theatre. Certainly, he put on a corking show at negligible cost to theatre, to say nothing of institutional value.

THE LOCAL FLOWER SHOW!

A "natural" for some time around Easter is the local flower show sponsored by the theatre, local paper and citizens who go in for flower raising on a big scale.

In the past this idea was instrumental in promoting plenty of good-will and extra business for those theatres with space enough to put it over. A large lobby, mezzanine or foyer will answer the purpose and the show can be divided into two classes. One for the wholesale growers and florists while the other is restricted to amateurs.

Space can be allotted according to the individual's requirements and the type of flowers to be displayed. Judges can be selected from nearby towns in order to avoid any favoritism among the locals.

Give this slant some serious consideration. A little investigation may reveal its immense possibilities right for your house. Get busy now and see what you can find out about it. If at all possible start the ball rolling and line up everyone in town for a Gala Flower Show.

LARRY WOODIN HAS PLAN FOR PUTTING ON CHARITY SHOWS

If any of our readers haven't pulled that charity show it may be timely to record the method used by Larry Woodin, manager of the Arcadia Theatre Co., operators of the Arcadia and Bache Theatres, Wellsboro, Pa.

When putting on one of his annual affairs of this sort Woodin enlists support from every local organization for a midnight show and then finds out from patrons what show already played would be acceptable for the occasion. The result is that there is always a house packed with satisfied customers who come to see a picture they've seen before but which they've asked to see again. And furthermore, Charity has the additional chance of getting an old picture free of charge from the distributor. What do you think Woodin's patrons asked for this year? No less than "Fox Movietone Follies of '29."

We don't think anybody can pick a flaw in Woodin's diplomatic way of handling a charity show. By contacting all local organizations, he eliminates the chance of hurting anyone's feelings and with his straw vote on choice of picture, satisfies the audience in that respect.

When the occasion of some sporting event rolls around and circulation of a message is desired at the field, etc., this might be accomplished through a medium such as used by Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Palace Theatre, Long Beach, Calif.

He arranged for the construction of a cheap, practical megaphone of cardboard, ready to be folded to the shape of a cone, and saw that these were handed out to all ticket purchasers. The outside portion carried a photo of a featured player, name of current attraction, theatre and playdates.

Just to satisfy himself that the megaphones were being used, Jack paid a visit to the stadium and saw waves of his yellow cardboard in every direction. The stunt was used in connection with "Local Boy Makes Good" and results at the box office were highly gratifying.

The above appears to be a simple and effective means of getting out a message and one that can be used for any outdoor event. At any rate, it secured results for Rosenberg and we're passing the idea along for others to use if they see fit. Remember, it was just an ordinary piece of cardboard, cut to be rolled into conical form.

Back With Publix

Richard "Dick" Older, formerly with Publix, has returned to the Utah-Idaho division in the capacity of manager of the Orpheum Theatre at Twin Falls, Idaho, it was recently announced in Salt Lake City.

WHY PUT IT OFF ANY LONGER!

HENRY W. BEUTTEL is the assistant manager of the Alpine Theatre, a Loew house in Brooklyn, N. Y., managed by A. A. Cantor. Henry is 24 years of age and prior to his five-months' stay with the Alpine, was chief of staff at the Valencia Theatre, Jamaica, and therefore was promoted to his present position. His boss states that he is "clean cut, has a good personality and a pleasant disposition," so with all these qualiifications and Cantor's hand to guide him, it probably won't be long before Beuttal will be branching out for himself. In the meantime, we'll be glad to hear what this new Club member is doing to help the good work along at the Alpine.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MORRIS HATOFF manages the State Theatre, a Skouras house over in Jersey City, N. J., operating on a first-run, straight picture policy. He, also, has been following Club pages and now comes across with his application for membership in the fastest growing organization of theatre managers in the world. Glad to have you with us, Morris, and now that you have been introduced to the whole gang, let's hear something about your work at the State. Just shoot along some show-dope and we'll see that it's broadcast.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARL H. MEEKER was recently transferred from the management of the Rockland Theatre, Nyack, N. Y., to a similar post at the Rialto Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., and while en route found time to fill out his application for membership in the Club. Right now he's operating on a policy of four changes per week and that's enough to keep any manager stepping along. Still, he promises to become a regular contributor to this department and we hope he'll find time to tip off his brother Round Tablers to some of the stunts he's using to increase attendance.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

Z. W. SCHNEIDER is another assistant manager to send along his application for membership in this organization and he comes recommended by Round Tabler "Milt" C. M. Wight, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Pasco, Wash. We are glad to have Schneider with us and know that he will continue to do his utmost to help Wight put the Liberty over the top. This new member has been in show-business for the past two years and has spent all that time at this one house. We wish him lots of success in his climb up the ladder.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD F. SILHA manages the Ritz Theatre out in Berwyn, Ill., and we are also in receipt of his membership application. Silha is in charge of an 1800-seat house on the Lasker Circuit and we're very glad to include his name among his several thousand fellow showmen. The next time you write, Ed, tell us about what's going on in show-business out your way, so that we can pass along some information to the other boys in this outfit.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SIDNEY SECKLER is a member of the A. H. Schwartz group of managers operating in Brooklyn and Queens, New York City, and this new Round Table member holds forth at the Rialto Theatre, Flatbush ave., Brooklyn, a section where competition in show-business can keep any man stepping to get his share of the trade. There are theatres on all sides of Sidney's house and we'd like to know more about what he's doing to lure shekels to the box office of the Rialto.

RALPH C. YALE sends us his application from Waterloo, N. Y., where he manages the Waterloo Theatre, one of the B. B. Guttstadt's houses. Prior to taking his present post Yale put in three years as assistant manager at the Fox Capitol Theatre in Newark, N. Y., and recently gained his promotion. We also hear that he knows how to work one of those big organs. At any rate, we're glad to list his name among the new Club members and will look forward to hearing what he is doing to sell shows in Waterloo.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TAN BOON BEE manages the Majestic Theatre at Penang, Strait Settlements, at least so his recent letter stated, and there's every reason to believe he's still there unless he's joined the Chinese army at Shanghai in the meantime. Tan is another showman from across the seas to become a member of this organization and we'd like to have all the boys give him a big hand. He sent along some data relative to show-selling in his section of the globe and we'll see that it makes its appearance in this department in due time. 'Till then, here's hoping that he doesn't get into any trouble with the Japs.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TAZWELL L. ANDERSON, 3rd, no more no less, is the skipper of the Tenth Street Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., a house located on the well-known Peachtree street in this live Southern city. Tazwell is also a full fledged member of this Club at this writing and it is a pleasure to include his name on the roster. All he has to do now in order to keep in good standing is to let us know from time to time just what he is doing to bring patrons into his theatre. We'll be looking forward to his next letter.

E. C. AREHART is the owner manager of the Gem Theatre in Woonsocket, S. Dak., and some of the boys who are groaning about existing business conditions in their towns ought to get a slant on some of the difficulties a showman has to contend with out in the Dakotas. What with heavy snow, bad roads, grasshoppers and small crops last summer and general conditions all around, sledding hasn't been very pleasant. This new Club member has the only theatre operating in two counties, but in face of everything, he states, a good picture will bring out patrons. We'll be looking for further news from Woonsocket.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. R. SHOEMAKER is in charge of the Grand Theatre, a Manning and Wink house in Cartersville, Ga. The official Club welcome is also cordially extended this new member and we hope that he will contribute his share of the stories that appear in this department from week to week. Just shoot along an account of that last show-selling gag you used, A. R., and we'll see that it's passed along to the rest of the boys.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY HIMES is the assistant manager of the State Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, and has the job of helping his boss, Walter Morris, sell shows The Club welcome is also cordially extended this new member and with the State now covered 100 per cent by Round Tablers, we should not lack information as to what is going on in show business at that house. When you write again, Harry, let us know what you, Walter and Shuler, if the latter is still there, are doing to keep seats filled.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HANK LOWRY is in charge of the Rockland and Broadway Theatres in Nyack, N. Y., a matter of some 3,100 seats now being operated under the Skouras banner. The Rockland plays vaudeville and pictures and the Broadway dramatic stock and pictures. That ought to be enough to keep any one man up to his neck in work but we hope that Hank will find time to keep his Club fully informed on all interesting goings-on in show-business in his town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TED CRAFT manages the West Bend Theatre out in West Bend, Wis., and we're also mighty glad to list this gentleman as one of the Club's newly elected members. This organization has many representatives in his state and all of them are live showmen. We hope that Craft will help keep up the high standard set by his fellow Round Tablers out his way and regularly send along news of what's doing in show-business in West Bend. Can we count on you, Ted?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TOM POULOS is in charge of the Paonia Theatre in Paonia, Colo., and he is another showman in line for introduction to this ever-increasing army of managers. He, like every other man in this business today, has to step on the gas to keep trade up to the proper notch. We will be looking forward to further communications from this new member and hope that he will be a regular contributor to these columns.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LAWRENCE ROBICZEK hails from the big town of Brooklyn, N. Y., where he manages the Avenue U Theatre, and with his application at hand there's another Brooklynite in this army of showmen. He operates in a section where a manager can still put over exploitation, hence we'll be expecting to hear just what brand of showmanship is being used by this new Club member.

DEAR HERALD:

We've got a bran' new tire cover for April Shower all painted up and lettered in colors that cost us five bucks and looks a million, and now listen, brethren, if we catch a tire thief trying to purloin that cover he's going to have the liveliest five minutes of his entire existence, if he lasts that long, which we doubt. We'd sooner hit a tire cover thief on the snout than have the prettiest star in Hollywood kiss us on suspicion.

Cunningham in "Asides & Interludes" says that last year the amateur song writers submitted 5,000 song compositions to a music publisher and only three were accepted. The public owes that publisher a vote of thanks although the percentage of acceptances was entirely too high.

If the publishers will guard the public as well against jazz music writers we will try and worry along until we get a Democratic administration if it takes a hundred years.

Harold B. Franklin is reported to have said that what the picture business needs to bring about a revival of business is "Fewer theatres and better pictures." The producer-owned chains of theatres have evidently been working to bring about fewer theatres and less competition, and according to a recent article in MOTION PICTURE HERALD there were 5,339 houses closed, which is 339 more than we predicted some two years ago.

Mr. Franklin is to be commended for the stand he has taken for better pictures. His knowledge as to what constitutes better pictures is so well recognized and so well known that his statement should have some weight with the producers, notwithstanding thousands of theatremen have been clamoring for this for years.

Out here in Hollywood when you go to bed at night you wonder how hard it will freeze before morning. In the morning you wonder if it will quit raining before day after tomorrow, which it most likely won't. We like this town in a lot of ways, but somehow . . . .

We want to get back on the highways
To feel the throb of the motor again,
We want to get back on the byways
Where the theatre boys are real men.
We long to get out where the zephyrs
Are laden with clover bloom sweet,
Away from traffic street jams
Caused by auto-crazed hams,
Then our happiness would sure be complete.

We want to get back down in Texas
Where the longhorns are fat in the pens,
From Brownville clear up to Collexus
And the roosters are in soft with the hens.
We want to go back to Nebraska
Where the sun melts the dew on the lawn.
Yes, we want to go back
To that Spanish type shack
When the snow and the blizzards are gone.

There has got to be something done to protect Reno. Mexico is granting divorces by mail, and that isn't fair. All you have to do is make application by mail and enclose a check to cover the fee, and the decree comes right back on the next mail. Time was when they had to give some valid reason for a divorce, but then that was back in the old fogy days when people went to church and had some regard for their sacred covenants, but today the contestants break into print and eulogize one another for their excellent qualities when, if the truth were known, there was most likely another man and another woman in the case.

AN OPEN NOTE (Not promissory) TO G. K. RUDULPH, RCA PHOTOPHONE. Dear G. K. You ask us to call up Ann Harding, Gloria Swanson, Marion Davies, Joan Crawford, et al, and invite ourself out to their homes to hear your Photophone equipment. You are asking too much, G.K. You should remember that this is Monday and it's washday with the girls, and besides that they have their baking to do, not to mention darning their socks and other household duties. No, sir, we are not going to do it. We're going to take it for granted that if they have your equipment installed in their homes it MUST be right. And then here's another thing. If YOU say it is good that cinches it with us. What will you charge us for one of your contraptions? We might install one in OUR home.

We were driving down Hollywood boulevard the other day and stopped at a light signal. There was a newsboy standing there with a bundle of papers under his arm and he saw our Nebraska license plate and he yelled, "Forty-five people frozen in a Nebraska blizzard." We leaned out of the window and said, "Say son, where is Nebraska?" And he grinned and said "Damfino."

Ernie, if you don't hear anything more from us, call up the police station and come out and bail us out.

THE EMBLEM OF PERFECT SOUND
RCA PHOTOPHONE INC
SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE EN ROUTE.

My Dear "J. C.":

Any exhibitor who is trying to meet competition with inferior sound reproducing equipment is heading in only one direction, and when he arrives at his destination he will find he has been expending his efforts in behalf of that well known, but unreliable firm of "Failure & Company." That is as sure as fate and I'll tell you why. I know, because I can cite a number of specific instances. A short time ago I had occasion to visit a certain city. As is my custom, I visited several theatres for the express purpose of studying the sound reproduction. In one certain house, having seen the name of one of Hollywood's foremost stars prominently emblazoned upon the marquee, and having previously seen the picture in New York, I found this magnificent production practically ruined by inferior reproducing equipment. It was absolutely terrible. Now, in my opinion, "J. C.", the exhibitor who was operating that theatre was not giving his patrons a fair break and most certainly he wasn't giving the producer of the picture any the best of it. It was a good picture, had been well recorded, and had received the acclaim of New York's leading motion picture critics. Well, what happened? That exhibitor, who, by the way, was operating a subsequent run house, after a period of constantly-waning patronage, did something that probably salvaged his property and his own peace of mind. He took some sound advice. He scrapped the equipment that was driving away his patrons and installed one of the new RCA Photophone Standard Size units. And then what? Why, his old patrons came back and along with them came flocks of new ones. The best recorded picture sent out from the great studios of Hollywood is doomed to dismal failure in the theatre that has poor sound reproducing equipment.

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 118.—(A) What is the candlepower per square millimeter of the ordinary arc crater floor? (B) How may the total light-giving power of the crater floor of an ordinary arc be computed? (C) May the square millimeter light-giving power of a crater floor be decreased appreciably by using an oversized positive carbon?

Answer to Question No. 114

Bluebook School Question No. 114 was: "(A) Just why does a crater form only one carbon tip with a d.c. arc, and on both sides with an a.c. arc? (B) Just why are the craters smaller with an a.c. arc than with a d.c. arc? (C) Electric current will not travel through the air except in flashes at very high voltages. So far as has to do with a projection arc, it will not leap from one carbon tip to the other even across an air gap of one sixty-fourth of an inch, yet when the carbons actually contact and are again separated, current will flow, even though the separation be increased to as much as one-fourth of an inch or more. Explain this matter fully."

The number answering this question was the largest of any in the entire series. It was a hard task to get through them all but it was finally accomplished. Those answering acceptably were C. Rau and S. Evans (examine your answer to A, please), Lester Borst*, Lewis A. Goldman (see comment to Rau and Evans), Herman Billings*, John Griffiths*, G. E. Doe*, C. E. Campbell*, James J. Hobdell*, Barney Devietti*, Roy J. Arntson, Bill Doe*, P. L. Dunning, Dave Peterson and R. D. Frinck, H. D. Tyler, William Broadbent*, Andrew Davis, H. B. Billings*, T. Van Vaulkenburg, S. Simmons, Phent Davis, D. A. Beaver, Chick Peters*, Dave Andrews, P. H. Bondom, James Ledbetter, Ralph Armstrong and Frank Dalbey. (Asterisks indicate the better replies.)

A goodly list, you will observe. Also, you may have made note of the fact that once a man really gets going in the "School" he seldom drops out. I shall use the answer of different ones for each section, no one having made the best response to them all. Everything considered, I believe Section A is answered best by G. E. Doe, who says:

"The electronic flow is from negative to positive. When direct current is employed at the arc, the flow is always in one direction, hence one carbon—the upper one in case of the straight projection arc, the horizontal one in the case of the straight high intensity projection arc, and the one whose tip faces the mirror in the case of the reflector arc is always positive. The crater always forms on the positive carbon for the reason that the electronic action is always toward positive. Further than this I have been unable to obtain reliable information.

"A crater forms on both carbon tips when a.c. is used at the arc for the reason that each carbon is positive for one-half of each current cycle."

I do not myself know of any very satisfactory scientific reason that has been advanced to account for the crater formation. We know it forms on positive. If the engineers of the National Carbon Company, or any one else, really can explain convincingly just why a saucer-shaped crater is formed, I would be indeed indebted to them for the setting of it forth.

We will hear from James Devoy on Section B. He says:

"For the simple reason that the electronic stream is not directed continuously upon the positive carbon tip, as in the case of the d.c. arc, but instead is divided equally between both carbon tips. Whatever the electronic effect may be which operates to dig the saucer-shaped depression in the positive carbon tip when d.c. is used at the arc, that effect is of course divided in half in the case of the a.c. arc, with the result that a crater is formed on both carbons. We may assume that the total force exerted by the a.c. electronic stream is the same as is exerted when an equal amperage of d.c. is used, but I do not believe the two craters of a 50-ampere a.c. arc would quite equal the area of a 50-ampere d.c. arc, all other conditions being equal. This, I believe, is for the reason that whereas the d.c. crater floor remains at constant temperature, the a.c. crater floors are constantly heating and cooling, which should, and I think, does, tend to decrease the total combined crater area somewhat."

This sounds like a good argument to me. The alternating cooling effect should, it seems to me, decrease the combined areas of the two a.c. craters as compared with the constant temperature d.c. crater.

And now on Section C, we will hear from our old friend, John Griffiths—though concerning the correctness of his theory I make no comment. Brother Griffiths says:

"When the electrodes are brought into physical contact with each other, the circuit is of course completed, whereupon a stream of electrons race around the circuit at enormous speed. The movement is in a direction which carries them from negative to positive. If the contact between the carbons were perfect, so that the contact or joint offered no more resistance than the rest of the carbon, the carbon tips would remain comparatively cool, and when separation occurred only a spark would occur due to the break of the electronic stream. [Don't think I agree with John on this, but anyhow the argument is of interest, and I shall ask carbon engineers to pass upon the point—F.H.R.]

"Due, however, to the high resistance of the contact, the carbon tip is heated to high incandescence, and upon separation an arc of hot gases forms between the tips, and this is advanced as the reason why the current is able to flow across the gap.

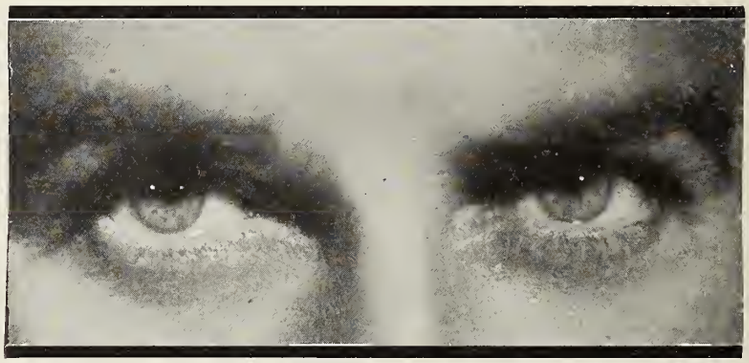
"But is that the correct analysis? I do not believe so! The stream of hot gas is only an effect, and not the cause. The real answer, in my opinion, is the excitement of the overloaded cathode atoms. In the normal atom, electrons circulate without interference with each other, but in the excited atom, the natural rhythm is upset, the collision occurs.

"I will attempt to prove that the gas stream is not a necessary factor in the matter of the electron stream completing its circuit between the separated carbon tips. We all are by now familiar with the action involved in photoelectric cells, I think. In it we have an example in which merely by permitting light to shine upon the cathode. the electric stream is enabled to cross a very considerable air gap without the presence of either a hot gas stream, or very high voltage.

"Experts tell us the cathodes absorb energy from the light rays, which enable them to throw off electrons that reach the anode, but according to their own figures and formulas, it would require several hundred days for the cathode atoms to absorb sufficient energy to throw off a single electron—if they consider light to be composed of electromagnetic waves. In other words, they either must change their theory of electron emission, or else the electromagnetic wave theory of light, which incidentally does not mean they are necessarily right in either theory. Whether it is a case of the anode and cathode of an electric arc, or the same elements of a p.e. cell, when a difference of potential exists between anode and cathode, the cathode atoms always carry an excess of electrons. This is erroneously attributed to the drift of free electrons to the negative end of a line.

"According to my own view, free electrons do not exist. Even though they did exist, it would be contrary to accepted laws for negative electrons to seek the negative end of a line. The excess of electrons at the cathode end of the line is due to the electrons gravitating to the lower energy levels, they being the most dense of all matter. Moreover, analysis of photoelectric electrons indicate that they come from the orbits of atoms, and not from the intervening spaces between the atoms. [Phew! And this comes from a working projectionist!] Excess electrons in the cathode atoms cause critical distribution. A sudden change in temperature or contact with other excited atoms, such as those of a light beam, for example, is sufficient to cause collisions, so that they change from a state of steady absorbing energy to a state where they are alternately absorbing and radiating energy.

"During the periods when they are radiating energy, they become more positive than the anode atoms and throw off electrons, but they are thrown only along the lines which reach the anode. In other words, they gravitate toward the anode, and this causes a vacancy in the cathode, which is instantly filled from the anode via the internal circuit, so that every time the cathode enters its period of radiation, electrons are permitted to gravitate through a complete circuit, with the cathode atoms acting as a valve to regulate the flow. We thus see why photoelectric current depends upon the frequency of the light beam, and undoubtedly the same action is involved in the flow of electrons across the gap between the carbon tips of an electric arc."



As to the theory advanced, I must admit it is beyond me, but I do know that John Griffiths has made an intensive study of the atom and has issued a treatise upon that subject which has received serious consideration by scientists.

In this matter I find, somewhat to my surprise, several theories advanced. Here is one by C. E. Campbell. I am unable to agree with it, either, but it is interesting. He says:

"Air, especially dry air, is a good resistor to electricity. The arc does not have a very high pressure, or as commonly called, voltage. Current cannot flow without a pressure forcing it. If pressure were applied to the current in a large quantity, it would break down the resistance of the air and flow through the gap. When the carbons are brought together and drawn apart, the air does not rush back into the gap. because the path of the electrons is strong enough to resist the air pressure. If the carbons are drawn apart farther and farther, the electron path, due to lack of pressure to force the electrons, will become weaker and weaker until the air will push through the path, therefore causing the electrons to stop flowing, which, of course, breaks the arc."

Here is the answer of Messrs. Rau and Evans to Section C, which I believe to be the correct answer. They say:

"The reason that current will continue flowing after the carbons have been brought into contact with each other and then separated, is that at the instant of separating the carbons the action of the current heats the carbon particles to the point of volatilization, and in the process of volatilization a gas is formed which is a conductor of electricity. This gas will form a conductor for the current until the carbons are separated so far that the resistance of the gas stream is too high to allow the impressed electromotive force to compel the current across the gap."

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending March 3

The stage show, "As Time Goes By," devised and produced by Boris Petroff, proved to be very enjoyable, at least from the entertainment angle. The show opened with a winter scene of the "gay 90's" in which the 10 Moffie Boys and Girls offered a simplified version of the "Floradora" number. This got the show off to a good start, and served as an opener for York and King, the originators of tintypes, and a man and woman (especially Miss King) who are great entertainers. Their routine consisted of rapid fire chatter, songs and many laughable gags. The Moffie Dancers followed with a quadrille and an old fashioned waltz, both of which were nicely performed.

Chic York served as master of ceremonies in this show and introduced Warren Boden, a young fellow who proved to be a wizard with his banjo. He not only played a number of popular tunes but also the difficult Rachmaninoff "Prelude in C Sharp Minor." He justly deserved the fine reception given him.

The Reilly Kids, two young girls and a boy, presented a great routine of songs and dances, which made them great hits. The remainder of the show was typically musical comedy, both in setting and performances and it was very good, from both standpoints. In it, Madelene Killeen was featured singing a popular number and doing a very good high-kick dance, using as a background the Moffie boys and girls. Madelene has everything to make her a good bet for musical shows and she did very well at the performance caught.

The outstanding personality of the show, Alexander Gray, closed with a routine of numbers he has sung in operettas and motion pictures. The setting and background were built up to the usual proportions for a "big" show and left the audience with the feeling that they had witnessed a great show.

The feature picture was "Broken Lullaby," featuring Nancy Carroll and Lionel Barrymore. The show caught was the first on Friday evening.

Jimmy Ellard Back in Dallas As M.C. at RKO Majestic

One of the most popular masters of ceremonies ever to appear in Dallas returned to stop the show at the RKO Majestic this week. Jimmy Ellard earned his place in the esteem of Dallas patrons while appearing for eighty weeks at the Palace, holding sway for 53 consecutive weeks on his longest stay at this Publix theatre. When stage shows were discontinued at the Palace last summer Ellard went to the Metropolitan theatre, Boston and the Paramount theatre, Brooklyn.

The popular Jimmy will conduct overtures and be special soloist for an indefinite stay.

NBC Network Gets KTBS

Station KTBS, Shreveport, La., has been added to the Southwest group of the National Broadcasting Company networks on February 28. The new addition brings the total of NBC network stations to 88.

CHARLIE AGNEW

is one of Chicago's most popular orchestra leaders. Charlie has been at the famous Edgewater Beach Hotel since the first of the year and getting more popular all the time. Besides being a good conductor, Charlie is also a musician and composer of note. He was one of the popular masters of ceremonies for Publix and Balaban & Katz for over a year and just before he came to the "Beach" he conducted his orchestra, nightly, in the Terrace Garden. Charlie is a personable and likeable chap who is stepping up the ladder of success very rapidly.

Warfield Theatre Gets New M. C.

Paul Ash, who has held forth for several months as m. c. and musical director at Loew's Warfield theatre, San Francisco, has concluded his engagement and has joined Charles E. Kurtzman, former theatre executive of this city and New York, in reopening Tait's-at-the-Beach, a famous old cafe and cabaret. Hermie King, who set a record for continuous service at the Fox Oakland, succeeds Ash at the Warfield. The same type of intimate stage show will be continued.

Theatre Installs Orchestra

The Alhambra theatre in Milwaukee is featuring an 18-piece orchestra as part of its regular program. The orchestra is under the direction of Sol Shapiro, and guest conductors will appear occasionally.

Roxy on Fair Music Committee

S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) has been appointed a member of the music committee of the coming Chicago World's Fair. The appointment was made by Herbert Witherspoon, chairman of the commission.

STAGE SHOWS

Salt Lake City Orpheum

Week ending February 20

The Salt Lake RKO Orpheum theatre this week is offering as a stage attraction a headliner in the Hilton Sisters appearance here for the first time in many years. The Hilton sisters are Siamese twins who not only possess pleasing voices, which is proved in their selection of several songs, but also give an exhibition of fox-trotting, each with her partner. They next gave instrumental numbers on various instruments and were well received. They have packed the house throughout the week, a goodly number of the crowd being children. The Havana Rumba orchestra, with its typical instruments, offers a program of Cuban music interspersed with its version of American jazz, under the direction of the Rimacs, and two young women dancers round out the entertainment.

The show is opened with the Allison sisters in a speedy tumbling act which is very well done but scarcely appreciated, as is the rule with acrobatics. The Scotch comedian, Dick Henderson and Kramer and Boyle, comedians a la carte, provide an exceptional amount of hilarity and laughter with their original varieties of nonsense and a portion enjoyable music.

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ending February 19

The stage show at the Mastbaum this week is a one-man affair, or rather a one-man and boy show, with Ted Lewis and His Band of joymakers doing their best to "make everybody happy." The stage setting consists of a huge facsimile of Lewis' famous hat, with the stage band grouped around the brim. Following Lewis' singing of "Dream a Little Dream of Me," the Mastbaum Ballet, dressed in imitation of him, dances on to the stage and revolves around him as he sits in a big chair. He also sings "Music is Magic" and "Sugar." The show is also supported by The Dixie Four, a colored quartet who know how to use not only their voices but their feet. They sing "How Come You Treat Me Like You Do" and "Heaven" very delightfully.

Threatening Lewis' supremacy is a little colored boy about five years old who is introduced as Ted Lewis, Jr., and who almost stops the show. Dressed like the band in buff and brown silk, this little pickaninny tap dances, sings and talks to the audience like a veteran, all with the utmost naturalness and lack of self consciousness. As the band plays "Aloha," the chorus in Hawaiian costumes stages a South Sea Island dance. In the finale the crown of the huge hat is lifted, disclosing the chorus in ballet dresses with large silver hats.

A feature of the stage show this week is Gounod's "Faust," played by the orchestra under the leadership of David Ross, with a supporting choral ensemble of sixteen.

Damrosch Awarded High Honor

Dr. Walter Damrosch, dean of American conductors, was decorated with the order of Commander of the White Lion of Czecho-Slovakia during his symphonic hour over an NBC-WJZ network on February 28.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Eddie Paul, maestro at the Brooklyn Paramount is finally getting the recognition he so greatly deserves. . . . His name is on all three marquees this week. . . . Eddie has been a valuable asset to Publix for a long time. . . . He is one of the few leaders who can make a small orchestra sound like a large one and I for one am glad to see him get a break at last. . . .

Feist's have "honeys" in their numbers, "Wooden Soldier and the China Doll," and "Snuggled on Your Shoulder." They are both comparatively new tunes and they're right up in the best seller class already. . . . Dave Kent, formerly of Robbins and Witmarks is now in charge of special service for Donaldson, Douglas and Gumble. . . . Mack Goldman, formerly of Remicks is now in charge of the radio department of the same firm. . . . They're both plugging away on 'Good Night Moon," Walter Donaldson's newest effort. . . .

The fellow doing the impersonation of Paul Whiteman on the Loew circuit is going by the name of Paul Small. . . . He is not the Paul Small who is the popular radio artist . . . he is just another of those people who try to cash in on someone else's popularity. . . . Andy Sannella NBC conductor of the Sampler Orchestra, which plays over an NBC-WEAF network, has been doing a little sampling of his own recently. . . . The versatile band leader is getting a taste of aviation as the pilot of his own plane. . . . Ray Knight, leader of the Blue Moon Cuckoos, which is broadcast over the same network, turned serious, recently, long enough to address the C. of C. in his old home town of Salem, Mass. . . . Harry Tondra is piano-organist at Loews in Yonkers. . . . Murray Austrian is the new band leader in the same house. . . .

Here's a little news from music men of dear old Chi. . . . Erwin Barge who has been with Milton Weil for the past number of years and who just started work for Forrester Music, was, together with his wife and baby, seriously injured in an auto accident. . . . Chick Castle one of the best liked and without a doubt the best known of Chicago's many music men, has just resigned from the Oleman Music Company. . . . Chick has a number of "irons in the fire" but as yet hasn't told which one he is going to take. . . . Hard-working Bob Cole, manager of the Chi office of Con Conrad, they tell me, is "Keeping out of Mischief Now," apparently by working on that number. . . . Bob is from the west coast, but has acclimated himself plenty fast and made himself a lot of new friends . . . and getting the plugs. . . . That "Kiss Me Good-night" tune of DeSylva's has not only a darned pretty melody but plenty sentiment in the words. . . . Horatio Nicholls wrote the music and Archie Gottler the words. . . . Paul Jones, busy pro. manager for E. B. Marks Music, finds time to write me that he is simply engulfed by a deluge of great new songs . . . and that picking the firm's new spring catalogue is as difficult as a girl choosing a new hat at a bargain sale. . . . Their new novelty song, "Mama Don't Want No Peas an' Rice an' Cocoanut Oil," which has loads of extra choruses, should be pie for organists looking for something a little different. . . . Paul Whiteman now signs his name Colonel Paul Whiteman. During his recent visit to Louisville, Kentucky, Paul was dubbed a colonel on the staff of Gov. Ruby Laffoon.

ED DAWSON

STAGE SHOWS

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending February 24

The Saenger show is divided into two parts this week. Cliff (Ukulele Ike) Edwards holds a spot to himself. Edwards opens with "Singing in the Rain," gags a bit, sings a sentimental ballad, gags some more to the audience's delight, and sings a suggestive closing song on what goes on in revival camps.

"Memoirs of Washington" was the title of a beautifully staged presentation which followed. It introduced the Strakova girls in a minuet; then followed a trio of harp, cello and piano which played the Pavane of Louis XIII. The Hilda-Muarray dance team did an acrobatic waltz, and the finale was an applause getter, a tableau of Washington mounted on a white horse, accepting Cornwallis' sword. The stage was skilfully lighted by Tony Alloy. Et Fontana conducted the pit orchestra.

San Antonio Aztec

Week ending February 17

Signa Serene, mind reader supreme, and her male assistant clicked as an extra added stage presentation. She answered many serious questions on business, love, travel and also located several missing persons. Miss Serene has a wonderful personality and at the same time delivers her material in a way that is bound to please.

The vaudeville program of three acts opens with the dancing act of Bernice and Emily, with songs by Lee Murray and eccentric dances by Wally Crisham. Murray sings a song, then Bernice and Emily enter dancing and join and the three go into high kicking and a soft shoe dance. Crisham does a "drunk" eccentric dance, carrying a lantern, finishing with a bouncing dance to "Am I Blue." Then comes Murray in an eccentric dance joined by Bernice and Emily in an athletic dance while Crisham does soft shoe work.

Charles King is next, in vocal numbers, "Singing in the Rain," "Sitting in the Movies," "Wedding of the Painted Dolls," "Happy Days are Here Again," "Broadway Melody," "I'm Happy When I'm With You," and "On Old Broadway." Toto, the clown, follows in pantomime clowning which got some applause from the kids but not much from the adults.

Philadelphia Fox

Week ending February 12

Reri, beautiful South Sea Island star of "Tabu," created a sensation in her personal appearance on the Fox stage this week. In addition, Fanchon and Marco offered one of their latest creations, the "Hacienda" Idea.

The stage show opened with the Fox stage band in gay Spanish costumes seen through a scrim and seated in a courtyard. As the stage became illuminated, the band played a lively dance while Adriana, Spanish dancer and mistress of ceremonies, danced a gay tango to the accompaniment of castanets.

Next on were the Five Juggling Gems, in glittering cloth of gold with metallic gold wigs, who amazed the audience by their rapid juggling, first of silver tennis rackets and later of rainbow colored dumbbells.

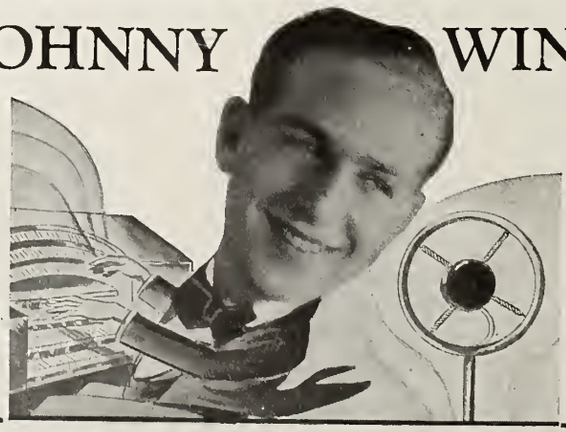
Adriana, in a dress of rainbow hues, then announced she would present the national dance of Mexico. This number was exceedingly well done and included throwing her large sombrero on the stage and dancing around the brim. She then introduced two caballeros, Doyle and Donnelly, who, after some preliminary banter, gave impressions of celebrities of stage and screen.

The scene shifted to the South Sea Islands, with a band of ten Tahitians in native dress, who sang native songs in a chorus of well blended voices, accompanied, of course, by their ukuleles. Four of the boys advanced to the footlights and juggled some wicked-looking machetes to the beat of an island drum.

Reri in white, with a white flower in her black hair, was the personification of exotic beauty and charm. She sang a Tahitian love song in a sweet voice, then danced a genuine hula.

Sue Russell, Hinky and Dinky have a riotous comedy act. The 7-foot Hinky and the pint-size Dinky danced, sang, burlesqued and did some clever acrobatic stunts. Their burlesque of a ballet dance and an aesthetic dance evoked shouts of merriment. In response to a curtain call, Dinky did a realistic imitation of a monkey.

The Six Gordonians are a troupe of expert gymnasts of excellent agility, skill and speed.



Buck Jones to Tour East

Buck Jones, Columbia western star, has been signed for stage appearances in the East following similar engagements in the Southwest. The bookings, which will carry him through part of March, will be followed by a return to the Coast to work in "High Speed."

"THE CROONING PRINCE OF THE ORGAN"

• JOHNNY WINTERS

SOLO ORGANIST PUBLIX PARA-MOUNT NASHVILLE, TENN.

SHOW-MANSHIP

YOUTH

PERSON-ALITY

ORGAN SOLOS

WILD OSCAR (New York 175th) is back in the house which he opened two years ago and from all indications the audiences are very happy about it. "Oscar" again is featuring his entertainingly different organ novelty called "Wild Oscar's School of Broadcasting."

This novelty is really a burlesque on broadcasting, with Oscar taking the part of an announcer and the audience being the vocalists. This type solo does not fare so well in vaudeville houses, due to the short length of time in which the organist has to work, but it is great stuff for a straight picture house and Oscar is proving it by the good reaction on the patrons' parts. Oscar calls his station LOEW and announces that the voices of the "mixed chorus" (audience) would be broadcast. The subtle gags and suave manner of talking by Oscar have the audience in a jovial mood. He really sells them the idea that their voices are being broadcast. He is in the right spot here.

HERBIE (New Orleans Saenger) offers a special organ arrangement of "Rhapsody in Blue" as a solo, putting it over to a big hand, even though the arrangement is not so well done, taking liberties not only with notes, but with division. The organ is lit with neon tubes shedding a ghostly blue on console, while the rest of the house is dark. This outlines Herbie's figure and centralizes the audience's attention on the organ. At the close, the orchestra joins in.

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood) mingled sacred, patriotic and popular organ solo melodies on a background of lyric slides characterized by a Washington birthday atmosphere. Clark's performance was marked by restraint that was pleasing after the usual business of "throwing everything open." "Glory, Glory Hallelujah," which introduced the series, ran through a simple transition into "Columbia, The Gem of the Ocean," then smoothly into "The Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia"—all with parody lyrics. "Kiss by Kiss" and "Now Is the Time to Fall in Love" sounded a note foreign to the occasion, but "America," "They Cut Down the Old Pine Tree" (a Cherry Tree at the moment), "Yankee Doodle" and "Home" returned the program to its original spirit. Audience response was good despite noticeable absence of persuasion slides.

VERNON GEYER (San Antonio Palace) had them all singing with his song slides at this Sunday afternoon show. Vernon rendered four up-to-date pieces and made a big hit with each one. His first ballad was the ever popular "Goodnight Sweetheart," next came "I Don't Know Why, I Love You as I Do," then "One of Us Was Wrong," and as an encore his own composition, "Scheming."

AL FOREST (Danbury Palace), recently imported to introduce community singing at this spot, has established the reputation of being the only organist to get results with this audience. Using his own material, a novelty entitled "Funning and Fooling" clicked with a capacity house. Judging from the laughs and response it's easily understood why organists of this type are an asset to the theatre. Full of syncopation, exceptionally pleasing in combination, this organist opened his solo with a cleverly written verse to "Hail the Gang's all Here," then addressed them with a few well chosen words. It appears that Al's personality and good showmanship are a stimulus to this audience, for they sure do sing. A cleverly composed tongue twister, a puzzle chorus, and a whistle, hum, sing, and count chorus were the laugh getters, and judging from the laughter Al certainly eliminated the blues from this spot. Numbers used were "Lies," "What Am I Going to Do When Your're Gone," "Sycamore Tree," and a final chorus of "Try Somebody Else." More organists like this and more organs would be returned to use.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum) gave a new version of his specialty, "Crosby, Columbo, Vallee," and his impersonation of these well-known radio stars made a great hit. He concluded with a song accompanied by eight of the chorus who were grouped around the console.

OVERTURES

EDWARD PAUL (Brooklyn Paramount) and his orchestra presented an orchestral production overture this week that is outstanding from both the musical and production ends. The title is "Schubert Melodies," with the program opening with the "Mosamonde Ballet," played by the orchestra as 16 dancers perform on the stage. Following this with Schubert's German Dance, the dancers go into a different routine. The "Moment Musicale" is next offered and is followed by a violin number, with a background of strings and woodwinds of Schubert's famous "Serenade." The "March Militaire" with a grandioso finale closes this fine presentation.

RUBINOFF (New York Paramount) conducted the Paramount Concert Orchestra in his own symphonic interpretation of the popular hit number, "Home," as the feature of the orchestral overture this week. Prominently displayed in the program was the playing by orchestra members in the styles of Rachmoninoff, Paderewski, Gershwin, Kreisler and Sousa. As a feature, the program was of value, but from a musical standpoint it was merely the playing of the theme of "Home," with interpolations of the composer's individual styles. Rubinoff's obvious attempt to parallel Kreisler's playing was not a ten-strike with this reviewer, though from the audience standpoint the overture was highly successful due to the great showmanship the leader possesses, together with the good musicianship of the orchestra members.

CHARLES B. STONE (Cincinnati RKO Albee) features Victor Herbert's "American Fantasy," which appropriate to Washington birthday week, includes several well known sentimental and patriotic airs, such as "Old Folks At Home," "Columbia" and "Washington Post March," which, in both the ensemble and individual renditions, are played with such enthusiastic dash and fervor as to awaken renewed patriotism in the heart of even the most blase patron. Stone continues to grow in popularity as the weeks go by, and never fails to receive a tremendous hand. His showmanly musicianship finds ready reflection on the part of his 15 men, each of whom is constantly putting over melody and rhythm of the highest order.

LOU FORBES (New Orleans Saenger) presented a three part overture which opened with jazz arrangements of "Meditation" from "Thais," "Serenade" of Drdla, and a Chopin nocturne, which did not meet with much response. The second part, two snappy numbers with vocal chorus done in the Forbes style, pulled a hand, while the closer, "Crosby, Columbo and Vallee," sung by Gordon Kirst, with vocal imitations of the three aircasters by a crooner, took the house. Johnny DeDeroit did a chorus, Tony Papalia likewise, while Et Fontana got over his lines to loud laugher.

Wabash avenue will continue to be Film Row. This is the inference drawn from the fact that Universal has signed a long term lease on its present location at 845 South Wabash. But some of the folk who congregate in and around the "U" office are due for a shock. The old place isn't going to be what it was. The decorators are going to take it over and turn it into one of the classiest exchanges in Laemmle's string.

Steve Montgomery, formerly with Tiffany and the Daily News Screen Service, has gone to Minneapolis, where he is attached to the Columbia branch.

Leroy Alexander, local distributor of British International Pictures, spent several days in New York conferring with executives of the parent company who were there from London.

Ben Judell has appointed Fred Good as manager of the company's office in Milwaukee.

Al Dezel has opened his own exchange at 808 South Wabash avenue and will handle a series of independent productions.

Gene Cour, head of the Cameraman's association, is back in town after a trip to the West Coast.

Ed De Lang of Essaness is now managing the company's Elston theatre.

Tom Gilliam of Warners-First National is back from an extended trip to theatres in the down state area.

Good Pictures, Good Business

THIS BUSINESS RESOLVES INTO ONE thing that if you have the pictures, you can get some business even as hard as times are, but these pictures this year have been too far between and too many are very poor quality.

This has the tendency to hold the patrons away until something outstanding comes along. Then they get the habit back, but after one or two poor pictures you don't see them again.

If the producers are wise next year, they will not try to corral the market, and will stress quality instead of quantity. This is the crying need today as it never has been before. The public wants action and less dialogue.

The purchasing power of the theatre going public has been curtailed to a certain extent, but they are still buying amusement when that amusement is worth their money, but we exhibitors know that many of the pictures that we are forced to show them are not worth what they paid, and the producers have their full share of blame for this condition.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

On "Horror" Pictures

I WOULD LIKE TO ADD MY VOICE IN protest to that of other exhibitors, who foresee a prolonged cycle of "horror" pictures.

One company already has announced a forthcoming "horror" picture. The only hope for this industry lies in getting away from the rubber stamp "cycle" film executive. I say film executive advisedly, as they are in no sense producers.

Universal is to be congratulated; it has originality, it brought out "horror" pictures when the other rubber stamps were still making crook and third-rate sex pictures by the hundreds. It will know when to quit "horror" pictures, too.—HERMAN J. BROWN, manager, Inland Amusement Company, Nampa, Idaho.

Monarch to Produce Eight Westerns With New Player

Monarch Productions, independent company, plans a series of eight feature-length westerns, starring Roger Carr, for the 1932-33 season. Carr is a newcomer to the screen. Clifford S. Elfelt will personally supervise the productions.

The first western will be from Jackson Gregory's "Redwood and Gold." Others of the series will be adaptations of published western stories by well known authors, it is indicated.

FOR EXHIBITORS ONLY

For a limited period only you may buy a year's subscription to Motion Picture Herald and Motion Picture Daily and receive gratis Motion Picture Almanac for $10., more than 350 issues of these leading business papers at a cost of less than 3 cents apiece. One idea in one issue may easily be worth $10.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

A SIMPLE EXPEDIENT NOW BRINGS YOU BETTER PICTURES

A YEAR ago Eastman announced the first super-speed negative film—a medium that helped to set up new artistic standards in the motion picture industry. Now a simple expedient—a gray backing on the film base—gives you even better pictures. When you run a release that is truly exceptional in photographic quality, the chances are it was made on this perfected Eastman Super-sensitive Negative. Eastman Kodak Co. (J. E. THE SIGNIFICANT FACT

About Paramount Shorts is: No matter what kind of a booking requirement presents itself when I'm building up an entertaining show, it's no problem at all when I select my short features from Paramount's Quality line-up. No chasing around vainly trying to get a good "belly-laugh" two-reel comedy; a light single-reeler; a beautiful scenic garnished with high class musical accompaniment, a clever cartoon, or a novelty subject. They're all with Paramount. And they don't only fill my program either—they sell tickets—they fill seats. Sure I'm cheering!

The Pay-Off

WEEKLY change houses don't have to ring in new bills every seventh day when enough quality product comes their way.

There is the living, breathing example of the Capitol right on Broadway which, by one week from tomorrow, will have played five pictures in ten weeks. "Mata Hari" stuck it out for three weeks; "The Champ" played two; "Emma," two; "Lovers Courageous," one, and now "Arsene Lupin," two. Decision to hold over the brothers Barrymore was reached yesterday on the strength of the opening day's business, the barometer, as usual, in arriving at decisions of this kind.

WHAT has been happening under your nose at the Capitol is potentially far more significant than the actual performance, although the money that has been passing through those busy ticket booths at Broadway and 51st cannot be ignored; it's that formidable.

It occurs to us that the episode, reasonably, might be construed as an indication of what exhibition at large may become when Hollywood supplies enough real attractions to make a system of two or more week runs possible.

Today, to narrow the matter down, there are many pictures that get one day in a theatre when easily they are worth more. Just why a specific engagement is limited to the one day. is something that has never been entirely clear to us, unless it represents a perfunctory kowtow in the direction of long-established trade custom.

If the argument holds for the daily change house, it should be applicable to the weekly change theatre, always bearing in mind, naturally enough, that pictures which are good for a second week come along entirely too infrequently.

PUBLICITY—OR LESS

ON a sunny March morning one is in doubt whether the "Motion Picture National Preference Poll," announced by the Hays office, should be referred to the Oh Hum Department or to the office of the Editor of Annoyances.

It is solemnly set forth in official copy from the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., that every city and town in the United States will be covered by a questionnaire to determine the entertainment preferences of the "individual classes that make up the mass audience for motion picture entertainment."

The Hays office has been in operation for ten years. The motion picture industry has been doing business with the public on a large scale for twenty-seven years. There are endless, elaborate and comprehensive accumulations of data, crystallized into box office figures, in the office of every important motion picture company. If the motion picture industry does not know the answer by this time it is most unlikely that it is going to get it right back by mail in response to a questionnaire form.

Maybe this great national poll is just intended for a nice publicity story for Monday morning release, something to keep the public's mind off its troubles and to supply a pretext for expression for that large array of Constant Improvers who so enjoy telling the industry just what to do.

The "poll" with its inevitable follow-up of returns from assorted classes, groups and centers, has those qualities of possibility which might prove fertile to a fabricator of press copy, more particularly if he should chance to be unhampered of a knowledge of the motion picture either within or external to him.

The poll's questions can be answered any week by turning to the exhibitor expression in the pages of Motion Picture Herald and the box office receipts reports which we so neatly tabulate for the information of all and sundry. It is clear enough that the great, important, paying majority of motion picture patrons want simple, sentimental and romantic emotional pabulum. It is equally clear that this majority, which should own the pictures because it pays for them, is not interested in Broadway smartchat, cute technique, the sophistication of the post-Arlen-Freud school or any other esoteric expressions in dramatic art. More particularly is the public not interested in the sort of pictures which ardent young men in Hollywood make to prove that they are producers of extreme cleverness.

Unfortunately the public does not want "Art." It wants emotional merchandise. Real art would consist in delivering that merchandise.

Mr. Will H. Hays is quoted as saying, in connection with the announcement of "the poll": "Instead of leveling entertainment to a fixed common denominator, the industry is stepping up its entertainment standards to meet the needs of every element of the potential motion picture audience."

It is to be feared that Mr. Hays is right and that that is just about what is the matter. Mr. Common Denominator, Mrs. Denominator and all the little Denominators are jolly well peevish about it, too. Right now a lot of specialized attention to the Common Denominator market, which created this industry, would be largely appreciated by the motion picture exhibitor. "The Motion Picture National Preference Poll" is over now, so far as the public and the exhibitor are concerned. The industry hardly needs to confess obtuseness by any such gesture.

IN this issue the very real value in box office dollars of clubwomen's cooperation with the exhibitor in the promotion of the more acceptable product is evidenced in an article by Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick. A decidedly real and constructively useful force is demonstrated in several directions, importantly among them, valuable newspaper attention calculated to turn patronage into the box office.

THEY PASS

THIS week we record the passing of Mr. William J. Guard, for many years a figure on Broadway as the press representative of the Metropolitan Opera, and of Mr. John Philip Sousa, the bandmaster. The Sousa marches will ring down the corridors of history with memories of thrill for at least two generations of Americans, the generation of Mr. Sousa's rise to fame, and the generation which bravely marched away to war to the swing of his baton.

Mr. Guard, affectionately known to New Yorkers as "Billy," was a gentleman of Victorian age courtesy and manners, picturesquely given to the Windsor tie in merry colors and a certain dignity which well became the sober facade of the Metropolitan.

The writer of this editorial is happy to recall some of the whimsies of "Billy" and the days when he solemnly exchanged passes to the Metropolitan for seats in one of the first big picture theatres, home of the upstart art of 1915.

MISS HURST REMARKS

MISS FANNIE HURST, spectacularly successful in the purveying of fiction, made a speech the other evening remarking: "All the beauty, glamour and newspaper talk of Hollywood has to do with the people who make good there. Little, if any, concerns the thousands who never quite make the grade in that peculiar, fantastic civilization known as Hollywood." That, Miss Hurst, just chances to be true of everything else and every place else in the world, too. That is what not quite "making the grade" means.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

FOR THE LIVER

A contributor to the NEWS in SAN FRANCISCO, finds that a good motion picture comedy makes for a happy liver. In the "Pulse of the Public" column of that newspaper, he writes:

The movies or talkies wouldn't appeal to any of us unless we felt we were taking a chance. If we come away even moderately pleased we figure we're ahead. So many of life's investments turn out badly.

Some of us are better off for not being too critical. A good laugh, and perhaps a tear, within the space of a few seconds is something we don't often get at our own fireside, but it can happen to us in a quiet time at the talkies when nobody is there to snicker at us or notice us even. Marie Dressler can do more than that.

Be human. If you can miss a meal and take in a talkie once in a while you may kill that depression in your system, often caused by not assimilating your last three or four fillings. And the reaction of a good laugh may make your liver correspondingly happy.

CENSORS

Censors should be curbed, says an editorial writer in the UNION at SACRAMENTO in CALIFORNIA, declaring that "these censors do not have to prove their mental or moral fitness to sit in judgment over the minds of the public":

Under pressure from over zealous reformers, the city council recently passed an ordinance which will cause no end of trouble to the people of Sacramento. It gives to a self-constituted board of censors the right to pass on and reject or approve the theatrical entertainment to be given in this city.

These censors do not have to prove their mental or moral fitness to sit in judgment over the minds of the public. There never lived a man in this world big enough to dictate to others how they should live.

To say that a play or a film is immoral is a good advertisement for it, becausc the public resents busybody interference with its rights. The local censor board does not appeal to The Union as a body having omnipotent wisdom, and The Union strongly objects to a censorship upon the press, the stage or upon public utterance.

Recently in the presence of the writer a Mrs. Josephine Haug, acting, according to her statement, for the censor board, agreed to permit the showing of a film called "No More Children," in a Sacramento theater. This was after a preview of the film on her part and on the part of perhaps 50 other persons.

There is nothing morally objectionable in the film and Mrs. Haug so agreed. Now comes this person and cancels her sanction after the picture has been billed. Whether or not the picture is shown, her action is inexcusable. If the council has given her power to suppress or delete films, the blame is upon the members of that body, but the least she could do to be consistent is to stick to her word.

The whole matter harks back to the passing of the Un-American and uncalled-for ordinance. Only one member had the bravery to stand out against the pressure exerted by these self-constituted moralists. Some of the rest, while expressing themselves privately as being against the ordinance, voted for it.

We need no reform here in America by force and violence. We need no board of busybodies to tell us what we shall see and hear. The American people are not a race of degenerates, mentally or morally. The council insulted the intelligence of every moral and sane person in Sacramento when they passed that ordinance and they should be compelled to repeal it.

We need no body of Stalins, Mussolinis or Hitlers here in America to dictate to us. Every man in this country should be given the privilege of minding his own business and those who are not content to do so should be forbidden the privilege of sticking their noses into the affairs of other people.

JUVENILES

A writer of editorials in the TIMES in NEW YORK comments upon so-called "horror pictures" and the child mind as follows:

An epidemic of horror pictures has been sweeping the cinema field. Perhaps the success of "Dracula" provoked the more recent shockers. "Frankenstein" has drawn protests from both English and American friends of children. One critic reported that there were few thrilling scenes in it, and that the laughter at some of the intended horrors and grotestqueries was not tinged with hysteria. Yet many grown people who may have failed to get the desired spinal shivers from Fu Manchu, Jekyll and Hyde or other terrifying characters are concerned about the effect they may have on young children.

It is natural for a man or woman of imagination to feel that an adult may find these things more absurd than moving, while still fearing the shock to young and tender sensibilities. The business men of the movies, who keep a careful finger on the public pulse, know that many parents and organizations of parents and educators are refusing to allow children in their care to go to wildly sensational films. Publications devoted to children's interests list such pictures under a ban. Recently Mr. St. John Ervine made an analysis in The London Observer of the reports of teachers and social workers on children's reactions to all kinds of movies. It seems plain to him that the children, encouraged to give their impressions, memories and dreams after seeing some of these melodramas, are made nervous and unstable emotionally.

NOBLE

"A noble thing," a picture "which will restore courage to those who have lost it," is what the PRESS-SCIMITAR at MEMPHIS in TENNESSEE thinks of Warner Brothers' "The Man Who Played God," commenting as follows:

"If God did not exist, it would behoove man to invent him," said Voltaire. If a man cannot believe in God, the best thing he can do is to assume the responsibility which he thinks there is no God to assume. It is the way to bring order and beauty into life; it is the way to faith itself.

The pianist enacted by George Arliss in the current film at Warner's, who loses his faith when he loses his hearing, "plays God." He takes the part in the lives of others which a God would take.

Here is a picture play which will restore courage to those who have lost it.

Hollywood sometimes produces a noble thing. This is one of the times.

ALLIED MEETING TO MAP REFORMS; BROOKHART IS "STANDARD BEARER"

Allied's Eight Major Problems

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

The Allied States Exhibitors Association, now in convention in Detroit, has set up eight points as representing the objectives they are immediately interested in.

1. Obnoxious, unreasonable protection foisted upon Independents by producers and circuits.

2. Unfair and unreasonable percentage policy and playing arrangements practiced by several major producing and distributing organizations.

These two points are concerned with conditions growing out of various trade practices which have been indulged in in the industry for some time. Many of the most level-headed exhibitors in the country insist that the question of protection involves one of the most serious inequalities that obtain. They point out that in various instances a degree of protection is insisted upon which represents no real advantage to the beneficiary, yet imposes a serious disadvantage upon some other theatre situation, thereby finally resulting in an injury to one party with no compensating advantage being gained by the other.

The second point is concerned with another trade practice, but in this case it is distinctly a matter of barter and sale. Such a problem is not wholly susceptible to any solution that will be commonly satisfactory. There are involved the conflicting interests of seller and buyer. This question properly falls within the sphere of private negotiation.

3. Poor quality of product now being delivered to theatre owners.

The question of product is not only a problem for the Allied group but it is a problem for every group and every individual in the business. There is nothing to be gained in simply indicting the product as being of poor quality. No producer ever set out deliberately to make a poor picture. Exhibitors may best help in this matter by constructive criticism and by their realization that they share—by virtue of what they book—in the industry's responsibility for the kind of product produced.

4. Elimination of producers from the exhibition end of the motion picture business, etc.

The economics involved in the operation of theatres by producers will be, as it is now proving, the determining factor in bringing about whatever readjustment is needed in this connection. The problem does not need any attention from Allied and there is nothing that Allied can properly do which will materially affect the outcome. If producer-operation of theatres had proved uniformly advantageous over individual owner-operation, that course inevitably would have been the one followed. But the results, particularly during the past two years, in this connection leave this a problem which is attaining its own solution.

5. Legislation. The industry is being threatened by various tax and other legislative measures. These can only be defeated through united effort. Allied is opposed to any taxation that will curtail profits of theatre owners.

It is quite true that burdensome tax legislation can only be defeated through united effort. It may be questioned that certain recent moves of Allied leaders indicate an appropriate realization of this fact. Naturally, Allied is opposed to any taxation that will curtail profits of theatre owners. But basically, and in the long run, the welfare of the theatre owner can only be safeguarded not through passing on to some other branch of the business a burdensome tax, but rather through enabling any branch and all branches of the industry to avoid such a tax.

6. Compulsory block booking should be completely eliminated, giving the individual the right to purchase pictures that he considers suitable for his own particular patronage.

Obviously, this would be the ideal booking arrangement. There are, however, certain very practical considerations involved. The smaller theatre owner, under existing circumstances, might in no way be helped by the elimination of block booking. If income to the producer on weaker pictures is severely curtailed, the price that he would insist upon getting for the stronger pictures would be proportionately higher. In the case of the house of frequent change, this would result in a higher film bill. Such an arrangement would be advantageous to the larger theatres with fewer changes, which are not

Detroit Convention Endorses Iowa Senator's Measures; Committees Report on Protection, Music Tax, Copyright

By TERRY RAMSAYE

By unanimous vote, the Allied States Association, in convention assembled at the Hotel Statler, in Detroit, on wintry Wednesday afternoon, set about a program of reforms and modifications of trade practices in the motion picture industry, by national legislative action and, by endorsement, made Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, of Iowa, their banner bearer.

Outwardly, and avowedly, the convention session was in substance a declaration of the 388 exhibitor members in attendance, that they expected a remedy of most of the ills of the industry by the enactment of Federal statutes.

Foils in Fencing Match

Very much less vociferously and much more calmly, far from the convention floor, leaders admitted that the more real purpose was to bring effectively and forcefully to the attention of new factors of authority in the fluxing industry's production and distribution concerns, a state of affairs calling for remedy, reform and modification.

The assorted Brookhart measures, and Allied's endorsements thereof, become therefore, not ends in themselves, but instruments or foils in a fencing match. The background of motivating thought in the Allied organization does not appear to be as sweepingly spectacular in its concepts as the action scenes of the drama would indicate.

Rising Vote in Two Parts

The convention got its keynote speech from Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel, and presently got that keynote translated into resolutions presented by Mr. Myers, adopted by a rollicking, rising vote, in two parts, under the authoritative gavel of the robust and nonchalant W. A. Steffes, president. Presiding with elan and vigor, the only dissenting vote came with the startling bark of a dog, a black dog, who had followed his master, Sam Ackerman, a Detroit exhibitor, to the convention, and gave voice at the call for "those opposed!" The dog was ruled out of order and summarily ejected, when he was found to have neither badge nor credentials.

The convention is, in keeping with the shrewd policy of Allied, mostly extensively and vigorously committed to committees. There is a committee for everything and everybody is on at least one committee, while some members meet themselves in the corridors as they pass from meeting to meeting. Committees do everything and controversy is not permitted to get far on the convention floor. Anybody who starts anything finds himself snappily reformed to, placed upon or in chairmanship of a committee. The process was exemplified with celerity when ubiquitous Tommy Goldberg of Baltimore offered, with insistence, a resolution addressed to the business press "and other papers;" a resolution calling on them to publish no box-office receipts, no star salaries or other dollar statistics of the industry. Pete Harrison, at the speakers' table, was just about to begin a speech when this erupted, and took occasion to suggest that the matter not be acted upon with precipitation.

For a few merry moments there was a question about who had the floor, although both were in excellent voice. Mr. Steffes' gavel finally sent the matter to a committee and gave Mr. Harrison the audience.

There was applause and attention for E. O. Heyl, of R. C. A. Photophone, who was invited to the platform to announce new models, prices, forms and service charges on R. C. A. reproducing equipment.

Committees Start Functioning

Senate bills asking for a Congressional investigation of the industry and the abolition of block booking, both introduced recently by Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, were endorsed by the convention as one of the highlights of the first business session on Wednesday afternoon.

Copies of resolutions, introduced by Chairman Abram F. Myers, are to be forwarded to Vice-President Curtis and to members of the senate.

One of the first committees to report was that headed by Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh, which condemned block booking in a resolution submitted to the floor. Herrington's resolution also embraced one drafted by Nate Wolf, of Illinois, which stated that the "only way out" was through the passage of the Brookhart block booking bill. The resolution was presented in language described as being "too complicated" and, following a suggestion by Myers, it was decided that it be returned to committee for redrafting.

The committee on double featuring was scheduled to meet Wednesday night to arrive at findings for presentation on Thursday.

When the floor was "cleared," the music tax and copyright situations were discussed by R. E. Myers, of Chillicothe, Ohio, chairman of that committee, who said his group indorsed the stand previously taken at Washington by Abram Myers, who appeared before the House committee on patents. Much has been said previously of Allied's stand in this connection, but basically, it seeks amendment of the copyright law from numerous angles, principally one which would change the present status of "holdovers" from being copyright violations to that of contractual violations.

Sidney Samuelson, who heads the New Jersey Allied division, and Herrington, were named a committee of two which was ordered to send a wire to Representative Sirovich at Washington, on behalf of all delegates, urging copyright changes asked by the association.

Frank Rembusch tried unsuccessfully at this point to get the floor. A "plan" which he said he wanted to "offer," was referred to a committee including Charles Metzger, Indiana; Abe Kaplan, Minnesota; Eddie Burnell, Illinois; Lester Martin, Nebraska, and Tommy Goldberg, of Baltimore.

Attacking film quality, as chairman of the committee on "Poor Pictures," Col. Cole of Texas said the current season's product was poor.

The convention disliked the report submitted by the trailer committee, and in which National Screen Service came in for prominent discussion, and so its report was turned over to another committee for reconsideration.

New RCA Equipment

Probably the most important definite commercial transaction affecting theatre owners which materialized at the first business session Wednesday afternoon was an announcement by Radio Corporation of America regarding the introduction of two new all AC operated sound equipments which have been designed for theatres up to 4,000 seats, a substantial reduction in the prices of three types of apparatus and a further reduction in srevice charges.

E. O. Heyl, manager of the Photophone division of RCA Victor, created quite some interest when he made the unexpected announcement from the floor. Complete details of the changes had only been worked out within recent days and Heyl did not arrive in Detroit until Wednesday noon. Heyl said he was transmitting to exhibitors the first "fruits of the economies" resulting from the recent consolidation of RCA Photophone with RCA Victor.

The two new all AC operated reproducing units, which Heyl referred to as the "Standard Large," for theatres having from 1,400 to 2,500 seats, and the "Standard Super," for theatres having from 2,500 to 4,000 seats, are said to be the only standard equipments operated by AC power that have been designed for theatres of the capacities mentioned. In addition to the elimination of batteries and generators, the prices of these two equipments have been materially reduced. Heretofore, the socalled "Super Size" equipment's price has been $8,000. The new price of the "Standard Super" AC apparatus is $5,000. The former price of the "Large Size" equipment was $6,000. The new price of the "Standard Large Size" is $3,750.

Heyl also announced that the seating capacity limitations of the new AC operated "Special Size" equipment had been increased to 600 seats; the "Standard Small Size" to 1,400 seats and the "Standard Large Size" to 2,500 seats. Service charge reductions from $32.50 to $25 a month on the "Special Size" equipment; from $65 to $32 on the "Standard Small Size" and a reduction from $130 for four contract calls to $65 for two calls monthly on the "Standard Super Size," and reduction in financing, interest and collection charges was announced.

Canon Chase Again

Chairman Abram F. Myers, who is also Allied's general counsel, indicated on Wednesday that Canon William Sheafe Chase a Brooklyn clergyman and for many years an antagonist of motion pictures, is preparing to sponsor the introduction of a federal censorship bill in Congress which will provide for control of the industry and its product by a commission of nine members, each to receive an annual salary of $8,000. In this connection, and further indicating that Allied strongly favors passage of Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart's bill aimed at the industry, Chairman Myers said that if producers and distributors think the proposed measure authorized by Brookhart is "dangerous," they may discover it far less innocuous than the one planned by Canon Chase.

Previously, H. M. Richey, Allied's business manager, had voiced as his opinion the belief that the Detroit convention would officially go on record endorsing the Brookhart resolution and a socalled "sweeping investigation" of the industry.

Canon Chase's bill would embrace the entire Hays Production Code as a basis for federal control of motion pictures, according to Myers, who said he understands that Chase believes the inclusion of the Code would eliminate objection of the MPPDA to his proposed statute. At this point Myers said that he and Allied now bound with the strictest provisions of the block booking system and would be heavily burdensome to the smaller theatres which need more product.

7. The double feature evil.

The double feature evil is an exhibitor's problem. The seriousness of the determination on the part of exhibitors to do what they can towards improving conditions now obtaining in the business could be graphically demonstrated by appropriate action on the double feature evil.

8. Music tax and copyright protective bureau.

We have heard of no complete satisfaction as to the present status of these questions expressed by anyone. They involve many complexities that are not easily adjusted. An appropriate attitude of concession and fair play on all sides would quickly eliminate all of the seriously objectionable features involved in these two questions.

TICKET TAX BILL REPORTED TO HOUSE INCLUDES FILMS AND EQUIPMENT

Proposal of the Committee Calls For 2¼ Per Cent Excise Levy on Imported Films Besides the Existing Duty

Taxes of 10 per cent on admissions of 25 cents and over to motion picture theatres and to all other places of amusement; a tax of 2¼ per cent on film rentals and on sound or other equipment, and a 2¼ per cent excise levy on imported films in addition to the existing import duty, are provided in a draft of the proposed revenue bill reported to the House of Representatives this week by its ways and means committee, which had been working for the past several weeks to prepare a measure to meet current and expected deficit of the Federal Government.

The industry will fight the bill in its present form and, it is expected, will seek an amendment to raise the exemption to 50 cents when the House considers the draft on Thursday. If unsuccessful, further attempts to obtain the 50-cent exemption are expected to be made during consideration of the bill next week by the Senate finance committee. Meanwhile, if current proposals to enact a tax on beer materialize, netting the government $350,000,000, the administration may lighten the industry's threatening burden of taxation.

Independents Least Affected

The committee completed its work last Saturday and on Monday reported the bill to the House. It was scheduled for consideration by the legislators on Thursday, and Speaker Garner is said to have predicted its passage by the end of next week. If and when passed, the increased admission tax, which in reality lowers the present exemption from $3 to above 25 cents, will become effective 15 days after enactment, and the other measures will become effective 30 days after enactment. The 2¼ per cent tax on films and equipment would expire on June 30, 1934.

Obviously, independents will suffer less from the admission tax measure than will circuits, inasmuch as the latter control the majority of theatres where admissions are above 50 cents. It is said that between 75 and 85 per cent of the members of Allied States Association, which numbers several hundreds of independents, would not be affected by the taxation starting at 25 cents admission.

Representative Crisp (Georgia, D.), acting chairman of the ways and means committee, introduced the measure before the House on Monday and Speaker Garner reported it back to the committee for formal report. That report, recommending passage, was voted unanimously and Crisp was authorized to file the committee's explanation of the bill on Wednesday and to call it up for consideration on Thursday.

C. C. Pettijohn, counsel for the MPPDA, and one of the industry's leaders in the battle to save motion pictures from current taxation, in commenting on the committee's action this week, said: "The bill, after a formal vote in the House, goes to the Senate Finance Committee. If we can meet this very serious situation there with a united front as it was met in New York State, I am hopeful."

Pettijohn is now at Washington.

Immediately upon introduction of the proposed bill at Washington, word came from Detroit, where Allied States is meeting in national convention, that Allied has already started preparing to fight the tax bill as presented. President Al Steffes said: "Well, it looks as if we are in for a fight." Steffes expressed concern over the outcome of the bill, with Allied executives figuring that the sales tax on films and equipment will be passed on to exhibitors by distributors of film and manufacturers and dealers of equipment and theatre supplies.

Provisions Materially Amended

The admission tax provisions of the present law are materially amended. The 25 per cent now levied upon prize fight admissions in excess of $5 is eliminated; the tax upon tickets sold at other than the box office at prices in excess of box office prices is increased from five to 10 per cent upon such excess, but the tax of 50 per cent where the excess is more than 75 cents is eliminated.

The admission tax provisions of the bill are as follows:

"Sec. 711. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 500 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) A tax of one cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission; except that in case the amount paid for admission is less than 25 cents, no tax shall be imposed. An equivalent tax shall be collected on all free or complimentary tickets or admissions to a wrestling match, prize fight, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition and the tax shall be on the amount for which a similar seat or box is sold at the said match or exhibition. Amounts paid for admission by season ticket or subscription shall be exempt only if the amount which would be charged to the holder or subscriber for a single admission is less than 25 cents.

10 Per Cent Tax on Excess Price

"'(b) Paragraph (2) of section 500 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(2) Upon tickets or cards of admission to the theatres, operas, and other places of amusement, sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theatres, operas, or other places of amusement, at a price in excess of the sum of the established price therefor at such ticket offices plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 10 per centum of the amount of such excess; such tax to be returned and paid, in the manner and subject to the interest provided in section 502, by the person selling such tickets;'

"(c) Section 500 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subdivision:

"'(e) The exemption from tax provided by subdivision (b) (1) (A) shall not be allowed in the case of admissions to wrestling matches, prize fights, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic matches or exhibitions. The exemption from tax provided by subdivision (b) (1) shall not be allowed in the case of admissions to any athletic game or exhibition the proceeds of which inure wholly or partly to the benefit of any college or university (including any academy of the military or naval forces of the United States).'

"(d) Subsections (a) and (c) shall take effect on the fifteenth day after the date of the enactment of this act."

Manufacturers With Annual Sales Under $20,000 Exempt, Also Makers of Raw Film; Income, Corporation Levies Up

Manufacturers' Excise Tax

Taxes on film and equipment leases and rentals and on imports are provided for under the manufacturers' excise tax. Under these provisions a tax of 2¼ per cent is imposed upon the sale price on the sale of every article sold in the United States by the manufacturer or producer thereof, it being stipulated that the term "manufacturer" includes a producer of motion picture films. The measure provides that "if a licensed manufacturer leases an article or transfers the right of using the article, but not the title thereof, or imposes a royalty on the use of an article, each payment with respect to the article shall be treated as a sale and the tax shall be paid on the amount of such payment."

Sales of pictures or equipment are, of course, subject to the excise tax, but it is provided that manufacturers with annual sales of less than $20,000 shall be exempt and no tax shall apply upon sales by manufacturers or producers of products to other manufacturers for further manufacturing, which would include sales of raw films, etc., to producers.

Imports Taxed 2¼ Per Cent

In order to protect domestic manufacturers and producers from increased foreign competition by reason of the sales tax, the bill provides for a tax of 2¼ per cent on the imports of every article which is covered by the manufacturers' tax, to be based upon the dutiable value of the imported article plus any tariff duties which may be imposed. Imports are subject to the same provisions as domestic products as regards sales to manufacturers for further manufacture, but imports not so disposed of are taxable against the consignee.

The measure provides that on sales under contract made prior to March 1, 1932, the terms of which do not permit the addition of taxes to the amount to be paid thereunder, the tax shall be payable by the vendee but shall be collected and returned to the Government by the vendor.

Under the bill, the normal individual income tax rates are increased from 1½ to two per cent on the first $4,000 of net income, from three to four per cent on the next $4,000, and from five to six per cent on all in excess of $8,000. Surtaxes begin at $10,000, as at present, but the rates are

NEW PROTECTION SYSTEM, "UNFAIR" PRACTICES ARE ON MPTOA PROGRAM

Van Hyning Will Urge Universal System of "Controlled" Protection, To Be Based Upon Zone and Admission Prices

The national headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America this week concluded final arrangements for its annual convention, to be held in Washington at the Mayflower hotel on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

Earle Van Hyning, president of the Kansas-Missouri unit of the MPTOA, who will discuss "Protection" at the convention, will submit a new plan for protection to the delegates assembled at Washington. He says he will urge a universal system of "controlled" protection similar to that in force in Kansas City, which was adopted about two years ago and which he says is working satisfactorily. The plan entails a minimum of protection and availability based on zones and admission prices.

"Regardless of the merits or demerits of protection," Van Hyning said, "we have always had some form of protection and it will always be with us. The question is whether we shall have protection controlled by a plan worked out by all concerned or whether we shall allow it to run rampant."

Grievances To Be Aired

The issue of socalled "unfair" trade practices will be a highlight, according to Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois, who is chairman of the board of the national association, of which M. A. Lightman of Memphis is president.

"If you have any grievances with any film company, this is the time and place to air them out," Wehrenberg told members, referring to the meeting.

"We want your reaction to the kind of pictures that you want the producers to make next season; the kind of pictures that are pleasing to the audience and at the same time good box office attractions. We want you to voice your opinions on unfair protection, service charges of Western Electric and RCA Photophone, the music tax, enforced 100 per cent block booking and numerous other unfair trade practices."

Wehrenberg on Community Work

As board chairman, Wehrenberg will have a leading part in the convention. He is scheduled to speak on the relation of exhibitors and community life, stressing the importance of theatre men's participation in civic affairs. Wehrenberg is urging exhibitors to attend, as, he says, "it will be a convention of education in showmanship."

Secretary M. J. O'Toole said this week in New York that "every vital problem in the industry will be covered at the convention."

Vice-president Curtis and 450 state and national senators and congressmen will be guests at the banquet, scheduled for Tuesday evening. For the first time in the annals of the industry, Mr. O'Toole said, Congress will be given an "inside, intimate view of the theatre, the screen and the leading personalities of both at the convention banquet, at which nearly the entire Congressional body will be present as the guests of the theatre owners in their respective states and districts. Headquarters officers expect about 1,500 at the banquet. There will be a few addresses, but the major portion of the time will be devoted to entertainment under the direction of Eddie Dowling, in which leading stage and screen stars will participate.

Several Speakers Scheduled

Conrad Nagel will be one of the principal speakers at the banquet. M. E. Comerford, national director of the MPTOA will preside. William James, president of the MPTO of Ohio will be toastmaster, and President Lightman of the national organization will speak for the exhibitors.

Nagel is scheduled to bring a definite message to the assembled national lawmakers on the inner elements of picture production and show the intimate association of the business generally with the life, customs and progress of America.

Lewis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, will speak on "News and Pictures" at the banquet.

Other banquet speakers include Dr. McLeod, Presbyterian clergyman of North Carolina, and Jacob Tarshish of Ohio.

Among the exhibitors who will lead in the discussion at the convention are Ed Kuykendahl, Mississippi; E. G. Levy, Connecticut; Jack Miller, Chicago; Frank C. Walker, New York; Judge Roy L. Walker, Texas; Earle Van Hyning, Kansas; Jay Emanuel, Philadelphia; Walter Vincent, New York; Jules Michaels, Buffalo; P. J. Wood, Ohio; Fred Wehrenberg, Missouri; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York.

Addresses on Other Phases

Talks by those in other divisions will be delivered by Hal Horne, publicity and advertising manager of United Artists; George Schaeffer, general sales manager of Paramount; Dr. Goldsmith, Society of Motion Picture Engineers; Martin Quigley, Quigley Publications; former Governor Carl E. Milliken, and others.

United States Senator Dill, Washington, will discuss copyright legislation and Senator James J. Davis, Pennsylvania, will talk on "Motion Picture and Industry."

Congressman Sol Bloom, director of the United States Commission for the Celebration of the George Washington Bi-Centennial, will open the convention on Monday morning with a Washington tableau and unveiling.

There will be an open forum after each talk where, it is said, all may participate.

Kansas City will make a bid for the 1933 convention. This was decided at a meeting of the board of the MPTO of Kansas and western Missouri, held this week. Van Hyning was instructed to lay the invitation before the national board.

It was recalled that this year's convention was tentatively promised to Kansas City, but the national legislative situation involving a proposed admission tax and other matters, together with the Washington Bicentennial observance, influenced the MPTOA to decide on Washington.

Van Hyning has been nominated by his unit's board to serve on the board of the national body. This action is in line with the plan of the national organization to give regional units and independent owners greater representation.

Delegates will be asked to vote on a change of the MPTOA's national structure which is intended to give greater voice to independent members, though circuits would continue to supply the bulk of operating financial support, as they do at present.

Judge Roy Walker will ask for freedom of the screen guaranteed as is freedom of the press. This phase of discussion embraces the censorship issue, which will be brought upon the floor. Ed Levy will outline the legal hazards and handicaps of the theatre business. He is secretary of the Connecticut branch. Walter Vincent is slated to talk on "Overbuilding and Overseating." President Lightman will stress the exhibitor's place in the community.

Admission Tax Measure Is Reported to the House increased in all brackets, the maximum being 40 per cent on income in excess of $100,000, against the present maximum of 20 per cent. Exemptions are reduced from $1,500 to $1,000 for single persons and from $3,500 to $2,500 for heads of families, and the allowance for earned income is reduced from 25 to 12½ per cent.

The corporation tax rate is increased from 12 to 13 per cent, with an allowable credit of $2,000 for corporations with net income not in excess of $10,000, against the present allowance of $3,000 for corporations with net income of $25,000 or less.

The changes in the income tax provisions will be effective next year against 1932 income.

The bill also carries taxes upon long-distance telephone calls and telegraph, cable and radio messages of five cents where the charge is from 30 to 50 cents, and 10 cents where the charge is 50 cents or more, effective 15 days after the enactment of the measure.

In the meantime, the fate of threatening taxation in New York State, likewise intended as an emergency measure, was unknown up to press time. The state legislation adjourns on Friday, and it was not expected that action would be taken at this time.

SOME LETTERS ANENT BROOKHART

The following letter has been received from Jacob Conn, exhibitor leader of Rhode Island:

Conn's Olympia Theatre,
Olneyville Square,
Providence, R. I.
March 2, 1932.

Mr. Martin Quigley,
1790 Broadway,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Quigley:

I have been an exhibitor for the past twenty-three years and have known you for almost as many years, and I have always believed that you were a square-shooter and also believed that filthy lucre could neither corrupt or influence your mind. Your unwarranted attack in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of February 27th, 1932 on Senator Brookhart, and his resolution which he introduced in the Senate, prompts me to write to you personally.

You, Mr. Quigley, better than anyone else in the industry, know how the producers' and the chain-owned producers' theatres are being conducted and that it will not be long before they will destroy the entire industry unless the Brookhart Bill becomes a law. Here in New England, 122 exhibitors, owning one or two theatres, are going to support Senator Brookhart and will use every ounce of influence to help push the Brookhart Bill through.

Your castigating attack on page 9 of your issue of February 27th is more a betrayal of the motion picture than good to the producer. A house-cleaning in the producers' ranks will do more than a world of good. When a group of giants have to combine to crush a pigmy operating a theatre in a town, by depriving him of the product, whereby he can operate his theatre, and when he pleads for a chance to exist and keep his doors open it is denied him.

Nature brings forth "The Man of the Hour" to lead the battle against oppression, and Senator Brookhart is the man.

Your article should have explained the destruction by the RKO of the Pathe Company. You have also forgotten the threat made by the RKO to the effect that they would dynamite all competition out of existence. You have forgotten the Paramount case, depriving a lonely widow in Vermont of making a livelihood in her own home town, not only depriving her of their product but of every other product in the industry, thereby driving her out of business entirely.

I, myself, have suffered the same way when I was in Concord, N. H. I was driven out by the Paramount Film Company because I could not get pictures to operate my theatre and I had to move to Providence, R. I. You have not used your publication in exposing the Metro Company and their double dealing with the Independent Exhibitors by the inter-change of products with the producer-owned theatres, thereby destroying the independent exhibitor, who has made the industry what it is today, and not the big moguls who are destroying it, like the barons of old, by any and all means, everyone and everything in their path.

The industry is in the hands of a worse type of man than the Chinese brigands. They are not only destroying the goose that laid the golden eggs for them but they are cheapening the theatres they operate and are weaning the people away from the motion picture houses. The motion picture has been the family entertainment, for the whole family, where the whole family could enjoy themselves.

With the salacious product, and the salacious advertising, no husband wants to take his wife and children to the theatre. Nor does the wife like to go with her husband, because it will cause them shame on account of the product that is shown in these theatres. As for the children attending the picture show, the films rather than being a source of amusement and education have proved to be a physical and moral detriment, due to the sexy product put out by the leading producing companies.

You, Mr. Quigley, could render a great service to the American people by supporting Senator Brookhart's Bill, and prove to the world, and to the American exhibitor, who is responsible in his community, that there is no collar around your neck labelled "Motion Picture Trust." You could render a greater service to your fellowman by influencing the producers to be more considerate to the great mass of individuals who have built up this great industry, allowing them to live and let live.

It should be plain to all clear thinking men that under the present condition there is no way out except the Brookhart Bill,

Certain factors of interest in motion picture exhibition have seen fit to enlist Senator S. Wildman Brookhart and his militancy in behalf of a senatorial investigation of the industry as an instrument toward the attainment of a number of purposes, including the termination of some unsatisfactory elements of trade practise. MOTION PICTURE HERALD has deemed this course unwise and fraught with many perils to all of the interests concerned. In consequence, in some quarters, this publication has been charged with a lack of sympathy for the constructive purposes which are held up as the real objectives.

It appears necessary to point out that a difference of opinion, honestly held and based on long observation and experience, about the tools and instruments, cannot be fairly taken as opposition to the job to be done.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD holds that it can be a constructive friend of every constructive element of this industry without having to approve of Senator Brookhart and his agitations.

The subjoined correspondence, between Jacob Conn, exhibitor, and Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief of Quigley Publications, exemplifies, and clarifies, the situation.

THE EDITOR

The following letter in reply to the foregoing communication has been written to Mr. Conn by Martin Quigley:

Mr. Jacob Conn,
Conn's Olympia Theatre,
Olneyville Square,
Providence, R. I.

Dear Mr. Conn:—

From your letter of March 2, 1932 it would appear you assume MOTION PICTURE HERALD is not aware of the plight of the independent exhibitor and is not keenly interested in seeing immediate and thorough relief accorded to the independent exhibitor.

Such is not in accordance with the facts.

You assume that because MOTION PICTURE HERALD does not believe in Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, because it is opposed to the type of political interference with an industry which the Brookhart scheme represents and because it believes that any such scheme will not improve the condition of the independent exhibitor that this publication is failing in its duty to the independent theatreman.

It is neither fair nor logical to place such a construction upon the policy we are following.

It is very properly within our province to approve or to oppose any movement which is calculated to have an influence upon the motion picture industry, as a whole or in any of its branches. We have opposed and shall continue to oppose the Brookhart scheme because in our judgment it will accomplish no good purpose but, on the contrary, if by any chance it should be successful, it would bring great harm to the whole industry.

We are not unmindful of abuses and injustices which have grown out of various trade practices which the industry has entered upon. In every industry, in one degree or another, similar problems cry insistently for adjustment and solution.

But it is folly to imagine that any genuine good can come out of political interference with the operations of the industry.

We have opposed and shall continue to oppose many of the practices and policies now being engaged in the industry. You refer to salacious product. In this connection may I remind you that we have taken no small part in the principal efforts which have been made to improve the moral character of motion picture entertainment. Consistently and loudly we have called upon the producer to eliminate the unfit subject. In this connection I would like to remark that the rate of progress in cleaning up the screen could be materially increased if fewer exhibitors were willing and anxious to play any kind of a subject offered for the immediate possible profit involved.

We make no denial that many exhibitors are the victims of unfair and unreasonable trade practices. In this trade as well as everywhere else the weak are, in one degree or another, being imposed upon by the strong. We consider it both our duty and our privilege to lend our support to every

ANENT BROOKHART

JACOB CONN'S LETTER TO MARTIN QUIGLEY

as the brigands in command of the industry will not listen to reason. I know personally what this suffering means, from the instance when a chain-owned theatre opened in opposition to me in a suburb of Providence. I could not even get a news reel for my theatre.

I pleaded first with Mr. Pettijohn, then with Mr. Hays personally, and each one shifted me and referred my plea to someone else. I even went to Mr. Kent, of the Paramount Company, and he could no nothing for me. Even to this day I cannot obtain even third or fourth run pictures from the Metro Company. I had to appeal to the Department of Justice at Washington before I was allowed enough pictures to operate and keep the doors of my theatre open.

Now I have explained to you what the Independent Exhibitors have suffered, and will continue to suffer, until the Brookhart Bill is passed or the picture barons have a change of heart, like the Pharaohs of old.

In closing, dear Mr. Quigley, become the champion of the oppressed, do not be misled by false prophets. From your name, Quigley, you know the oppressions meted out by absentee landlords. So join the ranks of justice. If you falter, you are not willing to fight for the rights of man. Allow me to refer you to the Bible in "Judges," chapter 16, particularly verses 24 to 31; note them carefully, digest them well, and your name will be as everlasting as Samson's.

I do not expect that you will publish this letter in your next issue, but I believe that you could influence the picture barons to be more humane and treat their fellowmen as they would want to be treated themselves, and that you in turn should not criticize or condemn Senator Brookhart for what he is trying to accomplish.

Yours very truly,

reasonable plan for the correction of such abuses.

But we would neither be pursuing a course of intelligence nor would we be rendering any service to the industry or any part of it were we to join in the chase after rainbows over a road strewn with many dangerous political pitfalls.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) Martin Quigley.

Court Decides Against Union

Judge Byrne of the New York supreme court has decided in favor of the Elton Operating Corporation operating the Elton theatre in Brooklyn, in its suit against Sam Kaplan, president of Local 306 of the projectionists' union, according to Lou Smith, manager of the Elton. The suit was with reference to picketing by union members in front of the house.

A "senseless tirade," is the way Brookhart's charges were characterized by Fred P. Hagemann of the Palace Theatre at Waverly, Iowa, in a letter to the Herald which follows:

Palace Theatre,
Waverly, Iowa,
March 4, 1932

Quigley Pub. Co., Inc.,
1790 Broadway,
New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen:—

I have just finished reading your editorial on Smith Wildman Brookhart, prompted by his senseless tirade against the moving picture industry.

You are unduly disturbed. Nobody takes his rantings seriously. Congress pays about as little attention to his squawks as it does to the prattle of a parrot. If the moving picture industry is investigated, it won't be because of any influence of Brookhart in Congress, for he has none.

For twelve years he has represented Iowa in the Senate and for twelve years we have hoped that he might do some little thing at least that would benefit Iowa and the Nation, but we have waited in vain. We expected too much.

He has worn out his silly ballyhoo against the iniquities of Wall Street, now his venom is directed against the moving picture industry, but don't worry, no one pays any attention to him. He's a false alarm. He sold himself to the Iowa farmers as their special representative, but they no longer have any faith in him. He has harmed them instead of helping them. He has brought shame and humiliation upon our whole state, but he still blows his horn and bellows on.

There are some abuses in the moving picture industry that ought to be and in time will be corrected. There are unethical trade practices; the hard-boiled block group selling plan is senseless; there is nothing fair in the zoning system; protection and preference given to chain houses is unjustifiable from any standpoint. All these evils will and must be corrected and if the heads of this industry haven't sense enough to do so, the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission will do so.

Congress should keep its hands off. Our Government is already messed up too deeply in the business of the country. We need less governmental interference and more cooperation and a fairer attitude between the captains of industry and those who use the products of that industry. This doesn't apply to the moving picture business alone, but to every other industrial enterprise.

There will be no investigation by Congress of the moving picture industry and there should be none, the insane craving of Senator Brookhart for cheap publicity notwithstanding.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) Fred P. Hagemann.

Universal Declares Dividend

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., has declared a dividend on its preferred stock, payable April 1 to stockholders of record March 25, 1932.

Woolams, Banker, Named Assistant To Tinker at Fox

Leonard A. Woolams, New York banker, has been appointed by Edward R. Tinker, president of Fox, as an assistant to handle certain special work for him at the company home office. It is anticipated that Woolams will be named a vice-president at the next meeting of the Fox board of directors, to be held in the near future. The date has not as yet been set.

Woolams is a director of Bancamerica-Blair Corporation, California Packing Corporation, Simmons Bed Corporation, United Parcel Service of America and United Parcel Service of New York.

Glenn Griswold, vice-president in charge of public relations, returned to the home office on Tuesday, following conferences on next season's product at the Coast plant. Also arrived from Hollywood this week was D. E. McIntyre, studio business manager. He will remain for a few weeks before returning West. His arrival marks the operation of a policy of executive rotation instituted by President Tinker by which a studio executive always will be at the home office and a headquarters executive present at the plant. The move is designed to bring about closer cooperation and more immediate contact between New York and the Coast.

Prior to the departure of McIntyre from the Coast he handled a realignment of the production setup and supervised the consolidation of the Western Avenue plant and the Movietone City facilities. The last is understood to have resulted in a considerable saving in studio overhead.

Winfield Sheehan, in charge of production at the Coast, is in Florida, where he is completely recuperating from a recent illness. He is expected to return to Hollywood the latter part of this month, resuming his position at the Fox studio approximately April 1.

Ezell Circuit Acquires Four From Publix In The Southwest

The Duel Theatre Company, Dallas, Texas, which is headed by Claude Ezell, former Warner sales executive; W. G. Underwood and J. E. Lockett, has acquired the Criterion and Arcadia theatres in Enid, Oklahoma, from Publix. The Sugg and Rialto theatres in Chickasha, Oklahoma, have also been obtained.

Ezell negotiated the purchase of the four houses at the Publix home office in New York. Underwood has been in New York with reference to the purchase of five theatres in San Antonio.

Schulberg Named To Vacancy On Paramount Publix Board

At a meeting of the board of directors of Paramount Publix, B. P. Schulberg was elected a member of the board to fill a vacancy.

Schulberg first became associated with Famous Players, predecessor of Paramount, 20 years ago, and has been general manager of production at Paramount's West Coast studios since 1925.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

NOBLE VISITOR. Among recent lay observers of matters Hollywoodian was Lord Edward Montagu, son of the Duke of Manchester—En'land, y'know. And here he is as Ruth Chatterton suddenly found herself his host at the Warner-First National studio.

MEETING ROYALTY. Another rapprochement between the aristocracy of filmdom and one of the British Peerage's leading democrats, as Samuel Eckman, Jr., M-G-M representative in London, and Mrs. Eckman meet the Duke of York at a recent dinner.

BALLYHOO OF AN AIR-MINDED AGE. The sky's the limit these days, as exploitation stunts like this one attest. The plane shown high above New York's ragged skyline is an autogiro, and it trails a banner advertising United Artists' "Sky Devils," for its showing at the Rivoli theatre. The banner was 200 feet long and 20 feet wide.

PASTORAL. Pretty as a painting, as the saying goes. It's the old home as fewer and fewer of us can remember it, here reproduced as in the Fox production, "Young America." And here we see Tommy Conlon and Dawn O'Day lighting bashfully the little fire that is to flame up later on.

SOCK! Straight from the shoulder remarks, with you and us on the delivering, or safe, side of the issue. The jaw in the background is James Cagney's. In the other corner is Eric Linden, and it's all a bit of punch injected into Warner's "The Crowd Roars."

ON NEW SERIES. Maestro of the plains, authentic hero of days that cannot die, so long as there are Americans and motion picture screens. Yes, Ken Maynard. And having finished one series of Westerns for Tiffany, he has been re-signed for another. Ride 'em, cowboy!

REBELLION AT SEA. Believe it or not. Don't you observe all the activity? Neither do we, but our information is to the effect that this is how the lads are informed that the mutiny is on, in Paramount's new George Bancroft picture, "On the Black Sea."

SISTERS. Not only under the skin, but in the script. Otherwise, no relation. For (and doubtless you've recognized them already) they are, reading from Madge to Joan to Anita, the Misses Evans, Marsh and Page. Sisters they are in M-G-M's "Are You Listening."

DUNES AT SUNSET. We admit we thought it was snow. But it's sand—lots of it, sloping down to the sea. Perched thereon, and looking toward the East at the sun setting in the West (confusing but true), is Ruth Hall, whose star is rising at Warner-First National these days.

STUDIO SHADOWS. Deeper still because of the big set lamps, one of which here sheds a bit of grateful light upon Polly Walters. This corner is in the RKO Radio studio, where Miss Walters is now studying her future—lately forecast in "Young Bride."

CONSTELLATION. A radiant share, at any rate, of that extraordinarily brilliant cast of M-G-M's picturization of the Vicki Baum novel and stage play, "Grand Hotel." Here, in a scene from the production, are Greta Garbo and John Barrymore. Which is to leave out many other electric names.

ALLIED CHARGES ZONING IS "UNFAIR"

have no interest in the Chase bill, and they do not want it, but the only reason he points it out is to "demonstrate" that the Brookhart bill may have to be considered as a compromise by industry factors in order to "lick" the extremities proposed by Chase.

Comparing the old and new Brookhart measures, Myers in an analysis said the phraseology in the current proposal had been changed to permit of no interference with an exhibitor buying in block if he so elects. The old bill, Myers said, would have made this impossible. Also, in place of the clause providing that each picture must be shown to an exhibitor before he purchases, is a new clause which says a distributor must provide the owner with a 1,000-word synopsis of each subject of 4,000 feet, or more. The latter change has been made, Myers said, because there has been a realization of the impracticability of screening each picture before booking.

According to Myers, a third new clause in Brookhart's measure would eliminate socalled "unfair protection" by placing final adjustment of protection disputes and hearings in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission.

Myers Outlines Problems

In an opening address of approximately 4,000 words, Abram F. Myers outlined to delegates "the problems which immediately confront" them, after which he ventured a "forecast of the outcome of our endeavors."

Generally, Myers' address had to do with a denunciation of "enemies of independent theatre owners" and of producers and distributors for socalled "unfair trade practices." He urged members to support their organization and national leaders in the fight against "the inroads of the opposition," so that Allied may lead "the entire industry out of existing chaos."

Myers reiterated Allied's demands that "the producers get out of the exhibition field and devote themselves to the all-important whole-time task of turning out good pictures." He said that "judicial and legislative definitions of right" are necessary to alleviate the protection situation.

He further discussed Allied's stand, made known upon numerous occasions, on copyright and music taxation, the current admission tax situation at Washington, block booking, etc. With reference to a congressional "investigation" of the industry, Myers told the delegates assembled at the Statler hotel that "if the conditions and practices set out in this (senatorial) resolution are as vital to you as you say they are, and you conclude that this inquiry would be in your interest, as most of your leaders have asserted it will, I suggest that you make your plans here and now to campaign for the adoption of this resolution and for cooperating in the investigation."

Protection Fight to Public

On Wednesday, Fred McWilliams, president of Wisconsin Allied, reported on protection. In a resolution which was later adopted, Allied scored the present system as being "unfair." Further, an opinion was expressed that it was illegal. Passed unanimously, copies of the resolution were ordered forwarded to all distributors.

McWilliams, of Wisconsin; Horwitz, Ohio, and Martin of Iowa, explained the alleged inequities of protection. Each outlined the situation in his respective territory.

At this point, the convention appointed a committee, headed by Aaron Saperstein, of Chicago, to raise a national fund to bring various protection court cases to a successful conclusion, and to fight others which may develop.

Following a national board of directors' meeting Tuesday, Allied leaders let it be known that they intend carrying the fight against protection to the public. It is planned to use public speakers "everywhere" in order to bring the situation before the public.

In connection with the launching of its fight against protection, Allied invited to the convention W. N. Youngclaus, who operates the Capitol theatre at Nebraska, and who is suing the Omaha Film Board and Omaha exchanges, except Columbia and Educational.

MGM Policy on Protection Discussed

The committee assigned to draft a resolution on percentages and "unfair" sales policies was not ready when called upon on Wednesday, but was scheduled to complete its business Wednesday evening and report Thursday morning.

In the meantime, Fred Herrington, of Pittsburgh, asked the convention to act against Metro, charging that company with making it compulsory for exhibitors to take reissues of old pictures in order to get new product. At this point, Tommy Goldberg, Baltimore, requested that Metro's name be stricken out and the resolution be framed to carry no company name.

MGM's percentage plan is said to be keenly resented by Allied leaders, who on Tuesday promised to "explode fireworks under Leo's nose" before the convention ends.

Will Fight Tax Bill

It was decided late on Tuesday to cooperate directly with the Hays organization in the current fight against the tax bill on admissions and on films and equipment, which was reported to the House of representatives on Monday by the ways and means committee. Allied leaders, in announcing this decision, said that the fight against a 10 per cent levy on admissions of 25 cents and over is for a "common cause."

Following adoption of resolutions favoring both Brookhart bills, a report by a committee headed by Nathan Yamins, was adopted, in opposition to any admission taxes on tickets below fifty cents, on the grounds such a tax would reduce theatre patronage, and would probably cause innumerable theatres to close. Action in the tax fight will be taken immediately.

In various quarters in and about the convention hall there was some talk of reviving negotiations, which existed many months ago, pointing toward a merger of Allied with the MPTOA.

Eleven Committees Chosen

On the opening day, 11 committees were named to act as the clearing houses for general convention business.

The convention named a "Question Box" committee and empowered it to handle all queries from the convention floor. Its members are:

C. R. Metzger, chairman, Indianapolis; A. J. Bethancourt, vice-chairman, Houma, La.; Harry Vonderschmitt, Indiana theatre at Bloomington, Ind.; Manuel Marcus, Alamo, Indianapolis; E. R. Kelly, Empress, Solida, Col.; W. Peterson, Palace, Johnsonburg, Pa.; G. C. Wilson, El Patio, Tyronne, Pa.; Robert Gumbier, Chicago; G. F. Bromley, Los Angeles; Joseph Diener, Capitol, Dubuque, Ia.; C. W. Beckler, Electric, Burwell, Neb.; R. J. Hiehle, Hiehle, Parkersburg, W. Va.; E. L. Staup, Capital, Delphos, O.; E. J. Callahan, Auditorium, Crockett, Tex.; Max Torodor, Ritz, Minneapolis; Sam Zuckman, Mounds, St. Paul; G. Lee, Eufaula, Ga.; E. F. Maertz, Zenith, Milwaukee; W. Burr, Orpheum, Lancaster, Wis.; Allen Johnson, Our, Grand Rapids, Wis.; Custer Carland, Garden, Frankford, Wis.; Tom Goldberg, Baltimore; C. L. Robinson, Mt. Prospect, Newark; A. Gottesman, New York.

Grievance Committee Named

Executives next drafted a second group of members to serve on a "Grievance" committee, the exact purpose of which was not made known. On that committee are the following:

Otto N. Raths, chairman, St. Paul; V. S. McCarthy, vice-chairman, Eagle theatre at Montevideo, Minn.; H. T. Reynolds, Family, Grand Rapids, Mich.; C. R. Beechler, Eaton, Charlotte, Mich.; C. L. Hyde, Minneapolis; Harry Shiller, Island, Grand Island, Neb.; Ben Harding, Liberty, Council Bluffs, Ia.; Simon Myers, Criterion, Moorestown, N. J.; Ben Amsterdam, Philadelphia; I. A. Roth, Lyons, Morristown, N. J.; Geo. Huebner, Crystal, Oconomowoc, Wis.; R. H. Dickson, Colonial, Wabash, Ind.; A. M. Howard, New Strand, Monon, Ind.; H. E. Hammond, Lyric, Erie, Pa.; M. Winograd, Oriental, Rochester, Pa.; A. L. Sanborn, Los Angeles; F. E. Price, Strand, Marysville, O.; C. C. Bowling, Harlan, Harlan, Ky.; R. N. Smith, Mission, Mission, Tex.; Sam Borisky, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Geo. Gussen, Ideal, Bloomer, Wis.; L. K. Brin, Garden, Milwaukee.

Plan to Fight New Tax Measure

The bill now before the House at Washington, which provides for a 10 per cent admission tax on tickets priced at 25 cents and over, and which also levies a 2¼ per cent tax on film rentals and on sound and other equipment, will be opposed by Allied States Association before final action by congress late next week. Allied will seek a 50-cent minimum, instead of the present 25 as recommended by the ways and means committee, and named the following at the Detroit session to take over the legislative activities as they affect Allied members:

Nathan Yamins, chairman, Boston; H. E. Huffman, vice-chairman, Denver; A. J. Hamilton, Hiawatha, theatre at Denver; O. V. Kelly, Badger, Reedsburg, Wis.; Paul Hoover, Trumble, Mt. Sterling, Ky.; C. H. Robinson, Pastime, Williamsburg, O.; R. C. Wilby, Atlanta; Senator Charles L. Hyde, Grand, Pierre, S. D.; Hiller Hoffman, Bluebird, St. Paul; H. T. Hall, Russell, Detroit; Ray Branch, Strand, Hastings, Mich.; E. O. Ellsworth, Iowa Falls, Ia.; Tom Arthur, Mason City, Ia.; A. V. Wade, Majestic, Gainsville, Tex.; H. Goldberg, Brighton, Brighton, Pa.; Wm. Lipsie, Indiana County, Blairsville, Pa.; Paul Meloy, Strand, Shelbyville, Ind.; E. L. Miller, Lark, Brazil, Ind.; J. Levine, Irvington, Baltimore; L. W. Newbury, Ocean, Asbury Park, N. J.

On Divestment of Circuit Holdings

One of the more important committees, members of which are listed herewith, has to do with the "Elimination of Producers from the Exhibition Field":

Sidney E. Samuelson, chairman, Newton theatre at Newton, N. J.; H. A. Blum, vice-chairman, Baltimore; Henry Lazarus, Wonderland, New Orleans; L. L. Lewis, Lyric, Rolla, Mo.; J. C. Ritter, Rialto, Detroit; D. W. Thompson, Deluxe, Detroit; H. Perlewitz, Parkway, Milwaukee; Samuel Soltz, Howard, Baltimore; F. W. Zimmerman, Palace, San Marcos, Tex.; Sam Zuckman, Mounds, St. Paul; Geo. Settos, Rialto, Plymouth, Ind.; P. L. Werner, Clarendon, Morocco, Ind.; W. N. Youngclaus, Capitol, Madison, Neb.; G. T. Woodlaw, Columbia, Portland, Ore.; A. E. Wilcox, Unique, Bricyler, Minn.; Fred Streif, Cincinnati; Edwin Sonz, New Roxy, Cincinnati; Sidney Selig, Chicago; C. E. Nolte, Baltimore.

Committee on Protection

Establishment of zoning and protection regulations which are favorable to independent owners has been asked frequently of distributors and circuits. A committee to handle this situation includes:

F. J. McWilliams, chairman, Milwaukee; M. B. Harowitz, vice-chairman, Washington Circuit, Cleveland; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, Minn.; Glen A. Cross, Rex theatre at Battle Creek, Mich.; R. E. Myers, Chillicothe, O.; W. F. Easley, Greensburg, Ind.; D. J. Selznick, McKees Rocks, Pa.; C. L. Niles, Anamosa, Ia.; W. H. Osterberg, Scottsbluff, Neb.; Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass.; A. J. Bethancourt, Houma, La.; Sidney Samuelson, Newton, Newton, N. J.; N. W. Williams, Thomasville, Ga.; H. E. Huffman, Denver, Aaron Saperstein, Chicago; G. A. Metzger, Los Angeles; W. B. Littlefield, Egleston, Boston; Bert Fischer, Alamo, Milwaukee; W. W. Whitson, Fairyland, Los Angeles.

Committee on Trailers

Allied States Association seeks lower rental prices on trailers and tentative plans had been made quite some time ago pointing toward the possible creation of the association's own trailer firm. Members named to the committee to handle the trailer problem include:

Bennie Berger, chairman, Sioux Falls, S.; D. Thornton, Kelly, vice-chairman, Grant-Lee, theatre at Palisade, N. J.; Charles Komer, Piccadilly, Detroit; Art Robinson, Medbury, Detroit; E. J. Schults, Casper, Wyo.; Sol Best, Chicago; A. Alperstein, Los Angeles; Ernest Langermack, Colonial, Milwaukee; Geo. Bishop, Stacey, Trenton, N. J. Frank Henry, Stacey, Trenton, N. J.; O. E. Panknen, Strand, Marengo, Ia.; Tom Brown, Strand, Iowa City, Ia.; R. R. Livingston, Strand, Lincoln, Neb.; Walter Baughman, Grand, Circleville, O.; J. L. Hatcher, New Lex, New Lexington, O.; S. W. Neall, Indiana, Kokomo, Ind.; Harry Markhum, Talbott, Indianapolis; E. T. Beedle, Alhambra, Canonsburg, Pa.; Wm. Gray, Anton, Monongahela, Pa.; Leaman Marshall, Iris, Terrell, Tex.; Geo. Granstrom, Hamline, St. Paul; H. P. Greene, Minneapolis; W. C. Patterson, Atlanta; W. Barr, Orpheum, Lancaster, Wis.

Music Tax, Copyright in Committee

During the recent congressional hearings on revision of the tax on music and copyright, which also embraces holdovers, Allied presented the opinion of the association with regards changes which would benefit independent members. At the Detroit convention, one of the 11 general committees appointed was asked to handle the music tax and copyright problems. On this committee are:

R. E. Myers, chairman, Chillicothe, O.; M. A. Rosenberg, vice-chairman, Rialto theatre at Pittsburgh; Bert Fischer, Lincoln, Milwaukee; A. Berkholtz, Mermac, West Bend, Wis.; W. C. Hunt, Casino, Wildwood, N. J.; A. Dollinger, Plaza, Linden, N. J.; Ludy Bosten, Uptown, Muscatine, Ia.; Don Thornburg, Family, Marshalltown, Ia.; L. C. Ehlers, Nunden, Nunden, Neb.; L. Burns, Champion, Columbus, O.; P. Semelrath, Dayton, O.; Benjamin Beck, Avalon, Baltimore; T. D. Goldberg, Hartford, Baltimore; Maurice Rubin, Uptown, Michigan City, Ind.; Geo. Heliotes, Rialto, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Peter Antonaphas, Frederick, East Pittsburgh; Frank Panaplos, Capitol, McKeesport, Pa.; Holmer Mulkey, Pastime, Clarendon, Tex.; H. J. Peterson, Opera House, Jamestown, S. D.; Hiller Hoffman, Bluebird, St. Paul; E. D. Boyd. Odel, Georgia; Elmer G. Huhnke, Peerless, Milwaukee; Neil Duffy, Elite. Appleton, Wis.; Nathan Wolf, Lane Court, Chicago.

Committee on Poor Pictures

Duties of the committee on "Poor Pictures" are general. Its membership was listed as follows:

H. A. Cole, chairman, Dallas; E. E. Kirchner, vice-chairman, Family theatre at Detroit; Anthony P. Jim, Drake, Oil City, Pa.; Israel Rath, Pittsburgh; John Bancs, Strand, Rawlins, Wyo.; Jack Rose, Chicago; Saul M. Meltzer, Chicago; C. A. Ferry, Los Angeles; W. F. Smith, Colonial, Clarion, Ia.; C. C. Porter, Sun, Holdridge, Neb.; J. C. Shanklin, Greenbrier, Charleston, W. Va.; Leo Dwyer, Celina Amus. Co., Celina, O.; Oscar Fine, Alhambra, Evansville, Ind.; Joe Brokaw, Opera House, Angola, Ind.; Henry Hall, Rialto, Beeville, Tex.; C. F. Schnee, Unique, Litchfield, Minn.; H. J. Ludcke, Ludcke, St. Peter, Minn.; Mitchell Walfson, Miami, Fla.; C. W. Doctor, May, Maysville, Wis.; Jack Hickey, Grand, New London. Wis.

Another Governs Sales and Percentage

Lester Martin of Iowa is chairman of a committee governing sales policies and percentage playing. Allied has objected to percentage bookings and to other sales activities by national distributors. Assisting Martin on this committee are the following:

Emmett Thurman, vice-chairman, Denver; V. E. Guilfoile, Virginia theatre at Wellston, O.; R. E. Wells, Grand, Dayton, O.; Maurice Rubin, Uptown, Michigan City, Ind.; Oscar Fine, Alhambra, Evansville, Ind.; Wm. R. Wheat, Sewickley, Sewickley, Pa.; A. S. Moore, Hilltop, 804 Warrington Ave., Pittsburgh; Leaman Marshall, Iris, Terrell, Tex.; Chas. Dunsmoor, Capitol, Marshalltown, Ia.; John Piller, Piller, Valley City, S. D.; F. A. Wetsman, Avalon, Detroit; E. E. Kirchner, Family, Detroit; L. B. Harrell, Atlanta; Max Torodor, Ritz, Minneapolis; N. C. Rice, Algona, Ia.; E. M. Loew, Boston; Jack Silliman, Avalon, Milwaukee.

In view of the organization's vigorous opposition to block booking, it was decided to name a committee to handle this phase of exhibitor operation. The committee:

Fred J. Herrington, chairman, Pittsburgh W. H. Osterberg, vice-chairman, Midwest Amus. Co., Scottsbluff, Neb.; John Maclay, Strand theatre at Dubuque, Ia.; A. W. Lilly, Rialto, Greenville, Tex.; J. C. Peck, Rowena, Fenton, Mich.; R. P. Leahy, Washington, Bay City, Mich.; C. A. Pape, Shiloh, Pittsburgh; Geo. Panagotacos, State, Johnstown, Pa.; S. J. Smith, Unique, Sisseton, S. D.; Geo. Johnson, Red Wing, Minn.; H. A. Scheidker, Orpheum, Hannibal, Mo.; G. G. Sharrer, Premier, Valparaiso, Ind.; E. J. Schulte, Rialto, Casper, Wyo.; Tom Sullivan, Sullivan, Englewood, Cal.; Sol Best, Chicago; Saul N. Meltzer, Chicago; L. L. Bard, Los Angeles; R. E. Wells, Grand, Dayton; F. J. Ferguson, Avondale, Columbus; Joeeph Brodie, Brodie, Baltimore; L. Garman, Pimlico, Baltimore; L. H. Gold, Treat, Newark.

Unit for Double Features

The current problem of double features is in the hands of a group headed by Joe Pastor of Chicago, who will be assisted by:

Fred Guilford, vice-chairman; Century theatre at Chicago; A. Guttenberg, Hollywood, Milwaukee; Harry Hecht, Rialto, Passaic, N. J.; G. H. Brennen, Orpheum, Jersey City; H. T. Waxmann, Astor, Atlantic City; Nathan Dax, Hipp, Sioux City; Tom Brown, Strand, Iowa City; L. Burns, Champion, Columbus; E. E. Finch, C. & M. Amus., Marietta, O.; H. H. Johnson, Madison, Madison; A. E. Hancock, Columbia, Columbia City, Ind.; Archie Fineman, Pittsburgh; Wm. Finkle, Pittsburgh; Dave Young, Dittman, Brownsville, Tex.; Paul Scott, Varsity, Dallas; Abe Kaplan, Dale, St. Paul; E. S. Noreen, Rex, Hutchinson, Minn.; O. C. Lam, Rome, Ga.; J. Turner, Rex, Beloit, Wis.; O. L. Meister, Whitehouse, Milwaukee; Everett Cole, Rialto, Alamosa, Col.; Samuel Halper, Chicago.

Open Letter Issued

Purposes of the committee, headed by Samuelson of New Jersey, for the "Elimination of Producers from the Exhibition Field," may be gleaned from an open letter, forwarded directly from national headquarters at Washington, and addressed to "the owners of motion picture stocks and bonds." The "letter" said:

"Your dividends have been stopped—now your investment is in jeopardy.

"This has been brought about through the mismanagement of most of the larger producing and distributing companies. First, they have gone in competition with their customers who knew how to operate theatres financially successfully and who made it possible for the producers to accumulate millions to build expensive monuments that they knew nothing about operating, and are now costing you, Mr. Security Holder, millions in the way of passed dividends and shrinkage in original investments.

"Second, through their unreasonable sales methods they have forced thousands of their former customers to close their doors, thereby reducing their possibilities to a point where it is difficult for any producing company to make a profit and countless other theatres will close in the next 60 days unless these arbitrary methods are discontinued."

Allied's "appeal" to "stockholders" also contained an invitation to attend the convention, and it further urged holders to wire the president of the company whose securities they hold, insisting "that he be there."

BROADWAY STAGE—FROM CAMERA EYE

Benjamin DeCasseres, Famous Critic and Essayist, Comments On the Stories of the Hits

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

Following is the first of a series of discussions of drama by the famous Benjamin DeCasseres, who from time to time will survey the plays of Broadway with a motion picture eye. Internationally known as poet, essayist, satirist and epigrammatist, Mr. DeCasseres has been a contributor to the New York Times, Sun, World, Globe, Tribune, Herald, World-Telegram, American Mercury, Cosmopolitan, Arts and Decoration, Screenland, Mercure de France (Paris), Judge, Life, Shadowland, Philistine, Thinker, and others. In this first article he discusses several plays of the Broadway stage and their screen possibilities.

"WHISTLING IN THE DARK"

"Whistling in the Dark," by Lawrence Gross and Edwards Childs Carpenter, clicks like a runaway taxi down Pike's Peak. From the rise to the drop of the curtain the audience is breathless.

It's a comedy-drama of crooks and a famous writer of detective stories who, with his girl, strays into their nest at Spuyten Duyvil. These crooks are about to knock off a high State official. When they find they have a Van Dine among them they force him to show them how to do it—just as if he were writing the story.

The detective-story writer has got to concoct the perfect crime for these knock-off birds. The official is to be killed while on a night train between New York and Buffalo. How this writer saves this man by turning a radio into a telephone right under the crooks' noses and the terrific climax are the big smashes of this perfect story, with as many laughs in it as nerve-shredders.

Ernest Truex, that curious, infantile, glib-tongued, snappy-brained midget of a comedian, rings one hundred at every shot out of his mouth. He is Peter Pan in crookdom.

"Whistling in the Dark" yelps to be screened. It's director-proof. I made the picture as I sat in my seat. That race between Death and Life on the train between New York and Buffalo! If the victim cleans his teeth in the morning he's lost—for there's cyanide of potassium in his toothpaste tube. And that's only one of twenty clutches at your windpipe. Frank Craven directed.

"RIDDLE ME THIS"

Talking about Frank Craven, brings me natunrally to the show in which he and Thomas Mitchell have staged a clean knock-out, "Riddle Me This!" Craven plays an easy-going, raggedy, bottle-swizzling newspaper man to Mitchell's blustering, half-boozy chief of detectives of a Mid-Western city. They are great stage pals and pound out the laughs in a fascinating and somewhat high-toned murder story.

BENJAMIN DeCASSERES has been writing on the drama for more than thirty years, both as critic and essayist. He was with Paramount Publix in Long Island City for four years as title writer and rebuilder of foreign and domestic pictures; he was head of the title department of Universal in 1924-25. Besides being contributor to a number of publications he is author of "The Shadow-Eater," "Chameleon," "James Gibbons Huneker," "Forty Immortals," "Mencken and Shaw," "The Superman in America," "Anathema!" "The Mirrors of New York," "The Love-Letters of a Living Poet" and other works.

The play is by Daniel N. Rubin. As the curtain rises we see a fashionable doctor (played impeccably by Charles Richman) over the corpse of his wife, whom he has just murdered because she has a lover. We see him carefully arrange his alibi and make his clean up and getaway.

He has contrived in the cleverest way possible to fasten the crime on the lover, who arrived after the murder and tip-toed out. The lover is going to the electric chair.

Then Craven and Mitchell begin rapidly to unwind the evidence, and as the lover is saved from the chair the doctor, who is present most of the time on the stage, takes poison. So cleverly is this play contrived that the audience itself doubts the doctor's guilt, although it actually sees him commit the crime.

There are no thrills in this play, but the brain follows it breathlessly, absorbingly. It is all in perfect balance—the melodrama, the comedy and the tragedy. Another corking picture with a whirlwind finish.

Frank Craven directed this also. John Golden comes across with his first hit of the season.

"CYNARA"

This play, by H. M. Harwood and R. F. Gore-Browne, is one of the finest plays of the season, and one of the best of many seasons. Romanticism, comedy and tragedy are mixed perfectly.

The setting of the play is English upper middle-class. He is a barrister. He loves his wife. He leads a humdrum, everyday life. He is kind-hearted, unimaginative, settled. His wife goes to the Continent with her sister on a vacation. In a trip to a restaurant with a friend who is a sort of kindly mephistopheles (played superbly with full epigrammatic accompaniment by Henry Stephenson), he casually meets a shop-girl. His foot slips—she is desperately in love with him. He is not—but he's just common clay.

The wife returns. The man tells the girl they must part. She commits suicide. But both he and his wife, who is forgiving, must go through life with the shadow of this girl's death between them.

There is a beautiful scene—the high-spot in the story—in a courtroom. The man, the soul of honor, will not reveal at this coroner's inquest whether he was or was not the first lover of the girl. He hangs his head.

This is not a mawkish play. It is terrible, bitter satire sheathed in our common human failings.

Philip Merivale was perfect as the barrister. Phoebe Foster and Adrianne Allen—the latter a genuine new find—are excellent. The dialogue is brilliant. I'd go again to see this in picture-form.

"CHILD OF MANHATTAN"

I do not like many plays on the stage that I like immensely when they are screened. One of them was "Street Scene." The average of story-telling ability is far higher, generally speaking, in the pictures than on the stage. This is because the pictures tell more, tell it more vividly and

ACADEMY CONCILIATION MACHINERY SETS RECORD IN SETTLING DISPUTES

Total of 232 Cases Handled And in Not One Has Either Party Found It Necessary to Carry Cause to the Courts

By LEO MEEHAN

A record possibly unparalleled in the history of American business in the matter of settling disputes between employer and employee has been established within the motion picture industry in Hollywood, through the conciliation machinery set up and perfected by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. As a result of the system established and quietly developed during the past four years, every individual and every corporation concerned with the production of motion pictures in Hollywood has at instant command, and without expense, an institution which has not yet failed to successfully settle any dispute which has been submitted to it.

All Cases Settled Outside Courts

By that I mean that of the 232 cases handled by the Academy, in not one single instance has either party found it necessary to go into court to secure satisfaction. And more remarkable still is the fact that of all these cases, only twelve per cent of them have ever reached the stage of formal arbitration. The others have all been amicably decided by mediation and conciliation, and without resort to formal hearing and decision. A very substantial percentage of them have been settled in conferences between the parties concerned with Academy officials, at which the latter have been able to bring the points at issue to a head and arrive at an immediate settlement.

The Academy's conciliation machinery is available to anyone employed in making motion pictures. It matters not whether a producing company is a member of the Academy's producer branch. It matters not whether the individual is a member of the Academy. It makes no difference whether he is a high priced star or director, or whether he is a carpenter or a cameraman. If he wishes to appeal his case to the Academy he gets a hearing instantly, and the machinery of conciliation moves with promptness and dispatch toward a just settlement of the matters in dispute.

Each Case on Its Own Merits

It must not be inferred, however, that through its conciliation and arbitration facilities, the Academy is assuming any extra-legal functions, that it is trying to supersede the courts or the legal profession. In fact, everything possible is done to keep away from the establishment of hard and fast rules. Each case is handled as an individual case, settled upon its own merits, and not in accordance with precedents, rules or regulations.

There have been many instances wherein there has been grave doubt as to an appellant's legal ability to collect. Yet, when it has seemed that an injustice has arisen, the employer has been asked to forget rights he may have had under a contract with the appellant, and to make a reasonable adjustment in the interests of goodwill and amicable relationship between employer and employee. And, without exception to date, this has been done to the mutual satisfaction of all parties concerned.

Involve Special Talent

Students of arbitration believe the results obtained are the more remarkable, due to the character of the disputes and the disputants. For, in large majority, they involve talent of a special and peculiar ability and earning power. Writers, directors, actors, expert technicians, all persons of relatively high individual earning capacity, are involved. They are creative artists or technicians in most cases. Their value to the employers, and their value to themselves, the highly complicated questions, in comparison to a mill worker, a machinist, a public utility employee or other whose work is in a fixed, well established routine and worth, according to definitely predetermined experience, a certain sum. Again, on the side of the employer, the refusal or inability of an artist-employee to perform his duties properly and satisfactorily, may result in the ruination of a motion picture, upon which a small fortune has been or is about to be expended. The services of the disputing employee may be of such a special character as to jeopardize the employer's entire business unless properly performed. And, on the other hand, the reputation of the employee as an artist may be such that his earning capacity and standing in the industry may be seriously impaired should the employer require unreasonable services. Distinctly, it is not always a matter of money involved; more often it is a matter of ethics or principles, with the actual cash a secondary matter.

Mediation, Conciliation, Arbitration

The normal procedure in the settlement of disputes and controversies falls naturally into three major classifications: mediation, conciliation, arbitration. Upon the filing of a complaint, officers of the Academy immediately get in touch with the employer, advising him that the complaint has been made, and asking for the employer's version of the dispute. Very often it is possible, by reference to past experiences in similar or parallel cases already settled, to advise the disputants of what has happened in cases like the one at hand, with the result that the disputant parties get together and immediately reach a settlement. This is mediation, and is successful in a large number of instances. Many times it develops that the dispute has been caused by mutual misunderstanding, which can quickly be corrected.

If such a mediation by an Academy official fails, formal conciliation is the next step. The complaint, which must always be in writing and signed, is referred to the executive committee of the branch under which it properly comes—actor, technician, writer, director, or what not. Members of this executive committee then discuss the case. They may call for additional evidence. They may vote that there is no merit, that it does not warrant further consideration. They may vote a decision, which is then submitted to the disputants as an opinion by experts and which may or may not be accepted by the disputants. Or, the committee may be authorized to bring the disputants together and attempt a settlement. But in no case do the operations of these branch executive committees approach the nature of a formal hearing. The conferences and their findings are still informal and have not the character of a binding decision.

Only 12 Per Cent Reached Stage of Formal Arbitration; Names of Disputants and Charges Never Made Public

Committee Findings Final

If all these efforts have failed, the case may then be referred to the Academy conciliation committee for formal arbitration. This committee is made up of fifteen representatives, three from each of the five major branches of the Academy: actors, directors, producers, writers and technicians. Members of this commiteee serve for three years. It is the five senior members who form the committee at the hearing. In the event a senior member of the committee from a given branch is not available and cannot attend, then the first alternate—the member serving his second year—takes his place. If he, also, cannot be present, the first year member, or second alternate, sits in. But it is seldom the first year man is required to act. He is urged and encouraged to attend hearings so that he may become familiar with procedure, and he is always kept fully informed of the acts and decisions of his superiors, so that when his time comes to serve as senior member of his branch, he will have become fully qualified.

After due notice, a formal hearing is held before this conciliation committee, which thereafter renders its decision. Both complainants and respondents are entitled to appear personally, or be represented by attorneys. But when this committee records its findings, they are final, and both parties are so notified. Under the laws of the state of California, these decisions, when they result from properly conducted hearings, have the same effect as a court decision. In fact, they may be registered in the superior court and by this formality have the same force and effect as a judgment of the court. The only recourse a disputant then would have would be his inalienable right of appeal to a higher court of law.

One other phase of this important function should not be overlooked. Disputes within the industry are not aired in the courts or tried in the newspapers. Never are the names of the disputants made public, nor the charges made.

BRITISH RENTERS RE-ELECT ECKMAN; REFLECTS STAND FOR FIRM POLICY

Exhibitors Protest KRS Opposition to Reducing Rentals; Association Talks of Holding Off Summer Bookings

By W. H. MOORING, London

Sam Eckman, Jr., chief of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in this country, has been re-elected as president of the Kinematograph Renters Society for a second year.

The object of the conferring of this honor is doubtless to insure continuity of the present KRS policy: it is acknowledged that the society has never had so Mussolini-like a president. He has guided the society through a difficult year, with the hand of a first rate statesman, and his fellow members, seeing that the next year is to be by no means free of political strife, have expressed their confidence in Eckman by leaving him in office to deal with it.

Exhibitors Protest Policy

In Cinematograph Exhibitor circles, Eckman's re-election has aroused critical comment, not on personal grounds, but because of the unbending policy of the KRS on the question of general reduction in rentals. The CEA, commenting on the reappointment, suggests that it has taken place to avoid the election of a British president for the KRS. "The KRS, not under American domination vide its last report," says the CEA statement, "gets over the difficulty of a British president by inviting Mr. Sam Eckman to continue as president and Mr. Arthur Dent as vice-president."

Arthur Dent, who is the managing director of Wardour Films, affiliate of British International, is at present in New York: he had left for the States only a week before the KRS Council decided not to ask him to go automatically into the presidency of their society, as had been expected. But in the absence of any statement by Dent, it cannot be assumed that he had not reached an understanding on the matter with his colleagues of the KRS. However that may be, it is of special interest to note the present rental question policy of the CEA, which changes its president on March 9, when Randolph Richards succeeds R. V. Crow, and that of the KRS.

Renters Oppose Revision

While the exhibitors are being urged by their association to hold off bookings for the summer period, in order that in the event of box-office slump they may close more easily, the KRS stands firm against any general revision of rentals. Meanwhile, though the head office of the CEA seems to have missed the point, one of its most lively branches has pointed out that if there is to be a reduction in film rentals, the British distributors must lead the way, since they are not suffering, as are their American-controlled competitors, the substantial loss arising through the fall in the pound sterling.

Perhaps that branch has dropped a brick: in any case it will be interesting to see whether the CEA General Council acts on the tip, or whether the permanent officials of the Exhibitors Association, who are engaged on a pro-British campaign, decide to pick up that brick and hide it.

Doubtless conciliatory steps will have to be taken before the rental quarrel is straightened out,

Pastor Fights Screen Censors

The name of the Rev. Thomas Tiplady has suddenly leaped from the obscurity of Lambeth, one of the poorest quarters in London, where he runs the Ideal Mission, into the national news headlines.

For he has not merely dared to start a cinema service in connection with his mission, but he has booked such subjects as Tallulah Bankhead's "Tarnished Lady," Evelyne Laye in "One Heavenly Night" and John Boles in "Seed" . . . The Methodist Times, nonconformist weekly, is shocked, particularly since the Rev. Tiplady splashes his Mission front with posters announcing these forthcoming attractions.

Tiplady answers his critics with this: "The cinema is the greatest invention since the printing press, and the Church must put aside all moral, intellectual and artistic snobbery, and either directly or indirectly bring this invention into the service of Christ." One can hear the "tarnished lady" herself commenting brightly on that. Even she never thought she'd be a living sermon.

play up certain vital incidents that are sometimes almost neglected on the stage.

This is the case with Preston Sturges' new play, "Child of Manhattan." As a play, to me, it is tawdry, old-fashioned, sordid and without an ounce of inspiration or imagination, although plentifully sprinkled with wisecracks. It contains one scene between two sisters which smells like rotten fish.

There was life in "Strictly Dishonorable," but in "Child of Manhattan" there is only duff and guff. But it will, I believe, in the hands of a brainy and not too sentimental director, make an entertaining "document" picture.

It is already a near-picture, for it is in nineteen scenes. It's all about a nice little gal who is picked out of a cabaret by a rich old-family New Yorker. This gal is unbelievably stupid and illiterate (please varnish her in the picture a little, Herr Direktor). Well, there's a baby, born dead; a marriage, a Mexican divorce, and other matters that are inconsequential. You've seen it before many times.

Dorothy Hall and Reginald Owen are the high spots in this old ten-twenty-thirty, and they do well. But Owen, a corking actor, must g-nash his teeth silently at such a part.

"Child of Manhattan" should have been done directly for the screen. And Uncle Will Hays will have to get out his curry-comb and manicure-set on this play.

"BLESSED EVENT"

Haw! Haw! Pfft! Pfft!—and what-not, with Walter Winchell as the star.

It was only a question of time when someone would hand our great keyhole artist a sock on the coco. But this sock, "Blessed Event," by Manuel Seff and Forrest Wilson, is padded. They have strained the quality of bitterness. It was intended as a serious "Five-Star-Final" thrust; but why not Haw! Haw it?—and they did.

All of Winchell's winchellings are in this fast, furious, blatant, humorous play. It simmers with hot situations and crazy knockabout stuff.

We see Winchell (done too noisily, I think, by the overzealous Roger Pryor) at work in his office loading up his column with all kinds of innuendoes, insinuations and Blessed Eventings. Around one of these Eventings hangs the story. He has named an unmarried girl. Tears, threats, ha! ha's!

Then a gunman comes in to put Walter on spot. But the gunny finds there is a dictaphone running in the room. He goes over to Walter's side and winchells for him.

Then Walter is put on spot in a night club where he was forbidden to trespass. Of course, they don't get him. But here is a wild scene—volcanic. He is somewhat ashamed about the girl, and all ends well (what else did you expect? Mocking-boids?). Nize Colyum boy!

This show lays somewhere between "The Front Page" and "Five-Star Final." It will make a fast and cocky picture. It fairly howls for Jim Cagney.

"The Left Bank," by Elmer Rice, is in its twenty-second week in New York. In this play Rice has a firmer grip on character and psychological sex-fencing than he has had in any of his plays. There is none of that looseness of construction which I found in some of his other operas. It beats "Street Scene" all around the bush.

It ought to make what Mordaunt Hall would call "a thoughtful picture," tempered by same brilliant cracks at America and France (who don't seem to neck one another as affectionately as they did in 1917).

It might be described as American sex ideas modified by Gallic naughtiness. All these people live en Bohême—the mattress is never turned, the bath is upstairs, the wardrobe hangs behind a curtain. And then there's Art. But there is one Yankee (and how he'll glow and jell in a picture!) who declares that Pittsburgh soot is superior to Matisse and Victor Hugo and the rest of the bunch.

Katherine Alexander, Horace Braham, and Donald Macdonald are the main teases, with a male Franch chambermaid whose name escapes me but who frisks the giggles out of you.

NEWSREELS SET A SERVICE RECORD IN KIDNAPING OF LINDBERGH BABY

More Than 100 Men, 50 Cameras and 35 Sound Trucks Used On Greatest Human Interest Story; Win Tribute from Lindy

Shortly before midnight of Tuesday, March 1, the news wires of the nation began to hum with the startling information of the kidnaping of the 20 months-old son of Charles and Anne Lindbergh, from the family home at Hopewell, New Jersey. Simultaneously with receipt of the news in the editorial rooms of countless newspapers, the teletypes of the two principal wire services were spelling out the story in the New York headquarters of five newsreels.

The newsreels, like the great metropolitan dailies, went into action immediately. Editors and general managers of the reels were summoned from home and sound sleep to take charge of the pictorial reporting of what is called the greatest human interest story in the history of newsreels. Within a matter of minutes, emergency organizations had been created and were functioning; sound trucks, cameramen, technicians were speeding out of New York to the scene of the abduction, and by 2:30 in the morning the first of the news cameramen—a Universal Newsreel representative—was in Hopewell, interrogating police and principals. Between that hour and dawn, more than 50 newsreel representatives, and a dozen sound trucks had moved into the vicinity of the Lindbergh home and were ready to "shoot" with the coming of daylight.

Negatives on Way After Daylight

Newspapers and news services with international ramifications, and the agencies of radio broadcasting, did not move more quickly. Shortly after daylight on Wednesday, the morning after the kidnaping, negatives were on their way to developing laboratories, and a few hours later Broadway picture audiences were viewing them.

The first pictures of the Lindbergh baby were exhibited in 49 RKO theatres in the vicinity of New York on the day following the kidnapping. The pictures were made a part of one of three special releases made that day by Pathe newsreel. They were obtained from 300 feet of 16 mm. negative taken by the child's parents a few weeks earlier and made available to all newsreels by Lindbergh in the hope that the pictures would lead to the early identification of the child by making it easily recognizable to the public. The making of 35 mm. prints from the Lindberghs' 16 mm. negative for distribution to the newsreels fell to Pathe, which may or may not explain how that reel happened to be first into New York theatres with the baby's pictures.

Clips from this family reel were also supplied to news services and newspapers. Many were used with credit to the newsreels supplying them as they comprised the most recent pictures of the baby. Moreover, there were but eight photographs of the child in existence, as compared with the 300 feet of motion picture film.

The credit for overcoming Lindbergh's reticence and aversion to publicity, which resulted in his release of the films of the child, is being given to a Pathe News representative. This same gentleman tested his persuasive powers further by attempting to induce the parents of the child to make a direct plea to the kidnapers, through the agency of the sound newsreels, for the return of the child. His arguments were based on the greater appeal that a personal message spoken by the child's parents would possess, as compared with any formal newspaper statement which the two could make.

Lindbergh Pays Tribute

In making his own pictures of the child available to the newsreels Lindbergh paid one of the highest tributes to the reels ever paid them as public service agencies. His act was a testimonial to his belief that the making public of these pictures of the child would do more to bring about its return than any other publicity medium.

The tremendous and almost insatiable public interest in the kidnaping, which resulted in the sale of increased millions of newspapers throughout the world, was also reflected in the demand of theatre-goers for pictures of the baby, the scene of the kidnaping and the ensuing search for an investigation of clues. Approximately 1,000 extra prints of newsreels containing footage of the Lindbergh kidnaping were made and distributed by the five reels in the days immediately following the abduction. The demand for this footage from exhibitors throughout the world reflects the importance of the newsreel as a major agency of public information and education.

100 Men, 50 Cameras

In gathering their pictorial records of the famous case the five newsreels utilized more than 100 men, 50 cameras and 35 sound trucks. In addition, every resource of entire organizations was held in reserve ready to be called into service if a "break" in the story developed anywhere in the country. The story was covered by the newsreels exactly as it was covered by the newspapers. The newsreel editors did not hold their staffs in New York awaiting news "breaks" before sending them out for pictures. Cameras and editorial men followed the police and detectives in charge of the investigation exactly as did reporters for the newspapers. Investigators employed by the reels sifted "tips" and clues and followed each to its conclusion. In addition to men and equipment stationed at Hopewell, other staffs were assigned to centers farther away, wherever there was a likelihood of a development. Even feature angles were not lost sight of by the newsreels. There was considerable footage of state troopers searching cars, quizzing suspects, investigating leads. There was footage of the four or five hundred newspaper and radio representatives at work, and there was footage of the crowds of curiosity seekers who jammed the highways about Hopewell for a sight of the Lindbergh home.

Planes Chartered

Of the 15 sound trucks assigned by Fox Movietone and Metrotone News to the New York territory, not one was left unused on some angle of the story during the week following the abduction. The Fox reels spread their staffs in a far-flung network to encompass all the territory in which a news development was likely to occur. Two trucks were assigned to Hopewell; two at Trenton, the headquarters of the Jersey state police; one at Jersey City; one at Hartford, Conn., and others at secret outlying locations determined by editors and executives of the newsreels.

Planes were chartered by the reels to shoot scenes from the air and were held in readiness to transport cameras and men from one location to another in the event of widely separated developments. Some of the reels also used planes in delivering prints and in investigating private clues and each new police lead.

A NEWSREEL TRIUMPH

Lindbergh domain were attempted by Hopewell police on the day after the abduction, and a police air patrol, maintained to enforce the regulation, almost brought disaster to a Pathe Newsreel erew which had taken to the air in defiance of thc order. The Pathe crew contended that a permit to fly had been issued the Associated Press crew by the Hopewell police, who subsequently refused a permit to Pathe. The newsreel contacted various state officials and the office of Governor A. Harry Moore of New Jersey without obtaining satisfaction, and then, as daylight was waning, issued instructions to its flyers and cameramen to take to the air, regardless. The police ship pursued the newsreel men and, in attempting to force them out of the air, narrowly averted a tragedy, Pathe executives charge.

The right of the local constabulary to exercise authority over the air above a sparsely populated locality is now under protest at the Jersey State Capitol by Pathe.

How Crews Were Stationed

Pathe utilized approximately ten trucks and 22 men on various angles of the story. In order to accomplish this, men and equipment were brought in from outlying offices, and skeleton and emergency crews only were left unused. Pathe stationed two crews at Trenton, two crews at Hartford, three at Hopewell, and three were retained in readiness in New York. Staff men at Hopewell and in the home office worked without relief or rest for 48 hours. Field men were required to report to editors in New York once every hour.

Paramount employed ten trucks, 15 cameras and 36 men on the story. A minimum of two trucks were maintained at Hopewell; two were in New York on police developments, one was in Newark, N. J.; one in Englewood, N. J.; one in Philadelphia and one in Trenton. Boston and Washington staffs were moved in closer to the scene of the abduction and held in readiness for emergencies. Two trucks were maintained at secret locations on advice of informants of the newsreel.

Paramount even drew on its Chicago staff to facilitate eoverage of the story. Chicago men were drawn in to cover for staffs farther east which were called into reserve on the story. The entire resources of the organization were held on tap in what Paramount editors described as the greatest concentration of men and equipment on newsreel coverage since the war. Double shifts were maintained to complete 24-hour coverage.

In Los Angeles Saturday

Paramount, apparently, was first into distant sections with its pictures. Its Wednesday release was shown to Chicago theatre goers Friday, and to Los Angeles audiences Saturday. The Associated Press distributed 14 Paramount "shots" to 800 newspapers. Some excellent feature and atmospheric footage was caught by Paramount eameramen and included sound "shots" of the hundreds of newspaper and radio representatives at work, play and "Just waiting." A battery of reporters at phones relaying information, pleading for money from their offiees, or interrogating poliee and investigators made a "shot" of interest to thousands of motion picture patrons. News-gatherers cooking a meal of wieners in an ash can fireplace, sleeping in automobiles, "shooting craps" on frozen earth, all went into the Paramount record. There was even the take-off in the darkness of night of two planes chartered by newspapers to follow Lindy in the event he took to his plane for any destination. The pilot of one plane hearing the motor of the other being warmed up, mistook it for Lindbergh's ship and started his own. Both newspaper planes took off at once, dogged each other to Hartford, Conn., and there discovered their mistake in time to return to Hopewell by dawn.

Universal Newsreel had four cameras at Hopewell, several in New York, and one at Trenton, one at Hartford, and one in Pennsylvania following clues. Universal followed the story exactly as would a newspaper. Editorial cameramen followed police and state troopers on their searches of woods and highways and witnessed the finding of clues, questioning and arrest of suspects and numerous other developments, all of which were recorded in celluloid. Universal also maintained its own staff of investigators to sift and run down tips and clues as they developed, some of which took men into Philadelphia and as far West as Chicago. The reel maintained its own plane in Chicago in the event developments in the story occurred there or farther west. Universal, too, used more men and equipment on the story than on any other single event since the inception of the reel.

Pictures in Library

Universal was the only reel which had pictures of the baby on hand in its library. They were taken at the Lindbergh home last summer.

This greatest (from the standpoint of human interest) story in the history of newsreels was not an exceptionally expensive one to cover. Its proximity to home offices, to concentrated equipment and distribution facilities was largely responsible for holding costs to a minimum. Moreover, the very nature of the story made it possible for newsreels to get their essentials without encountering any very great difficulties. The story of the kidnaping could be told in pictures with a few hundred feet of film. Little additional footage was required, or was possible to obtain, thereafter.

"Shots" of the baby's room, the crib, the window, the ladder, the house and grounds, the parents, and the pictures of the baby supplied by the family comprised the essentials.

Whereas during the first week following the baby's disappearance the five newsreels "shot" more than 60,000 feet of film on the story, the average release was about 500 feet per company.

Paramount Sells Half Interest In Columbia System

Paramount Publix has sold its half-interest in Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., to William S. Paley and associates for $5,200,000, and has repurchased all of the common stock which it was obligated to take by the terms of the agreement under which it acquired the half-interest in the broadcasting concern.

The obligation which has been met, was due on Thursday of this week and involved the payment of $4,036,000. Paramount, it is officially announced, "has no further obligations under this or any other transaction to repurehase any more of its stock."

The company's financial situation is generally considered greatly strengthened, since after payment of the maturing obligation, a surplus of approximately $1,000,000 is available.

The Paley interests, which are now in complete control of Columbia Broadcasting System, include several banking houses, among them Brown Brothers, Harriman & Company, Dillon, Read & Company, Field, Glore & Company. Herbert Bayard Swope, former executive editor of the New York World, is included among several important individuals concerned in the repurchase of the Paramount 50 per cent interest. Columbia Broadcasting System, it is understood, will remain a closed corporation, no plans now being contemplated for the offering of securities to the public.

Directors who have represented Paramount on the board have resigned and their places will be filled at the next meeting of Columbia Broadcasting System stockholders within a month.

Milliken Stresses Public's Place in Raising Standards

Any community in the country may now have the kind of motion picture entertainment it desires if it will take advantage of the privilege of selectivity now being exercised in 3,000 localities, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Hays organization told the Cincinnati Motion Picture Council last week.

"Where sincere local groups work in cooperation with local theatre management, the result is almost 100 per cent complete satisfaction," Milliken told the group. Speaking of the part the public plays in the making of production schedules, he said, "Great product can come only with enlightened demand and support for the best."

In a second address during the past week, before the Bates College Alumnae Association at Boston, Milliken spoke on "Raising Standards of Taste." He noted the necessity of inculcating in the vast motion picture audience a taste for the better type of motion pictures, and pointed out that the industry must have "the support of the minister, of the parent, and of the teacher in the great task of stimulating a discriminatory faculty on thc part of audiences."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

CLAUDE MacGowan, Mayfair's vice president, is the unhappy discoverer of one of the evils which he says is blocking the wheels of progress in the field of what he terms "legitimate" independent producers.

It appears that certain unnamed concerns unfairly tie up bookings in the early selling months by promising to make from 20 to 40 features, of which only four to six are delivered. This is done, among other reasons, in order to line up sufficient contracts to favorably impress financiers whose monetary aid is sought for production. In the meantime, the legitimate producer—who promises and delivers—has no way of definitely gauging market needs for the new season. Furthermore, bookings are tied up until late in the season at theatres which contract for the mythical group. The legitimate producer is shut out of hundreds of these situations and as a result produces a limited supply of features, not knowing that the market will open widely for his wares during the last half of the year.

"All this," concludes MacGowan, "is pretty loose business."

When ordinary comedians are assigned to a production, press agents mention the fact in just so many words. Not so with the Marx Brothers, however. Paramount Publix's publicity purveyor announces they will "cavort on a college campus."

Oh, yes, the title is "Horse Feathers."

As mentioned some few weeks ago in this pillar, several movie flyers in and about Hollywood received offers to join the Chinese air fleet in its defense of Shanghai. China and its 400,000,000 inhabitants, it appears, are unable to man a handful of flying ships. We now learn the details of the attractive offers, which embrace a sizeable salary weekly, six months' pay deposited in advance and a round-trip ticket to Shanghai. No mention is made of the manner in which the return ticket will be disposed of—in case.

Some few weeks ago, Columbia Pictures undertook the task of exploiting its star, Buck Jones, by means of a nationwide movement to create a series of "Buck Jones Rangers" clubs for boys between the ages of 4 and 14. Already 300,000 have been enrolled and new members are coming in at the rate of 1,000 a day. All of which creates invaluable publicity and interest in the Buck Jones series of Westerns, but the rapidity and the extent to which the movement is gaining momentum presents a problem revolving around costs of enrolling these enthused youngsters. Already, Columbia has appropriated $20,000 to care for the printing and mailing of two booklets and the manufacture of membership pins for members.

Jack Skirball, who recently joined Educational as special representative for President E. W. Hammons, is revered as a rabbi in Cincinnati, having secured an indefinite leave of absence from the rabbinate to perform some special work for the Educational chief. He is not Stanley Hatch's successor, nor will he remain permanently at that corporation, his deal with Hammons permitting him to rejoin his rabbinical post at any time.

Skirball is a member of the well-known family of film Skirbolls, although he spells his name differently from his brothers.

In the meantime, Hatch's duties have been divided between Reggie Wilson and Harvey Day, who is in charge of circuit sales and field work.

EVERY manager and each member of the staff of one of the largest circuits is in receipt of a communication from a company executive in which they are told that instant dismissal, without even a hearing, will follow the discovery of any employe, or group, participating in bicycling pictures.

Managers of two of this circuit's theatres in New York were caught bicycling current releases. In defending their highly questionable activities, they explained that they were attempting to reduce overhead in keeping with a general economy movement which had previously been ordered by the home office.

The total gross of the recent New York Motion Picture Club ball is $22,000, of which slightly less than $4,000 is net profit. Tickets cost $12.50 per person and the club paid the Waldorf the unusually high price of $5.50 for each of 800 dinners, or $4,400. The remaining $13,200 was paid to three orchestras, and other expenses, although a unique feature of the event is the fact that an elaborate promotional and advertising-publicity campaign cost only $250. Free space was given by many publications, and billboards, stands, paper and other ballyhoo material were all donated.

In the meantime, arrangements and a date have already been set for a similar affair in 1933.

The screen comeback of Harry Langdon promises to be considerably more pretentious than was at first planned. Initially announced as a two-reeler, Langdon launched production with three reels as his goal and $16,000 the cost. To date, $40,000 have been expended and the film, "Show Goat," has already reached four reels with the end not yet in sight.

Acted, directed and co-authored by Harry, the venture is being backed by Albert and John Breslin, who are reputed to be wealthy lumber merchants of Long Island and are supposed to be interested in an important savings bank in Brooklyn.

At Boston, one finds the newest and the best motion pictures in the Charles Street jailhouse, where once in every three weeks pictures are presented for the entire jail population. In view of the obvious fact that it is not a competitive enterprise, first-run exhibitors do not complain when exchanges forward, without charge, prints of the very latest films to the jail, pictures which have not yet been shown in Boston houses.

Ten years ago this very week, Canon Chase was active in denouncing the industry, and who remembers when Sydney S. Cohen was president of the MPTOA? . . . Headlines during the week ended March 11, 1922, told of preparations being made for the annual convention of Cohen's organization, now headed by M. A. Lightman, which, oddly enough, was staged in the very town, at Washington, where the forthcoming yearly meeting of the association will be held. One of the executives of the MPTOA, who was also on the committee in charge of preparations, was none other than Al Steffes, now president of Allied States, a competitor of the MPTOA!

Scanning further the headlines of ten years ago, we find a now-forgotten industry executive predicting, of all things, that "PROSPERITY BEGINS ON MARCH 16!" A post-war depression had been making itself felt at that time.

Operators were on the receiving end of salary cuts then, too. And the industry was bending every effort to counteract "yellow newspaper scandal propaganda."

SELDOM do strike battles between exhibitor and operators reach the stage of bitterness which marks the antics of principals involved in the current tilt now raging in New York between Sam Kaplan's Local 306 and theatres controlled by the Springer-Cocalis circuit in Manhattan and the Bronx.

The union provides free bus transportation to competitive theatres where union members are employed. Free movies are given nightly on property adjacent, in competition to the striking houses, and women relatives of the strikers have been enlisted in a door-to-door appeal to housewives asking them to refrain from patronizing these theatres. Printed appeals have been disposed of by carloads and the union has enlisted the support of members of the Retail Dairy and Grocery Clerks' Union, the American Federation of Labor, New York State Federation, Central Trades and Labor Council, Central Union Labor Council, United Hebrew Trades, Hebrew Butcher Workers' Union and Bronx Superintendents' Union.

Trucks with banners announcing the strike are dispatched daily into the various territories where striking houses are located and meetings are held on street corners at which wives and friends of the strikers discuss the situation.

Violence has not been resorted to, nor has there been any indication of physical encounters and stench bombing, which usually creep into such situations.

Unlike most executives in the industry, M. E. Comerford, circuit president, is a most pronounced antagonist of insurance salesmen, having successfully gone through his 60-odd years without capitulating even once to the entreaties of the insurance salesman.

The Artie Stebbinses and the Al Rubins should not lose hope, however, because Comerford once had a similar pet aversion against having his picture taken for publicity purposes, which reluctance has long since passed away. "Mike" now orders personal photos in lots of 50.

In line with a general economy movement now current in national circuit operation, theatres of the Warner organization have been placed on a summer advertising budget basis.

Wonder if the bankers ever will permit the creation of "a million dollar epic" or two, as sort of a replica of the old days when nearly every other feature picture was billed as being in the million-dollar class, although in reality only a comparative few did cost that much to produce?

In any event, even press agents avoid mentioning costs in this era, but maybe this is because of the presence of bankers in picture ranks, or because the publicity writers are of a newer school, members of which realize that Mr. and Mrs. Public no longer swallow as much bunk as they did in the olden days.

Jeffrey Bernard, of Wardour Films of London, has been here to arrange for distribution. This was his 16th trip to the States and, he said, the most interesting if for no other reason than the fact that it has afforded him the opportunity to witness at first hand the rapidity with which we Americans do things.

For instance, Bernard made innumerable appointments, on various mornings, with executives of our leading film companies only to find upon arriving at their offices a few hours later that these executives had resigned and their successors had already been appointed.

JERSEY NEWSPAPER CAMPAIGNS TO CORRECT "EVILS" OF PROTECTION

Journal Launches Drive With 1,500-Word Editorial; Paper's Expert Writer Assigned to Study the Film Situation

A campaign against protection which is unique in industry annals was launched the other day in Jersey City on behalf of the city's welfare and independent theatre owners, when the Jersey Journal fired the opening gun in what appears to be a vigorous denunciation of the practice, which, it is claimed, keeps pictures from Jersey theatres from one to six weeks after their appearance in New York. A score or more fair sized battles against the socalled "evil" to independents and subsequent runs are fought year-in-and-year-out with distributors and the circuit interests, but the campaign undertaken the other day is one of the few—if any—where a newspaper has so definitely and so strongly taken up the cudgels on behalf of theatre owners and where it has been made a part of a newspaper's editorial "platform" for the correction of municipal "ills." Elimination of the New York protection clause is demanded.

Fifteen hundred words were used to launch the campaign, in an opening editorial which will be followed frequently by further outbursts in print and in endeavors to enlist the aid of Mayor Frank Hague and the city commissioners, private citizens and theatre owners, the local Chamber of Commerce, service clubs, merchants and their organizations. All will be duly asked to "band together to correct this 'evil'" and "when and if it is corrected, a great service will have been done for Jersey City."

Assigns Expert Writer

The publication assigned its expert writer, A. D. Mackie, to make a study of the situation and the campaign is the result. Mackie, in a phone conversation, stressed the fact that Jersey City's theatre owners had absolutely nothing to do with bringing about the attack. They merely supplied the basic data concerning the situation and the practice, when asked for it by the newspaper. Mackie intimated that "fireworks" are ahead and said that the publication would follow through in regulation campaign form.

In the opening attack, the Jersey Journal describes the situation quite completely:

"The motion picture industry, as it affects Jersey City, needs a new dress. Too long has it been garbed in somewhat worn-out apparel. Clothes oft bespeak the person. And so it is with the theatre. The playhouses in themselves are modern, but the product which they offer, come, literally speaking, from a second-hand store.

Sees Loss in Spending

"Films, with very rare exceptions, are not shown on local screens until after they have been shown in New York. Frequently, when the film does arrive in Jersey City for presentation on the screen here, this same film will have been shown on the screens in Newark, Asbury Park, Camden, Perth Amboy, Passaic, and practically every other section of the country.

"New York demands protection of its films against showing of the product in Jersey City at the same time or before it is offered on Jersey City screens. As a result thousands of dollars weekly that might be spent here are being spent in New York. Many people in this city and surrounding territory see the first-run film in New York or other cities with the result that when the film arrives here the local theatre loses patronage of these people. The theatres, however, are not the sole losers. The transportation service loses, especially the busses, which carry patrons to and from the theatres; the merchants lose prospective customers who would be attracted to the theatre zone if the newest pictures were offered.

"It should be understood that the theatre managers here are not to blame for the conditions as they exist. It is the New York 'protection' clause that must be removed.

"For a Better Jersey City"

"Loew's Stanley, State and the Central are regarded as 'first-run' picture houses in this city. They are 'first-run' in the sense that the films they offer have not been shown in any other playhouse here. But to the film going public Jersey City is regarded somewhat as a 'hick town' in the matter of films.

"For a better Jersey City and for a greater business all around—to the theatres, the film companies, transportation and merchants—the local Chamber of Commerce, service clubs, merchants organizations, Mayor Frank Hague and the city commissioners and citizens in general should band together to correct this 'evil.' When, and if, it is corrected a great service will have been done for Jersey City.

"Some theatre managers contend that they would prefer to play films at their playhouse after they have been shown in New York rather than previous on day-and-date. Their argument is that they 'cash in' on the publicity given to the film across the Hudson. Experiment, however, has proven their contention to be wrong.

Sees Business Helped

"Theatre managers, if their houses played a film day-and-date with New York, would be forced to exploit their product more than is now customary. They would be spending more money here, but they would make this increased expenditure up by far in greater patronage at their playhouse. More, they would help business all along the line.

"Theatres here in the east have prevailed upon merchants to co-operate with them in the conducting of contests, primarily for the exploitation of a film or a stage show. The merchants benefited but little. Now the theatre has an apparent opportunity to turn around and aid the merchant by insisting on real 'first-run films' which would be the means of drawing increased customers to the theatrical zone.

"It is useless to expect that the theatre managers here can swing the deal alone. They need the cooperation of the various organizations and the citizens in general. The Chamber of Commerce should take the initiative, after a meeting with the theatre managers. The plea must be sent to the film buyer. Other organizations, like the service clubs and the merchants, might also pass resolutions calling for day-and-date film product with New York theatres. If such should fail then the citizens in general should make known their desires.

"Naturally in getting quicker film releases for 'ace' playhouses here it means that the neighborhood houses would be able to book second-run pictures also at a much earlier date."

RCA Victor Shifts Sales Executives

E. A. Nichols, vice-president in charge of sales for RCA Victor, has completed a realignment of executive sales personnel following the unification of the company's export and domestic sales activities, and the consolidation of RCA Victor with RCA Photophone at new headquarters in Camden, N. J.

E. O. Heyl, formerly in charge of RCA Photophone sales, has been named manager of the Photophone division of the company. L. W. Yule has been named assistant manager to Heyl, and is in charge of portable projectors, centralized radio and custom built equipment sales.

Other changes include: F. R. Deakins, manager engineering products division; J. M. Sawyer, assistant manager; Ernest H. Vogel, manager of the radio and phonograph division. is in charge of all foreign and domestic sales activities; A. R. Beyer, assistant manager; C. Lloyd Egner, manager of the record and recording division, is in charge of all domestic and foreign record sales work; W. W. Early, assistant; W. A. Graham, formerly with Photophone, is assistant manager in charge of recording equipment sales. In addition, E. M. Hartley is in charge of the service and installation requirements of RCA Victor, including Photophone; J. E. Francis has been named assistant. Pierre Boucheron, manager of the advertising and sales promotion division, is in charge of all foreign and domestic advertising, sales promotion and publicity for RCA Victor and the Photophone division.

Bailey Resigns From RKO

G. Rex Bailey, former casting director for RKO Radio studios and more recently department business manager, has resigned. Bailey has affiliated himself with the Coast office of Lyons, artists' representatives of New York, as executive assistant and office manager. No successor to Bailey has been appointed as yet.

Maloy Reelected In Chicago

Tom Maloy has been re-elected business manager of the projectionists' union of Chicago, a position he has held for the past 15 years. There was no opposition to Maloy and the balance of his ticket, including: Thomas J. Reynolds, president; James Sloneker, vice president; Hal Johnston, secretary-treasurer.

Named RKO Division Head

Isaac Libson, who originally built and operated the de luxe houses in the downtown section of Cincinnati, subsequently acquired by RKO, has been named division manager for the circuit in southern Ohio. His headquarters will be in Cincinnati.

CANADIAN COMBINES INDICTMENTS ARE DISMISSED BY TORONTO COURT

Decision Regarded as Marking End of Government's Combines Case; All Defendants Are Cleared on All Counts

Justice Garrow in the court of criminal assizes at Toronto has dismissed charges of conspiracy and unlawful combination which were brought by the provincial government against Famous Players Canadian Corporation, its former managing director, N. L. Nathanson, 10 distributors and the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada.

The decision is generally regarded in Toronto as marking the close of the long-pending combines case, which has been an issue in Canadian motion picture circles since the dominion government instituted its investigation of the Canadian motion picture industry on September 23, 1930. Commissioner of Labor Peter White has been in charge of the government inquiry since its inception. Commissioner White found that a combination existed in violation of the combines act, which cleared the way for the institution of suits by the various provincial governments, which were immediately prepared. The Toronto action, in the nature of a test case, was in the form of indictments, which were dismissed.

The decision gives the major Canadian circuit as well as the other defendants a clean bill of health. Justice Garrow, in his decision, declared that the crown had failed to prove charges that operations of the defendants were in violation of the combines act, investigation act or criminal code. He held also that no price fixing or lessening of competition in supply of films had been established by the prosecution. Protection was found by the court to be inherent in the industry and not in violation of law. The standard exhibition contract and the arbitration clause were found lawful by Justice Garrow, who held that American decisions were not applicable in Canada.

In addition, the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors Association was found not to be dominated by Famous Players Canadian Corporation, as charged in the indictments; distributing companies were held not to be acting in combination.

Defenders in the action were: Famous Players Canadian Corporation, B. & F. Theatres, Theatre Holding Corporation, Premier Operating Company, N. L. Nathanson, Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, Famous Lasky Films, Regal Films, Canadian subsidiaries of Educational, Universal, Fox, RKO, Columbia, United Artists, Vitagraph, Tiffany.

Justice Garrow further declared the evidence indicated that independent exhibitors had been lenintly dealt with. He said he found no evidence of serious delays for independents in getting product, and in no case were the delays of sufficient duration to cause suffering to exhibitors to any appreciable extent. Independents are given the same protection as others and delinquents who fail to live up to their contracts are treated fairly, the court declared. The evidence given by witnesses on the stand indicated that there was no combine or conspiracy whatsoever. "That there existed any combine I am unable to find," the court concluded.

True bills had been found against the defendants in the case last November by a grand jury. The trial occupied three weeks in February with 50 witnesses having been called by the Ontario government's prosecutors. Justice Garrow probably will issue a written opinion in the near future, he intimated. The prosecuting attorneys made no motion to appeal the decision, which was rendered in a crowded and hushed courtroom. The tension was broken as the court concluded reading of the decision, as numerous friends of the accused rushed forward to congratulate the defendants, despite vigorous calls for order.

MYSTERIOUS

Activities involving the recent arrival and current presence in New York of Mary Pickford are most unusual. Arriving here from California unheralded and completely unknown to the United Artists' home office, Miss Pickford has already changed her hotel residence at least three times in a few days. Registering at first at the Essex House, she checked out after a stay of but two days for a second and unnamed hotel and from there she again moved to the Sherry Netherlands.

Calls Independent Productions Scarce

A scarcity of completed independent product for distribution is reported by E. H. Goldstein, who recently opened an office in New York for the purchase and distribution of independent product. Goldstein said he may be obliged to enter production himself in order to carry out his independent distribution plans.

"There are plenty of offers of pictures not yet made," Goldstein said. "But completion and availability of these depends on the sort of territories and deals which can be guaranteed the producer in advance. There are few pictures available at this time awaiting a distributor."

Foreign productions were cited as exceptions to this situation. Goldstein said that numbers of offers from foreign producers had been received for distribution and sale of pictures.

An important phase of Goldstein's activities, he said, would be the purchase of what he described as "orphan" short subjects for distribution in a series of variety shorts.

200 Publix Houses Close Temporarily; 1,000 Operating

Approximately 200 Publix theatres throughout the country have been closed over a period of recent months in fulfillment of an operating economy program, which calls for temporary closing of all houses whose operating loss exceeds the cost to the circuit of maintaining a darkened theatre.

No estimate of the financial benefit to the circuit of the closing policy would be made by Publix executives, who said that the policy was less a matter of saving than of economical operation, inasmuch as significant items of overhead, such as rent, were not discontinued with the closing of a house which had been running consistently at a loss. However, it was explained by Sam Dembow, if rental is $300 on a house which is losing $500, the circuit is better off with that theatre closed, as the loss thus is reduced by $200.

As a result of the policy, Publix is now operating fewer than 1,000 theatres, as compared with approximately 1,200 one year ago, according to Sam Katz, vice-president of Paramount Publix. An even fewer number will be in operation this summer, it was said.

Denial was made by Dembow that any of the closings were impelled by shortage of product or that they presaged any wholesale disposition of theatres.

"The closings are purely temporary," he said, "and all those affected by the policy will be reopened just as soon as circumstances warrant. Nor is any plan to dispose of large numbers of theatres involved. Large city theatres are not likely to be affected. Those in smaller cities, particularly where Publix operates additional houses, will not be permitted to remain open where economies can be effected by their closing. In such cases, better selection of product will be available to the houses remaining open with consequent improvement in their prospects."

The policy is understood to have the endorsement of John Hertz, chairman of the Paramount Publix finance committee.

Financial Straits Cause Tax Increase in Swiss Industry

The increased taxation levied upon the Swiss film industry is the result of financial difficulties encountered by the government and municipalities, according to George R. Canty, trade commissioner of the United States department of commerce at Paris.

Exhibitors, in order to meet the increased burden, plan either the cutting of staffs, the presentation of inferior and cheaper films, or a rise in admission prices.

RKO Reports a Net Loss But Gains in Theatre Operation

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and subsidiaries report a net loss of $5,660,770 for 1931. This compares with a net profit of $3,385,628, or $1.40 a share on the company's old Class A stock, in 1930, and net profit of $1,669,564, equivalent to 92 cents per share, in 1929.

RKO showed a theatre operating profit for the year ended December 31, 1931, of $5,966,107.82, as compared with a profit of $5,642,207.31 for the preceding year. Net loss on production operations during 1931 amounted to $3,716,865.75, as compared with net profit of $3,241,219.86 the preceding year. The two years, however, are not entirely comparable for in January, 1931, RKO acquired Pathe which is charged with an additional operating loss of $1,500,000 for the year.

Gross revenue of the company showed a gain, totaling $79,232,392 for 1931 against $71,357,831 the preceding year. Expenses increased from $62,474,604 in 1930 to $76,993,140 in 1931. The principal items of expense were $29,394,016 paid in salaries to actors and employees, and $28,102,270.12 for combined costs of film selling and service expenses.

Current and working assets of $26,878,694.03 and liabilities of $9,527,875.82 are shown in the consolidated balance sheet for 1931 as compared with $15,200,615 and $5,702,481 respectively in 1930.

In a letter to stockholders accompanying the corporation's financial report Hiram S. Brown, president of RKO, calls attention to "numerous economies which have been and are being effected throughout the different departments of the corporation and its subsidiaries. The operation of RKO Radio and Pathe Pictures," he says, "has been combined with very substantial savings in costs of operation. A general reduction in all salaries of officers and employees of the corporation has been made, and as a result of these and other economies the operating expenses have been substantially reduced.

"As stated in the letter mailed to stockholders on February 23 last," Brown continues, "a proposal will be placed before the extraordinary meeting of stockholders on March 23 next to reduce the capital of the corporation by reducing the capital represented by each share of common stock now outstanding from $19.94 to $10. It is proposed to set up a reserve equal to the capital surplus so to be created, and to charge against such reserve such amounts as the board of directors may determine in connection with a revision of book values of properties of the corporation and its subsidiaries."

Keith-Albee-Orpheum and subsidiaries report a profit of $1,620.33 for the year ended December 31, compared with a net profit of $452,381 in 1930, and a loss of $527,397 in 1929. Orpheum Circuit reports a net loss for the year ended December 31, of $798,621.50, compared with a net profit of $402,479 in 1930, and $142,830 in 1929. B. F. Keith Corporation and subsidiaries report net profit for the year ended December, 1931, of $545,777.96, as compared with net profit of $656,372 in 1930.

Changes Made in RKO and Columbia Executive Forces

Columbia, RKO and the organization headed by Amedee J. Van Beuren, this week continued to build up new manpower. Jerome Safron resigned as Radio's eastern sales manager to join Columbia Pictures in an executive capacity for the promotion of sales. Rube Jackter remains as assistant sales manager of Columbia and both will work under Charles Rosenzweig, who recently joined that organization, in charge of sales, and likewise coming from RKO. Safron worked with Rosenzweig in the Radio distribution division. His successor at RKO has not been announced.

Phil Reisman, formerly sales director at Universal, left for Florida this week for a vacation without making any announcement as to his future. His name had previously been linked with RKO.

Fred J. McConnell resigned as short subject sales manager of Columbia to join the Van Beuren Company in an executive capacity. RKO distributes Van Beuren shorts.

William Holman resigned from Metropolitan Studios in Hollywood, to become business manager of the Columbia studios on the Coast.

In the meantime no decision has been made by Sidney R. Kent with regard to his future. One of Kent's spokesmen, at his office in Wall Street, said that the "situation with regard to Mr. Kent is unchanged." He has left on a trip, the nature and destination of which Kent's office refused to divulge.

Home office executives and members of the sales force representing the New York branch and eight Eastern exchanges will be present at a regional meeting to be held by Columbia at the Park Central Hotel, New York, starting Saturday, March 12. This is the first of two regional meetings at which Charles Rosenzweig will officially meet his force and discuss matters pertaining to sales.

Jack Cohn, vice president of the company, will open both meetings, which will feature addresses by Cohn and Rosenzweig. Exchanges to be represented at the Eastern meeting are: New York, Buffalo, Boston, New Haven, Albany, Washington, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Hays' Office Conducting National Poll; Hays Says Industry Is Stepping Up Standards to Needs of All Elements

The industry has begun a nation-wide survey to determine the entertainment preferences of the individual classes which make up the mass audience for motion picture entertainment in the United States. This was revealed this week, with the distribution of voting forms addressed to leaders in all strata of American life. A virtually new entertainment era has been inaugurated by the industry, it was pointed out, by the production within recent months of pictures that have stepped up the entertainment appeal of the screen to cover the widest possible cross-section of entertainment requirements. The survey, which takes the form of a "Motion Picture National Preference Poll," is being conducted by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will H. Hays is president. Every city and town in the United States will be covered by the vote, it is said. The survey is designed:

1. To widen the scope of the screen in its service of universal entertainment, by determining the entertainment preferences of the specific classes that make up the vast popular audience for motion pictures;
2. To increase the flow and variety of dramatic material for the screen by indicating to writers, authors and dramatists, the dramatic themes preferred by the American public;
3. To answer moot questions as to distinctions of entertainment appeal as between various classes of the population.

The movement was crystallized in a statement made by Mr. Hays in Hollywood, in which he pointed out that pictures of a dramatic and intellectual caliber that would not have been successful in popular entertainment a few years ago, now are not only being received with enthusiastic approval by the regular motion picture audiences, but are tapping new strata of attendance for theatres throughout the world.

Stepping Up Standards

"Instead of leveling entertainment to a fixed common denominator," Hays declared, "the industry is stepping up its entertainment standards to meet the needs of every element of the potential motion picture audience." This was evident, it was pointed out, from the reception given to pictures based on Theatre Guild plays, works of exceptional literary merit and the offerings of leading dramatists whose works hitherto had been confined to the selective audiences of the legitimate stage.

The national "poll" to determine the specific entertainment preferences of every class of the population is addressed to representative leaders in every walk of American life, including educators, bankers, social leaders, ministers, sportsmen, scientists, welfare workers, novelists, poets, dramatists, business men, housewives, editors, teachers and others.

The poll lists 34 specific classifications of entertainment now being given by the screen and includes: (1) Comedy: animated cartoon, domestic, farce, musical, satirical and slapstick. (2) Drama: classical, crime exposure, melodrama, political intrigue, romance, social and sex problems, society, spiritual struggle and tragedy. (3) Adventure: air, exploration, sea, war, westerns, and wild life. (4) Mystery: detective, intrigue, and weird. (5) Current Social Problems: civic corruption, marriage and home, organized crime, social reform, and war and peace. (6) Historical-Inspirational: biographical, exploration, patriotic, religious and scenic. The ballot sheet further requests the listing of such additional themes as might be added to the entertainment service now being rendered through motion pictures.

Many Other Questions

Among the questions expected to be answered by the national poll are: What differences, if any, exist in the entertainment preferences of Broadway and Main Street?; whether realism or romance is preferred on the screen; the extent to which themes treating various phases of current life are preferred in picture entertainment; the extent to which the production of classic drama on the screen might receive popular support; the differences, if any, between the picture entertainment requirements of the debutante and the shop girl—"or whether the Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady are sisters under the skin, in their choice of films."

Questionnaires will accompany the voting forms to determine other questions of special interest to the industry, such as: Who dictates the choice of entertainment fare for the family—husband or wife?; the type of pictures that parents prefer as entertainment for their children; other questions of importance to the production heads of the industry.

Results of the poll are not expected to be complete for some time, due to the large number of people participating in the poll and the necessary detailed tabulation of preferences.

Roland Making Two Jewish Talkers for Empire Productions

"Joseph and His Brethren," based on the biblical episode, done as a Jewish talkie, is now in the course of production at an eastern studio, under supervision and direction of George Roland. It is being done as a Jewish talker, and prominent among the cast will be Ben Adler, the Jewish actor.

Immediately upon completion, "The Jewish King Lear," which is now under preparation, will into production. Empire State Pictures, New York, will distribute.

Will Keep Plant Open for Summer, Says Jack Warner

The Warner-First National Coast plant will not close during the coming summer, it was declared by Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, at present in New York for production conferences. He also indicated that production will be maintained at a rapid pace and that from four to six pictures will be simultaneously in work at all times.

"The demand of the public and of exhibitors for more and better features, as well as the requirements of our production schedules for this season and the season to come, are the reasons for our decision to maintain continuous production," said Warner. "There will be no lay-offs, no letting up in the activities of our plant, where five pictures are now under way and six more are preparing to start in April. The five in production are 'A Successful Calamity,' with George Arliss; 'Winner Take All,' with James Cagney; 'Miss Pinkerton,' from the Mary Roberts Rinehart novel, with Joan Blondell; 'The Tenderfoot,' with Joe E. Brown, and 'Two Seconds,' with Edward G. Robinson.

"In April we will be producing 'Street of Women' with Kay Francis; 'Love Is a Racket,' with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; 'Week End Marriage,' with Loretta Young and David Manners; 'The Dark Horse,' with Warren William; 'The Jewel Robbery,' with William Powell; and 'Central Park,' with an all-star cast. Six more pictures will start in May. There will be absolutely no break, so far as our activities at the studio go, between our production for the present season and that for the season of 1932-33.

"Good pictures will make money. That has been demonstrated during even the hardest of hard times," Warner concluded.

Educational Has Shanghai Special

Intimate shots of the battle at Shanghai, which were made under a special permit by Claude Britton, have been acquired for release by Educational, which will rush through immediately a three-reel subject on the conflict.

Britton had been a producer at Shanghai until the battle interrupted and he immediately commenced shooting first-hand episodes in the battle, working under guard of British soldiers until officially stopped a few weeks ago.

Britton and H. V. Kaltenborn, of the Brooklyn Eagle, now are editing and the latter will describe the fray in dubbed dialogue.

SWEEPING POLITICAL QUIZ FACED BY INDUSTRY IN NEW SOUTH WALES

Fox Movietone News Center Established in Australia; British Pictures Increase Competition With the American

By HARRY LAWRENSON
Fox Movietonews

I have just returned from Sydney, Australia, where I spent the better part of the past 12 months opening-up the latest of the international Fox Movietone News centers. As it was my privilege to participate in the creation of several of our European capital centers, this latter experience has given me a particularly complete picture of the American newsreel industry seen, as it were, through foreign eyes. And it's an eye-filling picture!

While silent newsreels had been produced in the Antipodes by Australians and, more lately, imported sound reels had established a firm place for themselves in Australian theatres, there had not been up to the time of my arrival any such thing as an Australian-produced sound newsreel depicting Australian events and personages. Proof of the fact that the Australian moviegoer is as progressive and as human as film-goers of any other nationality was the immediate popularity and success of Fox Australian Movietone News. Movietone newsreels which up to that time had been imported ready-made from the U. S. were already the feature item of many programs.

To distinguish the all-Australian reel from the reels which we began to assemble and edit on the spot devoted to "foreign" subject matter and already known, a new main-title leader was evolved.

To those who have never traveled into the southern hemisphere a sojourn in Australia and New Zealand proves at once interesting and vastly enlightening and if motion pictures be your business you will quickly discover that the men and women of the "trade" down under are as wide-awake and progressive as any you are likely to meet anywhere. Modern, palatial theatres of the "Roxy" type are the rule in Sydney, Melbourne and all the large cities and the entertainment provided in them for the Australian picture-goer is fully up to the standard of any large American city. The Australian, perhaps because of the very isolation of his vast country, is by instinct a pioneer and by nature an individualist. While his heritage, loyalty and tradition are essentially British, he is inherently free-minded and wants the best no matter where it comes from. If one clearly understands this surprise is lessened at the apparent Americanization of such cities as Sydney where American motion pictures predominate.

As elsewhere, American motion pictures have almost monopolized Australian screens during the past decade, but there are definite indications today that American pictures will from now on have to compete for this pride of place with products from British studios and even from Australia itself.

Harry Lawrenson, a newsreel veteran, is of the staff of Truman Talley, general manager of Movietonews, Inc. He has just returned from Australia to New York, having been assigned to the Antipodes from Paris, and previous to that assignment he had been foreign editor for Fox Movietonews in New York.

British pictures are becoming more and more frequent on Australian screens and some of these shown recently have been fully up to the Hollywood standard. And just recently two Australian concerns have launched their own Australian feature films produced and acted by Australians.

For Fox Australian News, Australians have been recruited to produce the reel. Editors, cameramen, soundmen, cutters and others were engaged on the spot and trained along American lines with due regard to the exigences and characteristics of an Australian enterprise.

With this fifth international production and distribution center now in active operation, the Fox Movietone News world wide network becomes even more complete and yet another source of supply of news and feature pictures becomes available to the general system. With New York, London, Paris, Rome, Berlin and Sydney continually producing subject matter, and with the interchange system by means of which each center regularly receives news pictures from each of the other five centers, and each center likewise regularly sending its own news material to the other five, it can be seen that the phrase "world coverage" means just that and nothing less. This foreign organization of news-reels can be compared today to the worldwide press associations that supply international news to our newspapers for it is every bit as complete and highly organized as are these associations.

Select Committee of Parliament Would Study Contracts, Censorship, Quota and Distributors' Assn.; Follows Lobbying

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

A political inquiry into the operations of the motion picture industry of New South Wales is imminent with special attention to film hiring agreements, matters affecting film distribution and the activities of the Motion Picture Distributors' Association. Prior to the adjournment of the NSW Parliament, notice was given that a motion would be introduced for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the affairs of the film business there, and immediately the House resumes, it is regarded as certain that the motion will be carried.

In giving notice of this intention it was stated that the proposed committee would endeavor to devise ways and means of assisting the Australian producers of films on the one hand, and the exhibitor of foreign-produced films on the other. "The recent Act," the statement continued, "which extended the period of payment on the rent of talking picture equipment has been of great value to many exhibitors, but other sections of the industry, particularly, it is considered, the film exchanges, are taking far too great a proportion of the gross takings. A remedy must be found if exhibitors are to continue at a profit."

Points of the inquiry will be:

All film hire agreements, and all matters affecting film distribution.

Film censorship.

The desirability of establishment of a quota for Australian-made films.

The operations of the Motion Picture Distributors Association.

Although categorically denied, the proposed select committee is undoubtedly an outcome of persistent agitation by exhibitor interests. It is known that for some time somebody has been lobbying hard for an official inquiry into contracts, with the idea of creating one standard contract, with a liberal rejection clause; and out of that lobbying has arisen this plan for a wholesale inquiry, it is believed.

It is said also that the personnel of the committee, as already proposed, is impressed by sundry exhibitors' declarations that the MPDA is a monopoly directly opposed to the Australian theatre owner's interests, and also by allegations that it is an association setting itself up as a union with control over its members, or with no control over its members, purely to satisfy its own ends. Interesting facts are likely to be unearthed during this inquiry into the MPDA —if it ever comes about—but they may not all be to the detriment of that organization.

After going into the censorship problem, it is thought likely that the committee will advocate the investment of power in one supreme body, rather than in autonomies scattered in all parts of the country as is the case at present.

Organized Public Rapidly Becoming Best Box Office Help, Says Rita McGoldrick; Cites Publicity

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Your organized public is rapidly becoming your best box office help. It is not so many years ago that the women's organizations, with feeble notions about improving motion pictures, were a good deal of nuisance to the industry. In finding their way there were blunders, tactical errors, bad misunderstandings, and frequently more harm than good was accomplished. But gradually, and with growing assurance, these groups have become vocal. Today we may look over the field with something of astonishment. The little clubs with an idea have blossomed into city councils, state better films committees, and national and international organizations that have gathered up countless ramifications of power.

Perhaps the most significant reaction for the theatre man is the free publicity that these groups have been able to achieve through their own official and church organs, through the thousands of endorsed lists which they print and distributc, and, more important than either of these, through the columns of the lay press.

It is not so very long ago that newspapers refused pointblank to give notice to any picture that had not come in through the channels of the paid advertising department. But that attitude is changed. Now, through club activities, we find columns of space given to better pictures as well as to the meetings and club expression of the groups interested in promoting a cleaner and finer screen. This form of service has grown until two hundred or more papers are now publishing such lists. One international organization, distributing radio broadcasts and lists of selected pictures, has more than 165 publications reprinting its service. Many of these publications are in foreign countries. The following are some of the more important of the papers in this country which are actively cooperating with the women's organizations:

This friendly attitude on the part of the newspapers is reflected in a more constructive editorial viewpoint and in the helpful comments made on the whole entertainment field. During the past week we have clipped from hundreds of newspapers items that are actually heart-warming. These point to an increased local interest in motion pictures, to a more tolerant understanding of the problems that confront the producer and the exhibitor, and, unfailingly, to a better box office.

Pottsville, Pa., Morning Paper

"We think 'Hell Divers' is the kind of picture that a real red-blooded American wants to see and enjoys seeing because it makes him proud of his country, proud of his fellow countrymen. The kind of a film that some of the communistically minded folks ought to see—those who believe in 'peace at any price'—folks who prefer to entertain peace-petitioning caravans instead of Citizens Military Training Camps for boys."

Rochester, N. Y., Times Union

Amy H. Croughton of the Gannett newspaper chain, writing in this paper under date of Feb. 19, 1932, says: "I am impressed with the 'family night' objective of public group cooperation, especially the work in Rochester. No one, of course, would suggest that theatres show nothing but pictures standardized to the child's needs and capacity. After all, the parents have some duty in the matter of making sure that the child is kept from seeing pictures too old for it. There are other pictures worth seeing by older patrons and some of these, also, may benefit by organized support from other groups."

Thirty Million Club Women

The Motion Picture Commentator, in the same paper, thinks "thirty million club women may be right, and, again, in the estimation of some motion picture exhibitors, may be all wrong, but when they go into concerted action they cannot help but make themselves felt!"

Canton, O., Repository & News

Dennis R. Smith, writing in this publication, which is one of the Brush-Moore chain of Ohio newspapers, says: "There is plenty of evidence to the effect that the picture-going public likes action, romance, comedy and beauty. The business will be better off when it makes some more pictures like 'Cimarron,' 'Sunny Side Up,' 'Skippy,' 'Bad Girl' and 'Emma.'

"Occasionally there is a picture like 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet' so expertly handled that the evil in it becomes merely the tool for great drama.

"There is evidence of improvement in the future. Norma Shearer, whose recent films have been built on dangerous material, turns for her next to the spiritually emotional 'Smilin' Through,' George Arliss has an uplift in 'The Man Who Played God,' Mary Pickford goes back to sentimental romance in 'Happy Ending,' the deep religious trend of 'The Miracle Man' will be seen again and western stories are once more in favor."

Thousands of Endorsed Lists Printed and Distributed by Groups' Official Organs, by Churches and Lay Press

The Journal, Flushing, N. Y.

The young people of St. John's Protestant Episcopal church, Flushing, in a debate decided that "movies do not affect adversely the morals of the people of today."

The Forbes Newspaper

This publication serving Yonkers, Ossining, Port Chester, New Rochelle and White Plains, has editorially approved the public groups' cooperation plan of Westchester County as the solution of improving picture programs rather than censorship. The organization of a Better Film Council covering all of the organizations of the towns in that county, was addressed at their first meeting by the editor of "Your Public," who outlined the practical plan for their procedure.

Yonkers, N. Y.

Considerable criticism of pictures has passed here, but the PTA sees value in cooperation with theatre managers on family night performances. The Yonkers newspaper editorially commends this kind of cooperation.

Post Star, Glens Falls, N. Y.

This paper records that "the first list of endorsed and previewed pictures of the Better Films Committee, which recently was organized, was announced yesterday after the initial meeting of the group yesterday morning. The committee is composed of members of various women's organizations of the city as follows—Women's Civic Club; Parent-Teachers' Association; Catholic Daughters; D. A. R." With it is published the first list of pictures.

Clinton, Mass., Item

An editorial item in this paper says: "Seven towns are interested in organizing better films councils sponsored by the General Federation of Women's Clubs and directed by Mrs. Percy B. Hitchcock of West Boylston."

The Review, Freeport, N. Y.

"At a meeting of the Better Films committee of Rockville Centre, at the office of the mayor, it was found that both village theatres had attained a high standard in their presentation of family entertainment.

New York Sun

John S. Cohen, Jr., of the New York Sun in his comment of Jan. 25, 1932, says of the picture "The Man I Killed": "It particularly deserves support from women's clubs. It is so very fine, so very touching and hauntingly powerful that it, well—it represents the one really beautiful and courageous adventure of the talkies."

YOUR PUBLIC—By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Dispatch, Dallas, Texas

An editorial was devoted to praising the picture "Emma" as one of the best 10 for 1932. It says: "In the interest of encouraging the making of better films, we like to recommend pictures like this in this manner."

Free Press, Detroit, Mich.

"A move to have risque short subjects removed from the film programs has been launched by the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Claiming a roster of 30,000,000 members the organization has instructed its committees to work with the theatre owners in suggesting the removal of films in poor taste and to render suggestions which also may benefit him at the box office. In its instruction the Federation bemoans the tendency of exhibitors to ruin a worthwhile picture by following it with poor short subjects."

New York Times

In the issue of February 15, 1932, the New York Times, commenting on an item from White Plains about the formation of the county Federation of Better Films groups in Westchester County as a highly constructive and forward-looking movement, won the following editorial of appreciation by the White Plains Daily Press, on Feb. 16, 1932, under the editorial title, "Censorship vs. Cooperation":

"What the country needs is some form of cooperation between the motion picture theatre proprietors on one side and the parents and teachers on the other. Let there be some form of advance showing at which competent, clean-minded critics can study the theme and announce whether the picture in question is fit for childish eyes and adolescent imagination. There should be cooperation if fair play is to be assured the theatres as well as the children."

Evening Record, Hackensack, N. J.

"Cooperation by the officials of the Fox Hackensack Theatre and the Woman's Club, Parent-Teacher Association, and the schools through Supervising Principal William A. Smith has resulted in commendable programs of motion picture entertainment for the children of the city. Each Saturday morning finds fifteen hundred youngsters at the movies, where special films are shown for their amusement and education.

Evening News, Danbury, Conn.

Under the heading "Films For Children," this paper says: "Parents and wise adults can do much to help youngsters find the kind of moving pictures best suited to immature minds." This article is inspired by a report of this kind of cooperation in the Christian Science Monitor.

Herald-Tribune, New York

"Fine pictures are beginning to find a market. Organized audiences in the form of clubs are helping create this market. Women's clubs, little theatre groups, educational organizations, art societies and other organizations, with the same finger that ruled off gangster pictures, now have pointed rather proudly at certain pictures, proving that they can praise as well as damn. . . ."

News, Tonawanda, N. Y.

In an editorial discussing how the New York Parents Association is solving the problem of children's movies, The News says:

"Something of the sort is taking place in other communities here and there. Movie critics in their newspaper reviews take pains to mention that a certain picture is suited to the tastes of adults only, while another will delight the youngsters, or the whole family. Some managers have tried Saturday morning programs of pictures particularly amusing to children.

Montclair (N. J.) Times

The president of the Better Films Council of Montclair, in an open letter addressed to the editor of the Montclair Times, Jan. 22, 1932, said:

"One cannot help but be convinced of the sincerity of the local exhibitors to present, insofar as possible, pictures that have a high rating as good entertainment. . . . It does not seem unreasonable, therefore, on the part of the exhibitors to expect whole-hearted support of their efforts, especially from those individuals and organizations who have, time and again, clamored for something different and better in film entertainment."

This letter is of particular significance because of the local difficulties on the motion picture situation which existed in Montclair last spring.

The Parent's Magazine

The Parent's Magazine has been somewhat critical of motion pictures through its release to newspapers of surveys of pictures showing the unfitness of them for children and also in the publication of the Eastman articles. In its January, 1932, issue, however, there appears an article from a Hinsdale, Ill., chairman of a Better Films Committee on "How Our Town Got Better Movies." It relates to how the local women's club and the manager of the theatre cooperated in Saturday matinees and intensive publicity programs were carried out by the women's club in the local newspapers, and some surrounding newspapers gave space to the efforts. Attractive posters were placed in front of the theatre at various advantageous places throughout the town telling of the experiment.

Kansas City Star

The Apollo theatre, under the management of H. E. Jameyson of the Fox Midwest-Midland organization of Kansas City, is experimenting with foreign and domestic films of a "highbrow" nature, and the Kansas City Star of February 2, 1932, prints comments on the experiment from Clarence Darrow, who thinks "there is a growing section of the public that would like to see the movies do something in the line of education;" William Allen White, who thinks "there are hundreds who avoid movies because they have no guide to tell them when and where they can get the intelligent show their intelligence demands;" Burris Jenkins, Minister of Kansas City, and Joseph Myers, who approve the idea; L. M. Birkhead, who says he is "afraid of the socalled intelligent public" because he doesn't believe the public will support the very things that it should support.

Growth of Motion Picture Councils

The following newspapers have carried the important news of spreading Motion Picture Councils organizations:

The Advertiser, Elmira, N. Y., February 8, 1932. "Organization of a Motion Picture Community Council here was announced Saturday night."

The Repository, Canton, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1932, quotes a fan writing to the paper as follows: "I see some cities are forming Better Motion Picture councils. That is exactly what we need. We want more refinement in our pictures——Let's boost the Better Motion Picture Council. There should be one in every city. . ."

Pomona, Cal.

Motion Picture Council of the American Association of University Women to operate in Pomona Valley towns to "encourage attendance at the better motion pictures."

New Orleans, La.

Louisiana Co-Operative Educational Association, Inc., will cooperate with neighborhood theatres arranging picture programs.

Durant, Okla.

Better Films committees organized to help bring better films to motion picture houses and to persuade the public to patronize them.

Buffalo, N. Y.

PTA at a meeting discussed cooperation with exhibitors in arranging programs and read a letter from Will H. Hays about pictures with special appeal to children.

Herald, Miami, Fla.

This paper announces with pride that all of the theatres in Dade County are included in the weekly reviews of the motion picture committee of the Dade County Council of Parents and Teachers.

The Important Total

These excerpts have been taken from an actual avalanche of press material. There were, of course, many articles denouncing motion pictures and bemoaning the futility of club activity. But the fact remains that by actual count, forty-nine papers have applauded group cooperation with the industry to the one paper that has disagreed. It is an astonishing percentage. The press of the past two months has registered without knowing that it has done so an overwhelming vote of confidence in the future of motion pictures. It has pledged its support and its columns to that end. All of this augurs well for the future of the motion picture business.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from major cities of the country for the calendar week ended March 5, showed a decrease of $94,853 from the previous calendar week, ended February 27. During the more recent seven-day period a gross of $2,311,405 was recorded from 181 theatres in 30 cities, which compares with a total of $2,406,258, from 179 theatres, during the preceding week. Two new high individual figures were noted for the later calendar week, at the RKO Albee in Providence, playing "Lost Squadron," and at the Imperial in Toronto with "Shanghai Express," while during the earlier week three new "highs" and six new low individual figures were recorded.

AND THEY'RE NOT WAIT

HOW THEY JAMMED ... MOBBED AND CLAMORED TO GET INTO THE OPENING!

More eloquent than all the words in the world is this ACTUAL PHOTO taken in front of the RIVOLI THEATRE, N. Y., seventy minutes before the doors opened. Never was a picture awaited so eagerly! Never was a production greeted so enthusiastically. Truly,

HESS ASKS DAMAGE CLAUSE BE RETAINED

Stipulation in Copyright Law Necessary as Deterrent to Dishonest Exhibitor, Hays Counsel Says After Hearing

The honest exhibitor has nothing to fear from the damage clause in the copyright law, said Gabriel L. Hess, Hays office attorney, on his return to New York from Washington last week, where he appeared at the House patents committee hearings on proposed copyright legislation.

Only the dishonest exhibitor "seemed to have any cause for complaint" against the damage clause, Hess indicated. He told the House committee the damage clause is designed to protect the copyright owner and the competitive honest exhibitor who is damaged by the unfair competition of the dishonest exhibitor. He indicated surprise that leaders of Allied States Association should appear before the committee "to condone in any way" the activities of dishonest exhibitors in the country.

Hess asked the members of the committee to retain in the copyright law "a deterrent element which would protect the extremely valuable copyrights of the producers and distributors." He declared that the distributors were not concerned with the exhibitor who occasionally held over a picture by reason of neglect on the part of the exchange or due to some unforeseen circumstance over which no control could be legitimately exercised. The Copyright Protection Bureau in the course of its investigations interested itself only in those exhibitors who maintained a sustained policy of copyright violation, be indicated.

Chairman Sirovich of the patents committee asked the exhibitor organization representatives present if it was their intention to condone the practice of the consistent violator, to which they replied that it was not, that they were interested solely in the innocent infringer. Hess said that the innocent exhibitor has nothing to fear, and in fact everything to gain from a deterrent to dishonest exhibitors.

Schulker Handles Allied Film Group

Ned H. Schulker, new associate producer for Allied Productions, has been appointed by M. H. Hoffman, Jr., vice-president and general manager, to supervise all of the company's "custom made" features. The brand name has been adopted after suggestions were received from numerous exhibitors over the country, it is said. The group is added to the "classics," Hoot Gibsons, Monte Blues.

Chester M. Franklin has been signed as a director on a long-term contract. He will temporarily handle the Monte Blue production unit, at work on the Coast.

The company will offer for 1932-33, 28 features, including eight of the Hoot Gibson series, eight featuring Monte Blue and 10 of the "classics." Two special roadshow features will be made, the first to be titled "Without Children." Allied's year book is already in the hands of exhibitors. In a preface, Hoffman points out that 1932-33 offers a better opportunity to independents than at any time heretofore. He says "the big day for the independent theatre, exchange and producer is here . . . perhaps because of the economical lesson which has been taught the industry . . . perhaps because it is the natural time for the pendulum to swing again in the direction of unit effort. . . . "

Exhibitors Warned Against Price Cut

Theatre owners who are members of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware are in receipt of the following communication from headquarters at Philadelphia:

"Before cutting admission prices ask yourself these three questions:

"1. Do you know of a single theatre that has increased its gross receipts by slashing admission prices?

"2. If movie goers are not patronizing the theatres because admission prices are too high, why are not the fine neighborhood houses with their lower admissions crowded?

"3. Why when you show an outstanding picture do you crowd your theatre regardless of the admission you charge?

"The Answer: Business is poor because pictures are poor and not because admission prices are high. Don't Cut Admission Prices."

Portland Groups to Petition Congress For Film Regulation

Five hundred men and women of Portland, Oregon, have volunteered to circulate petitions asking the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States for federal supervision of motion pictures. Cooperating are business, professional men and women of the city, church groups, parent-teacher associations, W. C. T. U. and the Federation of Women's organizations. The drive is under the direction of Hon. Chester A. Lyon, chairman of "The Committee of Two Hundred," an organization recently formed for study and action in the problem of motion picture standards.

During 1931 this same committee endeavored to regulate billboards, without success.

Louis Bartels, Actor, Dead

Louis John Bartels, 37, actor on the stage and in smaller parts in motion pictures, died last week at his home in Hollywood. He is survived by his father, Charles Bartels, and his wife, a stage actress appearing under her maiden name, Martha Wood.

Schlesinger May Do 6 Five-Reel Films

Leon Schlesinger, producer of "Looney Tunes" and "Merrie Melodies," may expand new season production plans to include six feature melodramas of a minimum length of five reels, he announced while in New York this week on a visit from the Coast. A shortage of product during the new season, he believes, will afford ample bookings for independent productions of the type contemplated.

Schlesinger's contract with Warner Bros. for the distribution of 13 "Looney Tunes" and 13 "Merrie Melodies" for next season was renewed while the producer was in New York.

"Much of the popularity of cartoons," Schlesinger said, "is attributable to the fact that a place for one can be found on any program. In a cartoon, so many liberties in production are permissible that the finished picture has some entertainment for every type of audience and is at the same time acceptable on almost any type of program. Ordinarily exhibitors have to be convinced that a new or different variety of short subject is good program material, but all cartoons sell themselves. Even double feature programs have cut into cartoon bookings less appreciably than to almost any other type of short subject."

While in New York, Schlesinger signed up new story and idea men to work with Hugh Harmon and Rudolph Ising, creators of the cartoons.

World Wide Holds Western Conference of Managers

Budd Rogers, feature sales manager of Sono Art-World Wide, held a two-day session in Cleveland this week which was attended by managers of the branches in Cincinnati, Louisville, Pittsburgh and Detroit.

Branch managers attending the meeting were: L. J. Klar, Cincinnati; A. H. Kaufman, Louisville; Joe Kalieki, Pittsburgh; and M. H. Starr, Detroit. Leaving Cleveland Wednesday, Rogers continued on his month's tour of exchanges in the Middlewest and Southwest.

Former Circuit Advertising Men Form Milwaukee Agency

L. A. Gneier and Eugene Schroeder, formerly associated with theatrical interests in Milwaukee, have formed the AAA American Advertising Agency, with headquarters in Milwaukee.

Gneier was formerly with Fox Midwesco in Milwaukee as Wisconsin advertising director. Schroeder was formerly connected with the advertising art departments of Fox Midwesco and the Warner theatres in Wisconsin.

CANADA FROWNS ON BALLYHOO BUT MILITARY PARADES STAY ON

Galloping Cowboys No Longer Dash to Rodeo — Fronted House Showing Western; Screen and Print Do Work

By comparison, Canada is notoriously conservative, even reserved, in business exploitation. Noisy outdoor ballyhoo has been frowned upon, with exceptions. In the theatre field, spectacular exploitation often has had the negative effect of raising the question, "What's wrong with the picture?" Undoubtedly, subtle methods on the part of the theatre manager and the reputation of a theatre for its type or choice of attractions have proved effective. This is particularly the fact since the screens became talkative and since the development of economic stringency.

Theatres in Canada have not been doing badly, as a whole. Hence, a word or two regarding current methods or special advertising practices will be pertinent.

No More Galloping Cowboys

Not for years have galloping cowboys dashed down "Main Street" to a theatre with a rodeo front to draw attention to a Western. Not in many moons has the fire brigade paraded to the picture theatre to boost a "Save the Baby" feature. There are occasions yet when outdoor exploitation is conducted in Canada but it is dignified, and ballyhoo, in its original sense, has apparently gone the way of all flesh.

The average Canadian exhibitor is doing something else and, invariably, at less expense.

Not counting dishware nights, gift nights and autographed photographs for all the women, the screen itself and the printed word are being utilized largely to promote attendance. Many exhibitors are finding that the revival of popular films, particularly musical pictures, coupled with a new picture, is definitely worth while. Many a feature has been taken off the shelf, dusted and rolled into use again during recent months at modest rentals, thus adding tardy revenue for both theatres and exchanges. These are definitely announced as "revivals" and there is no camouflage.

Previews After Regular Show

Another practice is the preview presentation of the next feature, which takes place immediately following the last performance of the closing picture, patrons being invited to remain for the socalled midnight show without extra or further charge. This has built up increased patronage on the last night and has brought revenue particularly when a run shows signs of fading. It is straight advertising, too, because the audience will go out next day and talk. In connection with midnight shows, there has been a development along the line of a "Revival Night" when a picture one or two years old is given one presentation after a regular midweek performance.

There has been a real trend toward bargain admission prices up to designated hours. These include the bargain matinee up to 1 p.m. while lately there has been the adoption of bargain prices up to 7:15 or 7:30 p.m. to insure early crowds and an opportunity to re-fill the theatre around 9 p.m. This is being done in the large centers to transfer some of the patronage from the afternoon to the early evening because matinees have been particularly popular for some time.

Newspaper Contests Used

The newspaper puzzle contest is still in vogue. Newspaper readers are invited to find the missing letters or words, supply slogans or proverbs, write titles for cartoons or whatnot. The newspapers like these contests because they can build up a series of special advertising pages or couple them with their classified sections for mutual benefit.

Some theatres offer added vaudeville or stage features on certain weak nights. There are radio broadcasts of recitals from otherwise silent theatre organs during morning or late evening hours. Some managers put on community nights under the auspices of societies or women's organizations in which the latter gain a split on the special tickets or otherwise. Service clubs stage benefit concerts at 11 p.m. but these are largely a matter of goodwill and cooperation for the theatre manager because he does not figure in the count.

Military Parades Survive

One of the last remaining traces of so-called ballyhoo among Canadian theatres is the parade of a regiment or other military unit to a theatre, with bugles and bands, for a presentation of an appropriate picture. The film delivery by airplane because train connections were missed, and the like, is also still good for a line in the newspapers. In this case it is more often necessity than planned exploitation, but the manager capitalizes the incident. Quite a number of exhibitors are personally interested in sports and for this and advertising reasons the theatre donates a trophy for annual or league competition.

One hears of the contest for a radio or the like. A novelty is placed on display in the theatre lobby or there is an exhibit of a new motorcar or merchandise in the theatre entrance in cooperation with some local dealer or manufacturer. But the old false fronts have disappeared, along with mystery programs and take-a-chance weeks.

Canadian Exploitation

Here are a few of the recent special features in various cities:

MONTREAL—Capitol: Trip to Hollywood; Loew's: three extra vaudeville acts every Friday night; Imperial: Dresserware Night; Palace: Occasional lobby novelties; Loew's: Ballroom dance contest; Bargain matinees at first-run theatres up to 1 p.m.

TORONTO—Imperial: Hidden word contest each day in classified section of the Toronto Star; Loew's: Autographed photographs to women patrons; Uptown: Organ recitals over the radio; Shea's: Stage show on the radio at intervals; Bargain matinees at large theatres and bargain admission prices to 7:30 p.m. at numerous houses; Community nights at various suburban theatres.

OTTAWA—Regent: Film revival night, Thursdays at 11 p.m.; Avalon: Added revival musical features three days each week; Centre: Previews Thursday or Friday night; Capitol: Delivery of print by airplane; Rideau: Film revivals as added attractions occasionally; Imperial: Dresserware Night each week; Rexy: Dinnerware Nights twice each week; Columbia: Silverware Nights twice each week.

These constitute a sample of added inducements for patronage and the managers appear to be quite satisfied with box office results.

Moreover, particular attention is devoted to service and to the comfort of patrons rather than to more or less costly and elaborate fronts and street displays which may be regarded as cheapening the theatre from the Canadian viewpoint.

Spectacular Exploiting Raises Suspicion as to Merit of Picture; Subtle Methods, Bargains, Revivals Most Effective

Hamrick Hits Unfairness to Industry of Sales Taxation

A general sales tax, disregarding profits and assessed upon volume, would be extremely unjust to some lines of business, in the opinion of John Hamrick, operator of the Blue Mouse and Music Box theatres in Seattle. He said in explanation, "It is a well known fact that the theatre business would be one of the first hit by such a measure."

Referring to general sales taxation in the past, Hamrick said, "Some lines of business escaped the burden of the measure while others paid more than their share. The public, with no one to pass it on to, was straddled with the greater part of its unfair demands. The sales tax would prevent the motion picture industry from enjoying tax equality with other lines of trade."

Aubrey Kennedy Is Reported Planning Production of 26

Aubrey Kennedy, former general manager of Universal on the Coast, is understood planning to produce 26 features for the independent market. The financing, said to be by a group of New York state exhibitors, is reported contingent on Kennedy's success in a deal with RKO for the old Pathe studio in Culver City.

It is also understood that the financing is awaiting another deal by Kennedy with RKO Radio whereby the latter would distribute a group of the 26 features. Kennedy has made several trips to and from New York in negotiating with RKO, it is said.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"SKY DEVILS." If what this country needs is a healthy bellylaff, then "Sky Devils" should get a congressional medal of honor. I—and the rest of a packed house on Times Square—laughed until our sides ached, and that's no lie. If ever a motion picture made a monkey out of the war, then here it is, and a welcome relief after so much serious stuff on that good old rumpus.

The title can mean anthing from "just another air picture" to a really outstanding production. That's your job. To take a picture packed with so much entertainment and laughs, plus a few good thrills, and sell it to our customers, satisfied in mind that they will certainly get a real kick out of it, should be a genuine pleasure. Although rather weak in money names for the marquee, you don't have to depend on names to sell this one. As a statement of fact, it will sell itself word-of-mouth from the moment the first showing is over. So, think up all the gags you have stored away under your hat and get them to work while doping out your newspaper campaign.

"Audience value?" You can judge from what we've already told you that you have little to worry about. They will eat up every foot of it and then stay over for a second helping. Honestly, fellows, in our humble opinion this is one of the best comedy smashes of the entire season. Spencer Tracy, George Cooper and William Boyd are first rate and Ann Dvorak supplies the feminine appeal.

The "undie" bit is the only objectionable part for the kids, otherwise they will laugh as loud and as long as the adults. Some of the flying shots are far above average. All in all, here is a box office picture with 100 per cent audience appeal.

"AFTER TOMORROW," taken from a rather successful stage play, is very similar to "Street Scene," but to our way of thinking, much better, especially because it is not so sordid or depressing and gives you some semblance of a happy ending.

Marian Nixon's fine work is the real outstanding wedge of this attraction. She certainly helped put the picture over.

The title can be made to mean a dozen different things for the box office providing you make up your mind which is the best slant and then concentrate on it all of your selling angles. Add to, or played up above that title are names like Charlie Farrell, Minna Gombell, William Collier, Sr., and Marian Nixon. That ought to prove plenty to bring them to your theatre.

"Audience reaction" should be favorable enough to create a goodly amount of word-of-mouth advertising for this picture. It holds the interest and sort of makes the audience feel like crying for these two youngsters who were finding it so tough to win a little happiness out of life. At any rate, it is certainly fine enough to live up to whatever promises you make while selling it through a good newspaper campaign.

The nature of the dialogue makes it dynamite for either kids or Sunday showing, but spotted midweek for your best run, backed up with an appropriate merchandising campaign, and surrounded with a neat supporting bill of shorts, it should get you over in good shape. If the director, Frank Borzage, means anything in your town because of his past successes, notably "Seventh Heaven," then take advantage of that. But we're rather of the impression that they will be more inclined to listen to what the picture is about and who's in it.

We consider this one of the better pictures of the current season. See what you can do with it. It has plenty of possibilities.

"IMPATIENT MAIDEN" may not be a clean-up for the key city first-runs, but elsewhere it ought to be very much OK. Perhaps, had they spotted in another lead it would have been an all-round better bet. As it is, it is very satisfactory entertainment and will hold the interest.

The title is full of punch. If you know how to take a title like this one and make the most out of it without offending anywhere, then it will be fine and dandy, but don't take unnecessary chances playing with fire. Don't try to overstep yourself giving funny impressions to your paying public about a picture like this. Take the title and back it up with such names as mean something to you. You have besides Mae Clarke and Lew Ayres, Una Merkel and Andy Devine, who almost run away with the picture. So give them plenty of breaks in your ads.

"Audience value" is OK. As to operating room stuff, the average patron will find it unusually interesting.

This picture is average entertainment, made better by reason of the comedy relief offered by Merkel and Devine. There is no reason at all why most people shouldn't find this pretty good screen fare and they will if it is sold to them the right way. Since every spot is a situation unto itself we certainly won't attempt to tell you how it should be sold. We've tipped you off to be sane and sensible in the use of that title and if you can get a screening of the picture before you start your campaign then you ought to find enough ideas to put it over in good style.

"THE LOST SQUADRON." Many a thrill has been packed into this, the latest of the flying pictures to hit the screen. But, despite its misleading title, those thrills are not war shots, but a part of picture-making in Hollywood, in which former army aces earn their living working in pictures.

It's a story about fliers who came back from the war and, after getting a poor "break," drifted to the Coast as hoboes, then doing stunt-flying for pictures at so much a day. So, the vital question in selling this is whether it is advisable to leave that war-sounding title take its own course or to emphasize the fact that the real "kick" is the "behind the scenes in Hollywood" stuff. For my part I prefer the latter. It's not been overdone and offers some crackerjack selling slants along the picture production angles.

"Audience value" is fine, with exception of the ending, which is full of death and rather morbid. The story holds interest and characters are well cast. Dix is convincing as the captain, even if he is always losing out somewhere or other. Most audiences like to have their heroes win once in a while. Dorothy Jordan is sweet and likable as "The Pest," while Erich von Stroheim is great as the swell-head director and villain.

Merchandising ought to be along the lines of two outstanding "crack-ups" in connection with the picture work. By appealing to the public's never-ending interest in picture-making, especially behind the scenes, you can create no end of interest and build up a strong campaign. Sell von Stroheim strong; he's fine here. Tie-ups with the American Legion, flying fields and flying companies are all naturals and offer tremendous possibilities.

It is too morbid for kids, even though they would get a great kick out of it. And, remember to follow up this feature with a particularly good comedy. Shoot it on right hot after the feature, nothing in between.

It's worthy of above-average receipts where showmen sell it strongly enough.

"STRANGERS IN LOVE" reminds me of a giantcracker with a long fuse. It sputters and sputters and all the time you expect a big explosion. But then, all that happens is a "puff" and that's that. The story certainly contained grand possibilities, but somehow or other they did not make the most of it.

The title, plus the theme of the story wherein one twin brother steps into the other's shoes, plus Fredric March and Kay Francis, plus (and double plus) Stuart Erwin, provides plenty of selling angles for any showman. Taking them individually or collectively ought to give you enough stuff to build up a campaign designed to get them to your box office.

"Audience value" is exactly as described in the first paragraph. It starts off fine, builds up, and then drags to the end. The few laughs provided by Erwin really become outstanding.

You had best capitalize on the names and not promise them too much. Surround the feature with a good, strong bill of shorts and you'll have a program that ought to please the majority.

Wet Parade

(MGM)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's screen version of Upton Sinclair's "Wet Parade" is neither a vindication for prohibition nor a preachment for its repeal, being merely a graphic reflection of the contrast before prohibition and after.

The picture opens in the year 1909 showing an atmosphere of congeniality and frivolity wherever liquor flowed. It touches upon the evils of the habitual drinker and the saloon, but compares all this to what followed after prohibition.

In dealing with the exposition of this problem, the producers use it as a structure for the weaving of a story of romance, tragedy and comedy with a large cast of players in many difficult roles. Outstandingly received for performance was Lewis Stone as the southern colonel who had fought booze so long that he picks a befitting spot to end it all by committing suicide in a pig sty.

The first dramatic punch of the story comes when Dorothy Jordan denounces the evil of John Barleycorn. The picture then moves to a new era, preceding the World War and following up to the present time. It is during this period that Walter Huston commands the spotlight and gained decided audience approval. Circumstances bring Dorothy Jordan back to where she participates in a delicate romance with Robert Young who was considered to have done the best work in the juvenile section. Neil Hamilton follows with a portrayal of the budding playwright who defies the mandates of the 18th Amendment, but suffers in the end with blindness from poisoned liquor.

Much credit went to the adaptors of the novel who bring out a general detailed outline of the handling of liquor and its ramifications in effect, to the director who interpreted the characters involved and to the cameramen for the acknowledged fine quality in photography.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Victor Fleming. From novel by Upton Sinclair. Screen play by John Meehan. Photographed by George Barnes. Continuity and dialogue by John Mahin. Release date, March 26, 1932.

Western

A youngster, Bobby Nelson by name, completely captivated an audience at Loew's New York on Broadway, in his appearance as "buddy" of Tom Keene in this Western film.

Lee Shumway, villain of the piece, murders Bobby's uncle when he takes note of the stout money belt worn by the uncle, played by Billy Franey. Tom is made to appear as the murderer, because of the money belt, loaned to him, which he wears. He has no proof of the fact that he borrowed it, and is in a serious situation. Keene makes good an escape on his horse when the sheriff is taking him into custody and himself goes on the trail of the murderer.

A metal cleat found at the scene of the crime, gives a valuable clue leading to Shumway. A few additional complications are inserted to round out the story, climaxed when Keene, with the aid of Bobby, establishes the unquestioned guilt of Shumway. Nancy Drexel provides the other half of the romantic interest. The cast as a whole was well received by the audience, which gave every evidence of having found the film entertaining.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed hy Fred Allen. Story by Donald W. Lee. Editor, Walter Thompson. Cameraman, Harry Jackson. Release date, January 8, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

Scarface

(United Artists)

Gang Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Howard Hughes' story of gangland, "Scarface," is out in the open. It brought considerable discussion immediately following its showing at the Chinese theatre to newspaper, magazine and trade press reviewers.

It seemed to be pretty generally conceded among the members of this experienced audience that it is one of the best, if not the best, of all the gang pictures. It lays bare the remorseless cruelty of the underworld. Murder—cowardly, stealthy murder—is its theme. It seemed as though there was almost as much pistol and machine gun footage as there was dialogue. Reviewers said there might be a tendency of the whole thing to make something of a hero of the super-gangster, not so much for the adult, but for the juvenile mind. Such minds are apt to see in Tony (Scarface) and his friends and enemies, heroes of a highly courageous order. Whether the fate which they invariably meet will be enough to point to the proper moral is another matter.

Viewed strictly from a technical standpoint, "Scarface," it was agreed, is splendidly done, magnificent in its sweep at times. Casting, direction, photography and art direction all are above par. The action never lags for a moment from the opening scene to the spectacular ending. Howard Hawks directed.

Paul Muni's portrait of the gangster was thought masterful. Cunning, crafty, brazen, boastful, humorous, cruel, lustful, and ending—the way of all gangland flesh—yellow—this Tony created by Muni. Ably assisting him is a very personable young chap, George Raft, in the role of Tony's chief bodyguard. Osgood Perkins is another of the gangster crew credited with a splendid job. Boris Karloff portrays a rival gangster.

Vince Barnett's comedy as the bull-necked gunman who tries to become "Secretary" to the overlord was considered outstanding. Edwin Maxwell as the police chief and C. Henry Gordon as a detective who pursues Tony to his ultimate doom were well received in support, while Tully Marshall adds realism to the local room of a newspaper office. Karen Morley appears as the gang-chief's "moll," doing her job intelligently and gracefully, it was said. Ann Dvorak was considered appealing as the idolized and idolizing sister of Tony, who finally goes down to her own doom along with her brother. Inez Palange was thought to have turned in a good bit as the gangster's mother. Credit should go to all connected with the production.

Produced by Howard Hughes. Distributed by United Artists. Screen story by Ben Hecht from the book by Armitage Trail. Continuity and dialogue by Seton I. Miller, John Lee Mahin and W. R. Burnett. Directed by Howard Hawks. Photography, Lee Garmes and L. W. O'Donnell. Film editor. Edward Curtiss. Sound engineer, William Snyder. Musical directors, Adolph Tandler and Gus Arnheim. Production manager, Charles Stallings. Release date, March 26, 1932.

The Heart of New York

(Warner)

Comedy Drama

A small slice of New York's lower East Side is here the intricate and yet simple background of Warner's picturization of the play which, a season or two ago, scored something of a success on the Broadway boards as "Mendel, Inc."

George Sidney, Anna Appel, and the Jewish comedy team of Joe Smith and Charles Dale carry the burden of the characterizations in a manner that is finished, sincere, entertaining, to judge from the silence on occasion, and the frequent bursts of laughter which greeted their portrayals on the screen of the New York Strand. The comedy is well spaced throughout, interspersed with the drama of the tolerant, dreaming plumber, whose efforts as the family support suffer while he dreams and schemes of the possible success of his dish washing machine, which is to make him wealthy, his family happy.

Sidney, inventor, is constantly berated by his wife, Miss Appel, for his neglect of husbandly duties. The children, Ruth Hall, Marion Byron, Harold Waldridge, clamor for clothes, but the family has nothing. Only Aline MacMahon, neighbor and sympathetic, believes in Mendel's dreams. Smith and Dale, relatives, of course, and partners in any and every business that looks prolific of an honest dollar, are hard on the heels of the family, not believing in Mendel, but hoping for commission when they "make a match" for Miss Hall, eldest of the children. The two comedians evoked gales of laughter from the audience whenever they indulge in their perennial squabbling, and amazing business maneuvers, and that is frequently. Just as Mendel and his family are about to be evicted from their home and store for non-payment of rent, the two "big promoters" note that the dish-washing machine works. They carry it to the wealthy landlord, Oscar Apfel, who agrees to finance the manufacture of the apparatus.

Suddenly Mendel is wealthy, but when he tells his family that he has bought the tenement in which they live, the storm of protest is immediate, and in a dramatic, and rather tearful scene, they leave him, to take up fashionable quarters uptown. Mendel builds a palace on the East Side, with a butler and all the fixings. Suddenly royalties cease, and Apfel demands that Mendel leave the premises with his family, who have returned when the payments stop. The trick with which Apfel had attempted to swindle Mendel out of his royalties is uncovered by Donald Cook, Miss Hall's sweetheart, and the way is cleared to happiness. Immediately, however, the family surrounds the harassed Mendel, demanding that he dress to suit his wealth, and there the story ends. The cast as a whole was thought to have handled its respective roles capably.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by Mervyn Le Roy. From the play "Mendel, Inc.," by David Freedman. Adaptation and dialogue by Arthur Caesar and Houston Branch. Cameraman, James Van Trees. Editor, Perry Morse. Release date, April 9, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

Drama

A capacity audience at the Warner Winter Garden in New York gave an attentive, stimulated response to the work of Richard Barthelmess in this dramatic screen story of the young Austrian farm boy who makes his way to fame and glory as a brilliant surgeon under an assumed name, only to have the world collapse about his ears, leaving him only the final solace of love and the laborious work of a country farm.

Equal acknowledgment was accorded the performances of the supporting players, including Marian Marsh, sweetheart of Barthelmess and foster sister; Lucile Laverne as his foster mother; Norman Foster as his foster brother and fellow medical student; Adrienne Dore as the barmaid fiancee of Foster, and numerous others in less important, but highly effective roles.

The theme is dramatic, with but little comedy to relieve the tense moments, though that which is present has been inserted with finesse, it was clear from the obvious reactions of the audience. That same criterion implied clearly the intelligent manner in which the theme has been treated under the direction of Michael Curtiz.

Barthelmess, orphan, and Foster leave the farm to attend the medical school at Munich. Foster is an indifferent student, Barthelmess brilliant. Foster has become involved with Miss Dore, and immediately prior to graduation, at which Barthelmess was to have been valedictorian, Foster comes to him and explains that in a drunken quarrel Miss Dore had been injured and he had performed an operation, illegal because he had not received his diploma. Barthelmess goes to her alone, and the girl dies while he is in attendance. Barthelmess shoulders the blame, goes to prison and loses his diploma.

Released, and home, an automobile accident leaves him no choice but to save the life of a child by a delicate operation. The Viennese surgeon who arrives admires the work, asks Barthelmess to come with him to Vienna. Miss Laverne persuades him to take the diploma of Foster, now dead, and to use his name. He achieves fame as a surgeon of unusual brilliance, but loses his foster sister by automatically becoming her brother. The mother, in a misguided moment, attempts to clear the way for the marriage of the two and give them happiness by informing the authorities of the duplicity of five years before. The mother, gravely ill from shock when she realizes what she has done, is placed upon the operating table awaiting Barthelmess's hand. The authorities attempt to stop him and in a finely wrought and highly dramatic scene he begs to be allowed to perform just this one operation. The audience sat tense during the scene in the operating room. The operation is successful. A well turned final scene in the country shows Barthelmess in the distance behind the plow turning the earth on a stretch of his foster mother's farm.

Puss-in-Boots

(Picture Classics)

Four-Reel Novelty Operetta

A cast composed of children, with but two exceptions, present this operetta, which is a new version of the fairy tale. It is filled with singing and dancing.

Robert A. Simon did the lyrics and Nathaniel Shilkret the music, with results which place this in the category of the unusual. The story concerns the miller's boy who tells his faithful cat that the household is too poor to feed them both and that the cat must go. The cat pleads his case and then says he has a plan. He captures some trick rabbits which he takes to the king, representing them as gifts from his master, whom he terms a lord. The king invites the master, and when the pair arrive at the castle, declares the shabbily-dressed youth is practicing a hoax. The quick-thinking cat tells the king they had been robbed en route to the palace and the king is all apologies. He stages a feast for the youth and the party is entertained in royal style. The king then decides to escort his lordship home. Puss goes to bat again and hastens to the giant's castle, where he challenges the giant to change into other forms. The giant first changes to a lion and then to a mouse. In the latter role he is easy prey for the cat, who chases him from the castle. The youth arrives with the king and the latter dubs him a lord.

While it appears obvious that the makers of "Puss-in-Boots" had prospective juvenile audiences in mind when they launched production, an appeal to adults presents itself as a possibility.

Careless Lady

(Fox)

Comedy Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Fox delivers an up to the minute comedy drama in "Careless Lady" with Joan Bennett in the title role and John Boles opposite with support of a cast considered to have been selected by their requirements to fit the various characters.

Joan was enthusiastically received in the portrayal of the unsophisticated ugly duckling seeking romance, but informed she must obtain a past to reach this goal. The quest provides a structure for many situations found amusing by the audience and the parading of an incessant flow of witty dialogue. Scenes change from a small town to New York, Paris and back to the small town, where the girl's life has changed through a series of exciting escapades. She finally becomes reconciled with John Boles, who follows her across the water and back home, determined to marry her.

The Paris sequences are colorful, and amusing situations and laughs were procured through the delineation of the Frenchman's attitude toward women. It was here that Fortunio Bomanova was considered to have asserted his talent by competing with John Boles for the attentions of Joan.

Direction, cast, photography and settings all contributed towards making this a sparkling and witty bill of entertainment, it was obvious from the applause at the Ritz theatre.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Kenneth McKenna. Screen play by Guy Bolton. Lyrics and music by James F. Hanley and Ralph Freed. Photography by John Seitz. Settings by Joseph Wright. Release date, April 3, 1932.

Murder at Dawn

(Big Four)

Mystery Drama

Richard Thorpe, directing, and Burton King, supervising, have created for John Freuler's independent company the latest in the line of "shockers." Slapstick comedy and mystery have been combined with love interest and a wholesale murder mill in which Mischa Auer portrays the part of a scheming fiend who desires to wrest from Frank Ball the secrets of a powful electric invention which is supposed to harness the sun's heat to generate power to earth.

Sliding panels and trapdoors, a storm at midnight, fights and murders and a spooky atmosphere are arranged for a setting which consists chiefly of Frank Ball's closely guarded laboratory in his home where for many years he has been at work on the invention and in which a group of stock manipulators are interested.

Murders are committed and bodies are spirited away by some sinister influence which later proves to be Mischa Auer, who is working with the crooked manipulators. Ball is forcibly strapped to an attachment of his electric device, and, with his daughter (Josephine Dunn) is threatened with electrocution at sunrise unless he reveals the secrets of his invention. Jack Mulhall, the male lead, saves the father and the daughter, and the picture fades out with Mulhall and Miss Dunn in the "happy-ever-after" ending.

Besides Mulhall and Miss Dunn the cast contains representative support in the persons of Eddie Boland, Frank Ball, Marjorie Beebe, Phillips Smalley, Al Cross, Crauford Kent, Martha Mattox and Mischa Auer, with Miss Beebe and Eddie Boland providing most of the comedy, which is interspersed abundantly to lighten the eerieness.

Produced by Burton King. Distributed by Big Four. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Film editor, Fred Bain. Story, continuity and dialogue by Barry Barringer. Cameraman, Edward Kull. Sound, Earl Crain. Release date, February 23, 1932. Running time, 60 minutes.

Das Lied Ist Aus

(The Song Is Over)

(Associated Cinemas)

Musical Comedy

Well received singing and conversational byplay are the fortes of this German production, seen at the Europa theatre in New York. Plot has little to do with the picture, not being a factor in its likeableness. Willy Forst and Liane Haid do the singing, and Forst's "The Song Is Over—Don't Ask Me Why" is seconded by Miss Haid's "Goodby, Little Captain of My Heart," both of course sung in German. A bit of byplay that provided a setting for Forst's singing involved a marionette show that he had constructed.

As for the development of action: Tilla Morland, operetta star (Miss Haid) is celebrating her latest success at the Carlton Bar, but the fete is jarred when a lone young man leaves in the middle of her song. Her three admirers are unable to find him but he appears next day as an applicant when she advertises for a private secretary. When she hears his explanation that he could not bear her song because its theme duplicated his own experience after the war, she forgives him. And then she falls in love with him. But he maintains the deferential air of a secretary.

She learns that he is going to a certain address every evening between 7:45 and 10:45. She suspects there's a sweetheart in the case, and goes to see for herself. She finds that the "sweetheart" is his grandmother. And the grandmother confides that he loves his employer but dare not show it because he could not provide her with the luxuries to which she is accustomed. Whereupon she shows him her love.

Produced by Super-Films, Berlin, and distributed by Associated Cinemas of America, Inc. Directed by Geza von Bolvary from the scenario by Walter Reisch. Photography by Willy Goldberger. Music by Robert Stolz. Sets by Robert Neppach. Running time, 90 minutes. Released April 11, 1932.

Law and Order

(Universal)

Western

Walter Huston here dons boots, spurs, a badge and a gun belt in the interests of peace and the law in the early unsettled west. The audience at the Hippodrome in New York gave the effort its close attention, apparently well entertained throughout.

The work of Huston as the deputy marshal with a reputation who cleans up Tombstone, Arizona, by virtue of his ability with one or two guns, was very well received. Equally effective was the support, featuring Harry Carey, Raymond Hatton, Russell Hopton, Russell Simpson, Andy Devine, among others.

The drama, rather melodramatic in effect, contains nothing in the nature of romantic interest, the several women in the film appearing merely as extras, in atmosphere bits. Huston, after gaining a reputation in Kansas as an exponent of law and order, even at the price of numerous lives, journeys west with his constant companions, Carey, the gambler; Hopton, Huston's brother; and Hatton. At the request of certain citizens, Huston agrees to forget his avowed intention of putting away his guns and accepts a badge as marshal. The town is under the thumb of Ralph Ince, his brothers and their henchmen, the group running the place, and the sheriff, exactly as they please.

Huston and his companions, who are made deputies, undertake a difficult problem, the gang taking every opportunity to force a collapse of Huston's efforts. The showdown comes when, after Huston has ordered all guns confiscated and disarmed his deputies, the gang ambushes and kills Carey. Huston, stricken and maddened by the murder, promises to get out of town, but not until certain scores are settled. The next morning at dawn, informed that the Ince gang is in ambush at the livery stable, where the horses are quartered, the three, Huston, Hopton, Hatton march down the street, covering the houses fanwise with drawn guns. At the stable, the battle opens. Guns go off like an artillery barrage, as Huston, determined to get Ince, fights his way with the others into the stable. When the smoke clears, the gang is finished to the last man, but so are Hatton and Hopton. Dazed, Huston climbs upon his horse, and after throwing his badge at the feet of Simpson, the judge, rides slowly away into the open country, to conclude with a scene generally agreed to have been highly effective.

London Dockside Drama

(Seen in London)

Principally because care has not been taken with the characterizations this first Arthur Rosson British film seemed to miss fire, it was generally thought. Drab maidens in low class London riverside taverns should be taught how to forget their college accents, and the young, hot-blooded sailor boys who come home on the up-river boats should be told to drop overboard their Oxford and Cambridge manners before they land. This might have improved the film, because the dramatic situations are there, authoritative comment indicated.

The story attempts to show that romance can spring in dirty places, and that Cassie, the tavern habitue, can keep herself fit for her sailor boy, Steve (George Barraud). But she is drawn innocently into a quarrel just before Steve arrives on the marriage leave, and her absence in gaol impresses him that she has turned him down. He marries another girl, but later elopes with Cassie, who, however, not long after helps to bring them together again.

Realism has been achieved in the London dockside setting, but there is not a characteristic cockney in the cast.

Produced by Paramount, Directed by Arthur Rosson. Running time, 74 minutes.

SHORTS

Heavens, My Husband!

(Educational)

Amusing

The thought of Andy Clyde, side-whiskered, bony and hurt-innocence personified as a dashing bridegroom, should stir any audience to laughs. Here Andy, night watchman who makes his rounds via bicycle, is just that. A friend sows seeds of doubt in the mind of the new husband, and attempts to prove his belief. They go to the home of a young and handsome friend of the wife, where she is closing a deal for a new automobile for Andy. The two, climbing the side of the house in a manner which will evoke many laughs, hear a conversation which sounds bad, but actually is coming from the radio. Breaking in after the two have left, Andy proceeds to shoot the place full of lead. The misunderstanding is cleared, but there are several funny sequences en route.—Running time, 29 minutes.

Freddie the Freshman

(Vitaphone)

Fair Cartoon

Freddie drives, in his animated and strangely acting automobile, to college, where yells and songs are amusingly rendered by the collected animated students, in the shapes of the various animals that exist chiefly in the mind of the facile cartoon film artist. Freddie wins the football game after a few weird maneuvers. A fair Merry Melody cartoon.—Running time, 7 minutes.

That Rascal

Passable

Harry Barris, song composer and radio artist, tries hard to overcome a stereotyped story in this the first of a series of Vanity comedies following his signing by Al Christie. The action is drawn out to thinness, and cloudy sound reproduction at the projection room showing did not help. The father of the girl (Audrey Ferris) likes Harry's sentimental songs on the radio but doesn't know that Harry also does the jazz numbers which he detests. When he learns the truth he escorts Harry vigorously from his home. Then comes the decision to elope. The highlight is the store window scene where the group substitute for a bridal party of dummies. And then they learn that the man they kidnaped is an undertaker rather than a minister. This scene would have been more effective in reduced footage. Barris is pleasing. Running time, 21 minutes.

The Lease Breakers

(Paramount)

Amusing

This comedy had rather a celebrated birth, since the writers were none other than Howard Dietz of musical comedy fame, and Corey Ford of equal note as a concocter of humor. Karl Dane and George K. Arthur are the pair hired by an agency to go about the wrecking of apartments so that tenants may effectually break their leases. An audience at a neighborhood house in New York seemed to enjoy the number in unreserved fashion. The boys accidentally wreck the boss's home when they are designated to a job, and then go about the demolition of the right place. Unfortunately, however, the landlord hasn't the slightest objection.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Music Box

(MGM)

It's Great Fun

Laurel and Hardy again, and again supplying an unusual number of laughs for all and sundry. The combination of more than a little slapstick, as the pair know how to handle that comedic form and numerous amusing lines well spaced and well rendered, aid in making this an exceptionally amusing comedy. The two are partners in a moving company, and most of this number has to do with their attempted delivery of a player piano, with all that that should mean. Unusually long for a comedy, it is worth the extra length.—Running time, 30 minutes.

Ye Olde Songs

Fair Cartoon

One of the Paul Terry-Toon numbers, in which the animated figures, in a fairly amusing manner, enjoy themselves more or less in keeping with the themes of various songs of an earlier day. Synchronization is good.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Anti-Trust Suit Awaits Next Move

Representatives of the United States attorney general's office at Washington, and Charles F. Curley of Wilmington, of counsel for Radio Corporation of America, are conferring at Wilmington, Del., to decide on the next move in the government's anti-trust suit against RCA, General Electric Company and other companies which are charged with violation of the Sherman Act. Indications in Wilmington are that the attorney general's office will file additional papers and have the case set down for early trial.

A statement issued in New York by RCA states, with reference to the suits: "It is the position of this corporation that those (cross-licensing) agreements are legal, because without cross-licensing of patents none of the companies, including Radio Corporation of America, could lawfully have manufactured or sold efficient radio apparatus. . . . They did not restrain trade, they created it. . . . The Radio Corporation of America and its associated companies, defendants in this case, together are doing less than 20 per cent of the total business in radio receiving sets and less than 40 per cent of the total business in radio tubes. It could hardly be contended that a monopoly is thereby threatened or that trade is thereby restrained."

John Philip Sousa Mourned by Nation

Lieutenant-Commander John Philip Sousa, who died in Reading, Pa., suddenly last Sunday, was to be buried in Congressional Cemetery, Washington, on Thursday, with signal honors, befitting the memory of the band leader and composer known throughout the world as "The March King." Army, navy, marine and government officers and officials were scheduled to act as honorary pallbearers.

At the funeral the Marine Band, the conductorship of which Mr. Sousa resigned in 1892, was to act as escort. Sousa contributed much to the popularization of a certain type of musie, that with a martial flavor, in this eountry, both in the home and in the theatres and concert halls of the nation.

New York Operators Return 10% of Salaries to Circuit

A ten per cent rebate on projectionists' salaries of $85 per week and over will be made to circuit theatres of Greater New York for the period beginning March 14, 1932, and ending August 1, 1933, according to the terms of an agreement completed with Local 306, New York.

Extension of the local's contract with the circuits to August 1, 1934, is a possibility according to the agreement. If during that year theatre business shows no improvement an additional wage rebate of five per cent will be made to the circuits, but in the event business improves current wage schedules will be reinstated after August 1, 1933.

Decision Due Soon In Paramount Case On Block Booking

Arguments in the appeal of the Federal Trade Commission for an enforcement of its order prohibiting Paramount from continuing a block booking sales policy were concluded in the circuit court of appeals, New York, this week, and the case taken under advisement. A decision is expected within the next three weeks, ending the case begun against Famous Players-Lasky in 1921.

At the hearings this week, attorneys for Paramount argued that the evidence on which the commission's orders of 1927 to "cease and desist" from block booking was based, was insufficient for a court order affirming the commission's ruling. The revised testimony in the case was submitted to the court for study. On the basis of this testimony an opinion will be rendered by presiding Judge Martin T. Manton and associates Chase and Hand.

Quebec Tax Rise Is Now in Effect

The new Amusement taxes in the provinee of Quebec went into effect on Tuesday, March 1. The former tax of 10 per cent was increased to 12½ per cent, but this has been further increased by making all fractions of a single admission into a full cent. The schedule of new amusement taxes includes: tax of two cents on 10 eent admissions; three cents on 15 eents; four cents on 20, 25, 30 cents; five cents on 35, 40 cents; seven cents on 50 cent admissions.

In Montreal the city supplies the admission tickets to the theatres without charge as the city gets nearly one-half of the revenue from the provincial government for hospital work. On each of these tickets the admission price plus the tax is printed, as in Ontario. The exhibitors in Montreal get no commission for collecting the tax, although in Ontario they get four per cent and in British Columbia five per cent.

Under the former 10 per cent tax in Quebec one-half went to the municipality and one-half to the provincial government. Under the new law all of the increase goes to the government, the municipalities getting no more revenue than before and the provincial government taking the entire revenue from the increase.

Franklin Says RKO Circuit Progressing

Prior to his departure from New York for Hollywood on Tuesday, Harold B. Franklin said the RKO circuit has made "lots of progress" in recent weeks.

Franklin's trip to the Coast is in eonneetion with the survey he is eonducting into all phases of RKO operation. The vaudeville branch now is being handled by Martin Beck as managing director.

Famed Press Agent, William Guard, Dies

William J. Guard, for the past 22 years press representative of New York's Metropolitan Opera House, and one of the most colorful figures in Broadway's theatrical and musical circles, died on Monday in his New York apartment at the age of 69. He was to have celebrated his seventieth birthday on March 29.

Mr. Guard's death was the direct result of a heart attack. He was born in Ireland and was brought to this country at the age of 10. Receiving his education at Johns Hopkins University, he entered newspaper work, first in Baltimore, then for James Gordon Bennett on the New York Herald. From there he went to the post of press agent for Oscar Hammerstein, at his Manhattan Opera House, becoming press agent extraordinary for the Metropolitan when Hammerstein sold out to the Metropolitan interests in 1910. He retained that position until his death.

His Victorian manner of dress had long been famous on Broadway. "Billy," as he was widely known, used to term himself humorously "Gatti-Casazza's man Friday" or "Gatti-Casazza's office boy."

Aitken Has Plan to ReopenDarkHouses

H. E. Aitken, well known in film cireles, and former president of Mutual Film, says he has been approached by a group of unnamed film men to act in an advisory capacity in the formation and operation of an organization, the object of which will be to assist owners and operators of darkened houses.

A "complete new type" of picture program has been decided upon, it is said, and Aitken claims he has received assurance that at least 1,000 theatres can be lined up by fall. It is further stated that a franchise has been provided for each town or community. A plan has been arranged for communities where theatres do not now exist. In this case assistance will be given on the selection of sites, building of theatres, and the complete installation of equipment. Broadcasting, newspapers and advertising campaigns are said to be in preparation.

Arthur Friend, film attorney, admitted he was attorney for certain interests in the negotiations relating to sueh a plan, but would not comment further.

This eompares with a net for 1930 of $515,756, equivalent to $5.46 per share on 94,400 shares.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"MR. MUGG" TO YOU!

"SO that 'mugg' Smith got the district manager job! Lissen, that shows you what a l---- outfit this is. Here I am slavin' frum mornin' ta night an givin' 'em a bran' o' showmanship that ought ta panic 'em. Then they goes and gives da district manager job to that 'mugg' Smith!"

And that, brother showmen, is the howling of old man crabby. You probably know the type as well as I do, in fact, you'll find them in every outfit whether it be large or small. He has a grievance and he's going to shout it from the housetops or speak it from a soap-box just so long as he can find someone to listen to him.

Just why did that "mugg" Smith get the promotion? I'll tell you why:

He applied himself to his job of managing a theatre and made that title stand for "managing" in every sense of the word. He was not the kind who lived from one week to another with two outstanding thoughts in his mind; that next pay day or his next day off. There were too many interesting things to be accomplished in this most fascinating business of running a theatre.

His day started as soon after breakfast as he could walk to the theatre. A glance through the morning's mail; a quick response to anything requiring such action. Then a look over the house to see if everything was O.K., including a friendly chat with the cleaners to find out whether everything was in good condition. A rapid, but critical inspection of the theatre.

Then off for the newspaper office where he had promised that morning to help knock out a story for the editor on Hollywood personalities and pictures in the making. He had long since found that every smudge of dirty black ink in that newspaper plant could be turned into gold by just being friendly with the whole crew. Many's the time he turned out a most unusual and attractive ad because the composer would listen to a suggestion and help work out some intricate gag with a mat or two.

Back from the newspaper office would leave him plenty of time for a bite of lunch and then back to the theatre. Before the start of the matinee he would have the skeleton of next week's program all laid out and a snappy institutional chat for the front cover all finished. Then, with another space of time to himself he would sit down and analyze the next few weeks' booking as received from the home office.

Booking changes helped pull him out of many tight spots and he was a good enough showman to realize how important that phase of his job really was. A shift from the first to the last half could oftimes result in several hundred dollars added business. He was confident of that because he understood, or tried to understand, his patrons' tastes and he learned very soon after coming to this town that light entertainment always went better for the first than the last half.

Confident that with a little change his bookings are now O.K. he turns his thoughts to the merchandising possibilities and tie-ups. His policy of backing up his mid-week attraction with some form of exploitation has attracted a lot of extra business to fill this important part of his week. Ideas, never lacking. You'll find a neat file of the trade papers on a shelf back of his desk. And he reads them, too.

With the matinee under way he has a couple of appointments this afternoon. He is meeting the directress of the local dancing school to conclude arrangements for the monster dance recital on the stage of his theatre for three days. He has sponsored these recitals twice a year for several years and they are so popular that seats are at a premium for the entire three days of the show. Then he has a committee meeting at the Chamber of Commerce with the merchants' division where he will iron out the final details of his Fashion Show and a gala Blue Ribbon Sale Week in which every merchant in town will participate.

These meetings generally take up the better part of his afternoon and after a look-in to see that things are alright at the theatre he's off for his supper. The day up to this point might sound like he was rushed to death. Not at all. These things are just incidents, important and unimportant, in the life of a real theatre manager. Wherever he goes he is greeted warmly and with smiles. He's well liked. Is friendly with all who know him and a genuine influence in all the affairs of the community.

His theatre is exceptionally well run; he is respected by everyone of his employees; he is loyal to his employers and he knows his business. These are the ingredients of a real showman.

"Mugg" did you call him? Listen brother, he rated that promotion because he earned it. He has no influential relations, he didn't marry the boss' cross-eyed daughter and he never had anything on one of his superiors. So the next time you speak of him remember, it's "Mr. Mugg" to you.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Circuit managers will recognize this scene immediately; but the more fortunate independent showmen who have yet to participate in one of these hokum comedy acts may doubt the really funny slants of the house manager who dared to stand up and voice an honest question. The rest of the boys at the meeting must be pardoned if their humor gets out of bounds.

LYKES USED COUPLE OF NEW STUNTS THAT ATTRACTED ATTENTION

Not long ago we had occasion to relate how a number of very attractive mimeographed programs were being turned out by J. E. Lykes, manager of Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, through a tie-up with the local agent for the machines.

At that time we did not have full information as to the theatre's end of expense but can now inform members that with the exception of cost of paper and a couple of passes to the man who operates the machine, there isn't any cost to the house, outside of a little time spent to cut out stencils by tracing photographs and filling in copy with the typewriter.

The result is novel and effective as a change in style and we'll cheerfully pass along further information to those who are interested and wish to try out the idea.

But getting out attractive mimeographed programs is not the only gag that has been engaging the attention of Lykes these past few weeks. He's got another little costless bit of advertising that some of the boys may wish to put in effect. We state costless because the entire investment is covered by a $2 rubber stamp set that can be used in a variety of ways around a manager's office.

He takes this stamp, set to carry the current attraction, around to some restaurant or sandwich shop where the manager lets the cashier stamp each table check on the reverse side with name of theatre, picture and playdate. As it is customary for all waiters to hide the "bad news" from the customer by turning the check face down when presenting it, the stamped notice will naturally be read. Considering that most any small restaurant feeds an average of from 500 to 700 people per day, or a weekly average of 5,000, this would appear to be a darn good bet.

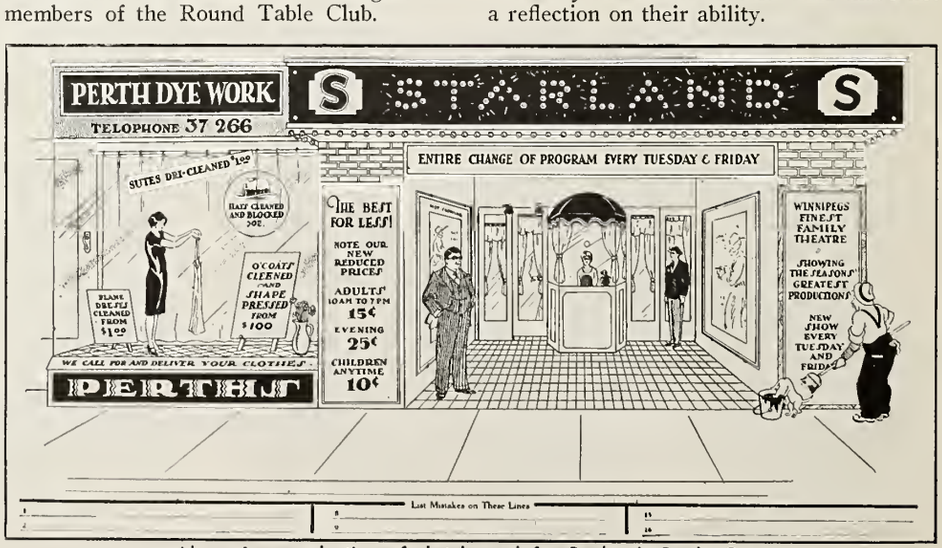
Another stunt recently used by Lykes that attracted considerable attention was a bally for "Rich Man's Folly." He had a man wearing an over-sized yellow slicker, covered with glued-on pennies, walk around the streets. To make the costume still more fantastic the chap wore a high silk hat and carried a walking stick. A great attention-getter, says J. E., if someone doesn't steal the coat for the pennies.

To our way of thinking there's a couple of mighty good suggestions in the above paragraphs and we're sure that some other Round Tabler will put them to use. We're obliged to this showman for making it possible for us to put the ideas in print and hope that the future will bring forth many more of the same calibre. In the meantime we and all his fellow members wish him continued success. We have at hand some small snap shots showing how he rigs his marquee sign but definition in a reproduction would be too vague to be of value to others. We're sorry not to be able to publish them and hope that the next ones received will be more clear.

McMahon To Rochester

Ken McMahon, former manager of the Rialto Theatre, East Rochester, N. Y., has been transferred to the State Theatre, Rochester. He is succeeded at the Rialto by Arnold G. Hammel. Both theatres are on the Schine Circuit and both managers are members of the Round Table Club.

PUZZLE STUNT USED BY POPHAM MET BIG RESPONSE FROM CITY



In line with a craze on part of the public for puzzles of all description, we're passing one along that was tried out with much success by W. A. Popham, of the Starland Theatre, Winnipeg, Canada.

You've probably seen one of the puzzles illustrated in the accompanying photo before, maybe in "Liberty Magazine" or other publications. The gag is to find how many mistakes the artist deliberately made in the sketch. This particular drawing represents the front of the Starland, and the supposed front of a Perth Dye Works store adjoining the theatre, a unit of the firm that Popham tied-up with to promote the scheme. While we have cropped the bottom portion of the sheet, space was reserved there for about twenty answers to errors and these were continued on the reverse side.

The reverse side also carried rules governing replies made to the puzzle gag. When a reader had found all possible errors, he or she was instructed to take the filled in sheet to the cashier of the theatre when attending a show. The sheets were also given out at the box office on a like occasion, or could be procured from any branch of the dye-works or its drivers. All were eligible except employees of either company. Awards were to be made based on largest number of errors found, neatness and directness of reply.

In order to lend additional weight to the scheme Popham secured the services of four well known townsmen to act as judges, including the Mayor, two newspapermen and an executive of a local company. The awards were well worth shooting for and included a Radio valued at over $100; a year's pass to the theatre; an order for $25 worth of dry cleaning at the dye firm; a pass for six months at the theatre; an order for $10 worth of dry cleaning, and fifty additional awards worth one dollar each.

While it is not stated whether the theatre bore a share of expense attached to this deal it is assumed that it did not for reason of the advertising value received by the dye-works company, so we're going to congratulate Popham for his part in the promotion of a scheme that carried such widespread appeal to patrons. Should any other Club member want to try this out, we offer the suggestion that most any local artist or cartoonist can make up a sketch with the necessary number of errors. And that's not a reflection on their ability.

An attractive front and a robot bally materially helped H. A. Bishop sell "Frankenstein" at the Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Canada.

With exception of showing two striking posters of the "monster" at either side of entrance, the small photo will convey an idea of how the front was dressed. Note the cutout of the same character directly in the center.

The robot is shown at the extreme right with its conductor standing alongside. The contrivance worked with an electric bell and red electric lights. The conductor was dressed in frock coat, a cape, wore heavy black side-whiskers and beard. Cane gloves and spats completed the ensemble.

The above was brought to the Club's attention through courtesy of F. L. Vaughn, branch manager of Canadian Universal Film Co., and Joe Weil of the Universal home office. We understand that Bishop's campaign brought extraordinarily fine results and hope that other members of this organization will benefit from the idea.

BABY BUGGY BALLY HELPED JACK HOBBY EXPLOIT A PICTURE

An effective tie-up was made with a local newspaper as a plug for "Unexpected Father" by Jack Hobby, manager of the RKO Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., tear sheets indicating that the paper gave the stunt most generous support.

He had a man dressed in frock coat, silk hat and other trimmings that go with that sort of outfit, parade the downtown section behind a baby buggy. Stories in the newspaper acquainted readers with the fact that they might obtain a pass to the theatre by stepping up to the man and identifying him with the words, "You are the Unexpected Father." It was also necessary that a copy of that day's paper be in the hands of the inquirer, along with a printed slip bearing name and address.

Each story carried by the newspaper was accompanied by a good sized photograph of the bally being approached by pedestrians with copies of the paper in their hands, all of which is a testimonial to the effectiveness of Hobby's tie-up with the publisher. This is the first time we've heard from this Club member in several weeks and we're glad to know that he's still on the job of selling shows over in Providence. Let's hear some more, Jack.

LEE RECENTLY HELD 7TH ANNIVERSARY AT THEATRE IN BABCOCK

We note from a copy of the local newspaper, photo and all, that Harold C. Lee, manager of the Babcock Theatre, Bath, N. Y., held a big special show in honor of the 7th Anniversary of his house a short time ago and that the story broke on the front page.

Since the Babcock came under supervision of Fox Theatre Corp., Lee has continued as manager and many improvements in the house have been made, such as new sound projection equipment, electrically-driven ventilators, redecorating and a new marquee. Lee has the tools to work with now and we'll hope he has a banner year.

SELLING A FOOTBALL FILM IN JANUARY WAS JOB LAMM HAD TO DO

Putting over a football picture in the middle of January is not an easy matter anyway you want to look at it, but we understand that Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, came through with flying colors when he played "Touchdown" at that time of the year.

As a means to the above Lamm hotfooted it to the local High School and sought audience with heads of the Athletic Division, the Band and Glee Club. As a result of this move a parade was held to the theatre, participated in by High School students and members of the theatre Kiddie Club. Banners, torches and whoopee made the affair an impressive spectacle. At 7 P. M. the Glee Club appeared in front of the theatre and the entire neighborhood turned out to hear the boys play. All Cleveland papers helped the good work along.

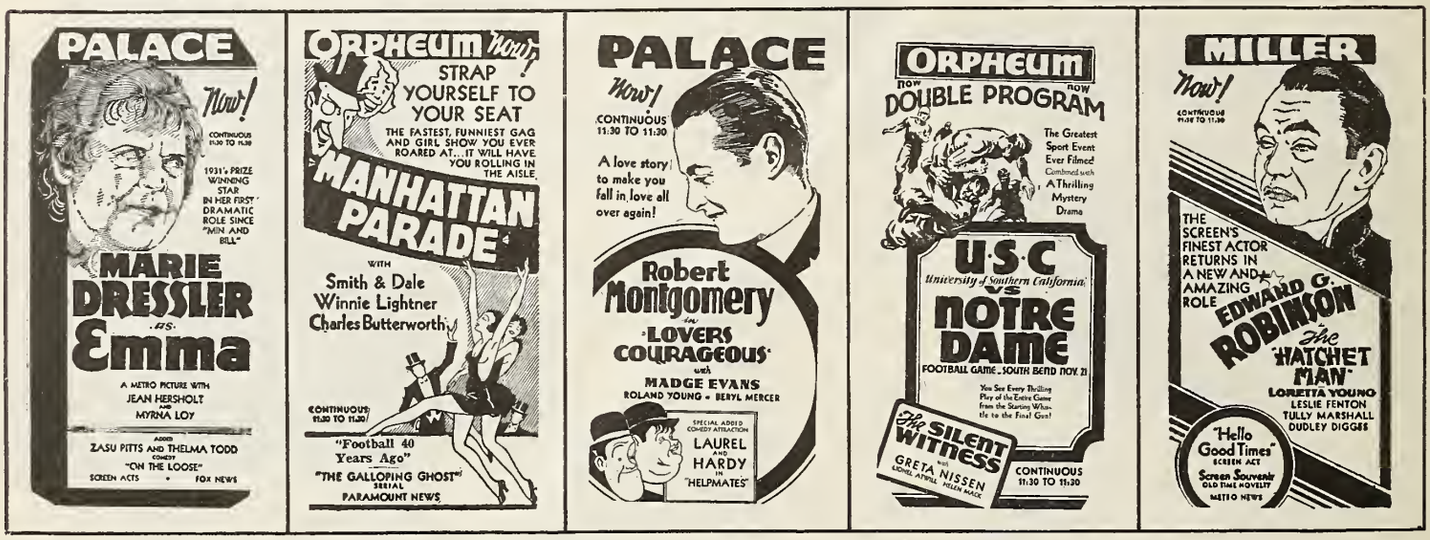
It must have taken some strong sales work on the part of Lamm to get the School to help exploit a football picture 'way past season, but the boys came across and it's a feather in the cap of this Round Tabler for putting the stunt over. Increased receipts at the box office more than justified his efforts. The accompanying photo shows the Club doing their stuff in front of the theatre.

LOU SMITH PRAISES TIE-UP MADE WITH A COFFEE DISTRIBUTOR

An effective tie-up was recently made with a local food distributor by Lou Smith, manager of the Elton Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. The deal also included the Windsor, Stillwell and New United Theatres, all operated by the Windsor Circuit Corporation.

The tie-up was made with the Fischer Company, distributors for Astor Coffee, and a strip of paper at hand discloses that this strip, or an Astor label, when presented with ten cents at either of the listed theatres, would be good for admission any evening except Friday, Saturday, Sunday or holidays.

Smith thinks that the above tie-up will get excellent results for any theatre if properly followed up, for reason that the several hundred regular size cards were distributed within a radius of a half a mile of the theatre. We do not know whether this scheme is being followed out on a national scale or not but it may be interesting to managers in other local neighborhoods.



ONE COLUMN ADVERTISING CREATED BY NAT HOLT & D. S. LAWLOR

(Fox Wichita Theatres, Wichita, Kansas)

So you did like the first batch of Holt-Lawler one column ads? We rather thought you would, but the hitch is that we can't accommodate with mats on them. Perhaps if those members who asked for them would drop a line direct to Holt or Lawler they would be glad to help them out.

Here is the second batch we promised, and we hope to have several more for use in early issues of the Club pages. Like the first group these too contain some particular point to catch the eye. Maybe it's in the use of black ink, or then again, it may be in the way they trust to white space. However, the important point is: they are all outstanding and attractive and worthy of every showman's attention with a view of working out something like it for themselves.

We would like to have some one column ads from the other ad artists who have contributed from time to time to these pages. There seems to be an unusually big demand for such material at this time, whether it is caused by economic conditions or just plain economy we don't know, but the fact remains that it is wanted and we would like to supply the "meat" for those who want ideas in this single-column stuff.

MELINCOFF PUT ON SPLENDID CAMPAIGN TO SELL "FIREMAN"

Among the highlights of a campaign made on "Fireman Save My Child," by Max Melincoff, manager of the Warner Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., were a splendidly worked out popularity contest, a couple of street stunts that went over in great shape and a special show for inmates of an Orphan Home.

The fireman popularity contest was put over through a tie-up with the leading daily newspaper and resulted in columns of publicity for all concerned. Story after story with two-column heads appeared each day and listed the name and standing of the contestants. Ballots good for twenty-five votes were carried at the foot of each story. All this stunt cost the theatre was a two-column cut of Joe E. Brown and three awards of passes good for 3, 2 and 1 month respectively. The presentations were made on the last night of run of picture, as the paper agreed not to publish names of winners until the announcement had been made from the stage.

A street or lobby stunt that proved to be a sure "stopper" did its share of the good work and we're reproducing herewith a photo taken of the work done by the house artists. It was a seven-foot high head of Joe E. Brown in caricature, with a two-foot opening in cutout mouth. A white stick, made to look like a tooth, was placed in this mouth and a red cloth was used for a background. Anyone passing the theatre, or coming in or out, was invited to use quoit (rope) rings in an attempt to ring the tooth two out of three times and receive a free ticket to the show. About twenty passes were handed out in four days but fully 1,000 people tried out their skill. The only cost of this stunt to theatre was beaverboard for the cutout and a 50c. set of quoits to obtain the rings. The house artists did the painting.

Variety of Stunts!

A classified ad inserted in the paper to secure a man to act as a street bally for Joe Brown brought over 200 applicants to the theatre in search of a job and acted as an additional plug for the picture. The ad read as follows: "Wanted—Is there a man in Lawrence whose mouth is anywhere the size of Joe E. Brown's? If you are that man apply at the Warner Theatre Thursday at 10.30 A. M. for a temporary position to aid in the advertising of "Fireman Save My Child," which comes to the Warner Sunday, Feb. 21, 1932."

Another street ballyhoo consisted of an old horse-drawn hook and ladder truck with signs on both sides, such as shown in the other photo on this page. The only cost attached to this stunt was pay for the driver at the rate of $5 per day, as both truck and horses were borrowed from the city. Since the original photo showed only about half of the horses, we made an additional crop back to tails and hind legs.

In addition to the splendid support given the popularity stunt the newspaper came through with many other miscellaneous stories, such as the occasion of entertaining the 150 children from the Orphans' Home. daily readers, and a two-column cut and story in the sports section in reference to Brown's old connection with the New York Yanks.

Another stunt was the playing of a special fire effect record through an amplifier on the marquee. One of the ushers was able to give an excellent imitation of Brown's yell, and along with the record he was used to good effect. The record equipment was borrowed from the Boston office.

Newspaper advertising consisted of several attractive one and two-column display ads, all carrying snappy copy and head cuts of Brown.

We are advised that the entire campaign on the above picture was kept under the advertising budget, which, we understand, was on "summer" basis at the time. Along with the original stunts employed by Melincoff, it was indeed a feather in his cap to get away with such a lot of valuable publicity at small cost. This Round Tabler is an entrant in the nation-wide contest on this picture and we wish him luck.

TOM PHELAN DOING GOOD INSTITUTIONAL WORK IN NEW JERSEY

Considerable institutional work figures from time to time in the activities of Thomas Phelan, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., among which we can report a "Canned Goods Matinee," a Kiddie Revue in association with the Long Branch Welfare Association and a newsboys' party for the entire staff of carriers on the local newspaper.

An abundance of foodstuffs resulted from the canned goods drive and all articles were turned over to the Public Welfare Association for the relief of the unemployed. As for the Kiddie Revue, over one thousand children were entertained and the Welfare Association co-operated with the donation of gifts. Dancers from a local school and the operators furnished their services gratis for the occasion.

The party for the newsboys was Phelan's way of expressing appreciation for the pleasant association he has carried on with the local newspaper over quite a long period. This is an annual affair and the picture shown on the last occasion was "Sooky." The event netted the theatre a front page story in advance and a three column cut and caption the day following the party. We have a mat of the photo but these cannot be used for reproduction in this magazine.

Newspapers are one of the best assets a theatre manager can have, to our way of thinking, and this annual party of Tom Phelan's serves to cement the bond of good feeling that exists between these two institutions. Hence, this account may serve as a reminder to some other member who may wish to make some gesture of appreciation to his newspaper friends.

How's the Mrs. and the new baby, Tom?

MARBLES FOR THE KIDS!

At the first sign of warm weather you are sure to see groups of kiddies shooting marbles all over town. That should be your cue to start giving them out at your kid matinees or wherever it will do you the most good.

Assorted marbles can be purchased very cheap and distributed either to every youngster attending your Marble Matinees or as a special according to the way you run these gags.

If in doubt as to where these marbles can be bought drop us a line and we'll put you in touch with several dealers. But cash in on the annual popularity of the marble-players' pet pastime. The kids will go for it in a big way.

KIDS ENTHUSIASTIC OVER MOUSE CLUB IN WILL BURNS' THEATRE

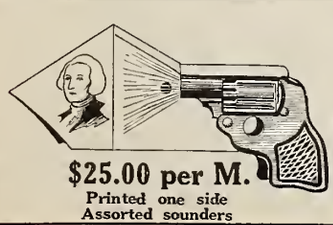
Silence on his part, states Will Burns, manager of the Princess Theatre, Joliet, Ill., does not mean that he hasn't been following activities of his fellow Round Tablers, but, like every energetic manager, his time is largely taken up with the many duties that confront showmen from morning to night.

We note in particular that he has a flourishing Mickey Mouse Club out in Joliet and that he is receiving liberal publicity support from a local tab newspaper in the way of a special Mickey Mouse column. Recently, members of the organization put on a revue on the stage of the Rialto and public response was so gratifying that a second show had to be held. A number of the youngsters were students of a local dancing school and their instructor gave considerable time to train them for the event.

The photo on this page shows the kiddies gathered in the rear of the theatre and hardly does justice to the attractive appearance they made on the stage, which was dressed with navy blue velvet drops and sparkling silver cut letters reading, "First Annual Mickey Mouse Club Revue." The Revue was built around the theme called "The Storekeeper's Dream" and opened with the storekeeper sweeping around a huge prop cheese. Minnie and Mickey sang the "Theme Song" in duet, followed by the Mickey Mouse Babies, as "Cheese Pirates," dancing around the Cheese. The sketch ended with "Wedding of Mickey Mouse," carried out on the Tom Thumb idea.

Considerable stress is laid on this Mickey Mouse Club and last January the management put on a big membership drive. The members were divided into four divisions and competed for prizes promoted from the local branch of the Chicago Motor Club. Election of officers was also held a few weeks ago for the new year and regular printed ballots were issued for the occasion. As in another case we wrote of not long ago, this Mouse Club is sponsored by a branch of a chain of department stores.

Burns also recently tied up with a merchant to start off a new serial. The merchant furnished 2,000 membership cards gratis, donated awards and gave the use of one of his windows for a special display built by using a serial one-sheet. The characters were cut out and mounted on compoboard and then suspended by a dark thread. The figures were pictured falling from a burning airplane and when an electric fan was set behind them and flasher bulbs were put into action, it made a very effective animated display. The membership cards listed the twelve chapters with places to be punched for consecutive attendance. After eleven spaces were punched the holder became entitled to see the last chapter free.



He has also sold the tab newspaper on the idea of running reproductions of "Star stills" taken from theatre files. Particularly attractive photos are picked out and these are making the front page. As this newspaper is very popular in Joliet, the move can be considered a great break.

We're mighty glad to hear from Burns again and wish him lots of success with his Mickey Mouse Club, Serial Club, etc., and we're sure that his activities in that direction will be interesting to his fellow members. For that matter, all of this member's work is at all times worthy of attention and it is to be hoped that the future will be productive of many other contributions.

ARE FIGURES HUMAN OR WAX, ASKS GRAUMAN

No doubt about Sid Grauman being back on the job again at the Chinese Theatre, Hollywood. The photo above shows one of the latest stunts put on by this erudite showman—a group of figures reproducing a scene in "Mati Hari". Wax figures were replaced with live individuals from time to time and kept a throng of people arguing as to which were real and which artificial characters. The display was arranged in the forecourt of the theatre.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

It would appear that the manager of this theatre was using his cashier as a ballyhoo for the current attraction. After all, you can't blame the folks from the nearby farms for making a mistake like this.

The moral of this cartoon is: Use box office drapes and stop featuring your cashier.

CALDWELL BUSY AS EVER SELLING SHOWS FOR TOLEDO THEATRE

It's been some little time since we've reported on the activities of one Wally Caldwell, manager of Loews' Valentine, Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, but we can now advise that this showman is still carrying on at the same old stand in the same old way. He's been busy as a bee making the usual tie-ups, etc., and we are at liberty to set down a few facts in connection with campaigns on recently played pictures.

When exploiting a double feature bill composed of "Cuban Love Song" and "Beau Hunks," he tied up with the Beechnut Company for distribution of 7,000 chocolate drop samples, 1,500 of which were stuffed in packages at a popular market and balance handed out at theatre. In addition to securing 16 good windows in downtown locations, 3 particularly fine windows were tied in for display of stills, streamers, etc. Night clubs were also tied-in with the playing of musical score of picture and the newspapers came across with usual amount of gratis space.

On "Corsair" Caldwell secured some very effective window tie-ups with Bell & Howell (two special displays); the Milano Pipe firm in United and other cigar stores; A. G. Spaulding Co., and Old Gold cigarettes. Deluxe 14x17's were also mounted in 16 downtown windows and one-sheets were pasted in a large downtown garage. 200 other one-sheets were distributed to regular locations. His newspaper campaign embraced the usual features, consisting of advance stories, and specials one day prior to opening.

We've been hammering at Wally Caldwell for some little time to come across with an illustrated account of one of those spectacular campaigns he puts across from time to time but he's either too modest or else hasn't been able to find an opportunity.

WILLIAMS CREATED FUROR IN BAYONNE WITH FLAGPOLE GAG

The art of flagpole sitting, popularized by the one and only John Avon "Shipwreck" Kelly, was demonstrated by no less a personage than Kelly himself on the occasion of a recent showing of "Sooky" at the DeWitt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J., a Warner house managed by "Tony" Williams.

We take it for granted that the wide publicity accorded Kelly's exploits on top of various flagpoles have familiarized the general public with the true technique of this sport, but for the uninitiated we'll state that the main idea is to sit it out day and night, in all kinds of weather, in a chair strapped to the top of a flagpole. Any old flagpole will do for Kelly—the taller the better, for he gained his nickname through weathering three gales that wrecked as many ships.

One of the small photos on this page shows "Shipwreck" ascending the pole by means of the latest and most modern ladder the local Fire Department owned and the other is a shot of his descent into the arms of an ambulance surgeon, who was on hand to render any necessary first aid. A sound newsreel man is standing by with a "mike" to record Kelly's assurance to the world this his ten-day "sit" has in no way endangered his health or championship standing. However, these pictures don't show the half of it. Others brought to our attention attest to the claim that several thousand people blocked traffic for blocks to watch New Jersey's human weather vane come back to earth.

Various gags were used by Williams in advance of and during the stunt. Amounts of money, ranging from $5 to $10, were promoted from merchants, as were various articles of clothing needed for Kelly's equipment. When he made his appearance prior to ascent, a mike was in readiness for a brief speech made through the public address system. He told the crowd of his intentions and then walked along the rim and presented ladies with flowers promoted from a local florist, each flower carrying the florist's tag. He did not forget to call attention to "Sooky" when making his address. His return to merchants for their donations was the reading of an ad through a "mike" at the top of the pole and through the horns on the marquee.

Another gag consisted of 'phoning about twenty-five of the better known names in the local 'phone directory and leaving word that these persons should call Mr. Kelly at the theatre number. All fell for the scheme and most of them liked it so well that the gag was passed along to their friends. At any rate, a check at the exchange revealed that calls averaged 500 per day, with a peak of 1,000 calls on Friday and Saturday. Some of the calls came from distant points and all were answered the same way—"that Mr. Kelly was busy sitting on the DeWitt's flagpole," with added comment on the current show. It proved an excellent word of mouth advertisement.

Still another stunt was the installation of a 'phone from flagpole to a tea-room across the street, where people could talk to Kelly for the sum of 10 cents. Proceeds were turned over to the local Mayor's unemployment fund.

Williams advises that "Shipwreck" has highly perfected this stunt for theatre use and that all the co-operating merchants were more than pleased with the increase in trade. There are any number of gags that can be worked in connection with the stunt, but these will have to be left to Mr. Kelly's discretion. A number of tear sheets we have at hand testify that the local newspaper gave daily support to the tie-up, and the theatre not only did a fine business but received a whale of a lot of publicity.

WALTMON MADE GOOD TIE-UP WITH PAPER ON CIRCULATION GAG

As the result of a tie-up made with the circulation department of the local newspaper, a full half page of space was recently obtained by Burgess Waltmon, manager of the Grand Theatre, Fulton, Ky.

An offer was made by the paper whereby new subscribers taking either a three or six months subscription became entitled to three or six free tickets to the Grand. The offer did not apply to renewals. Part of the center portion of the ad was used to describe the offer and the entire balance was devoted to five large display ads on coming attractions at the theatre.

The tear sheet we have at hand certainly indicates that Waltmon got away with the greater portion of that half page and he's to be congratulated for his efforts. Maybe it would pay some other Club members to approach the local circulation manager with a similar proposition.

A BIT OF NEWS FROM THE STODELS DOWN IN FAR OFF SOUTH AFRICA

It's been some little time since we last recorded what was going on in show-business down in Cape Town, South Africa, but we can now advise fellow Club members that Jack H. Stodel and his father are still carrying on with African Theatres, Ltd.

Not long ago Stodel had his town all agog with a "stage party" held in honor of a visit paid the theatre by a stage celebrity from London, England. After the performance about two hundred invited guests remained behind to dance on the stage until the small hours of the morning and to partake of the supper provided by the management. In advance and after the show newspapers gave generous space to the affair with stories and photos, in fact the entire affair was treated as something unusual in Cape Town life.

Also note the photo showing a stunt pulled when playing "Whoopee." In front of all those signs you see are girl riders of the horses, dressed in Indian costumes to further lend to "wild" atmosphere. This photo was taken alongside the local theatre and also shows a twenty-four sheet on the picture.

The Alhambra Theatre had a birthday party not long ago and a cake weighing 165 pounds was auctioned off for charity. It brought 90 pounds sterling.

We were mighty glad to hear from the Stodels again and to know that everything is going along as usual down in their home town. Keep up the good work, Jack, and continue to let your fellow Club members know what stunts you are using.

A "JAMEYSON" AD!

Here is another one of H. E. Jameyson's business-getting ads. You showmen who have been asking for more ought to find this one particularly timely. Especially if you're getting your dates in for this picture.

Note the line at the head; "Believe It Or Not Lady"—then the spotting of the three stars—the gag lines—the title—all these things may not be outstanding to you (then again, it may) yet, combined, they all contribute to the effectiveness of this grand ad.

We're certainly hoping that the changes taking place in Jameyson's outfit won't interfere with his excellent ad work. Showbusiness needs more men like him and we hope he's not getting a swelled head from all the nice things the Club members are saying about him.

Swiss Family Brown

The well known Brown Brothers have been on the move.

Harry Brown, Publix exploitation man in Boston, Mass., with former headquarters at the Uptown Theatre, is now ensconced at the brand New Paramount.

Ray Brown, formerly district manager of Warner Theatres in Cleveland, Ohio, has been transferred to a similar post at Lima, Ohio.

Dick Brown, formerly in charge of the Enright Theatre, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa., is now at the helm of the Warner Theatre, Ambridge, Pa.

All of which indicates that members of this prominent family of showmen cannot be held down in their climb up the ladder.

HIEHLE MADE HOME TOWN KIDS HAPPY WITH A TOY PARTY

Although somewhat belated as to news, it's never too late to mention a worthwhile piece of work and we're here to say that Ed Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatre, Newark, Ohio, made a whole lot of kids happy when he presented them with the results of a toy matinee.

The turnout for the above event was so heavy that Mrs. Ed had to come down to the theatre to help him out and we can see by a tear sheet from the local newspaper that the affair rated a three-column photo on the front page. In that photo, standing amid a small mountain of donations, is G. E. Hayward, an official of Midland Theatres.

We don't believe Ed Hiehle will hold it against us for getting this in print at this time for he knows that these things happen in the best of families. We've had numerous other occasions to write about the excellent work he does out in Newark and will promise to do better with his next contribution.

WINTER SEASON NOT SO CRUEL IN MAINE, SAYS GEO. FENNELLY

Lest some of his fellow Club members have the impression that winter life is just a bowl of hot grog and a generous supply of coonskin coverings up in Millinocket, Me., where George Fennelly manages the Opera House, we hasten to assure those misinformed Round Tablers that the Gulf Stream is also having its effect on that climate. There's only been a few feet of snow on the streets this season and no more than below zero temperature has been registered, all of which is something of a break.

Kiddies don't mind winter anyway and Fennelly has been doing well with his Kiddie Club by issuing a membership numbered for punch marks from 1 to 6. On every seventh matinee the holder is entitled to see the show free of charge. The card is strictly for use at matinees and when the youngster signs he or she promises, "To Be Always Polite; to always be courteous; to look around at crossings, and to attend matinees whenever possible."

Fennelly operates in a town where the manufacture of paper contributes the greater source of revenue. About 650 tons of newsprint are turned out every day and when the mills are running full force everything is hunky-dory. At any rate, the kiddie club helps out on the week and this little bit of news from Millinocket may serve as a reminder to some other member who may have pigeonholed the idea of organizing a similar move.

Don't wait until the snow all melts before you write your club again, George, but keep your fellow showmen posted on all activities up your way. How about that Easter for Spring show you've planned? When you put it over, let's hear the details.

FASHION SHOW REPRINTS!

There are a limited number of reprints on how to stage a Fashion Show and Revue which appeared in the issue of March 5th. Take advantage of this opportunity to put one of them in your files.

First come first served and no extra ones will be printed after the present supply is exhausted. (Note: Reprints on Stage Weddings, Club indexes, Kiddie Clubs, etc., are kept on hand for the benefit of Club members only. Let us know what you require and we'll do everything possible to assist.)

CHENOWETH HAS BEEN SELLING HORTON OUT AT HOLLYWOOD HOUSE

Walter Chenoweth, one of our newly-elected members and manager of the Hollywood Playhouse, Hollywood, Calif., may not be selling pictures right at this time but he's been using picture-selling methods to herald Edward Everett Horton's return to the stage.

On the occasion of his last show, which ran for the comfortable period of eight weeks, in addition to a miling list of 10,000 and airplane stunt was used that had the blase Hollywoodites craning their necks. Some said it couldn't be done but pilot Cecil Allen, who flew the Pacific several years ago, flew all around the city with a big banner at the end of 110 feet.

Another gag he used in connection with the Horton vehicle, "Private Lives," was to issue a folder with front cover headed with the title. A group of football players were shown huddled and below the cut was the copy, "Of the Players." Inside were names of every player on the squad of one of the universities and a brief note with each as to age, weight, position, etc. It made a handy reference for the football fans.

Next time we hear from Chenoweth we'll be able to advise his friends whether he's still publicizing legit or is back in the picture field. 'Till then we'll sign off.

FRANK CELOUD DID HIS BIT FOR NEEDY OUT IN SEDALIA, MO.

Evidence of what the motion picture fraternity is doing in the way of supporting city welfare organizations, etc., continues to make its appearance at Club headquarters, this time from Frank J. Celoud, manager of the Liberty and Sedalia theatres, Sedalia, Mo.

The small photo on this page shows the large collection of clothing and food turned in as the result of a special morning matinee held a short time ago and shared in by the City Welfare, County Welfare and the Salvation Army. A member from each of these organizations formed a committee of three for distribution of the articles to the needy.

All employees of the theatre, including the unionized operator, donated their service and the film exchange furnishes all film gratis. To sum it all up, the theatre was actually set back but a small sum for the entire event and benefited through a great deal of front page publicity and good will. This is another instance of what the boys are doing to help out in the present emergency and we're glad to record Celoud's contribution.

IS ADVERTISING NECESSARY?

Honoré Offers His Views To Substantiate Claim That It Is Of Vital Importance!

Hal Honoré is the director of advertising and publicity for the Fox Theatres in Berkeley, Californit. Naturally, in a job like that he is well acquainted with the particular subject under discussion. Following the trend of thought conveyed by the previous articles in the series, Hal thought it was time to inject his own views into the argument. So here they are and at the same time let's welcome this new contributor to the Club pages.

WELL, here's my honest opinion . . . and a few examples demonstrating the value of advertising as a whole. In answering the question I am hereby trying, in my own words, to cover a vital subject in a manner that includes advertising as a whole, whether it pertains to the theatre or any other business.

Perhaps the best way to arrive at any definite conclusion is first to have a better understanding of the word "advertising." Webster defines it as follows . . . "To give public notice of, inform the public by means of newspapers, posters, circulars, etc. To publish, post or circulate an advertisement."

Webster seems to have covered the ground pretty thoroughly. There doesn't seem to be any question as to the meaning of advertising. Can you imagine a theatre or, as a matter of fact, any business existing without informing the public in any way of its nature?

It is safe to say that every thriving business can trace its success to the advertising its product has been given. Whether the advertising consists of newspaper or handbill reading matter or whether it is in the form of a display in a street-front window does not matter since it is all under the heading "advertising and exploitation."

When you or I go into the corner drug store to buy something to mix that little fizz with what do we ask for? . . . I'll bet it's white rock or lime rickey nine times out of ten.

I recently conducted an advertising campaign on a picture entitled "It Pays to Advertise." The main event of this campaign was a four-page tabloid newspaper throughout which were scattered over 20 small nationally known trademarks. The percentage of readers who successfully named these insignias was proof that persistent advertising over a number of years had educated the public.

Answer These Questions!

IF there are any persons who still honestly believe that advertising is unnecessary let them think these questions over. . . .

"What would happen if storekeepers and theatres would take down all their signs, displays, and keep their business a secret?"

"Why has the popular Neon tube-lighting been adopted so extensively if not for advertising value?"

"How would you select the shows you attend if not by reading the advertising that is circulated about them?"

. . . "Furthermore, if it were not for an inborn desire, created by the advertising which you had seen, why did you choose one particular show in preference to another?"

"If you were to start any sort of business, even if it were only a lemonade stand on a public highway, what would your first impulse be after securing the ingredients for the thirst-quencher?" . . . I'll bet you a season's pass that you'd want to paint some sort of sign so that you could tell a waiting world what you had concealed in that jug on the stand. . . . If you didn't you can wager that there would be plenty of lemonade left over at the close of day.

The above examples are only a few of the many that might be used to point out the why's and wherefore's in connection with the topic of the day.

Advertising Makes Them!

IN closer proximity to the theatre business, especially the motion picture exhibition phase of it, comes this question. . . . "Where would the unknown star be today if it hadn't been for advertising and exploitation?"

By "unknown star" I mean the new actor or actress who came into the cinema world overnight on a wave of talkie popularity, names that were looked upon rather skeptically by a theatre-going public who sought their film-fare by the old-established roster of names.

I well remember the lobby posters in a leading San Francisco theatre in advance of Maurice Chevalier's "Innocents of Paris." Chevalier at that time was an unknown quantity. No one had ever heard of him before. As a matter of fact, the correct pronunciation of his name was also a mystery. Under every name posted in the theatre lobby in prime-grade analysis was the explanatory guide, "She-val-yay." . . . And so . . . by steady and careful advertising, coupled with a sterling performance by the actor, the name of Maurice Chevalier was accepted by a film-going public who had never dreamed that the French personality had ever existed.

In a like manner such stars as James Dunn, Boris Karloff, Joe E. Brown, Sylvia Sidney and Clark Gable were accepted by audiences who were devotees of only such well known players as Mary Pickford, Dolores Costello, Monte Blue, William S. Hart and Dustin Farnum. Of course, capable performances on the part of new film players has done its share in placing them where they are today, but where would the exhibitor be when pioneering these names if he kept their identity a secret?

WHO dares admit frankly and honestly that the exhibitor can long endure if he omits advertising and exploitation from his activities? There's one sure way of finding out. Cut out all advertising and exploitation over a period of months. Let your public lose interest in your theatre. Allow them to seek other fields of amusement, to drift away from their accustomed rendezvous and roam the streets in search of some bit of advertising so that they might decide what to see. Don't kid yourself into believing that Mr. and Mrs. Public is going to take a chance on your attraction. "Take a Chance Week" might be all right once a year, but not every week. A buying public wants to buy a known quantity and the only way you can sell the stuff you hang on your screen is by high-pressure advertising and persistent efforts along the lines of intelligent publicity and exploitation. Theatres do not sell a commodity. People can actually live without them. Many people do, and will continue to, unless they are attracted by some freak of exploitation or some powerful urge stimulated by attractive advertising.

A theatre can exist without advertising only if people are forced to go there because of a lack of entertainment. . . . and you can bet your hat that they are not.

The secret to success in the exhibitor's field is good product that is properly exploited and advertised by some one who is capable of selling it.

MILLER IS MAKING SUCCESSFUL DRIVE FOR KIDDIE TRADE

Keeping in mind the theory that the kiddie audience of today is the adult audience of tomorrow, George Miller, Smalley Theatre manager at Hamilton, N. Y., has recently been making a play for the younger element by putting on a Harmonica Contest and taking the necessary steps to organize a Mickey Mouse Club.

His first step to round up harmonica players in the community consisted of getting in touch with a film company in New York which has sponsored these affairs for some time past. The advertising director saw that he was supplied with special one-sheets and window cards and that the manufacturer of the instruments sent the harmonicas and four dozen miniatures.

Next he planted stories in as many newspapers that would use them and followed that move by circularizing the public schools with a folder describing rules and regulations of the coming events. The idea was to enter as many players as possible for the trying-out show and then hold elimination shows for the Grand Finals. When the finals are over he plans to organize a Harmonica Band and put it on the air and in other events as a publicity stunt for the theatre.

For the benefit of those who contemplate organizing a Mickey Mouse Club it may or may not be news that permission must be secured from the Home Mouse Office before any regulation buttons, etc., carrying copyrighted insignia can be used. At least Miller found this to be a fact and we believe that this has been touched on before in this department. A fee is charged for the charter and we understand this includes a variety of advertising matter, etc. At any rate, he has gone ahead with his plan of organization and we'll tell you more about the Mickey Mice up in Hamilton at the next writing.

Information relative to the Harmonica contests has also been set down from time to time, but for the unitiated we will state that it is necessary to get in touch with Educational Film exchanges, New York City, in order to put them on both well and inexpensively. Educational has a direct tie-up with the Hohner people and are in a better position to lend the right sort of co-operation than any others we know of at the present.

Next time we write of Miller's activities we'll be able to impart further information on his drive for kiddie patronage.

A NOVEL AD!

Thank Heaven There Are No Ticket Speculators in Flint

TODAY, at 1 p. m. The Regent Theater will present prior to Detroit showing, George Arliss in his outstanding screen success, "The Man Who Played God."

"The Mon Who Played God" is now ploying at the Warner Theater on Broadway, New York ot $2 per seot. Mony tickets ore in the honds of speculators who get as high as $4 ond $5 each for them.

THANK HEAVEN THERE ARE NO TICKET SPECULATORS IN FLINT!

"The Mon Who Ployed God" is too important o production for onything to limit its presentation to only those who can offord to poy high prices for their entertoinment.

THE REGENT THEATER WILL NOT RAISE ITS PRICES FOR "THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD," AND WE CERTAINLY WILL NOT LET SPECULATORS RAISE THEM FOR US!

We want every man, woman and child who is old enough to understand, to see this great masterpiece—to live with Mr. Arliss through thrill-packed episodes of life at its heights and depths—to experience the ONE outstanding motion picture thrill of the last ten years—to leave the Regent theater with something you'll never forget.

Nothing will ever fade the glorious fires of "The Millionaire" but a finer picture awaits you in "The Man Who Played God." It is the inspired masterpiece of a great actor whose personal ambition is to make each production better than the last.

Seldom does the W. S. Butterfield management personally endorse a motion picture, but we recommend "The Man Who Played God" UNRESERVEDLY as one of the five best motion pictures since the invention of talking pictures.

We Urge You to See It.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Last week we gave you two examples of straight art work from Sid Smith, and, we suggested that you place those two posters alongside of these two from the shop of Herb Simpson so as to get a comparison between the so-called high-light art work and the straight portrait style.

Herb is a past-master in the art of theatre poster work and his samples have graced the pages of several leading art publications. We consider it a privilege to be included in the publications to which he contributes and feel certain that many artists are finding his, as well as the other contributors' art work, interesting as well as helpful in the making up of posters for the thousands of theatres using their work.

Let's have many more contributions to this series until every practical theatre artist is included in the group who will be maintaining the series.

AUDITIONS NEW GAG TRIED BY HART FOR OLD AMATEUR NIGHT

The amateur night idea has been given a slightly different twist by H. E. Hart, general manager of the Smith and Hart Theatres, Auburn, Ind., in that this stunt has been given a new name and method of handling.

He advertises "Local Auditions," generally on Tuesday, and lists the attractions by name and nature. An entry blank, carried in ad and also printed for distribution, carries space for name, 'phone, address, qualifications, and two lines for names of friends who may be interested in securing a personal interview and audition. The talent is sifted out in the personal interviews and the best selected for the advertised appearance.

When describing the different numbers to be put on by local talent, Hart uses an intimate touch to the copy in newspaper ads. After all they all live in the same town and it will be seen that this is a good angle not to overlook. The stunt is boosting trade for him and we're taking this means to acquaint his fellow showmen with this fact.

Randforce Briefs

Through Monty MacLevy, publicity director of Randforce Theatres, Brooklyn, N. Y., we learn that:

Supervisor Erwin Gold put over a Big Holiday Week at the Walker.

That Paul Binstock has an all around utility man—organist, artist, etc., all rolled into one.

That Supervisor Harry Davey recently got up a real snappy display on "Champ" at the Parthenon.

That Felix Mayer of the Culver utilized his mirrors for "Big House" and they looked like a million.

That Supervisor George Lambert tied-up with the Legion for lobby decorations on Washington's Birthday. A gag to keep in mind for similar occasions.

That Manager Berman of the Alba is turning out some mighty fine fronts.

SHIRLEY ADVERTISES FOUR ATTRACTIONS AT ONCE IN SCHENECTADY

(REPRODUCTION ON RIGHT)

What appears to be somewhat of a new wrinkle in theatre advertising is being done by William "Bill" Shirley, well known Mohawk Valley showman and manager of the State Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y.

He not only advertises his current show but includes in a full length, three column space his attractions for the next three weeks. One-half the space is devoted to current picture and the balance to coming attractions. Shirley has been following this policy for some little time and believes that he is getting a most effective reader reaction by virtue of the extra large display. You will note by the accompanying cut that his copy leads off with the line, "We are pleased to announce four more outstanding pictures," and this is followed by ad for current picture and other boxed ads in equal space. Use of the heavy black rule is effectively brought out in this particular ad.

We are at loss to advise just how often Shirley makes this sort of a plug for reason that this information is not disclosed in data we have at hand. It is presumed, however, that this extra amount of space is used in practical follow-up order. We will be glad to hear further from him on this subject, or theatre advertising in general as he is practicing it in Schenectady.

ARTISTS ARE WARNED AGAINST SAMENESS IN STYLE BY C. C. CASSADY

Poster artists, like any other craftsmen, develop certain characteristics in their work that brand the finished product as peculiarly their own, thinks C. C. Cassady, artist at Zaring's Egyptian Theatre, Indianapolis, and should therefore guard against unconscious duplication of style over a given period.

With that thought in mind, he has been trying out the idea of alternating his water color work with pen and ink and pastel crayon and believes that when the old work is again brought out it gains a new effectiveness.

We have a few snap-shots at hand illustrating some of Cassady's work in pastel, and pen and ink, but, unfortunately, these are too small and too faint for a faithful reproduction. We're sorry that we can't show them to you all, for we believe his point is well taken and that customers will grow accustomed to sameness in poster design as well as any other article seen from day to day. We will hope that this Club member will send larger and clearer reproductions of his work so that others of his craft may get a better idea of what he's doing in the poster line.

DE HAVEN IS DOING GOOD EXPLOITATION WORK IN THE BRONX

Theatre patrons and merchants of that section of New York City known as the Bronx must be fully aware of the presence of one Milo De Haven, who in addition to managing the Burke Theatre, handles publicity for all five houses on the circuit. We make that statement after a glance at some data concerning recent activities of this enterprising showman, all of which carries ample evidence to support our theory.

Among his post-holiday show-selling efforts was a tie-up with a local auto dealer for the give-away of one of those small, deluxe autos that a youngster can pump around the neighborhood. The dealer paid for the auto, 300 window cards, 5,000 heralds, mailing of 2,500 programs, lobby decorations, and the announcement trailer. It didn't cost the house anything except the showing of the trailer and time spent making the contact. The give-away was handled in the usual fashion.

But while on the subject of give-aways let us tell you about a real one, in which thirty-seven representative merchants of the neighborhood took part. Gifts ranging from a silver salt and pepper set to an expensive radio, and amounting to over $700 in value, were promoted for the occasion, despite the fact that a couple of outside promoters had put over a questionable deal only a short time before. At any rate, the stunt went over in bang-up style and a check-up revealed that it was one of the best in the Burke's history. Again, the stunt was handled in the usual way.

Other stunts recently used included Thursday night "Opportunity" affairs, open to every boy and girl in the neighborhood capable of singing or dancing; a listing of guest's name in weekly issues of programs; issue of a book mark to advertise "Alice in Wonderland" (a children's talkie); and the inclusion of 4 acts of vaudeville on the Burke program.

What with looking after vaudeville, two feautres, promotional schemes and whatnot, De Haven manages to steal a little sleep occasionally, we hear, and he might be using that portion of his time to make a few tie-ups with Bronx night clubs. Anyway, we wanted to let his fellow showmen know that he had been doing a lot of good work in a neighborhood where exploitation is none too easily put across. No section of New York lends itself readily to promotional activities and we think De Haven is in line for a few words of praise.

Club Index for Month of February

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of February. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

JUST A BOWL FULL OF GARDEN PEAS WAS GAG HARRY WADE USED

A bowl of peas, common garden variety and dried, was the means of furnishing considerable amusement for patrons and attracting advance attention on "Broadminded" for Harry Wade, manager of the Palace Theatre, Phoenix City, Ala.

The accompanying photo will convey an idea of the display Wade used to get his message over to the public and he tells us that it only set the house back $4.28. Items were as follows: board, $1.50; metallic paper, 75c.; two light sockets for opening of display, 30c.; wire, 10c.; two bulbs, 20c.; painting, $1.50; writing paper and two pencils, .08c. The peas cost 10c. and the bowl was borrowed. The cost can be cut to $3.68 if you happen to have the light sockets around the theatre.

The deal is open to anyone and all one has to do is guess the number of peas in the bowl. Simple little matter, really, and you must try it some time. It's great fun for the public, Wade states, to say nothing of the kick the theatre manager gets when he counts the peas. Seriously, however, only two days passed and there were 150 citizens of the town attempting the solution. So you can judge for yourselves as to the amount of interest this old gag created.

This is the first time we've heard from Wade since he joined the Club several weeks ago. At that time he was manager of the Opelika Theatre, Opelika, Ala. Now that he's settled down in a new town and new post, we'll expect to hear a lot more about his activities in show-business.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

There's excellent reason to believe that C. H. Simpson knew just what he was doing when he decided that show-business was the line he wanted to follow, for he didn't enter the game until 40 years of age. That was 15 years ago; so, after all, he's a veteran, any way you look at it.

C. H. Simpson

Yes, any man's a veteran who traces back to the time he played the schools and court houses with a Powers "A" and carbide outfit, and this experience preceded the construction of an air-dome in Millen, Ga. Since then Simpson has had charge of the Grand Theatre in Hawkinsville, Ga., and today he is the owner of the Princess, an up-to-date house in Millen, Ga.

This member of our Club was born in Williamstown, Ky., and educated in the schools of that city. He is married, the father of one child, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and if you ask him if he's in this business for keeps, he'll give you an affirmative answer.

A WEEKLY AD!

WHENEVER you spring an ad like this one on the so-called big-shot ad men they are most always certain to turn up their noses and leave the impression that it is the rankest sort of advertising. Yet, were these big-shot ad men ever placed in a position where they had to handle a situation like Smalley's Fort Plain Theatre, they would soon learn that this is pretty good advertising and almost equal with the bigger and better style they are more familiar with.

H. C. Richardson is the manager of the Fort Plain house and the man responsible for these ads. As far as we are concerned—and we know there are several thousand other showmen who feel exactly the same way about it—this is darned good advertising and the style that is best fitted for the circulation of the paper in which it is used.

SIMMONS INSERTED AN ATTRACTIVE AD IN HIS NEWSPAPER

Position and character of a newspaper ad recently inserted by Thos. J. Simmons, manager of the Dunlap Theatre, Clarksville, Ark., is, we believe, particularly worthy of attention from Club members similarly situated.

Across the entire width of the top portion of page and ruled top and bottom with scotch rule, appeared the following message:

"Folks:

On Thursday and Friday, it is our pride to offer for your entertainment and approval, Wallace Beery and Jackie (Skippy) Cooper supported by Irene Rich and Roscoe (when he stutters you roar) Ates in the M-G-M masterpiece, 'The Champ.'

If ever there was a picture to flash upon the talking screen to compare with 'The Champ' then I missed it, and I'm thankful I did not miss this one. And that is exactly what you are going to say when you see it.

I want every person in Clarksville and Johnson County to see this picture, and after you do, sit down and write me a few lines of what you think of it. To show my appreciation I will send a pair of free guest tickets to the first ten people who do this, because I want to get your reaction to this marvelous production."

(Signed)

The above was an ad that could not fail to arrest attention from the reader and we'll venture to state that it was digested by every one. The reason we mentioned "similarly situated" in the opening paragraph was that only certain newspapers will let an advertiser get away with a full width ad at the top of the page. But your paper may be one of these, and so we're passing Simmons' contribution along for what appears to be a good gag when you have the right picture.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES GAVE TENT SHOW THE WORKS, SAYS JOHNSON

Out-of-state business enterprises are not taking any money away from communities if Floridians have anything to say about it, at least such is the case in Orlando, where an instance is reported to us by H. M. Johnson, manager of the Mt. Dora Theatre, Mt. Dora.

Local authorities of Orlando, according to a newspaper clipping, made brief but effective reply to the request of a "tent show" to exhibit there for duration of the County Fair, even though several hundred dollars were offered for the privilege. The Mayor informed the proprietor of the show that a city ordinance would not permit the erection of a tent such as described, and supplemented his remarks with the thought that the show would probably take much more away from the city than it brought in. He denied he was protecting the Sparks interests, operators of motion picture theatres in the city, or local merchants.

The newspaper spread the story over the front page and supported the Mayor's move with a strong editorial, so it's a fair prediction that no tent shows will depart with any of Orlando's coin during the present administration. Perhaps other Club members will benefit through Johnson's thoughtfulness in sending along the above account,

Notice to Members:

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.—THANK YOU.

MORE SEATS AROUND THE TABLE!

JAMES T. McMANUS is now a full fledged member of this organization through the good offices of George Heeley, assistant manager of the Marlboro Theatre, Marlboro, Mass. Sort of a reverse situation, to be sure, for McManus is Heeley's boss. This new Round Tabler knows his way around theatres and has been in show business for many years. Hence, we firmly believe that all his fellow showmen are in for some real worthwhile contributions from this source. Thanks, George, for your letter and ask Mack to give an account of himself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES I. McFARLANE has the job of assistant manager at the Ogden Theatre, Bronx, New York City, and comes well recommended to us by his boss, Louis Pincus. McFarlane has been with the Ogden for one year and was promoted to his present post from doorman. The Bronx is one of the few sections in New York where shows are still exploited, hence we'll be looking for some news of what's going on at the Ogden. And what about you Louis? Tell us something about what you've been doing.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARROLL COFFEL manages the Strand Theatre, a Publix house out in Crawfordsville, Ind., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member of our Club. There are many of his brother Publix managers in this outfit and we're mighty glad to include Coffel's name among them. All are hard-working, go-getting showmen and there's no reason to believe that Coffel will not help keep up the standard many of them have set in the matter of contributing live-wire show tips to this department. Start the ball a-rolling, Carroll, and we'll be on the receiving end.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM M. WEISS manages the Capitol Theatre over in Passaic, N. J., and we take this occasion to sound a note of welcome to this new Round Tabler. Help keep Jersey on the show map of the world, Weiss, and you can do this by sending in your quota of ideas which will be helpful to your brother showmen. Many fellow members in your state are telling the world through these pages that they're on the job when it comes to selling shows. Your fellow Club members want to know what you're doing and here's the place to tell 'em all about it.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN H. NYLEN is another Jerseyite to become a member of the Round Table and he hails from the well known town of Englewood, where he manages the Plaza Theatre. He's a Skouras man and has three changes weekly to look after. That ought to be plenty for any one manager to look after and should be productive of many an idea that we can pass along to his fellows. What has been going on in show-business over in Englewood, John? Shoot along some dope on how the old box office is holding up these days.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE KRASKA is the manager of the Fine Arts Theatre, a house devoted to the showing of foreign films and one that's unique in its field as far as the city of Boston is concerned. This new member of the Round Table Club recently celebrated the first annivrsary of his house and we hope he drops us a line so we can tell his fellow Clubmen what means he used to exploit the occasion. We have evidence at hand that he installed a bar in the lobby for the serving of bock beer during the showing of "Bockbierfest," a German film.

E. H. BARKER hails from out in Plymouth, Indiana, where he has the job of assisting his boss with the management of the Gem Theatre. At this writing he, too, joins the ranks of assistant managers in this outfit and we wish him luck in his climb up the ladder. Follow the Club pages, Barker, and digest all the information that is carried each week. We know of no better way to hasten the time when you'll become a full-fledged manager and Round Tabler. This recipe has been tried and proven. Let's go!

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HERMAN KANTOR is another New York showman to become a member of the Round Table Club and he holds forth as manager of the Lido Theatre, the Bronx. His house is located at one of the busiest intersections in that part of the big city and we'll be interested to hear what he is doing these days to keep the seats filled. Shoot along an account of that last stunt you put over, Herman, and we'll see that your fellow showmen are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. L. "BOB" COLLIER is skipper of the Marion Theatre, a Publix house at Marion, Ohio, and we have also received his application for membership. Step up and meet your fellow Round Tablers, Bob, and tell them you're glad to be a member of the livest group of showmen the world over. Now that you are one of us, we want to count on you to contribute your share of helpful ideas to this department. Shoot some of them along to headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ARNOLD G. HAMEL is in charge of the Rialto Theatre up in East Rochester, N. Y., and his name was proposed for membership in this Club by Ken McMahon. Now that you're one of us, Arnold, take a little time off when the opportunity comes along and let us know what is going on in show-business in your town so we can pass along the good word to the rest of our gang.

WILLIAM S. SAMUEL is the assistant exploitation manager at the Grand and Lyric Theatres, Ennis, Texas, and a cordial Club greeting is also extended this new member from the Lone Star State. Texas is chock full of live-wire managers belonging to this organization, Samuel, and we hope that we'll often see your name mentioned in this department. Send us an account of that last gag you pulled to good advantage and we'll pass the idea along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL E. FENELON hails from that ritzy corner of Long Island known as West Hampton Beach, where he skippers the Hampton Star Theatre. With his application for membership at hand the Island is now dotted from one end to the other with representatives of this organization and we're mighty glad to include Fenelon's name among the clam-digging contingent. But they only go after clams down there when the show has been sold, and you can believe us when we tell you that a lot of the Long Island boys know how to put 'em over. We'll be awaiting further word from Paul.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

KENNETH C. DOUGLAS has charge of the Plymouth Theatre in Plymouth, N. H., and we also wish to acknowledge his application for membership in this Club. New England, like many other parts of this country, is one of the strongholds of this organization and we are glad to have Douglas for a representative in his town. Now that he's joined, we hope he'll catch the "spirit" and send along some information concerning his recent picture campaigns. We'll do the rest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. E. STOFLET hails from the Blue Grass country of Harlan, Kentucky, and at this writing he is also in line for introduction to his host of fellow showmen. Glad to have you in this big army of theatre managers, Stoflet, and please see that you keep up the reputation Kentuckians have established in the matter of representation in this department. Shoot along a yarn about that last show-selling stunt you pulled down in your town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD NEWMAN is another member of the A. H. Schwartz staff of theatre men over in Brooklyn, N. Y., to become a Round Tabler and he has the job of assisting Lenny Freund with the management of the Albemarle Theatre, Flatbush. His boss is also a member of this organization and now we have 100 per cent representation at the Albemarle. Keep plugging along Harold, and we'll hope the day will soon arrive when it will become our duty to send you the certificate that will make you a full-fledged Clubman. With Lenny's able coaching, this should not be very long.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. F. MILLETT is the owner-manager of the State Theatre, Bridgton, Me., and the usual Club welcome is also in order for this new member. We note that he has plans under way for the give-away of a de luxe radio and electric refrigerator, both of which testify to this showman's ability as a promoter of worthwhile gifts. We hope he will drop us a line when he finishes with these campaigns and give us the lowdown on any new angles used in publicizing the events. Unlike the rank and file of theatres, the State reaches its peak during the summer and then we'll be looking for some hot news from Bridgton.

THE EMBLEM OF PERFECT SOUND
RCA PHOTOPHONE INC SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE IN TEXAS.

My Dear "J. C.":
If you fail to find my weekly letter in the next issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, don't be alarmed. You see, I am hopping off today to attend the Allied States convention in Detroit and next week I'll be fraternizing with the M.P.T.O.A. crowd in Washington. After that session I expect to be on the jump more or less continuously, which won't give me much time to set myself in any one spot. But I'll be back later on with some convention slants. I sure have enjoyed the privilege of writing to you and extolling the virtues of RCA Photophone sound reproducing equipment, and am confident that my messages have fallen upon fertile ground. Knowing how well you stand with exhibitors all over the country, I felt that a series of letters published on your page would be widely read. Your generous responses have been greatly appreciated. I am sorry you didn't find time to call on Miss Swanson, Miss Harding, Miss Davies or Miss Crawford, for I am told they are delighted with the performance of the Photophone apparatus that is installed in their homes. By the way, "J. C.," when you heave to in Austin, Texas, drop into the office of the State Board of Control, which recently bought twelve Photophone sound reproducing units for installation in state institutions. These big state boards seem to think pretty well of Photophone apparatus. Our district manager, Chet Sawin, up in Boston, sold fourteen complete units to Massachusetts. Speaks pretty well for Photophone equipment, doesn't it? Well, so long, "J. C.", keep up the good work.

Yours truly,

G. K. RUDULPH.

P. S.—When you get to El Paso, beware of Juarez. I've been there.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Hollywood

DEAR HERALD:

We went out to visit "Chic" Sale today at his Beverly Hills home. "Chic" recently returned from a week's vaudeville engagement and on his return was confined to his bed with a severe cold bordering on pneumonia. There are just one hundred reasons why we like "Chic." He is a swell fellow to meet, has a lovely home and a delightful family consisting of one wife, two sons and two daughters. The other ninety-nine reasons don't matter.

"Chic" asked us if we had seen his latest picture, "The Expert," and we told him we hadn't. He said it was playing at the Warner theatre down in L. A. and he wished we would go and see it and tell him what we thought about it. We did, and, next to "Emma," this picture gave us the most enjoyable 90 minutes we have had in a long time. And we might add this, there isn't a suggestive remark or line in the picture. We are not Chic's press agent, but we want to say that, in our personal opinion, there isn't a better or cleaner actor in Hollywood than he, and there are a lot of them here that are both good and clean. Warner Brothers did not make any mistake when they made "The Expert."

We have made a lot of bonehead suggestions in our erratic career, but we believe that the prize jar of pickles should go to William G. McAdoo for his reported suggestion to Senator Walsh that the Government tax the bootleggers and dope peddlers to the extent of their intake as a means of raising revenue.

Up to now, the Government hasn't been able to locate more than one bootlegger and one dope peddler out of every 100 operating in this country.

Should they be able to locate all of them they would have no means of knowing the amount to levy, and to levy this kind of a tax would be to put the Government's stamp of approval on a nefarious, outlawed business.

As a sample of the luck the Government would have, it is only necessary to cite the Al Capone case wherein the Government was lucky that it didn't have to pay all the costs of the prosecution in the end and get nothing for experience. The suggestion to tax criminals is another sample of "statesmanship" of which we have had altogether too much of late, but then Mc. may have wanted to get his name before the public before it was entirely washed out of the Pullman linen.

Our theory of the proper way to tax bootleggers and dope peddlers is to give them about 10 years in which to view the scenery through the steel grating or repeal the Eighteenth Amendment and give them a chance to earn an honest living. Had this tax proposal come from some one in the Fiji Islands instead of from an ex-secretary of the United States Treasury we wouldn't have been surprised.

If the taxing commission would forget about trying to load the theatre men down with an additional burden and would require a revenue stamp of one cent a mile on all steamship tickets for those going to Europe and other foreign ports to squander American dollars, it might help some.

There, now, the light is breaking and morning seems near at hand. We learn that Ben Holmes is soon to put in production a number of one-reelers based upon a series of famous poems by Whittier, Riley, Guest, Kipling, et al., with important stars and proper atmosphere. We understand that "Chic" Sale is to do "Whispering Bill," Henry Walthall will appear in Poe's "The Raven," and Harry Carey will make "Alaska."

This begins to look like we were due for some real entertainment, and here's hoping that the scheme won't miscarry. Why some one hadn't thought of this before now is another of those clouded mysteries that so often appear in this business.

We are indebted to the publicity departments of Warner Brothers, Paramount, M-G-M and Universal for a large collection of star photographs. Our daughter Marjorie sent us positive instructions not to leave Hollywood until we had secured a large collection of star photographs for the lobby of their theatre, and now, if the others will come to our relief in like manner, we will leave Hollywood with the kindliest feelings for the entire picture fraternity and this whole doggone country.

We heard another radio crooner tonight and now we will have the nightmare for two weeks.

Clark Gable has been writing his life story from the cradle to the camera and, outside of riding the rods and wading a few mudholes on the way, his story reads like a fairy tale. It is not often the case that an excellent star is also an excellent writer, but Clark is both. There are several angles to Clark, the most important being that there is nothing upstage about him, he's as common as an old shoe and he treats you like you were one of the folks from his home town in Ohio. Ohio ought to be proud of him; Hollywood is.

MGM has now in production Eugene O'Neill's famous drama, "Strange Interlude," with May Robson, Norma Shearer and Clark Gable heading the cast.

With that kind of a story and with such an important cast the public has something to look forward to, for that should be a PICTURE.

The sun shone today for 10 minutes and every native Californian knelt in prayer for fear they were going to have another earthquake. Maybe that's when the sun kissed that orange. There is something peculiar about this California sun: it never kisses anything except in broad daylight where everybody can see it, although California has some sons that will kiss anybody at any time and any place, mostly in Hollywood.

Last night we slept with one sheet, two blankets and a heavy comforter over us and this morning they had to thaw us out with a blow-torch. HURRAH for NEBRASKA.

MUSIC AND TALENT

Sophie Tucker Sees Return To Straight Vaudeville Next

Appointment of Martin Beck, former Orpheum Circuit head, to direct RKO vaudeville, is regarded as fortuitous and highly significant by all vaudeville artists, according to Sophie Tucker, veteran performer, who just completed an extended booking at the RKO Palace, New York.

"Beck's name is synonymous with vaudeville," Miss Tucker said. "In the minds of vaudeville artists he means a new day for vaudeville, on straight programs and in picture theatres. Mr. Beck is associated in our minds with the prosperous, healthy days of vaudeville. He has been missing from the scene throughout its later and leaner years. We believe his understanding of and faith in vaudeville entertainment will speed the return of better days for vaudeville performers."

Miss Tucker said that there are unmistakable evidences of the increasing popularity of straight vaudeville with theatre audiences. "It is replacing presentation ideas," she said, "and is forcing a change in picture house stage shows which is definitely in the direction of a variety type of program."

Miss Tucker praised today's vaudeville theatre audiences, describing them as "youthful, enthusiastic and exceptionally friendly," adding: "They are the best guarantee that vaudeville will increase in popularity with time. Their attitude is infectious. They are particularly kind to me, who have been handed down to them by their parents as sort of an heirloom. My fan mail today is larger than ever."

Noted Dancer at Mastbaum

Maria Gamberelli, dancer of note, is in Philadelphia to direct rehearsals for her ballet at the Mastbaum. She appears as premiere danseuse in her first stage offering.

Warner Signs Stage Player

Helen Vinson, Broadway player now appearing in "The Fatal Alibi," has been signed by Warner for a role in "The Jewel Robbery," shortly to be made on the Coast for First National.

Two Install Stage Shows

The Capitol, in Steubenville, and the Temple, in Bellaire, Ohio, have installed stage shows to augment the film programs. Both are playing shows intact, booked independently.

Stage Revue at Fox Seattle

Fox West Coast will feature a stage revue, starring Fanny Brice, Phil Baker and Ted Healy at the Fox in Seattle during the week of March 13.

Radio Companies Chartered

Recent charters filed at the State House, Dover, Del., included the Ware Radio and Television Corporation, to perform and broadcast theatrical plays, dramas, etc., and Radio Productions Corporation, to do a general broadcasting, recording and transmitting business.

FRANCIS S. FARNEY

The above young man, better known as "Gus the Flying Organist," has been a featured organist in every Publix house from Montana to Texas and in the six years' time he has worked for them he has gained the title of "The West's Premier Organist."

He originally hails from Chicago, where he gained a good reputation, but is now at the Capitol theatre, Salt Lake City, and a feature attraction not only there but over radio station KSL as well.

"Gus" is a versatile organist and also an accomplished pianist and accordionist. He says he likes it "way out west" and intends to stay there.

"Sunshine Susie" Songs Help Sell British Picture

The English-made musical picture, "Sunshine Susie," produced by Gainsborough and to be distributed in America by RKO, has three numbers in it that had a great deal to do with its recent success in this country.

The numbers are "Today I Feel So Happy" (fox-trot), "Just Because I Lost My Heart to You" (ballad), and a comedy fox-trot called "I Have an Aunt Eliza." Harms, Inc., is the American distributor of these numbers.

Screen Players in Stock

A number of Hollywood's best known screen players are appearing in stock in Seattle, with the re-opening of the Moore, under the management of Kent Thompson and Howard Esary.

Dorothy Mackaill on Stage

Dorothy Mackaill has been booked for personal appearances at the Stanley, Pittsburgh and the Mastbaum, Philadelphia. She has been in Pittsburgh the week of March 4 and is in Philadelphia this week.

STAGE SHOWS

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ending February 26

The stage show, "Up in the Air," is a novel and exceptionally well staged presentation with Milton Berle acting as master of ceremonies and chief entertainer and with the Mastbaum Dancing Ensemble figuring prominently in the show.

The act opens with the launching of a big Zeppelin, with small airplanes seen through the scrim circling through the air. The Mastbaum Dancing Ensemble dressed as pilots put on a clever song and dance routine, at the conclusion of which the passengers climb into the cabin and with a realistic roar of motors the big ship rises.

Evelyn Hoey, star of "Fifty Million Frenchmen," gives one of her famous "Minnie, the Moocher" impersonations and sings some characteristic songs, enthusiastically received.

An elaborate act is built up around the adagio dancing of Dolores, Douglas and Eddie. Against a background of brilliant futuristic circles, Dolores is seen poised between the two men and the Dancing Ensemble to gay gypsy costumes with be-ribboned tambourines is dancing a lively Spanish number.

Harry Burns and Company give a lively comedy sketch which is well received though there is nothing particularly outstanding about it.

Milton Berle, "The Palace Jester," makes a great hit, particularly with the feminine patrons. He sings, dances, pantomimes, wisecracks and impersonates and is one of the most popular masters of ceremonies seen at the Mastbaum for some time.

As their share in this "Up in the Air" show, Beth Pitt and her balloon girls stage a beautiful and artistic dance. Six girls in white draperies are seen with a large multi-colored balloon poised on up-stretched fingertips. Suddenly the stage is filled with girls carrying balloons of every color imaginable. They execute a fantastic dance. Beth Pitt does a charming ballet dance and jumps rope with a string of illuminated red balloons. What appear to be balloon trees in the rear of the stage come to life and prove to be girls whose arms are filled with balloons. Festoons of pastel colored globes are lowered from above and the whole stage is filled with myriads of balloons, the beautiful lighting aiding in producing an exceptionally artistic effect.

Salt Lake City Orpheum

Week ending February 27

The stage presentation offered this week offers a remarkable display of ability, personality and genuine humor. Opening strongly with the musical and terpsichorean festivities of Robinson and DeWitt and their adequate company, Ada Brown's offering of syncopation, southern style, continues the excellent quality of the performance. Ferry Corwey, musical clown, adds his novelty and humor, increasing the general good feeling, and "Pop" Cameron and his "family" of clever juvenile troupers, with their riotous fun, wind up an exceptionally agreeable program which leaves the audience well satisfied.

A highly satisfactory crowd has been entertained here this week due to the exceptionally good vaudeville bill and the sensational exploitation of the murder mystery picturization of Edgar Allan Poe's "Murders of the Rue Morgue."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Well, folks, I sure had a surprise when I went to the Noon-Day Club luncheon the other day. . . . Who was there but one of the out-of-town members, Art Brown, . . . better known as "Brownie the Maple Sugar Kid." . . . Brownie has been at the Paramount, Charlottesville, Va., for the past four months and is in town for a few days, then he goes to Richmond, Virginia, to be featured organist at the Byrd theatre . . .

I had the pleasure recently of meeting that gentleman from "dear ol' Lunnon," Jimmy Campbell, of the well known team of Campbell and Connelly, song writers and publishers, and was most agreeably impressed. . . .Campbell was beaming with enthusiasm over the team's latest effort, "By the Fireside," of which the Robbins Music Corporation has just acquired the American publishing rights. . . . It's a peach of a tune and when Rudy Vallee heard it he immediately made it his new theme song. . . .

Billy Barnes, who recently started work at the Capitol, Winchester, Va., in the short time he has been there has made himself plenty popular . . . so popular in fact that two afternoons and one evening a week one-half hour programs are devoted exclusively to patrons' request numbers. . . . Ernest Hauser, former concert orchestra conductor at the RKO Majestic, San Antonio, still is kept busy with his Alamo National Bank program and Chevrolet Chronicles Orchestra, both of which he supervises. He presents them over station WOAL twice a week. . . . Hal Friedman, former organist and before that a music conductor, is back to his first love, directing. . . . Hal has a "hot" dance band now and is doing a lot of work around Boston. . . .

Harry Bush, Chicago representative of Sherman Clay, who has been in the music game for the past twenty years, is still an up-and-coming "boy." . . . Harry is a popular fellow out there in the Middlewest and a chap who gets plenty of work done for his firm. . . . The Miller Music song, "Another Candle on Your Birthday Cake" is a great number for organists who feature "kiddie" shows. . . . It's one of those songs that can be used forever. . . . Besides "Time on My Hands," that hit number of their's, they have another number that is taking strides and it is "Two Loves." . . . They tell me that the lyrics of that new Leo Feist waltz ballad, "Ma and Pa," were taken from a letter written to Carl Hoefle (who composed the number) from his "Ma and Pa." . . . It's a sweet number and Kate Smith, who introduced it over the air, is doing her best to make it Number One. . . . Jim Durkin, former special service manager for Donaldson, Douglas and Gumble, is now the orchestra department manager of Shapiro, Bernstein & Co. . . . Buddy Rogers, idol of the screen, and His California Cavaliers, succeed Rudy Vallee and His Connecticut Yankees at the Hotel Pennsylvania on March 28th . . . and will work under an exclusive contract with National Broadcasting Company. . . .

The rumor that Jesse Crawford, the Poet of the Organ, is through with Paramount is entirely unfounded. . . . The rumor started while he was at home with a serious case of the grippe. . . . He's back at the theatre now and going stronger than ever . . . and from all indications he will be at the "Crossroads of the World," for a long while to come. . . .

B SEE'N' U. ED DAWSON

STAGE SHOWS

Dallas Majestic

Week ending March 2

The state show at the Majestic is one of novelty and includes more than average merit. Headlining the presentation is Owen McGivney, giving a very versatile portrayal by doing all four characters in "The Manor Murder Mystery," a one-act mystery drama. He performed in his quick change art as adeptly as one would desire and his act is really a top-liner. His new vehicle measures up well in comparison with characterizations of any similar acts. Anger and Faire in their burlesque imitation of McGiveney's offering have the entire company as helpmates and the result is uproarious. The Wallace Sisters with three male assistants give a flashy dance act, including adagio, tap and toe numbers and are well liked. Bob Nelson with his likeable variety of songs and chatter completes this very good program.

San Antonio Sadler's

Half Week ending March 5

This new tent theatre which opened its doors last Saturday night to very good business, offers several acts of vaudeville on the weekly split bill in conjunction with high class dramatic stock plays.

Among those featured were The Alabama Boys, two clever stringed-instrument artists and eccentric tap dancers. Ruton's "Alley Dogs" were next with an entertaining line of canine tricks. A young male accordionist handled the "Squeeze-box" in fine style. Bart Crouch, Harley's songster, was on for the next turn with a couple of up-to-date song hits. The Texas Quartette closed with a cycle of moderns and spirituals.

Baltimore Keith's

Week ending March 11

Three French Misses started the vaudeville program here with trapeze work, including whirls by mouth straps and neck straps. Following this came Charley Chase, bona fide Baltimorean, with chatter, then comedy instruments, such as a harmonica, a small clarinet, a novelty whistle, a toy flute and a xylophone made up like a radiator. Next he sang comic verses from a book. Then came Nina Olivette of "Queen High" fame, with nine singing and stepping lads in a miniature musical comedy offering. Nina did her funny steps and songs and introduced a burlesque of an adagio dance. Some fast tap work and some songs were done by the boys.

New York Roxy

Week ending March 10

The stage spectacle called "Metallic" currently at the "Cathedral" is a musical extravaganza in five elaborate scenes, namely: Gold, Bronze, Tin, Iron and Steel. In the cast are Harold Van Duzee, tenor; Patricia Bowman, premier danseuse; the Roger Pryor Dodge Duo, modern dancers; the Five Hot Shots, Harlem rhythm quintet; the Roxy Ballet and the Roxyettes. The Roxy Synco-Symphonic orchestra under the direction of Fred Waring supply the musical background for the production and present a novelty arrangement of "Tin Pan Parade," in the scene "Tin."

In the first scene, Gold, Harold Van Duzee, as a crazed alchemist, sings of this metal and finally dies when the gold, in the person of Patricia Bowman and the Ballet Corps, really becomes an actuality. Van Duzee's singing is very fine and Miss Bowman's dancing is as excellent as usual.

Bronze, featuring the Hot Shots in a routine of tap dancing, was outstanding but for one thing, and that the novelty of dancing in darkened house, as Violet Ray brings out the gay colors on their clothes. Even this is not unusual, especially in this house, inasmuch as it has been used numerous times, though it is an effect that is worth seeing often.

The Roger Pryor Dodge Duo and the Ballet Corps are featured in the spectacle, Iron, and offer a modern dance routine that would have been excellent but for the awkward dancing of the taller member of this team. The Ballet ensemble, apparently representing molten iron, are outstanding in their dance routine.

The Thirty-two Roxyettes and the Ballet Corps express the spirit of "Steel" in the last scene and their dancing done on a skeleton framework, represents the construction of a huge skyscraper.

The entire presentation was artistically produced and beautifully presented by the performers.

Detroit Hollywood

Week ending February 25

One comparatively weak stage feature, even when it is so placed as to seem part of the background of the show, won't keep the crowds from the Hollywood. Opening and closing with Fred J. Ireland's (Detroit School of the Dance) Wonder Dancers, the Hollywood performance gets by mainly on the consistent crowd-drag of Eddie Loughton, M.C., and the two really decent acts sandwiched between Ireland's prancing kiddies. The Ireland crew, calcimined, frizzed and costumed like a high school pageant, detracted no little from what might have been a pleasing performance.

The chorus of "Hello, Eddie!" called forth from the younger members of the Hollywood audience at the appearance of the Prince of Pep, should keep the Prince in good standing for some time to come. Loughton followed the opening dance whirl with a flock of verses from "Rhymes," aping a recent N B C presentation by Vallee and the Connecticut Yankees.

Bob Fisher, "Black Face Funster," tied a good Bert Williams voice to "Wrap Your Troubles In Dreams," "All Dressed Up With A Broken Heart," and "River Stay 'Way From My Door," the latter adorned with interpolations from "Old Man River" and "Mississippi Mud." Fresh comedy punctuated the act.

Ross and Bennett, "No Sense And Nonsense," breezed through a fast line of comedy including song, dance and gag bits. For the first half of the act, Ross does very well by simply rushing the girl, Bennett, off the stage every time she makes an appearance.

ORGAN SOLOS

DICK LIEBERT (Jersey City Loew's) was so successful with his recent stunt of taking the "mike" through the audience and having them sing through it, that this week he repeated it and did even better than last week. Numbers used were "Pent-House Serenade," "Million Dollar Baby," "Gang's All Here," "Somebody Else," "All of Me" and "Auf Weidersehn, My Dear."

The last named number was sung through the microphone by little Georgie Pickett, a seven-year-old boy discovered by Liebert last week. This is a great idea for an organist to use and it is humorous and entertaining.

MARLIN (Brooklyn Metropolitan) presented a community songfest recently that had all the audience singing. Each of the numbers was introduced with what started out to be long-winded story, but Marlin cut it short by using the following songs as answers to his stories: "Blue of the Night," "By the Sycamore Tree," "Cuban Love Song," "How Long Will It Last," "Just Friends" and a final chorus of "Human Thing to Do." The solo held the audience.

HERBIE (New Orleans Publix Saenger) has a novel idea this week which fails to go as heavily as it should, largely because he makes the mistake of playing his parodies to tunes that he has worn threadbare through weeks and weeks of repetition. Taking advantage of the local elections, he has Lee Barton Evans introduce him as a candidate and then steps out to the organ, which displays signs burlesquing the slogans of the actual popular candidate, and proceeds to give his platform musically. The screen has a slide of the City Hall over which Herbie throws his gags. The entire platform is a scream, as are some of the wisecracking asides, but Herbie had to resort to a real politician's trick to get applause—distributing El Ropo cigars among the audience.

BOB WEST (Brooklyn Fox) presented a clever and appropriate novelty entitled "Leap Year," which was outstanding in its entertainment value. The solo, itself, was a cleverly worded parody on the girl's chances with the men, and was built up with many laughable gags, besides a number of real good singable songs, and of course West's own inimitable way of "selling" them. The opening song was a special version, for the old maids, on the tune "Faded Summer Love," followed by "What a Thrill," "Snuggled on Your Shoulder," special comedy lyrics on "Good Night Sweetheart," regular to "Who's Your Little Whozis," "Auf Wiedersehn," and "Human Thing to Do," for the finish. A very good solo, put over well and an applause getter for this popular organist.

BILLY BARNES (Winchester Capitol), new entertaining organist here, has taken the town by storm and proves himself a stimulus to business. He is a handsome young chap, a good showman and an exceedingly versatile musician. His program this week is called "An Oriental Fantasia" and is offered as a prologue to the feature picture, "Hatchet Man." In it, Barnes uses themes from "Madame Butterfly" and "East Is West." His playing is beautifully done and the audience reaction is very good. During the playing of these compositions an attractive effect slide floods the entire traveler drop and near the finish the drop parts, revealing a gooden scrim through which appears a Chinese girl, seated on a cushion by a tea table. This girl sings the Chinese Lullaby, from "East Is West," and at the finish the Chinese gong is heard as the titles of the film are being run.

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) presents three selections for his organ number. Offerings include "Black Marie," "All of Me," and a selection from "Il Trovatore." Al uses a microphone and sings "All of Me" in an entertaining fashion.

OVERTURES

FRED WARING (New York Roxy) and his Synco-Symphonic Orchestra offered as their overture a modern arrangement of classical and popular East Indian selections including "Song of India," "Ganges," "Orientale," "Temple Bells" and "The Kashmiri Song" (Pale Hands). This aggregation of talented men are outstanding not only as musicians, but as entertainers as well. Their playing is of the best and when they offer a trick of singing novelty they're perfect in it. This beautiful overture closed with a vocal solo by one of the boys, as the others softly accompanied him. The overture is the one and only thing in the entire presentation here that receives an appreciative response.

EDDIE SEE (San Antonio, Sadler's) is making a big hit with his band and violin solos at this modern tent theatre, which has all the earmarks of a real theatre. Eddie See's semi-weekly musical medleys are well received. He was formerly featured in Sousa's famous symphony and that is one reason why he is so popular here.

CHARLIE PAUL (Jamaica Valencia) and his orchestra presented an outstanding overture this week, which was entitled "In a Gypsy Camp." Not only was the gypsy motif carried throughout in the music, but also in the dress of the entire orchestra. The "Slavonic Rhapsody" was played for the opening number and was followed by "Play Gypsies-Dance Gypsies," from "Countess Maritza." A violin cadenza, with softly played string accompaniment of the opening number, was then played and followed by a guitar duet of "Otchi Tchorniya" (Dark Eyes) and "Dance Gypsies." The opening number brought this entertaining overture to a close, amid great applause. All manuscripts and the special arrangements of the entire overture were made by Mr. Paul.

BENJAMIN KLASMER (Baltimore Hippodrome) offered his novelty overture, "Just a Line," with xylophone notes starting softly, then joined by cornets in amber spot and finally jazzing the tempo at the finish.

PHIL FABELLO (New York Coliseum) and His Entertainers again prove their outstanding quality of versatility in their current overture, a modernized version of "Morning, Noon and Night." Instead of playing the heavy opera by this title, Fabello has arranged a compilation of old and new popular tunes to designate the changes in 24 hours, and enhanced it with smartly incorporated lighting effects, pleasing to the eye and assisting greatly in putting the idea over. The entire orchestra received an appreciative response from the audience at the finish as did each of the vocalists at the end of each number.

DAVID ROSS (Philadelphia Mastbaum) and the symphony orchestra presented selections from Rimsky-Korsakow's colorful "Scheherazade" suite. Prefaced by a short description of the theme on the screen, this masterpiece tested the leadership of Ross, and his interpretation caught the spirit of this masterpiece without sacrificing popular appeal.

TECHNOLOGICAL

WHITE LIGHT AND FOCUS

And Other Projection Matters Discussed With and—

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 119.—(A) Provided the right diameter carbon for the amperage be used, does change in amperage alter the square millimeter brilliancy of the crater floor? (B) Given a 55-degree angle (ordinary arc), does crater increase per added ampere vary with different makes of carbon? (C) In what way may you measure crater diameters accurately? (D) Does crater area (ordinary arc) increase proportionally with amperage increase?

[So that a number of letters from projectionists that have been waiting for space, may be presented and commented on (for they are of general interest), no "Bluebook School" question is answered in this issue. The answer to Question No. 115 will appear in the next issue. A new question is given here, however, so that there will be no interruption in the receipt of answers.—F. H. R.]

I have a letter from Projectionist Marvin H. Carter of Fries, Va., in which he says:

"Some time ago I bought the three volumes of the Bluebook and have found them to be a great help in my work. I like them fine. However, there is one or two questions which bother me and which I am not able to find the answers to in the Bluebook.

"First, where should one place the metal plate with a quarter-inch hole, in preparing to find the aerial image or smallest light beam diameter when using a reflector arc without condenser. The distance from hole in reflector to film at aperture is 24 inches.

"Second, is there anything wrong with the optical line-up when the light projected at the screen (without any film just after a reel has been run) with as sharp a focus as can be obtained, seems to be out of focus, especially around the margin of light. Focusing the white light until the edges of the light upon the screen are sharp makes it necessary to re-focus when projection is started."

As to the first question, frankly, I don't know. You can find the plane of the aerial image by moving an opaque image slowly up and down at different distances in front of the lens until a point is found where a shadow starts from both top and bottom, meeting at the middle. That is the point of aerial image and the best point for a front shutter, if it can be reached. I would, however, by all means, advise your employer to install a rear shutter. Front shutters represent obsolete practice. The rear shutter reduces the fire hazard very largely and, in addition, cuts off fully one-half of the heat from both the film and the projector mechanism.

As to the second question, you have not told me what make of projector you are using. It must be one in which there is a very perceptible difference in the film plane and the edges of the aperture.

In projecting pictures you focus the film plane. When the film has finished running and you project a white light, you, of course, find the edges of the aperture to be out of focus, because their distance and the distance of the film surface from the lens are different.

The Right Spirit

From the West came an answer to a "Bluebook School" question preceded by the following:

"I am very much interested in the Bluebook School. I have not tried to send in answers to any of the questions before because I am not so fortunate as to have one of the major sound systems to operate. Nevertheless, that has not kept me from paying very close attention to all the questions and answers.

"At the present time I believe I have about the poorest installation any projectionist can possibly have to handle. I am going to keep studying, hammering and working away, though, so that if I ever should be so fortunate as to get a chance at a decent installation I shall be capable of getting the very best possible results that can be had from it."

This man has the right spirit. It is the one who keeps plugging away, studying and learning everything he can, who finally will get ahead. If, when projecting pictures 25 years ago, I had myself just watched the wheels go 'round, I would probably still be chained to the side of a projector. I did not do that, but instead started in to learn everything that could be learned about my job—which was not much in those days—and having some little ability as a writer, I got ahead.

The chap who views his work with repugnance, regarding it only as a necessary evil by which pay-days are made available, never goes very far. My congratulations and compliments to this gentleman, to whom I would suggest the advisability of sending in answers to the "Bluebook School" regularly. (His answer to the question referred to was quite acceptable.)

Gives 'Em Credit

Lester Borst of Two Rivers, Wisc., says: "We projectionists get plenty of blame which rightly should rest upon the shoulders of cinemematographers or studio men. We receive plenty of film out of which the best projectionist on earth could not possibly get good results. As a whole, however, I presume productions are about as excellent as present-day progress in the cinema art will allow.

Once in a while, however, we get something out of the ordinary in photographic excellence. Two recent examples were the Fox picture "Transatlantic," photographed by James Wong Hoew, and the M-G-M film "Sin of Madelon Claudet," photographed by Oliver Marsh. Both of these were, in my opinion, just about the acme of pictorial beauty. It seems to me these two gentlemen should be given credit through our department. It was a real pleasure to project such craftsmanship."

Why, Brother Borst, I think you are quite right, though of course since their names appear on thousands of screens, it is presumed they have been receiving credit ever since the productions came out.

As a matter of fact, however, I have often very much doubted if out of one thousand theatre patrons, a single one could be found who could tell you who the cinematographer was after viewing a production. They remember the name of the star and possibly one or two of the supporting cast. They may possibly remember who the director was, though that is doubtful. But the cinematographer—no! We therefore are glad to give Messrs. Hoew and Marsh credit here.

Manager's Duty

From St. Louis comes a queer letter. It reads:

"Dear Brother Richardson: I want your help, if you will be kind enough to give it. The manager of this theatre just can't be made to see that worn intermittent sprocket teeth, an exciting lamp filament slightly sagged or the exciting lamp globe a bit discolored and things like that, prevent me from putting on a show equal to that of projectionists in theatres in which the projectionists may have anything they want. I have tried to explain to him, but he won't be convinced.

"He has a lot of respect for you, though, and I have told him I am going to write you asking that you write him, telling him the facts. Will you do this for me, Mr. Richardson?

Certainly I will write your manager. In fact the letter has been gone two days already. Here is a copy, omitting name and address:

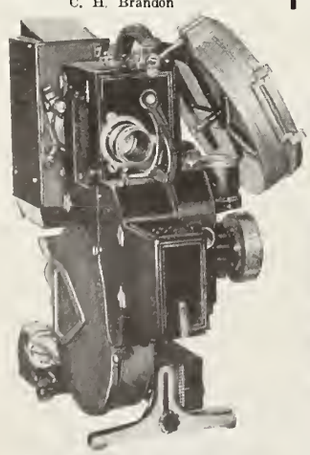
"My dear sir: Your projectionist, Mr. ——, has advised me that you do not regard it as necessary to pay attention to relatively small faults in your projection equipment, but that you expect faulty equipment to produce just as excellent results as may be got from apparatus in the pink of condition. He tells me that you honor me by having "a lot of respect for me" and presumably, therefore, for my opinions in projection matters. He has asked me to write you setting forth my views on the results of faults in projection equipment, which I shall now do.

"Taking the exciting lamp, for instance. The filament of this lamp forms the light source for a tiny "slit" only a little more than a thousandth of an inch high. Now the strongest light comes from the center of this filament, which must be and is so set that its length is exactly parallel with the length of the slit.

"The slit, if the best sound results are to be obtained, must be illuminated exactly evenly throughout its length. The image of the exciting lamp filament is projected to the slit by the exciting lamp optical system condenser, and if this image be exactly in line with the slit throughout its length—throughout the length of the slit—and the center of the image of the slit be projected exactly to the center of the vertical diameter of the slit, then the illumination of the slit will be both maximum and even. If, however, the filament of the slit be ever so slightly sagged down in its center, then it will be impossible to project its center to the vertical center of the slit throughout the length of the slit, hence the illuminaion sent forward cannot possibly illuminate the lines on a variable density film band evenly, and the result will be both loss of volume and distortion.

"It then follows that it is utterly impossible for the projectionist to secure maximum results with an exciting lamp filament which is sagged in any degree. So much for that.

"As to the effect of using an exciting lamp which has a slightly disclored globe, it is impossible to secure full light value from such a lamp without running it above its rated capacity, which, as you should know, very greatly shortens its life, as well as sets up the probability of its filament sagging. Moreover, discoloration tends to induce distortion of the sound. I had thought discoloration of exciting lamp globes was a forgotten trouble, as there are now self cleaning lamps to be had, but it seems not.



"Your projectionist tells me you cannot agree that an intermittent sprocket, the teeth of which are only somewhat worn, should be renewed. In that you are entirely in error. A worn intermittent sprocket tooth not only tends to produce unsteadiness in your own picture, but also in the picture of every theatre which will use the prints you run thereafter. This is because a worn tooth is hard on the working edge of all sprocket holes it comes into contact with, and these holes must be accurate to within less than one ten-thousandth of an inch. intermittent sprockets should be replaced as soon as any under-cut can be discerned by using a magnifying glass. "Remembering that in motion picture projection you are magnifying a photograph much less than one square inch in area, into a screen image from sixteen to twenty feet wide by three-fourths that height, it is easy to see how even the most tiny fault, such as a movement of the picture as a whole over the aperture, will be very visible on the screen. In motion picture projection we must deal with faults measurable in fractions of a thousandth of an inch, hence a fault does not have to be big enough to be visible to the 'naked eye' to be very visible indeed upon the theatre screen.

"Heard other portable sound equipments, up to more than double the price, and I must say, truthfully, that results with the HOLMES were so far superior that there is no comparison. Dialogue clear and distinct, no muffled tones and one very noticeable feature, there was no rushing or roaring of sound reproduction."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

No More "Dark Houses" »»» Sound Shutdowns Eliminated Service Problems Solved

Read These Features:

1. Two complete independent amplifiers provide complete protection against amplifier failure.
2. A simplified control system makes changeovers from one amplifier to the other easy.
3. The latest developments in high gain sound-on-film amplifiers are provided.
4. Entirely A. C. operated. One unit includes everything between sound head and stage speakers. Supplies p. e. c. voltage and exciter lamp current. P. e. c. balancer adjustments and exciter lamp control with indicating meter are provided.
5. Furnished with perfectly matched monitor speaker.
6. Operates with any sound-on-film equipped projector using standard caesium type cells.
7. Conservatively rated for eight hundred seat theatres.

Los Angeles Office: 704 Bendix Bldg.

Again Operadio provides a revolutionary advancement in theatre sound systems. Now the new Model 64 Dual Theatre Amplifier releases theatre owners from the ever present fear of shutdown from sound failure.

Not since Operadio first pioneered completely self-contained, A. C. operated theatre amplifiers has an improvement been made that is so vitally important to the theatre owner.

Dual Amplifier Provides Solution

Two completely independent amplifiers are housed in a single compact case. Switching facilities allow either to be put into use instantly. Not only does this feature prevent shutdowns from tube or amplifier failures, but it makes possible such rapid location of any fault in the sound system that programs need never be disrupted.

When faulty reproduction is encountered, operation may be immediately shifted to the reserve amplifier. If the trouble still persists, a switch may be made to the other projector. Trouble continuing after these two changes is definitely located in the stage speakers or their leads. Compare this simple procedure with the usual frenzied, blind searching when trouble occurs. Hours—and even days—are saved.

Insurance Against Loss of Profits

Few theatre owners could afford to buy insurance that would give the same protection against loss of profits that is provided by the Operadio Dual Amplifier. Now every theatre owner can be protected against this loss of profits and prestige. A shutdown of several shows alone will often pay for the Operadio Dual Amplifier.

Don't let a shutdown next week cost you profits that would pay for this protection. Write or wire Operadio or your motion picture supply house for complete details.

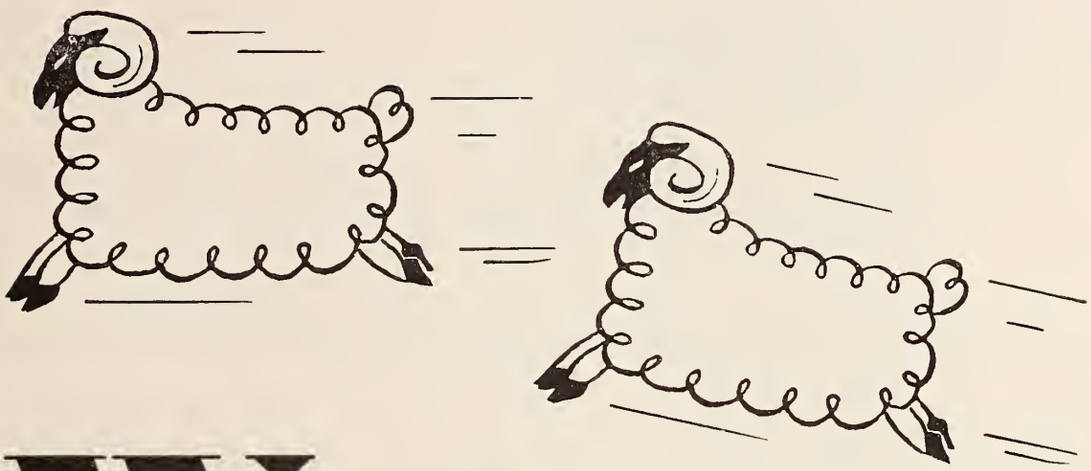
LIVELY

Boston's magnificent new

THE new Paramount Theatre in Boston — opened with a gala performance on February 25th — is one of the finest links in the great Paramount-Publix chain. In designing and equipping this intimate house, everything possible was done to make it unusually beautiful and comfortable.



With an eye to economy as well as beauty, Paramount ordered 2100 yards of carpet by the Bigelow Weavers. The fabric selected — Paramount-Publix Velvet — is woven of Lively Wool that assures softness under foot, lasting beauty and ease of cleaning. Those features mean money to exhibitors — for Lively Wool carpets cost less to maintain and they last longer no matter how heavy the traffic!

Lively Wool absorbs sound, lessens reverberation too — and you know what that means in making possible the high quality sound reproduction demanded in today's talking picture theatres.

The satisfactory service given by Bigelow Lively Wool carpet in Paramount's original New York house led to the placing of this big order. And an additional order for some 1500 yards of the same fabric for the new Paramount Theatre now being built in Amarillo, Texas!

Theatre men like this Service

One reason for the outstanding popularity of Bigelow fabrics in the theatre field is the complete service rendered by our Contract Department. These carpet experts will study the architecture of your theatre and create special patterns to harmonize. Or they will prepare special color schemes to carry out ideas suggested by you or your decorator.

From long experience these men know, too, what fabrics are best for foyers, aisles, stairs, under seats. They'll give you an A-1 job — one that's economical as well as lastingly beautiful.

They have supervised installations in leading theatres all over the country — such as The Earl Carroll and Paramount in New York, The Uptown in Philadelphia, The State Lake in Chicago, The Regent in Detroit, The Alhambra in Sacramento, The New Erlanger in Atlanta.

You can reach our Contract Department men through offices below or through distributors of Bigelow Carpets.

Modernistic carpet in green, black and gold designed and made for Boston's new Paramount. Woven of Lively Wool, that springs back under foot, it will keep its beauty in spite of heavy heels, sharp heels, wet shoes, scuffling shoes!

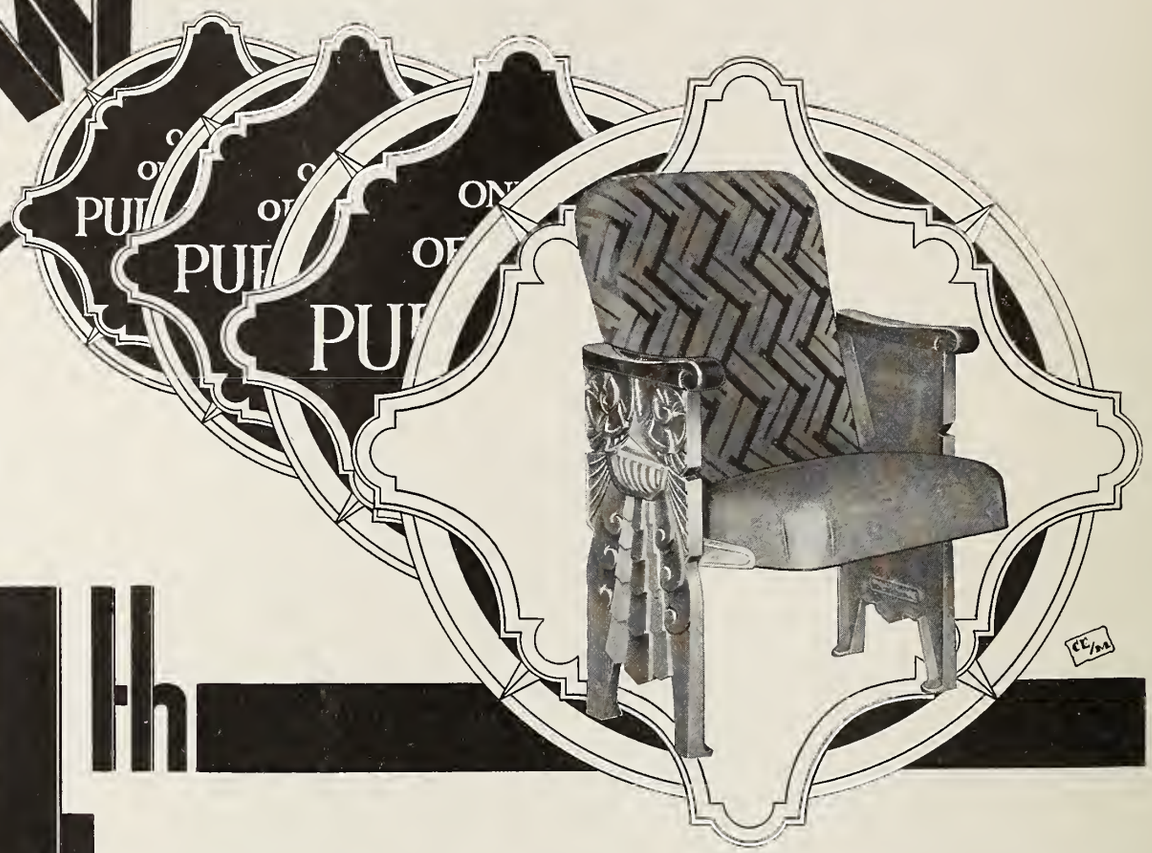
¶ The theatres set forth in this issue, representing as they do opposite methods of achieving a kind of theatricalism architecturally, emphasize the peculiar demands made upon architecture by show business. The thought this emphasis arouses might well be compiled under a heading linking these two fields as inseparable components of a unified process. Whatever show business expects by way of a durable and efficient structure, it insists that Architecture give it something of the show business's own wares—something to see, something to emotionalize over, something worth paying admission into, offered to the public in addition to—let us say—the performance proper. One has one's own ideas as to where the emphasis should lie, in the fitness of the building for its fundamental function, or in the magnetism of the building as a show in itself. There does not seem much room for debate, however, that the latter quality, since the motion picture achieved caste, has received the greater attention. The result has been the development of a theatre architecture peculiarly devoted to the creation of stylistic manners, bestowing leadership on those engineers who were the better showmen. Not many weeks ago it was this writer's privilege to have this attitude illustrated in an actual occurrence. The architect was one of the nation's most eminent, the theatre was to be of equal distinction. The incident referred to was itself distinguished by the great architect's unrestrained delight in a new conception for this building that was to be foremost among theatres erected with the aid of every modern science for the essential purpose of professionally presenting motion picture entertainment. The angle of projection—a simple factor—would be six or eight degrees over a normal maximum, and perhaps 15 degrees over what this angle should be. The matter that on this occasion won such exultant attention, however, was the conception of a huge chandelier to be suspended between proscenium and balconies, gorgeous in its own right but ineffably superb when lowered to almost stage level, profusely adorned with nude females in tableau! . . . Showmanship remains, only the methods change. Once it was decided that the older styles, such as that based on the Empire period, could be augmented in the interests of a kind of supershowmanship, the Orient, various movements of the Renaissance and countless other exotic sources were examined for their gifts to a greater architectural theatricalism, and what was borne away was in most cases given the strange realism of "atmospheric" devices. In the meantime, modernism—today's patterns and spirit—was developing in other branches of architecture. An issue was raised. "For nearly a generation," writes B. J. S. Cahill in an article on the Paramount in Oakland, Cal., to be published elsewhere (we having had the privilege of seeing the manuscript), "American Architecture has flowed in two streams not only bounded by separate channels, but going in almost opposite directions. One tendency is to be stylistic and historical; the other to be modern or futuristic. A curious feature of the first is seen in what may be termed the summary, or synoptical mode. In this the architect starts out to design a Tudor school, a Renaissance theatre, or a Mediterranean villa. He first assembles a photo collection of notable examples from England, Italy, France or Spain, picks out the striking features of each, separates them from their sober and sedate setting and crowds them together in one structure: a concentrated resume of practically all that was ever done in that particular style. The result, however stupendous, erudite or pictorial, somehow fails to register. It is all familiar, a threadbare, thrice-told tale. . . . On the other hand, the protagonists of the new art have had to create fresh forms, as it were, out of nothing: an entirely different and enormously more difficult undertaking." . . . And so it is difficult. But as the Oakland Paramount, the Hackensack and others show us, these fresh forms are being adapted to these very needs of the showman. The difficulty, it would seem, lies less in the architect's ability to be a good showman, than in his willingness to be a good architect.



¶ A new name will have been noted in the symposium on Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance, with the addition of the fifth article in this issue. And it might be well to advise our readers at this time that we expect to find it impossible to keep this series to the six articles originally intended. A series is too commonly planned according to factors other than those represented by the subject itself. Indeed, one has to consider very seriously just how long the reader's interest can be expected to hold out. Usually one can guess at a satisfactory compromise between reader endurance and an adequate scale for the subject. In the present case, however, the subject seems to have got out of hand. Five articles have already been published, without reaching several phases of seating problems that were originally scheduled for discussion by this time—and we also wanted to top the whole series off by a presentation of the purely architectural point of view. So, frankly, we don't know how long this symposium is to continue. We want to cover the subject definitively, up to the present time. We are therefore willing to take a chance that our readers appreciate the importance of seating sufficiently to counterbalance any tendency toward monotony. . . . *A. C. A SIMPLE INTERPRETATION OF A COMPLEX CHART an editorial

A VERY interesting booklet has just come to hand as a result of the well known energies of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. It belongs to this institution's series of booklets on health, and it concerns itself with the effect on health of air conditions.

Specifically, this booklet is interested in the atmospheric environment of workers, but in the portions we here find of interest, we note nothing to indicate that the facts adduced do not apply during hours of recreation. Indeed, they recommend themselves to the attention of the theatre business if only as authentic testimony that atmospheric conditions severely influence people physically and mentally. They thus plainly suggest the association between the air conditions of a theatre, and the effectiveness of its entertainment.

Artificial air conditioning for the motion picture theatre is not so new that a general acceptance of its efficacy may not be taken for granted. We think, in fact, that every showman would have the best of systems in his theatre if he thought it worth the expenditure necessary. This latter qualification, however, represents "the point." How much is too much to spend for effective air conditioning equipment?

To quote more or less from the Metropolitan booklet, man loses his physiological efficiency beyond certain limits of temperature. Two other factors are of immense importance—relative humidity and air pressure. What happens to the human mechanism is variant and sometimes serious. It is enough to remember that whatever does happen is inimical, if the subject be a present or prospective theatre patron, to the theatre box office.

We today readily recognize the importance of comfort in the theatre. Millions of dollars are spent to assure it. Many more millions are spent for sheer decoration with which we seek to create in the patron a degree of emotional exaltation, a kind of spiritual comfort. Yet proper air conditions are fundamentally requisite to comfort. They mean (as we started out to say) even more than comfort. They are requisite to that physio-psychological harmony and efficiency without which no patron can fully enjoy the show.

The adjoining chart, reproduced without permission from the Metropolitan booklet, may or may not be applicable to pleasure-seekers. But if workers have their "comfort zone," so have theatregoers. For those interested in what such a comfort zone might be, we have identified it on the chart by a dollar sign.

The facade. The ornamental field is of glazed mosaic tile. The sign, forming an integral part of the architectural scheme, is of aluminum leaf. The marquee is executed in chromium plate, with black enamel as the background for the letters. The base of the building is of black granite.

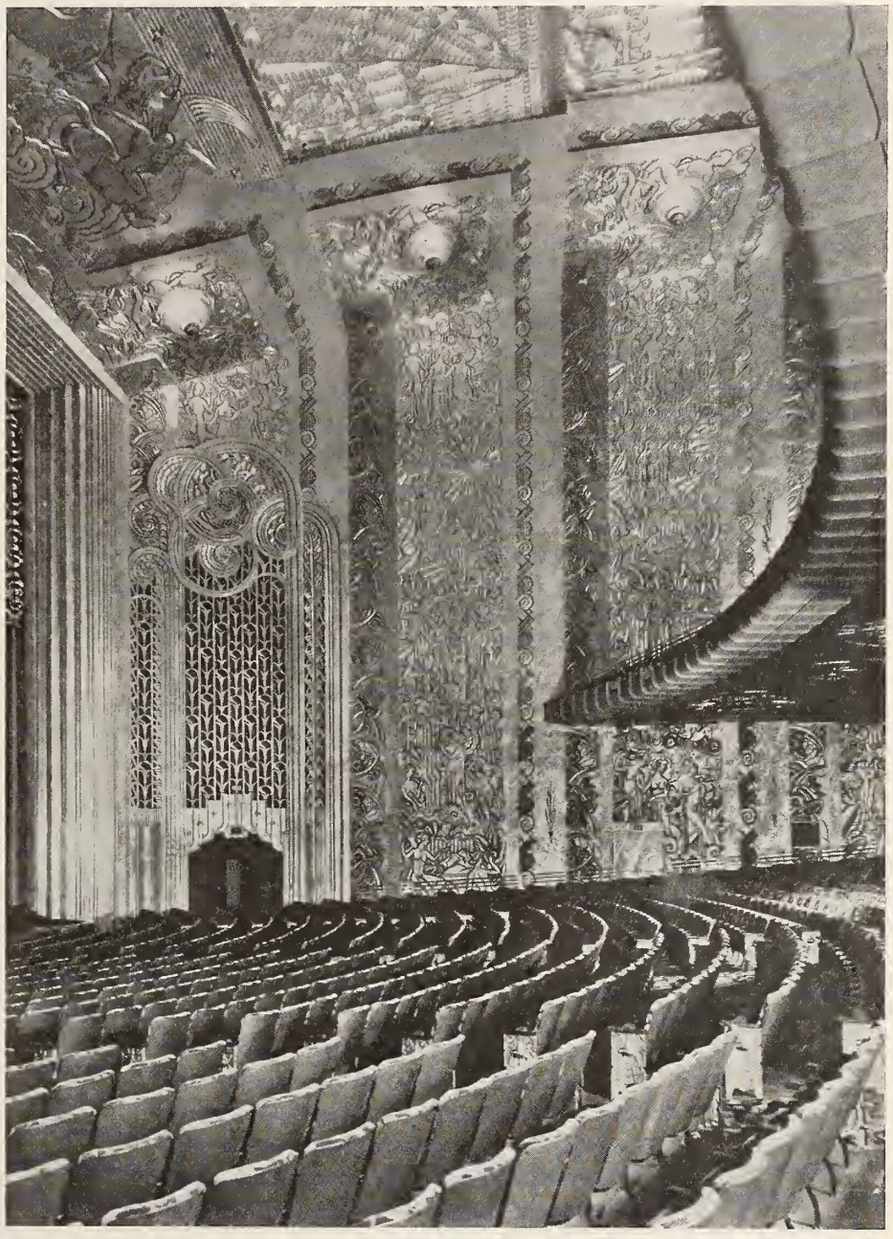
THE NEW INTERPRETATION OF THE SPIRIT THEATRICAL

The movement toward an architectural re-evaluation in modern terms, as represented by the Paramount in Oakland, Cal., new 3,500-seat theatre

THE NEW theatre of the Paramount Publix circuit in Oakland, Cal., at once classifies itself as an important contributor to the movement toward a re-evaluation of the "theatrical spirit" in modern terms. It is obviously one of the most striking among those motion picture houses which, engineered according to the gifts of today's building and equipment sciences, pursue also a new aesthetic.

The Paramount in Oakland is a large house, even among motion picture theatres. Seating capacities along the West Coast have always tended to be much smaller than those of comparable houses in the Eastern half of the country, and the Oakland Paramount's 3,434 chairs rank this theatre with the very largest West of Chicago.

It is a downtown house with respect to Oakland, but Oakland itself is but a part of the whole region contributory to San Francisco, bearing somewhat the same relationship to that metropolis as Newark bears to New York City. Oakland, however, has ample metropolitan character of its own, its population, 285,000, placing it among the larger cities of the Pacific Coast.



Despite its location in the main business section of this sizeable city, the Paramount building is entirely devoted to the theatrical enterprise. Construction is of steel and concrete, with facing in tile. J. R. Miller and T. L. Pflueger were the architects. The erecting and owning interests are the Broadway & Twentieth Properties, Inc., of San Francisco, Paramount Publix being lessees. The owners have declined to release figures on the cost of construction and equipment.

For general dimensions and allocation of the various departments of the building, the reader is referred to the plans published in conjunction with this article.

The 3,434 seats are distributed on two floors, with an additional separation on the upper level represented by a loge section in front of the balcony proper. On the orchestra, or main level, there are 41 rows containing a total of 2,126 chairs. The balcony proper has 18 rows containing a total of 984 chairs, while the loge section has 324 chairs arranged in six rows. Chairs are full-upholstered in harmony with the decorations, and were designed and executed by Heywood-Wakefield.

The projection room, of usual location behind and above the balcony level, has a width of 47 feet, and a depth of 12 feet. Projection auxiliary rooms immediately adjoin the projection room proper. The angle of projection is 18°.

THE PROJECTION room is painted entirely in gray. Equipment includes three Simplex projectors on Western Electric Universal bases, with Ashcraft super-high intensity lamps; Western Electric sound apparatus; three high intensity spots and a flood by Hall & Connolly; one Brenkert F-7 effect machine; and one Chicago Cinema (Publix type) double dissolver.

The screen is located 27 feet, 6 inches from the first row of seats. The maximum screen size possible is 28x50 feet.

The auditorium, and also all of the public rooms, are air conditioned by a plenum system incorporating both cooling and heating, with centrifugal, downward diffusion type equipment by Carrier. Heating for this system employs oil as fuel.

For theatre offices, dressing rooms and other non-public divisions of the building, heating is by steam radiation, with the steam supplied by city mains—an unusual provision possible in Oakland.

Acoustics received immediate attention in the designing of the auditorium, the shape of which in general follows straight diverging lines, with width in close ratio to the depth (see plans). Auditorium surfaces are treated in overall sculptured plaster.

In addition to these general acoustical preparations, the back walls are covered with Johns-Manville "Nashkoti" one inch in thickness. This is covered with canvas, which is pin-pricked for absorption, and painted. (It is stated by the architects that since it was set a week before opening, the volume has not been changed to meet variations in the size of audience.)

Included among the lighting facilities is three-color illumination in the auditorium, operating on a dimmer system. These facilities are incorporated in the general decorative scheme of the auditorium, and will be described in connection therewith.

AS NOTED at the beginning of the article, the architecture is of modern pattern. Associating this general style with its specific treatment here, it may be characterized as an effort to express the spirit of make-believe, or fantasy, represented by the function of the building, with the luxury that has become an essential of the more pretentious motion picture theatre, forming, indeed, a part of its very recreational attractiveness. The architectural style and materials employed in executing it, of the various divisions of the building, are as follows:

Exterior. The facade rises as an imposing decorative plane that forms a background for a full-length vertical electric sign, which blends with the whole facade treatment as an integral part of it. The facade proper is done in glazed mosaic tile, the piers and body of the large figures being deep red. The large fixtures (see accompanying photographic reproduction) are against a background of gold, while the small figures are suspended on gold puppet strings and are in many colors. These figures express abstract symbolizations of various attitudes of the Theatre and Motion Picture. The sign is done in aluminum leaf. The marquee is of polished chromium plate with black porcelain enamel forming the background of the letters. The base of the building is of polished black granite, with trim and inserted discs of chromium plate. Gerald Fitzgerald executed the mosaic figures.

Main Lobby. The side walls are done in vermilion with large frames around the piers in gold leaf. The base is of black marble with white veining, and the lines are of polished aluminum and chromium plate. The ceiling and the wall between the gold-leafed frames are done in metal fins, which are illuminated from behind. Over the entrance doors is an illuminated ornament of sand-blasted and etched glass.

Mezzanine Foyer. The general tone of the walls is in dark ivory, against which are placed figures in gold leaf. The pilasters are a few shades darker than the walls, while the ceiling is of pale gray-green, surrounded by an ornamental band in gold and silver leaf.

Lounges. There are two general lounges, one on the main level, the other on the mezzanine. In addition there are men's and women's retiring rooms on the ground floor, and also women's lounge and smoking room on the same level. The main floor general lounge is done in red, gray, tan and silver. Illumination is from recessed figures in panels along the wall piers. The piers themselves are red. The side walls have mirror niches, and at these points are gray. The ceiling is beamed, the beams being done in tan, the patterned

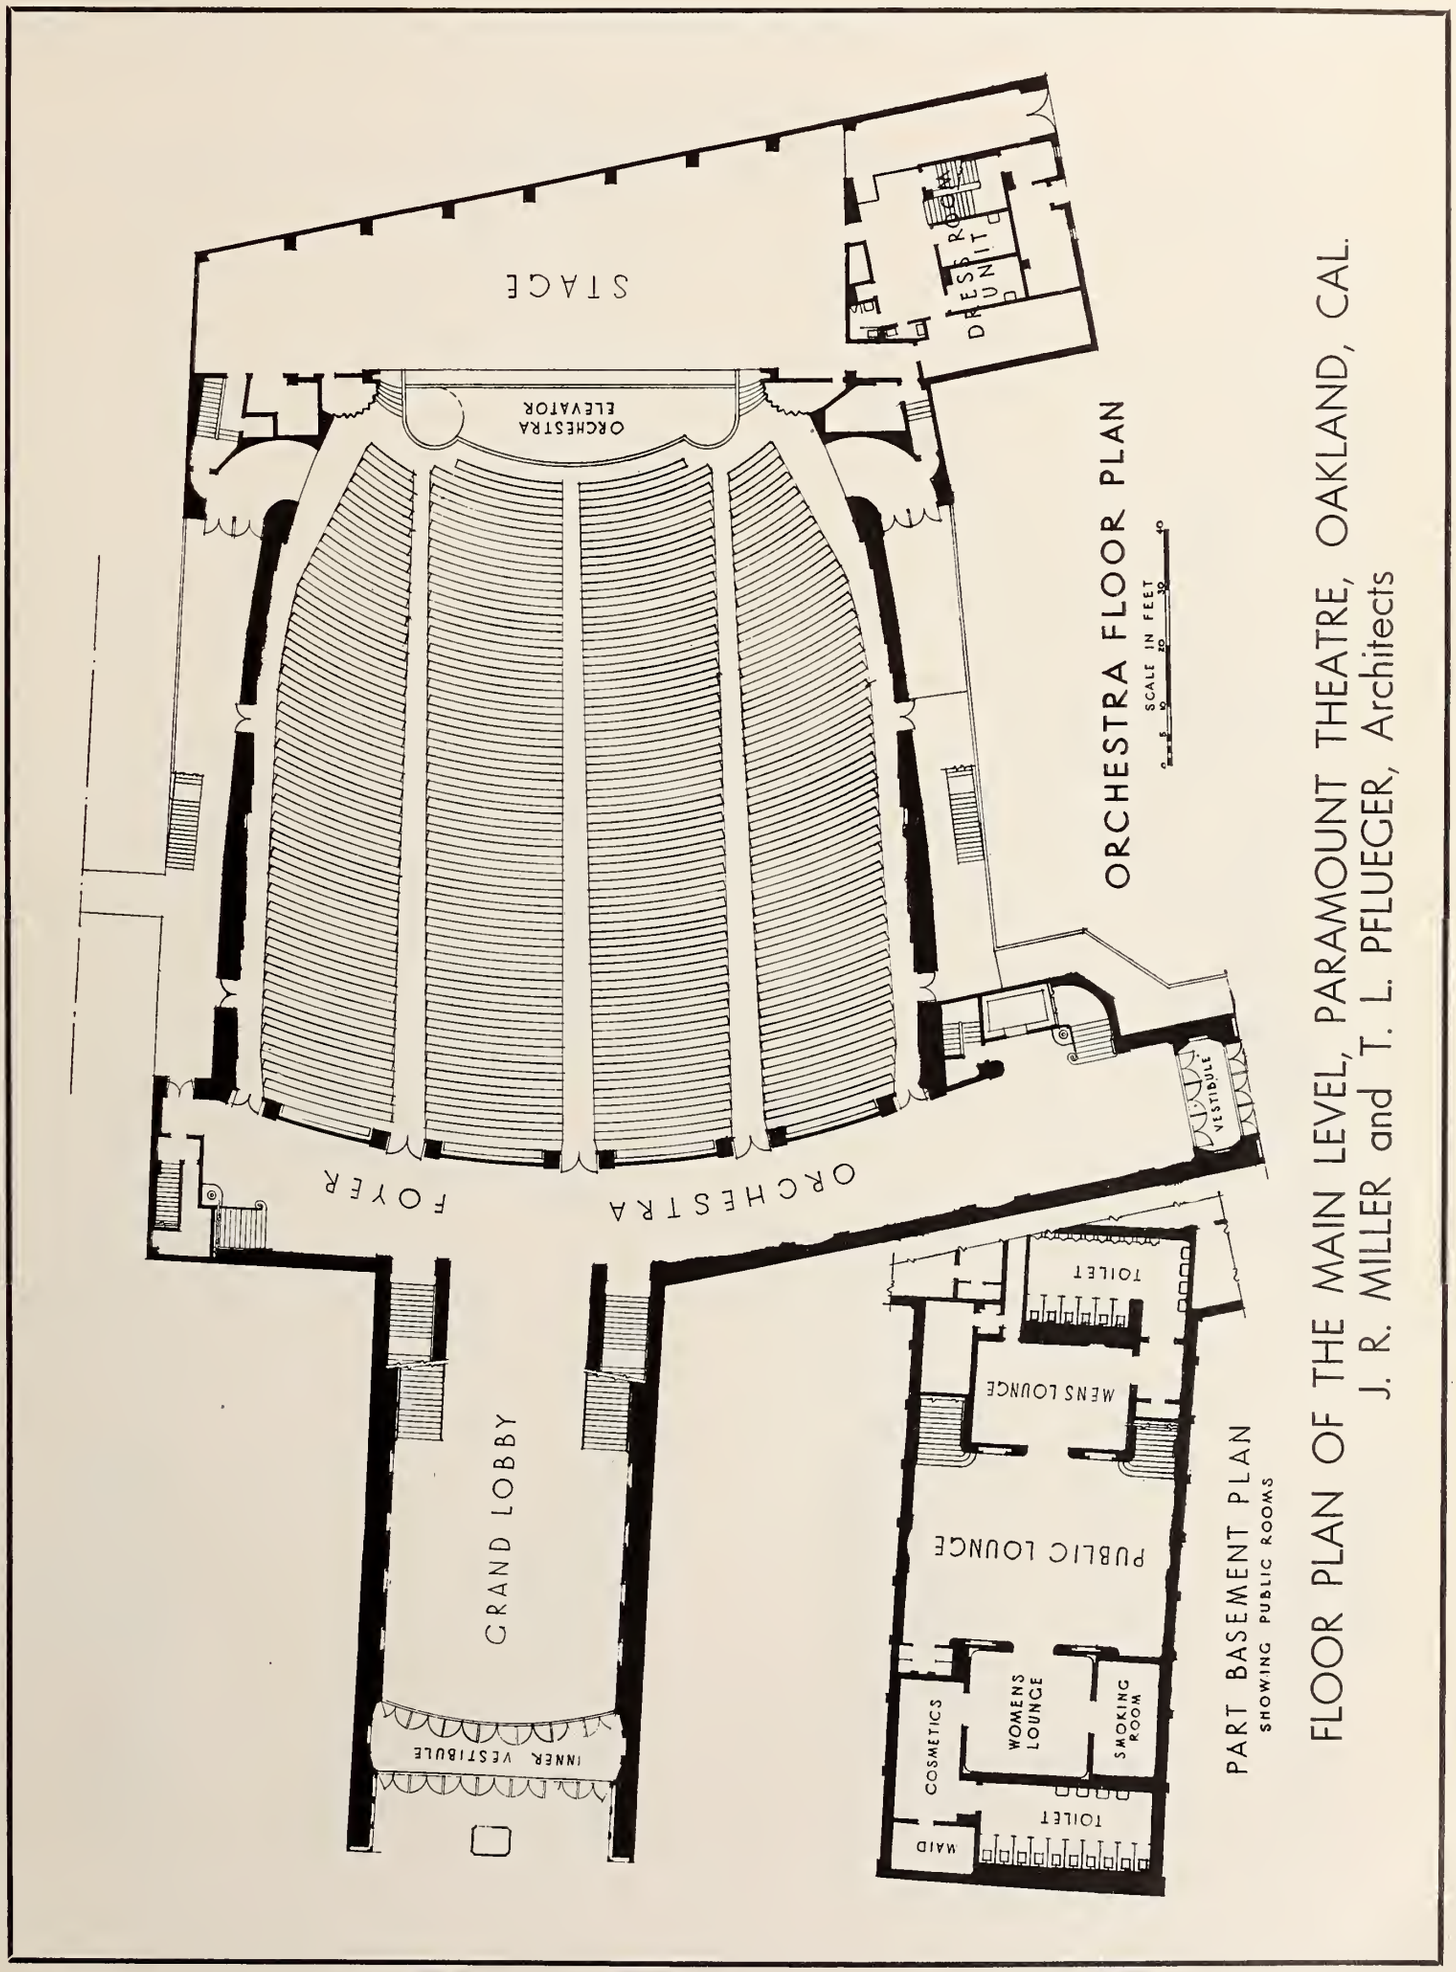
A wall figure in relief is of silver-toned metal, and all the trim in the room is of the same material. Carpeting is green. Adjoining this lounge is the women's smoking room, which has black lacquer walls with vermilion bands, and a gold ceiling with green edges at the offsets. Auditorium. In general, the materials employed here are sculptured plaster for major surfaces, metal leaf of various color finishes for trim, aluminum at proscenium columns, and metal for the ceiling fins.



The walls, margin strips and soffit of balcony are richly ornamented with complex patterns sculptured in plaster. This relief work, realizing without any definite motif the abstract beauty of line and curve, and incorporating here and there human figures, forms the dominant decorative treatment of the auditorium. At the side walls it is arranged in panels, which face the step-backs of the flared enclosure. The color tone of these surfaces is neutral, being approximately that of cork.

Into this scheme are introduced contributory ornamentations, prominent among which are the organ screens, a marine

MODERN SEATING AND CHAIR MAINTENANCE

V.—Metal Parts and Fastenings of Theatre Chairs

By A. C. HOVEN

Mechanical elements of theatre chairs discussed in the light of maintenance costs by a new contributor to this series

LOW MAINTENANCE of any equipment can only be assured if each and every part of that equipment is so designed and manufactured that it will fulfill all the functions required of it and resist the deteriorating influences acting upon it. In considering theatre chair fastenings and metal parts from the standpoint of low maintenance, it is important that we consider the functions of each part. This should enable the theatre owner to select new chairs intelligently, as well as help him reduce the amount of maintenance he is having on his present chairs.

The one moving part on a theatre chair is the hinge. It is universally conceded that a moving part cannot be expected to stand up as long as a stationary part, and it is natural that a moving part will require more maintenance. It is also true that when considering new chairs due consideration should be given to how well the hinge fulfills its various functions, so that the minimum of maintenance may be purchased in the chair itself.

The purpose of the theatre chair hinge is to allow the chair to fold easily and quietly under all the circumstances which an installation places upon it. In order to do this, a hinge must have four characteristics:

1.—Cushion at the up and down stops so that the hinge will fold silently.

2.—Ability to conform to circular seating of any and all radiuses without in any way affecting the smooth operation of the hinge.

3.—Ability to conform to variations in the distance between standards. This variation will be found on all installations.

4.—Long-silent-wear life.

The cushion at the up and down stops of the hinge should do more than produce a silent hinge, important as that is. Cushions should eliminate any jar or shock when the seat is raised or lowered. If the cushion is inadequate and the whole chair is jarred when the seat is slammed up or down, the result of the jar causes loosening of the floor fastenings. Every theatre owner is familiar with the necessity of keeping his floor fastenings tight and of going over them periodically. An important contribution toward a reduction in this maintenance work can be made through a hinge which is properly cushioned at the up- and the down-stop.

Almost all theatre chairs are installed in circular rows. This means that instead of being parallel, the standards extend along the radii of the circle on which the chairs are set. In other words, the front legs of the standards are closer together than the rear legs. This is illustrated in sketches in Fig. 1. The circle marked "Chair Size Line" is the circle which determines the curvature of the row. This circle becomes flatter toward the rear of the house, and sharper toward the front. It is along this chair size line that the proper distance between standards is laid out. The lines a and b which pass through the center line in the standards, are radial lines, and they point toward each other. It is quite evident, however, that inasmuch as the hinges are attached to the sides of the seat and inasmuch as these sides are parallel, the hinges must be parallel and cannot point toward each other.

Fig. 1 shows one way of taking care of this. The hinge is fastened to the standard directly above the chair size line, and this fastening permits securing the hinge to the standard at any desired angle between the hinge and the standard. Hence, though the angle between a and c or b and d will change with different radii, the lines c and d will remain parallel. Fig. 1 shows only one method of accomplishing this. There are other ways to accomplish this, but this instance will serve to illustrate one method of accomplishing easy hinge operation regardless of the curvature on which the chairs are set.

Quite often it is necessary to make chairs conform to a space longer or shorter than they were originally intended for. On main floors the distance between aisles may be slightly less or greater than that originally planned. In balconies the distance between the aisle steps may be more or less than that originally planned. This means that each chair in the row must be extended or compressed. A properly designed hinge will permit these variations.

In Fig. 2, we illustrate two standards set farther apart than the standard chair width. In this case, as in Fig. 1, the part of the hinge which attaches to the seat on the right-hand hinge is parallel to the similar part on the left-hand hinge. There is an angle between the parts C and E, as shown by the lines c and e. In the hinge illustrated, this angle is possible because rotation is about a ball, so that the hinge operates easily even though there be an angle between parts A and B. For perfect hinge operation, I would say that it is necessary that some method be provided so that the standards can be farther apart or closer together than the standard chair width.

If a hinge can accomplish the three things mentioned above and still operate smoothly and without undue strain on any parts, it will have long-wear life, provided the bearing surfaces are sufficiently large and the metals are such as to withstand a large amount of movement with a minimum of wearing away.

It is, of course, essential that the hinge be properly lubricated. It is desirable that this lubrication should have taken place at the factory where the chairs are made and that it be unnecessary to relubricate, except possibly once in several years. Hinges which require lubrication at frequent intervals are undesirable both because of the labor required to do this work, and because it is almost impossible to lubricate at frequent intervals without leaving some of the lubricant where it can come in contact with patrons' clothing. Wherever it is necessary to lubricate frequently, it is best to use a heavy grease rather than an oil. Sometimes this can be applied with a grease gun and a special nozzle. In addition to all of the factors mentioned above, the hinge should be free from any places which might catch, pinch or tear clothing.

The fastening between the back and the standard is not only a possible source of maintenance, but is also a possible cause of distortion in the hinge, which may result in excessive wear on the hinge. A properly designed back fastening will permit the chair to be very flexible before the back is secured in place, but after the back has been secured in place, the back and its fastenings should give to the chair the necessary rigidity to prevent excessive wear on the hinge. No movement which would cause disturbance to a patron through movement on the part of another patron, should ever be allowed to continue if it does occur.

Fig. 3 shows a back fastening in which the back is held to the standard either with bolts or with screws. Usually with upholstered backs, screws are used. The holes in the standard are slotted so as to provide for the variations mentioned in connection with hinges. There should be sufficient flexibility between the back fastening and the standard so that shocks applied to the back will be absorbed to some extent in this clip and will not be transmitted in full measure to the fastenings with which the chair is attached to the floor.

Fig. 4 shows a back fastening consisting of a clip secured to the back. This clip is then bolted to the standard. The figure shows a cross section of these bolts and the clip. The hole in the clip being so much larger than the bolt, it is possible to take care of all the necessary variations. This fastening also takes care of height variations such as may be caused by unevenness in the floor. The three round holes shown in this figure are for attaching the clip to the back. If the proper flexibility is built into a back fastening of the type shown in either Fig. 3 or Fig. 4, the back fastening will require little or no maintenance. If, however, the back fastenings do not have sufficient flexibility and it is found necessary to tighten them up several times, it may happen that after several tightenings the screws will not hold. In this case, a larger screw will sometimes suffice; otherwise the back should be removed and the holes thould be blocked up with a hardwood plug. Ordinarily the screws required do not exceed 1 inch in length. It is the general impression that the larger the screw in diameter, the more it will hold. This is not entirely true. With a 1-inch screw in birch or maple, a No. 10 gauge screw will hold the best. In oak, a No. 12 screw will hold the best. These same sizes apply for screws seven-eighths and three-quarters of an inch long.

It is important when inserting screws in plugged-up holes that no attempt be made to drive the screws in with a hammer. To get the full holding power of the screw and at the same time to be able to drive it easily, a lead hole should be drilled. For a No. 10 screw, use a 9/64-inch lead hole. For a No. 12

SEEKING IMPRESSIVENESS AT LOW COST

How modern patterns were used in the Hackensack theatre to achieve an architectural effect in keeping with complete modern facilities

IN THE Hackensack theatre in Hackensack, N. J., is well represented the adaptation of the new materials and styles to economy in the creation of a modern motion picture theatre within relatively narrow financial limits. Facilities are essentially unrestricted, with generous foyer space, two sets of lounges, extensive projection arrangements and complete stage equipment, while the seating capacity is 2,230. Yet (although actual figures are not divulged) the watchword, in planning and construction, was economy.

The Hackensack was erected by the Fox circuit, but has been transferred to the management of Skouras Brothers. The architect was Thomas W. Lamb.

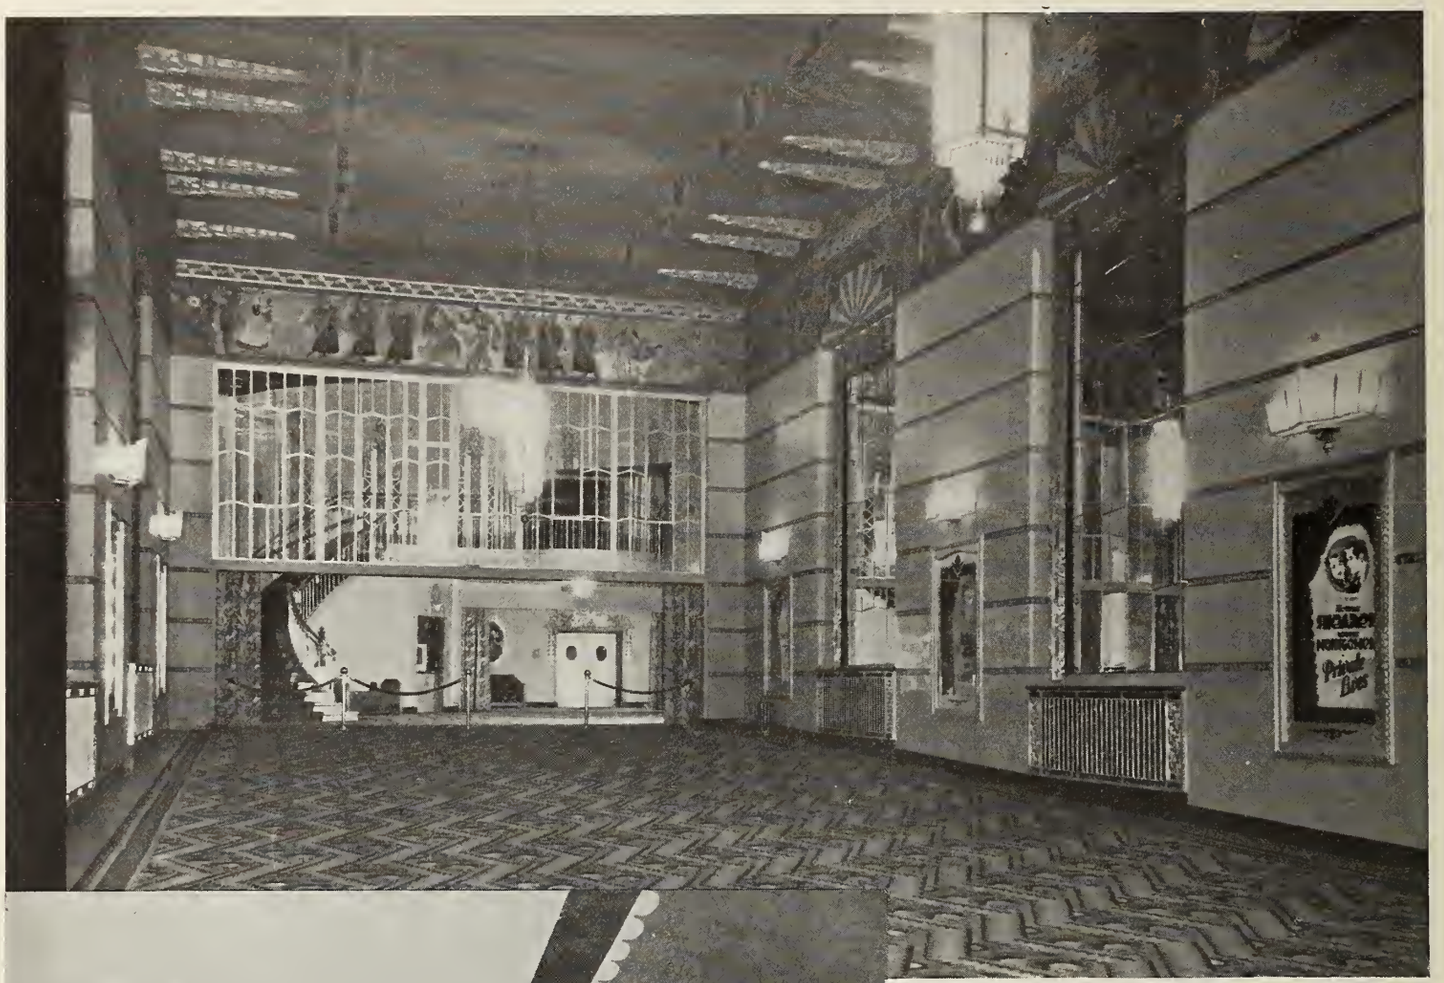
The theatre represents the whole function of the building, which is located in the main business section of this city of 25,000 population located in the New York metropolitan area. The house was erected under a general contract, and is of steel, concrete and brick construction, with facade facing in cut stone. Overall dimensions give a width of 105 feet, a depth of 166 feet, and a frontage (portion containing two vestibules and two lobbies) of 32 feet.

Seating is distributed on two floors, with the second level having a loge section and, to the rear, a balcony proper. Seating on the main level is in four sections, with two of the five aisles along the walls. There are 1,546 chairs on the main floor, arranged in 34 rows. The balcony proper has nine rows containing 390 chairs, while the loge section has six rows containing 294 chairs. Backs and seats are full-upholstered.

Projection quarters, located across the rear of the balcony, have a total width of 96 feet, and a slightly variant depth of approximately 14 feet. The projection room proper is 38 feet wide (transverse to theatre). All auxiliary rooms (they provide facilities for batteries, fans, rewind, generators and non-sync equipment) adjoin the projection room. The angle of projection is approximately 20°.

Projection equipment includes three Simplex projectors, two spots, and one effect machine. Sound equipment is Western Electric.

The Hackensack can accommodate a maximum screen size of 44x25 feet. The distance of the screen from the first row of seats is 24 feet (the area includes a pit 10½ feet in horizontal depth).



Air conditioning is provided through a plenum system with circulation of the downward diffusion type. The fan room is located beneath the foyer and the condenser and compressor for cooling by refrigeration, are beneath the lobby. Heating, with coal as the fuel, is by the ventilation system throughout the theatre, with additional provision of recessed, grille-concealed radiators outside the auditorium.

The facade—a simple massing of cut stone.

Acoustical provisions are for the most part included in the general design and decorative treatment, the shape of the auditorium being of the straight diverging-wall type, while the soffit of the balcony is stepped and all surfaces, the material of which is almost entirely plaster, are roughened and interrupted by ornament. In addition, the rear wall is treated with decorative drapes.

The layout of the theatre (see accompanying plans) divide the entrance portion (which extends from the sidewalk to the theatre proper in the center of the block) into two vestibules, a lobby and an outer foyer. To the rear of the orchestra floor is another foyer, off of which, at each end, is a lounge and toilet. On the mezzanine level is a promenade, with a lounge off each end. Management offices and a checkroom are located off the first foyer.

The first, or entrance vestibule containing the box office, is 6 feet deep and 12 feet high, while the second vestibule, which is of the same height, is 16 feet deep. The lobby is 64 feet deep and 24 feet high, and it leads into a circular foyer 37 feet in diameter. The inner foyer spanning the rear of the orchestra is 33 feet wide, 21 feet deep, and 11 feet high. The mezzanine promenade has a width of 72 feet, and depth of 16 feet. The proscenium opening is 55x31 feet, while the stage has a depth of 30 feet. The auditorium is 135 feet deep, with a mean width of 100 feet (between inner walls) and a mean height of 50 feet.

The architectural and decorative style of the Hackensack is one of modern lines and ornament, effected mainly through plastered walls, plaster furring and plaster relief work, with color patterns in stencil.

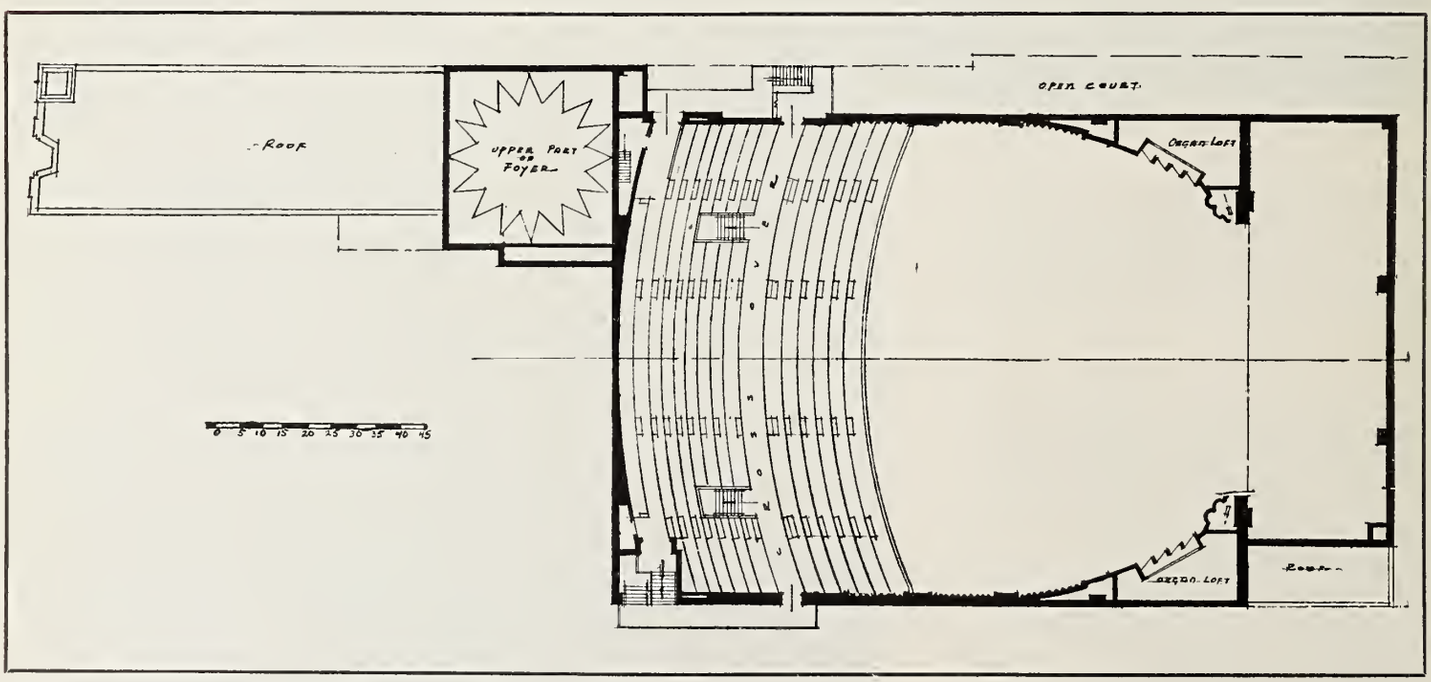
Facade. The architectural pattern here is a simple massing of cast stone incorporating a proportional vertical sign as an essential element of the design.



Lobbies and Foyers. These rooms, with the exception of the inner foyer (or orchestra promenade), form a succession of chambers of similar decorative treatment leading to the main theatre level and to a mezzanine. The lobby, reached through two shallow vestibules, is finished in stenciled plaster, with furred piers between which are set tall mirrors. The outer, or main foyer, is circular, and at one side winds a staircase to the mezzanine promenade. The full height of this foyer extends above the mezzanine. All lobby and foyer bases are of black marble, with walls directly above of cement continuous with the plaster, the whole surface above the base being decorated as a unit.

Auditorium. Walls are ornamented with a series of panels consisting in plaster flutings offsetting etched glass, behind which dully glows colored light projected from concealed sources at the sides and top. The organ screens, which are directed vertically to almost the height of the auditorium, are of pierced plaster through which may be seen a glow of colored light projected from concealed sources below. The ceiling is mainly a broad expanse of plaster with delicate stencilings. It is further decorated, however, with a plaster star in relief, which is stenciled in a complex pattern of vivid colors and picked out in gold leaf. Two slender columns of horizontal sections flank the proscenium arch on each side.

Lounges. These are richly appointed, colors being of warm tones. Wall treatment consists in overall washable fabric bearing wall-paper patterns. Adjoining the women's lounge on the main level is a cosmetic room with metal dressing tables equipped with individual mirrors of modernistic design.

Recent decisions of the higher courts on protective obligations and other points of law selected and analyzed expressly for motion picture owners and managers

Duty to Keep Theatre Lighted

NUMEROUS COURTS have held that it is the duty of a theatre owner to provide sufficient light, during exhibition of motion picture films, so that patrons may by the exercise of ordinary care, prevent injuries to themselves resulting from falling or otherwise tripping as a result of insufficient light.

However, it is important to know that in the recent case of Rosston v. Sullivan (179 N. E. 173), a higher court held that a theatre owner is not liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron where it is shown that the theatre lighting was dim because it is necessary for the audience to see the motion picture film plainly on the screen.

In this case it was shown that the lights usually kept burning in a theatre during the showing of a picture are from 15- to 25-watt lamps in the ceiling of the main aisle, reflecting a very soft colored light.

A patron who was injured in the theatre, sued the theatre owner for damages. During the trial the patron testified "that when she entered the theatre a picture was being shown and she found her way to a seat without the aid of an usher, although ushers with lights were on duty; that she remained in the theatre for an hour and at the end of the picture she started to go out before the house lights were turned on, when everything was dark; that she knew a step was there but could not see it; that she looked right down and stepped carefully, but the depth was greater than she thought, and as she stepped down she was thrown, and suffered the injuries complained of."

Although the lower court held the theatre owner liable, the higher court reversed this verdict and held the patron not entitled to a recovery. This court stated the following important law:

"The defendant (theatre owner) owed to the plaintiff (patron) as an invitee the general duty to use ordinary care and diligence to put and keep his theatre in a reasonably safe condition, having regard to the construction of the place, character of the entertainment given and the customary conduct of persons attending. . . . While pictures were being shown the defendant (theatre owner) violated no duty to the plaintiff if the condition of light was that ordinarily used in exhibiting moving pictures to enable the audience to get a reasonably clear view of the image thrown on the screen."

Protection of Children

VARIOUS COURTS have held that irrespective of circumstances which may occasion injury to adults, a theatre owner who is responsible for safeguarding children against injury, is bound to use a higher degree of care than that utilized with respect to adults.

It is true that actionable negligence arises only from the breach of a legal duty. In other words, if a theatre operator is not expressly or impliedly obligated to safeguard children against injury, he is not liable for payment of damages in the event a child is injured.

Generally it has been held that actionable negligence is the failure to do what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily do under the circumstances, or the doing of what such a person would not have done under the circumstances. Since lack of the application of ordinary care to protect theatre patrons against injury is actionable negligence for which the theatre owner may be liable in damages, considerable discussion has arisen from time to time over the question of what is legal "ordinary care." The answer to this question depends entirely upon the circumstances and may vary considerably.

For example, in Brown v. Columbia Amusement Company (6 P. [2d] 874), it was shown that a child was injured while in a place of amusement. The parents of the child sued the proprietor for damages. The counsel for the latter contended that he should not be held liable, since he had exercised a degree of care which would have prevented injury to persons of ordinary intelligence, such as adults. Notwithstanding this argument, the lower court held the proprietor liable in damages for the injury to the child, and the higher court sustained the verdict, and said:

"What is 'ordinary care' cannot be governed by arbitrary rules, but varies according to the exigencies which require attention and vigilance. . . . It must be proportionate to the danger; what would be ordinary care in a case presenting little danger, would be far 'below this in case of great danger.' . . . One operating amusement devices owes a duty to his patrons measured by the standard of ordinary care proportionate to the risk to be apprehended and guarded against. If such an operator invites children who have not reached an age where they are able to understand, appreciate, and avoid danger incident to a device to which they are thus invited, ordinary care should include the taking of precautions to protect them, which would not be necessary in the case of adults or older children."

Slanderous Statements

THE LAW is well established that a theatre manager acts in a legal capacity for his employer in all transactions relating to operation and conduction of the theatre. However, any acts or statements not directly connected with operation of the theatre are outside the scope of the employment for which the theatre owner is not liable.

For illustration, in the recent case of Craft v. Magnolia Company (138 So. 405), it was shown that a manager, without knowledge of his employer, searched for certain stolen goods and instructed a police officer to arrest a man named Craft. Later it developed that Craft had not stolen the goods and he filed suit against the manager's employer to recover damages, charging that the slanderous statements accusing him of theft were made while the manager was acting within the scope of the employment.

However, since the testimony indicated that the manager was acting solely for himself in obtaining the warrant, and not through instructions from his employer, the higher court held the employer not liable, and said:

"It is quite clear to us in the case at bar that the master here is not liable for the alleged tort because it was not committed in the course of the appointed duties of Harrison. And the servant, Harrison, was clearly acting on his own initiative and without authority."

Guarding Against Fire

IT IS IMPORTANT to know that a theatre operator, as a lessee, may be held liable in damages to the owner of a theatre, as a lessor, where the building is destroyed by fire as a result of negligence on the part of the theatre operator. Just what the term "negligence" actually means depends entirely upon the circum-

ORIENTAL AND ATMOSPHERIC

Describing the Oriental theatre in Rochester, Pa., a 1,700-seat house of period design and of two-floor type

THE ATMOSPHERIC theatre, done (as is most commonly the case) in a period style, continues to represent an important method of attacking the problem of how to create a home for the motion picture expressive of the screen's fictions. In addition to the purpose thus indicated, the style is based on a belief that the patron, having come to the theatre to leave his matter-of-fact world, wishes to dwell among splendors rich and exotic. Much has been convincingly said in support of this attitude, and though the style is less adopted today than it was a few years ago (when it all but became standard cinema architecture in the United States), it is still employed enough to remain of importance.

It is a style that does not invite a matter-of-fact description. The material is largely plaster. The phenomenon to be described is the spirit of its devices.

The Oriental theatre in Rochester, Pa., recently opened, is designed according to motifs implied by the name of the house, and it is fully atmospheric, having, indeed, a "day effect" as well as the usual "night effect." It was designed by M. J. DeAngelis of Pittsburgh, for Winograd Brothers and S. Oklin of that city, who operate the theatre.

Inasmuch as the architect has supplied a full description of the theatre, instead of a mere compilation of specifications (and also because no representative of BETTER THEATRES has directly examined the house), the architect's own outline of the principal features is presented below (with the usual quotation marks, for typographical reasons, omitted).

REVEALING glimpses of splendid beauty, massive construction, artistic conception and modern provisions for comfortable relaxation, the Oriental takes its place as one of the finest motion picture and vaudeville playhouses in Western Pennsylvania. From the brick and terra cotta front, to the stage drop, the theatre carries out the beauty and slender of Hindu-Chinese architecture, as exemplified in creations of palaces and gardens of the Orient.

The exterior of the theatre reminds one of a gorgeous Oriental palace, with cozy balconies richly trimmed, and replicas of the Buddha and Sacred Elephant ornamenting it. The beauty is augmented by a handsome marquee. Hundreds of electric lights illuminate it by night.

Entering the theatre, one is immediately impressed by the beauty of the interior. The entire ensemble breathes of the Orient. The spacious lobby is complete with artistic decorations in precast ornamental plaster, dragons and the Buddha predominating.

An atmospheric type of interior has been created, the deep blue of the heavens reproduced in the ceiling of the auditorium, with twinkling stars, mist and slow-moving clouds. The effect is produced by the most modern of effect-producing machines.

From the roof gardens that completely surround the ceiling of the theatre, trees, flowers and shrubbery grow, and foliage blooms in wild profusion, drooping artistically over the walls. By special lighting effect, a mid-summer day or a moonlight night may transform the sky. Hundreds of colored lights concealed behind the foliage play a big part in the lighting of the theatre.

From scores of artistic coves, so typical of the architectural beauty of the Orient, shine indirect lights, and from the ceiling of the first floor under the balcony, drop lights and concealed bulbs add their glow. From a brightness like that of day, to a mere one-candle-power, the lights throughout the entire playhouse can be regulated by a dimmer system. Indirect lighting characterizes the illumination throughout the theatre.

The wall decorations are in craf-tex and polychrome coloring. Gold falcons and bronze statues add to the decorative note. A rainbow effect can be secured by the use of different-colored reflectors. Arched windows open to vistas of blue sky. In insets are wall paintings, faithfully reproduced from famous originals, by Harold Bishop of Rochester, N. Y.

The stage opening is 44 feet wide, the largest in Beaver Valley and second only to that of the Penn theatre in Pittsburgh. The stage is fully equipped for vaudeville and roadshows.

From the front part of the main floor, arched doorways lead to emergency exits and to the rear of the stage. Back-stage, iron stairs lead to spacious dressing rooms.

One of the features of the theatre is the mezzanine floor, which is accessible from archways leading from either side of the lobby. Here are to be found lounging rooms for men and women, as well as offices for the theatre management. From this point, overlooking the lobby, are reached the upper seating sections.

In the lower balcony, or mezzanine, are 200 seats, while the balcony in the rear seats 300. Coupled with the seating capacity on the main floor, the theatre easily accommodates 1,700 people.

The balcony impresses one with its immensity. Row upon row of seats stretch from the heavy, richly ornamented railing to the very "sky," where in the rear of the balcony is located the projections room. Here have been placed the newest of the new film apparatus. The booth also contains a remote control switchboard whereby the house lights may be operated. Their operation is also possible from the stage.

The seats are specially designed. The backs are covered in rich jacquard in shades to complement the general color scheme used throughout the interior. The seats are covered in leather.

A special heating and cooling system has been installed. Air is supplied by intakes at sides. Outlets are in the floor.

The Oriental building is fire-proof throughout. Rich carpets of unusual design cover the floors throughout, while velvet hanging and drapes are included among the furnishings.

THE ARCHITECT further includes, in a statement accompanying his report, that the Oriental has already demonstrated an impressiveness upon the community in which it is located. Locally, he states, the theatre is looked upon as one of the finest in the western part of Pennsylvania. Rochester is a small city, but the clientele belongs to the area contributory to Pittsburgh.

The view at the top of the page is of the main lobby, as seen from the lounge on the mezzanine level. Lavish decorative treatment is executed in pre-cast plaster. At left is shown the lounge on the mezzanine, an open area, rather than a room, sparsley furnished to permit of easy circulation.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

SOME FREAKS I HAVE KNOWN

By A. L. MASON

Sound freaks, in this case — the kind that sometimes make projection a circus, albeit one that is scarcely entertaining until it's all over

THE LOVELY voice of the heroine broke into sobs. "I love you," were the words to have followed. But instead there suddenly issued from the big horn a string of profanity, in the background of which "I love you" could be heard as a faint and inconsequential obligato.

Cast, director, sound engineers stared in amazement. They had heard that scene recorded not two minutes before, and there had been no profanity anywhere on the stage. Telephones flashed into activity, and all over the big lot junior executives and special officers tore things apart, looking for the practical joker. No joker could be found, and when the engineers reported that the channel seemed clear, the scene was shot again. No trouble followed.

But ghostly footsteps walked through a subsequent take, and still later the voices of technicians could be heard, discussing some recondite sound problem. It was this last that led to the solution of the mystery. The men were identified and asked where and under what circumstances they had discussed such and such a matter. A microphonic tube in the amplifier room was found to be the source of the trouble. A loose element in that tube, vibrating with every noise in the vicinity, had modulated the sound being recorded.

Suggestions for a microphone based on the same principle were subsequently debated among the engineers who were present or had heard of the occurrence, and the suggestion may still, perhaps, bear fruit in the future.

(Projectionists who happen to be in possession of an extremely microphonic tube, may try speaking against its glass. The monitor horn should be turned off and all projection room ports closed to prevent feed-back. With a reasonable percentage of badly microphonic tubes, backed by sufficient amplification, the voice of the speaker should be heard through the stage horns.)

THE FIRST sound system with which the present writer had any personal contact was the talk of the small New England town where it was being installed. Sound was very new in those days. People were impatient for it. This theatre was an old one, built into a combination apartment-house and business-building, and no one connected with the sound installation could enter or leave the premises without being asked when the miracle would be ready.

This was very embarrassing, because a mysterious and unexpected trouble was interfering with the success of the miracle. Strange hums and noises would appear at times, then leave again as suddenly as they had come. They were watched and timed, but there was no consistency in them, and no one could predict either their appearance or their going away. It was plainly impossible to put on a show under such conditions, and the eagerness of the townsfolk became a positive torment to the engineers.

At last a routine investigation of every piece of electrical machinery in the neighborhood was determined upon. It was a sporadic search, since it could only be prosecuted as long as the mysterious trouble was present, but in the end the disturbance was traced down. An electric refrigerator in one of the apartments that adjoined the projection room, was responsible.

"You're all right now," the manager was told. "As soon as we can get some condensers down from Boston we'll put a filter on that refrigerator and then you shouldn't have any more trouble."

"Why bother with a filter?" the manager demanded. "Mrs. Jones will shut her ice-box off whenever the show is running!"

It developed that Mrs. Jones would be pleased and highly flattered to co-operate in so important a matter as the town's movie, and the filter was forgotten by unanimous consent.

Those were halcyon days! They were all too short! It has been many years now since sound troubles seemed that funny. One, that comes to memory at the moment, was a headache for a month.

THIS ALSO was a hum in a small-town theatre, but no check-up of neighboring machinery offered any help. The local power company was called upon. Its officials were told the trouble was in their lines. On their part the power people said, "Fine, find it and we'll fix it." But their maps showed several miles of line, any inch of which might have been responsible. "It isn't our line, it's your set," they retorted.

Every light, every fan and motor in the theatre was turned off. With flashlights and candles in the projection room, test after test was tried. The hum remained. "It's your set," repeated the power people.

Finally power was disconnected from the sound system. Seven hundred volts of dry batteries took the place of the plate transformer. There was no longer a milliwatt of line power flowing anywhere in the theatre. But the hum remained unchanged.

"It's your set," the power company gloated.

"How can it be?" worried the sound engineer. "How can the system put out 60 cycles when there's no 60 cycles getting into it?"

"That's your headache," said the power company.

So it seemed. But when they went out into the street, climbed down a manhole and pulled the transformer fuses, the hum disappeared. After that it became a community headache.

The sound engineer washed his hands of further responsibility, and for nearly a month, he and the power company tried to find out what was wrong with their line, while the manager tore his hair and offered his disgusted patrons what apologies he could. As long as power remained in the theatre wiring, even though none of it was being used and every switch was turned off—even though the theatre fuses were taken out, the hum continued. When the street fuses were removed the hum disappeared.

The secret has never been discovered, but after some weeks the theatre complained bitterly, and other service engineers were sent, who said: "If we can't find out where the hum comes from, let's try to find the place where it gets into the system." That seemed logical, and grounds were removed, one after another, until elimination of the B-battery ground reduced the trouble to unnoticeable proportions. The same thing could have been done the first day.

RADIO PICK-UP is often responsible for freak troubles. The customary cure is to ascertain which wires are acting as antennae, and de-tune them by addition of suitable condensers or coils.

One day wireless code signals were plainly heard in the auditorium of a Times Square, New York, theatre. Some difficulty was encountered in finding where they originated, until a sound engineer with radio background was assigned to the job. This man stood in the dim glow of an exit light and copied down sentence after sentence from the New York Times wireless station, addressed—on a wavelength of 37.5 meters—to Admiral Byrd at the South Pole. But the audience quite properly preferred to listen to Gloria Swanson without code accompaniment, and the manager was swamped with complaints.

It seemed unthinkable, in the case of a theatre located in the heart of Broadway, that any trouble whatever could take as long as a month to cure, but this one took very nearly that time. Circuit after circuit was condensered, or loaded, with no important results. The operators at the wireless station volunteered to stay overtime until far into the small hours of the morning, to no good end whatever. It seemed that no single wire or pair of wires, but the entire wiring and conduit system of the projection room, was acting as antennae. In similar cases, bell-wire wrapped around sections of the conduit had been known to help, but even that resource failed in this instance.

The men working on the problem recalled the instance of a million-dollar broadcasting station that had been set up on the roof of a New York skyscraper some years before. When the first tests were made it was found that the station could not radiate to any appreciable distance. Investigation showed that the steel-work of the building happened to be tuned to exactly the wave assigned and was absorbing all the energy the antennae could put out. Its owners decided that taking their million-dollar loss and moving the station elsewhere would be cheaper than trying to re-build the skyscraper. In the other case, there seemed to be no choice but to re-pipe and re-wire the entire projection room.

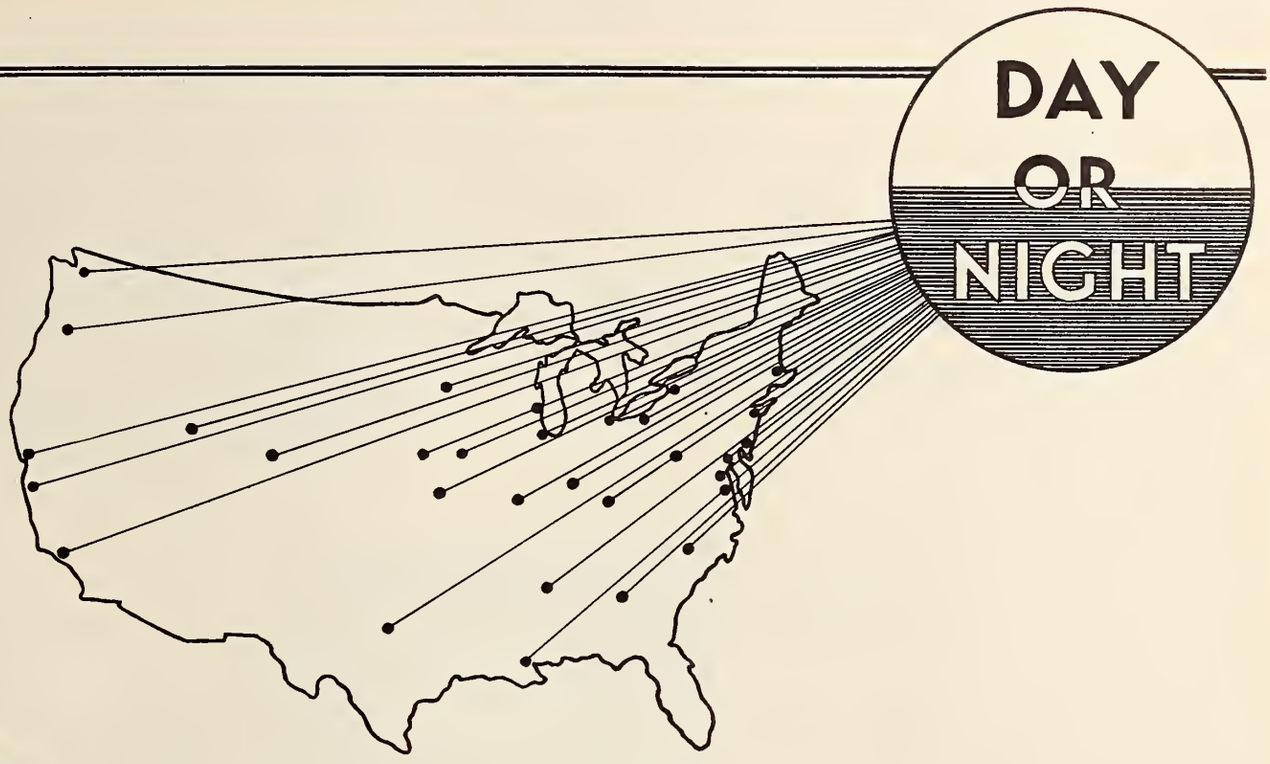
The development of the very earliest of sound rectifiers came most opportunely at that moment. The storage batteries were rather badly run down, anyway, and had already been slated for early attention. Replacing them by rectifiers and so eliminating the charging panel changed all the constants of the wiring and conduit, and with the addition of tuned inductances in the filament circuits, eliminated the trouble.

It was in a neighboring and allied theatre that perhaps the "freakiest" of all radio troubles took place. Ordinary broadcasting had been heard, the manager declared—entire programs, including the advertising matter and the station call letters, came from his screen. The interference was not persistent—it could be heard only at occasional intervals.



Management and sound engineers were equally dismayed—with the memory of the Times wireless still fresh in their thoughts. But none of the many remedies applied in haste seemed to have any effect at all—the interference blithely reappeared just whenever it wanted to. It was only a fortunate accident that revealed its nature before everyone concerned suffered nervous breakdown.

The same "trouble" has been reported from several parts of the country. In one instance, the stage-hands had a radio, located in an unusued dressing room, and on warm days the door of this dressing room was sometimes left open.

The variety of freak troubles is endless, and there is no one of any experience in the business who cannot match the examples here given. Some day all the freak possibilities may be tuned out of sound, but when that day comes, much of the fun will have gone out of it as well.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

SCREEN ILLUMINATION: THREE ACTUAL CASES

THAT MY opinions with regard to screen illumination faults were well founded was something more than amply proved by the first series of measurements that I have just completed. I made them in company with one of the most experienced projection men in New York, and we were both rather astounded by the showing. I shall now lay before you the screen illumination of three of New York City's theatres, as measured by us with a Weston direct reading illuminometer.

What was found certainly points to the need for a direct reading screen illuminometer as a part of any large theatre's equipment, and its frequent use as well. At the very least, there should be such an instrument in every territory, available to theatres, perhaps on a renting basis.

The readings already taken have set the projection staffs of the theatres involved hard at work to discover the fault or faults. One theatre called in a man who discovered one reason for the unevenness of illumination almost immediately, and he was able to apply a remedy. However, while that made a very decided improvement, it did not clear up the matter. I later went to the projection room of that theatre, made a few measurements and laid out the condenser converging lens-to-the-projection-lens light beam on paper, finding that not all the light beam was entering the projection lens (a thing the projectionists in that theatre should have long since discovered for themselves). In other words, the focal length of their condenser was too short, hence too close to the aperture. It was a cylindrical type condenser, but produced a diverging beam between the aperture and lens. This I proved to the men by removing the lens, projecting the white light and blowing smoke into it, whereupon they all were convinced that that was the fact, proving also that much light was falling outside the projection lens, the working distance of which was, as I remember it, 4.5 inches. I advised the installing of a condenser of longer focal length, cylindrical or otherwise, so that the divergence of the beam beyond the aperture would be reduced, and all the beam made to enter the lens.

(In this connection I would respectfully suggest that owners of the Bluebook of Projection turn to Page 182 of Volume 1, and study Figure 47 and its accompanying text. It is rather amazing how relatively few projectionists have any comprehensive understanding of such matters, or their effect upon their work. I would also suggest an examination of Figures 48, 49 and 50, and a real study of what they represent, remembering that the point where the two rays cross in Figure 50 means nothing in this connection, since in Figure 50 we merely are considering certain effects beyond the aperture. Examine Figures 47 and 50 together and you won't get the idea that moving the aperture to the crossing point of the rays would stop divergence beyond the aperture. It would, in fact, increase it. Divergence beyond the aperture is controlled by condenser diameter and distance of converging lens from aperture, with possibly some variation due to character of condenser.)

I shall not name the theatres where the measurements were used. You wouldn't want your theatre named if I made measurements and found such results, would you? Also it is not altogether unlikely that I will find results as bad or worse in other theatres.

IN THEATRE No. 1, which is among the picture palaces of New York, the light sources are Hall and Connolly High Intensity. The screen is a perforated one (I did not ascertain the make). Readings were taken in three horizontal lines across the screen surface. All figures, unless otherwise noted, stand for foot candles. For example, 9 and 3 would mean 9 C.P. incident light on the screen surface, and 3 C.P. reflected light. Reading across the screen:

Direct Light	11.5	10.5	9
Reflected Light ..	5.0	5.0	3
Middle
Direct Light	14.0	17.0	10.0
Reflected Light ..	6.0	8.0	4.0
Bottom
Direct Light	12.5	11.0	9.0
Reflected Light ..	3.0	4.0	3.0

You will observe, upon analysis, that the light was very badly or poorly centered —too much to the left—and that around the center is a distinct, heavy falling off in candle power. What you cannot see, and what could not be seen by the unaided eye from the projection room, or seen at all with the film running, was brown discoloration on the right side of the screen, slightly visible also at left, at top and at the bottom.

In theatre No. 2, light sources were Hall and Connolly High Intensity. Screen as in No. 1. Readings as follows:

Direct Light	5.0	7.0	5.0
Reflected Light ..	2.0	3.0	2.0
Middle
Direct Light	8.0	13.0	9.0
Reflected Light ..	3.0	6.0	4.0
Bottom
Direct Light	8.0	11.0	6.0
Reflected Light ..	3.0	5.0	3.0

AT THE SAME time measurements were taken in the auditorium of light reflected directly from the screens. In theatre No. 1 at 18 feet from the screen, we got four fifths of a foot-candle; at 40 feet, one fifth of a foot-candle; and at 60 feet, one tenth of a foot-candle. No light except from the screen. Just what this may really mean, in viewing percentages of light, I must leave to specialists in light.

The screen in Theatre No. 1, was 14′ 8″x7′ 14″, or approximately 254 square feet in area. In Theatre No. 2, the screen was 18x22 feet, or approximately 396 square feet in area. In Theatre No. 2, the reflected light was measured at one fifth of a foot-candle at 35 feet, one tenth at 55 feet, and one twentieth at 75 feet.

Incidentally, measuring from the top down on the screen of Theatre No. 2, the following findings resulted: At top center, 7.5; half-way down to center, 9; and at center, 11. Measuring from lower left corner diagonally up to center, in about even spaces, we got the following: 6, 7, 8, 9.5 and 11; and at center, 12.5.

It will be observed that in these latter measurements we got 12.5 at the center. In the former reading we found center to be 13. Just why this is, I don't know, but between the two sets of measurements the arc was struck, which may account for it. Corner measurements also vary, at least partly because we went to extreme corners in diagonal measurement.

You will observe that the light is centered too high on the screen of No. 2, though sidewise it is approximately correct. Note the heavy falling off in every direction from the center of screen. We must, of course, expect some falling off, but nothing like this. All the light beam was not entering the lens in this case.

IN THEATRE NO. 3, the light sources are Strong high intensity reflector lamps (the reflectors of which apparently need changing). As in the other two cases, the light was measured with projector running, without film. In this case, however, we stopped the projector before finishing and projected white light to the screen, then measured it. This resulted in 27 foot-candles direct, and 15 reflected, as against 14 and 7 with projector in operation. The readings follow:

Top
Direct Light	6.0	10.0	6.0
Indirect Light ..	3.5	4.3	3.4
Middle
Direct Light	10.0	14.0	10.0
Reflected Light ..	4.5	7.0	4.5
Bottom
Direct Light	9.0	12.0	5.0
Indirect Light ..	3.1	5.5	2.2

A reading taken in back of the screen showed three fourths of a foot-candle passing through the screen perforations. Reading at 25 feet from the screen, five-tenths of a foot-candle; at approximately 45 feet from screen, two-tenths of a foot-candle. Screen dimensions 21′ 6″x16′, or approximately 354 square feet in area.

I have not as yet calculated the reflection powers, viewed as a whole, of these screens, nor do I know either their make or age. They will have attention later.

These measurements are being made both for my own use and for the use of the Practical Projection Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, of which committee I am a member.

I should be willing to make similar measurements at the request of theatre managements who might wish to have such data concerning their own screen and light conditions. There are limits, of course, to the extent I could do this, but within a reasonable area, arrangements could be made.

WORKING UNDER DIFFICULTIES

MARVIN H. CARTER of Fries, Va., writes: "I have had to take up the art of projection with sound, with scarcely no assistance, either from other projectionists or a sound engineer. We are getting along fine with the sound. The system is Western Electric. I have learned some very fine lessons from your department, but of course still have much projection knowledge to absorb.

"We are having a little flicker trouble which I am sure can be bettered. It is the same arrangement that was present when the projector was installed, but now I notice that when I rotate the mechanism slowly by means of the flywheel, when the intermittent sprocket stops, the master blade of the shutter lacks about one-half or three-quarters of an inch of covering the lens, the same condition being true, in reverse, when the intermittent sprocket starts to move. Now whether it is necessary that the whole lens be covered by the shutter during the time the intermittent sprocket is moving, I don't know. Please advise me. We have a Superlite No. 2 lens with a front shutter. I would like to know what shutter I should have. Projection speed is at 90 feet per minute.

"I would also like to know if the Bluebook, Vols. 1 and 2, have diagrams of the Simplex parts—in fact, just what do these books contain?"

As to the shutter, it is not necessary that the entire lens be closed, either at the start or the stop of the intermittent sprocket. If there is no travel ghost when the screen is examined down front—about 25 feet from it—then the master blade is wide enough. If there is travel ghost, one way and not the other, the shutter needs setting. If you cannot set it so there is no travel ghost, then the blade is not wide enough. You can ascertain the necessary width by removing the metal blade from the hub and cutting a pattern of it out of stiff cardboard such as business cards are made of. In cutting, make the master blade a bit wider than your metal master blade—that is, if the present blade is too narrow. Color the paper blade black and install it in place of your metal blade. There need not be any outer connecting ring between the wings at their edges. They will run for quite a time without it.

Then thread in a piece of black and white title film, and, with somebody close to the screen, cut off equal amounts from the edge of the master blade until travel ghost just barely starts, both up and down. You now have a bit less than the absolute minimum width of blade and can install a metal blade just a bit wider, being careful to trim the master blade so that the openings on both sides of it are kept equal.

The Bluebook is frequently advertised in BETTER THEATRES.

AS A DIRECTOR OF PROJECTION SEES IT

RECENTLY the director of projection for a huge theatre chain said: "What is a man in my position to do when he finds projectionists who fail or refuse to give proper co-operation and support, yet who are so protected by the union that their discipline or discharge is impossible, unless one is willing to face a most unpleasant fight with union officials?"

He asked this question with considerable feeling. I know he has worked very hard to build up his department and to make it possible for the projectionists under him to give full co-operation by delivering really high-class results, both upon the screen and through the horns. That which the director complained of is a situation that actually does exist in some places. It is most emphatically not the fault of the union organization as a whole. So far as it does exist, however, it is a situation which is basically wrong and one for which some remedy should be found.

Now, none need get excited and start hurling verbal brickbats at my poor head. You all know, just as I know, that this condition does exist. You all very well know that while some unions do their full duty in the matter of making a real effort to have their members deliver the best possible service in return for union wages and working conditions, there are others which really make no effort in that direction worthy of the name. Unions are a very necessary institution, but it is nonsense to assume them to be any more perfect than other human institutions.

When an exhibitor pays union wages and complies with union working condi-

It still happens today! This cartoon I dug up the other day from my archives. It was published among my columns of comment on projection many years ago—when projection was quite a youngster. What a change has come into projection! Yet this cartoon is as applicable today in far too many instances as it was when first published. Shall we keep it for publication again many years hence?—F.H.R.

tions, he certainly has a perfect right to expect to receive all co-operation possible in the interests of excellent projection and sound reproduction. He has the right to expect the very best results which may be produced with what the projectionist is given to work with. And best results includes not only the best results in screen image and sound, but also in the economy with which those results are obtained.

You know and I know that unions do, in so far as is practicable, tie up the labor supply. That is necessary, I believe, and because it is necessary, it is right. However, who will dispute the contention that, having tied up the labor supply, it is up to the union to see that its members make every possible effort to produce maximum results with maximum efficiency.

I am quite sure that every I. A. officer would agree that what I have said is only logical and fair.

The director of projection of a theatre chain has the right to expect to receive full co-operation from the projectionists under him, provided, of course, he himself gives them at least reasonable co-operation. A just complaint such as I have cited (and in this case I believe it to be a just one) is deserving of very serious consideration. The projectionist who accepts union pay—I say union pay for the reason that almost all of the theatres in this chain are located in well organized territories—and refuses or fails to give full co-operation to the director of projection, and at least reasonably good service, should be subject either to discipline or discharge. In fact, the union should be very willing to have him disciplined. It should, in self-protection, be very willing to do the disciplining itself. Failure or refusal so to do gives the exhibitor and theatre manager the one real argument they have against unions.

It is quite entirely possible for every union, by right management, to force its members to give the best possible service, and that without doing anything very drastic, without doing anything which any member can find legitimate objection to, always provided convincing proof be demanded that the offending member is not giving satisfactory service, and that the fault is due to negligence on his part and not faults in what is provided him to work with.

I have said before and again say that when an organization deliberately ties up all the available supply of labor in any line, it is, as a matter of justice, right and common sense, up to that organization to see to it that the employer has no legitimate complaint as to the quality of service supplied.

Clearly understand that this is not a "roast." It is the setting forward of certain valid, sensible arguments. It is calling attention to certain things which should be discussed occasionally, because men and organizations, in the very nature of things, become a bit careless. In many instances both men and employers have very legitimate grounds for complaint. In many cases the projectionist does not give the co-operation he should. He does not do the best he can do with the things provided him.

In 1917 Balaban & Katz showed the way by being the first theatre owners to adopt air cooling and conditioning for the comfort and enjoyment of their movie patrons during the summer season.

They contracted with the Wittenmeier Machinery Company of Chicago for cooling plants for their Riviera and Central Park theatres. These were the first theatres on record where mechanical refrigeration was used to provide a cool, cheerful and invigorating inside atmosphere.

Fifteen years later Balaban and Katz still select Wittenmeier equipment (250 tons) for their latest de luxe Chicago theatre unit, the Southtown. There's a reason! Wittenmeier design and patents on air cooling and conditioning plants cover unique applications and offer you worth while savings in first cost, operating cost and improved air conditions.

In many cases the management does not give the projectionist that co-operation and encouragement he is justly entitled to. He is compelled to let his equipment fall into a state of disrepair, so that the best results cannot be produced. He receives films in poor repair or smeared with dirt and oil.

Such things have no excuse. They are costly to the box office, no matter on which side the fault lies. They are bad for the public and for the motion picture industry.

LAMP LIFE VARIATION

WALKER MORRISON, projectionist of New York City, says: "A number of times I have started to write you, but it always got side-tracked. I have all your books, and in order to keep up with things in projection, I am a subscriber to MOTION PICTURE HERALD, as well as to the American Projectionist. (I have not sent in any 'Bluebook School' answers, but I keep up with, and on, them and find them to be very helpful).

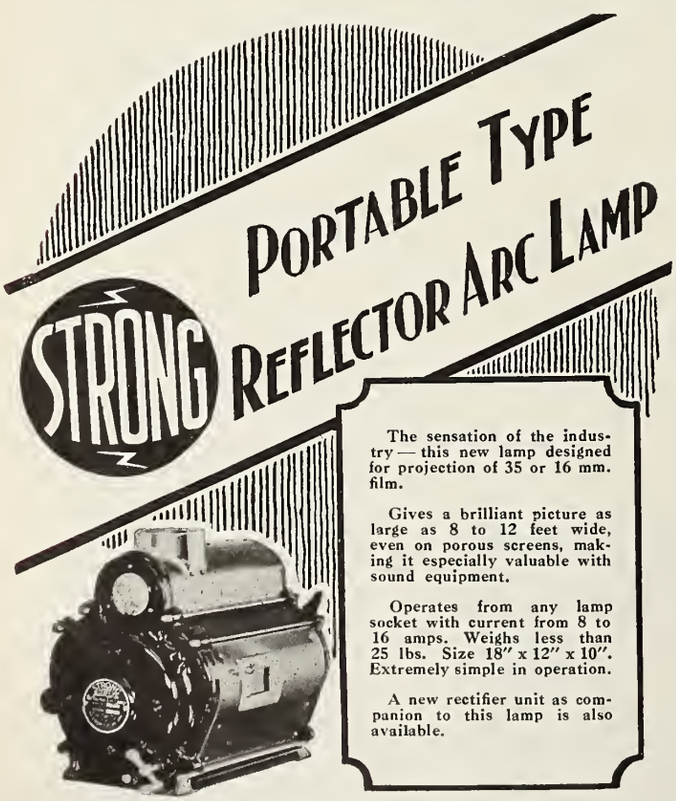
"I have always considered myself as a small-time projectionist, because I have never had a chance to work in any of the large houses. However, I am working in one of the Washington Heights Broadway theatres, the Gotham, seating capacity 2,800. With the help I have had from you through the years I am able to put on a show that they say is not bad either to look at or to listen to. The sound equipment is Royal Amplitone. And now a question:

"'Each exciting lamp works approximately 310 minutes per day, but on one projector the lamp lasts only one week, while on the other the same type of lamp lasts only one week. Power source is wet batteries of 10 volts, 100 amperes capacity. Lamps are 8.5 volts, 4 amperes. Could you give me an idea as to what the cause may be?'

"We run silent trailers with non-sync. Since they are short, instead of trying to play to them, I play a record that creates atmosphere for the feature following. Could any department suggest correct music to play? I use my own judgment, but believe my judgment might be improved in such a matter.

"For example, on 'Street Scene' trailer I played 'You Rascal You,' and on "Heartbreak' I played 'Kiss Me Goodnight.' Recently I received a Metro picture with the license number offset with a blank sound track. Don't know who deserves credit for this, but consider it as a great improvement towards sound-on-film projection.

"And now, before closing, a few words about Standard Release Prints. In my opinion there should be a system created for use by projectionists who double up reels, so that the start and standard change-over cues might be preserved. This might easily be done if only Reels 1 and 2, 3 and 4, etc., be coupled."



As to that last, I don't understand. That, Brother Morrison, is just what is done, but of course at least two frames must, in the very nature of things, be lost at each cut, and soon the chap who tries to run without doubling will find the cues between 1 and 2, 3 and 4, 5 and 6 disappearing or already entirely gone. The trouble is not for those who do double up, but for those who don't when others do!

As to your music, it would take a lot of time and space to accomplish what you wish, and relatively few would have the necessary selections on records, or would bother to use them if they had. Non-sync usage is not so important now, except in rare specific instances.

With regard to your lamp, I would say that you are not carrying the same amperage on both lamps, probably for the reason that one of the exciting lamp ammeters is at fault. I suggest that you have the ammeters tested. A very slight bit of overload will, as you doubtless know, greatly shorten the life of an exciting lamp.

This may be quite true, yet when you switch to the projector carrying the high amperage lamp you will be unable to detect the difference in the sound. As a matter of fact, I think you will do well to have the ammeters tested. If they show up okay, then you had better call in a service engineer.

By the way, don't get the idea that a man must be in a large theatre in order to be a "big-time" projectionist. I have known of some very high-grade projection-ists in small theatres, and I have known of some dubs in the greatest theatres. At one time the Roxy theatre in New York had one or two men on its projection staff who were far from being even good "machine operators." They did not last long, nor did their presence in that theatre make of them anything even faintly resembling "big-time" projectionists.

It must be remembered, brother, that the really "big-time" man is the man who delivers, considering what he has to work with, excellent results. It matters not where he produces them. The small theatre patron is just as much entitled to get his money's worth as is the patron of the deluxe house.

OVER-SHOOTING AT CHANGEOVER

RECENTLY my good friend George Edwards, projectionist and ex-president of the American Projection Society, directed my attention to the rather prevalent error of over-shooting with the fader at changeover, and a second serious error usually committed following that act.

Not a few projectionists, through carelessness usually, often over-shoot from one to two points on the fader at changeover, followed by immediately bringing the setting back to normal. Both acts are wholly and entirely wrong. We all know there should be no over-shooting. We also all know that the careful, expert projectionist will incur none. He will swing the fader pointer to the correct point and nowhere else.

However, if there is an over-shoot, then it is very poor practice to swing the fader pointer back immediately without regard to sound effect. If this be done, it is not in the least unlikely that the drop will occur right in the middle of a spoken sentence, or in the center of a long drawn out musical note, in either of which cases the audiences can not fail to hear the change in sound.

The projectionist who does over-shoot the normal point, should leave the fader remain high until there is a break in the sound, as at the end of a sentence, whereupon he should reduce one point. At the next break he may again reduce one point. By this procedure the reduction may be made without the audience being actually conscious that a wrong act has been done.

AS TO WHAT IS REVERBERATION

RECENTLY a San Francisco projectionist wrote, "I have had a discussion with a sound engineer, and later with my immediate boss, the manager, as to what constitutes reverberation. I find myself unable to agree with the definition of the effect, advanced by either of them. I therefore come to the old standby, who now may be quickly reached by air mail, asking you to tell me just exactly what is meant by the above term.

"Your old friends here are all holed in for the winter. Pop Woods has the same old giggle, and all is quiet along the Pacific —at this port, at least. By the way, your comment about Wood's busted waterfall in Golden Gate Park, when you were last here, is not entirely forgotten even yet."

My regards to "Pop," Freddy, and all the other ginks out there where the Sun says goodnight to America each day.

Not being myself entirely certain as to just what answer should be made, I referred the question to the Erpi engineering department. Here is their answer, which is enlightening and distinctly valuable. It indicates the necessity for exhibitors having their auditorium very carefully examined by thoroughly competent sound engineers who understand sound theatre requirements in all phases. Here is what Erpi says:

"Everyone has heard an echo. It is an example of a single sound reflection from a large surface, such as a wall at some distance, so that the listener hears the sound repeated.

"When the reflecting walls are those of a theatre or auditorium, sound is reflected back and forth from one wall to another many times. This multiple reflection produces a condition known as reverberation, which is the persistence of sound in an enclosure due to reflection from various surfaces.

"Excessive reverberation may cause speech to be unintelligible, as is frequently the case in large railway stations. Train announcers are trained to speak clearly and should not be blamed for announcing unintelligibly if the reverberation is excessive. Under these conditions, each word spoken is jumbled with the reverberation of the previous word.

"It is not desirable, however, that reverberation be entirely absent, for this condition produces a deadness of effect that is very unnatural indoors. An example of no reverberation is an open field where the only reflection possible is from the surface of the ground. The proper amount of reverberation for any theatre or auditorium depends on the use to which it will be put. For musical programs, the hall should be more reverberant than for lecturing.

"Broadcast studios control reverberation by changing the amount of absorbing material on the reflecting surfaces."

TIMING THE REVOLVING SHUTTER

THE SIMPLEX instruction book is for the most part excellent, but on Page 12, Instruction 46, entitled "Setting Revolving Shutter," needs amendment. It would not fool the experienced projectionist, of course, but constantly new men are coming into the business, and one should remember that and be very careful.

Instruction 46 says, "Revolving shutter must be so timed that the master blade covers the aperture while the film is moving downward past the aperture and uncovering the aperture when the film comes to rest.

This is not exactly true. If it were, there would be a considerable waste of light. The shutter begins to open the lens before the film has come entirely to rest, and closes it only after the film has started to move. In an authoritative instruction book, that should be very clearly explained for the benefit of the younger men in the profession.

I am not altogether sure just how that works out with the rear shutter, which has a deeply indented edge. It is possible that these indentations would just about take care of the things we are talking of, but in any event care should be taken to set the matter forth fully, because it really is important.

AUTHORITY OF PROJECTION HEAD

FROM a certain projectionist (no matter where) comes this communication:

"Just finished reading your article, 'The Superviser of Projection,' in BETTER THEATRES for January 16. You are quite right in the statement made therein that the director of projection has almost no authority.

"Recently I invited our director of projection at the home office over to our town, a distance of 21 miles. In return I received a letter saying, 'In future, if you have any complaint about your equipment, make it to the Big Boss.' I guess that ought to hold a fellow down for awhile!

"With regard to sound pictures, I believe if there were a little less talking and more music, it would be better. Give us clean, wholesome, well made pictures with plenty of good snappy action, and the motion picture theatre won't have to bother very much about hard times.

This man is, in my opinion, quite right in all his statements. The director of projection must have authority over projection and all things pertaining thereto, or his title is an empty one and his position more or less farcical. In this case I do not know what chain of theatres is involved, but it is fair to assume that the director of projection knows at least something about projection, and that the "Big Boss" knows very little. It is nonsensical to put a man at the head of so important a department unless he is given at least just as full authority as the heads of other departments.

HOW HE TRACED THE CAUSE OF HUM

KENNETH DOWLING, projectionist of Vashon, Wash., writes, "I am a projectionist in a small town. I noticed in the department that Mr. Taggart of Brookfield, Mo., is having trouble with a hum. Might be interesting and possibly helpful to set forth my own experience with the same trouble.

"We have Wonderphone sound-on-film, which was giving good service until about six months ago, when it developed a bad hum. This gradually grew worse until spoken words could hardly be understood. We finally traced the trouble to the mercury arc rectifier. The hum could be heard only when we had the mercury set turned on. It was present even when the arcs were not burning. The rectifier is located downstairs, about eighteen feet away from the projection room. After having found the source of the trouble, we knew of no way of remedying it. Started tracing wires from the point where the a.c. wires came into the rectifier, and followed them all the way through to the arcs, finding no place where the arc circuit came anywhere near the sound wires.

"After a few weeks, when everybody, including even the ushers and janitors, were pretty nearly crazy from worry, I happened to disconnect the wire grounding the amplifier to a nearby water pipe, whereupon the hum immediately stopped and there has since been no further trouble.

"We then traced all the water piping, but there was no place where it came either near the arc supply circuit or the sound wires, except at one spot where they crossed at right angles, about six inches apart. It was possible to connect one end of a wire to the pipe, strike the metal wall of the projection room and get a brilliant array of sparks when the rectifier set was working. There was no shock to the person doing this, however, nor was any shock received from the pipe or wall. We then started projecting without the amplifier being grounded at all, and that is the condition today. I wonder if you would give me the why and wherefore of all this? If the quality of sound is not affected by removing the amplifier ground, then why is a ground necessary in the first place? The Wonderphone company has no service engineers, hence I must do my own servicing or it doesn't get done."

Doubting my ability to handle this matter fully, I sent it down to the Loew projection department, requesting that their sound engineers supply me with a complete answer, which they were courteous enough to do, as follows:

"The case presented by Projectionist Dowling is not unusual. It has its base in what is known as 'difference in ground potential.' The water pipe represents the true ground, or zero potential. The negative of the mercury arc rectifier is only negative with relation to the positive potential of the same rectifier. The negative of the rectifier, if tested by means of a suitable voltmeter connected across from true ground and negative of the rectifier, will show some voltage. In Mr. Dowling's case the logical conclusion arrived at through a study of his rather brief description is as follows:

"Assuming the amplifier rack to be attached to the projection room floor in order to maintain rigidity, the entire amplifier system is thus grounded to the common projection room, but not a true ground, as gathered from Dowling's description of his projection room. At the same time, the projectors, upon which the lamphouses are of course mounted, are also fastened to the projection room floor, which in turn grounds the projector lamphouses and amplifier together. The negative lead of the rectifier in turn runs up to the switch on the projector pedestal. It is quite evident that there is some sort of an electrical contact between the negative of the rectifier and one or both of the projectors, due to ground of the arc negative in either the lamphouses, or a stud of the arc control switches of either machine touching the background of the pedestal.

"In this manner the metal parts of the projection room are at the same negative potential as the negative of the mercury arc rectifier. Now as long as we do not ground any of these metal parts, the system will function normally. However, if we obtain a true ground and connect a wire between this true ground and any of the metal parts affected by the false ground, the voltage between these two points will be some part of the output or secondary side of the a.c. transformer which feeds the mercury vapor rectifier bulb. By virtue of the fact that the negative is connected to the transformer, the increase of the hum indicated the possibility of the formation of a bad ground in the rectifier transformer between the primary and secondary sections.

"When Mr. Dowling connected the ground post of his amplifier to the water pipe, he immediately created a true ground, which in turn caused an excellent return path by means of which juice that was leaking could pass from the rectifier, projection equipment and metal parts of the projection room, in turn, to the metal frame of the amplifier, through the amplifier itself to the ground post of the amplifier, and then to the waterpipe which, of course, is the true ground. It was then dissipated to the ground and lost.

"The hum was picked up by the amplifier during the course of the passage of the stray current in its effort to reach the true ground. A ground is necessary to an amplifier for the purpose of by-passing small stray currents created by losses in the amplifier itself. This, alone, prevents stray or eddy currents from creating objectionable hums, sometimes inherent in various amplifiers. An amplifier will operate very satisfactorily without a ground as long as its normal hum level is not objectionable to the human ear."

VASELINE ON FADER CONTACTS

JOHN B. MEEKER, projectionist of Salisbury, Mo., writes: "A week ago I got Mr. Nadell's book, 'Projecting Sound Pictures,' which is very good, though I cannot understand it as well as the Bluebook, or some parts of it, at least. It is good, though, and the only one I have seen, outside of the Bluebook, I could say that about.

"In Nadell's book, though, I found one thing I think is bad, and I want your opinion. He tells us to clean the fader contacts and then to rub on a thin film of vaseline—as he puts it—to prevent cutting the surface through friction. Now, Mr. Richardson, vaseline might do that all right. I'm not saying it would not, but used dry, mine have never cut any, and surely any sort of grease would help collect dust from the air and thus help make the fader noisy. Am I right or wrong?"

I agree with you that the vaseline recommendation is not good. No matter how thin the film, it would, as you say, tend to aid the contacts in accumulating deposits of dust from the air. I cannot agree with Mr. Nadell on that point, I am sorry to say.

It might be well, however, to have the service engineer make sure that the contact arm does not exert any unnecessary pressure on the coil buttons. If the arm pressure be not excessive, I think there will be very slight danger of cutting or scratching. At least I would much prefer to take chances with the dry contacts than with the vaseline-coated ones, regardless of how thin the coating might be.

THE INEQUALITY OF FADER STEPS

GEORGE L. MATTESON of South Chicago, Ill., tells us: "Yesterday I had an argument with a Chicago projectionist who claimed that the various 'steps' in the Western Electric fader are all of equal amount or value in increasing or lowering sound volume. I held differently and objected when he told me, in language you would not print, that such things were nothing to the 'operator' (as he terms us), anyhow. We had a pretty hot argument about that, and I want you, if you will, to print, as soon as you can, a statement as to the rights and wrongs of the fader steps and the other."

Your Chicago friend is as entirely wrong on both counts as one well could be. Taking W. E. type 702 fader, for example: it has a total of 15 steps on both white and red. The first two, reading from zero, are of 12 decibels each. The third step is of six decibels, and all the rest are of three decibels each. The range, then, is 12+12 +6+33, or a total of 63 decibels on either side. (This matter was very fully set forth, with a graph, in BETTER THEATRES, Page 59, the February 14, 1931, issue).

The reason for the difference in sound variation in the lower steps is that they will ordinarily be used only at changeover. The higher steps, however, are employed to regulate sound volume, and while a heavy sound jump during the quick action of fading over is unobjectionable, and in fact is not discernible to audiences, such a variation in sound volume regulation would be terrible. There are two important advantages in having the low steps high ones —because it decreases the construction cost very appreciably, and serves to reduce the size of the fader.

As to the idea that such matters are no concern of the projectionist, it is true that an understanding of fader steps may have, viewed as one item, little effect one way or the other on the excellence of a man's work. The cold, hard-boiled fact remains, however, that the man who takes that attitude will never attain any real understanding of the various elements of the equipment he is handling, either as separate items or as an inter-connected whole, and no one but a very elementary mind would contend that a lack of such knowledge tends to produce excellence in results.

It may be accepted as fact that, other things being equal, the man who knows his equipment thoroughly in all its phases, both as to practical work and theory, will be able to produce results superior in quality, and he will produce them more efficiently than will a man who has only a modicum of interest in his work.

Some inquiries have also reached my office with regard to the number of types of fader employed in connection with R. C. A. equipment. There are two types; namely, a manually operated potentiometer, and a relay with remote switch controls.

The first named is old type equipment, and the second supercedes the old type on the new models.

PROJECTIONIST'S DAILY RECORD

FROM E. H. Straley, projectionist of the Matoaka Theatre in Matoaka, W. Va., comes the following:

"Dear Brother Richardson, this is the first letter I have written to our department since 1918. I call it 'our department' for the reason that it is the projectionist's best way of comparing notes and getting real benefit from each other on a nation-wide scale. As a regular reader I have received much beneficial information and knowledge through the department. And now for my opinion of 2,000 foot reels.

"We have Powers projectors, and I find that with 2,000-foot reels I cannot get my upper tension adjusted so that it will not jerk the reel in the upper magazine, thus throwing a heavy strain on the film. It is my experience that on 2,000-foot reels the film is thus strained for about 200 feet from the end. I believe this is partly caused by the extra pull on the end necessary to move the big reel. I know that this effect is not present on the Simplex or Motiograph as much as it is on the Powers, but I know there are a great many Powers projectors still in use. I would like to know if others have this same trouble, and if there is any adjustment that may be made to prevent it, should 2,000-foot reels finally become standard.

"And now to set forth an idea of my own which I have been using since 1917, though I had to change it and modify it when sound came in. I hand you herewith a copy of my projection daily record. I believe every projectionist should be compelled to keep one. I keep the daily record but do not bother the boss with it every day. He is busy and would probably throw them in the waste-basket if I did. However, using the daily record as a basis, I make monthly records for presentation to the office. My boss appreciates them and recommends them. Here are a few of his reasons, of which there are many more:

"First, they provide him with a statement of the repairs and replacements for the month. Second, they inform him which film service is giving the best results, both in pictures and sound. Third, he uses these records when buying film service and says it enables him to get much better service. Fourth, he is able to estimate whether or not his projection staff has been on the job

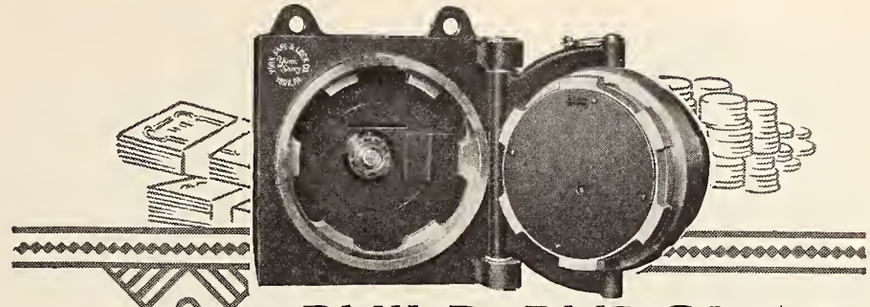
PROJECTIONIST E. H. Straley



"From the projectionist's viewpoint there are more reasons than I could mention, a few of which are (a) He can tell at a glance just what repairs he has made on each piece of equipment, and the reason for making it. (b) It provides him with a check on his sound equipment—what repairs have been made and what was used to effect each repair. (c) It enables him, when he has a bad print, to take the report copy to the boss, who forwards it to the exchange with a good strong letter of protest. (I think that this has been effective in getting especially good service for a town of this size.) (d) Both the projection staff and the manager can tell at a glance just how many errors have been made in projection, and what caused them, which of course will help toward the removal of the cause.

"I often wonder how many projectionists know just how many errors they have made in a month. Personally, I find these records make me work much harder, because I want to make each one a little better than the last. A man does not realize the benefits of such records until he has tried them out. I may be 'all wet' on this subject, but I honestly try to improve my projection each day. That this kind of work does pay is proven by the fact that even in these hard times, I have received four $5 raises in the past year—and this is a small town."

There can be no doubt that the kind of report Friend Straley suggests has large value, provided it be carefully and completely kept, with monthly synopses delivered to the theatre office. Mark you well, however, to have real value such things must be well done, which means that the projectionist must have the necessary interest in his work and the energy to do the job carefully and completely. Otherwise, any system devised to make projection work more efficient will not be worth the trouble.

I am quite certain that what Straley says about such reports tending to improve film service is entirely correct, provided, of course, the manager follows the matter up vigorously. I have for many years advised projectionists never to accept films which are dirty, oily or otherwise in poor mechanical condition, without a good strong protest, which the on-the-job theatre manager will pass along to the exchange with a good strong kick. It is, in fact, extremely sloppy work for the projectionist to fail to report such things to the office, and equally sloppy work for the theatre manager to fail to pass the kick, well backed up, along to the exchange. The copy shown here is a daily report.

As to the matter of tension in the Powers upper magazine, you have given me no description of the tension device, nor have you indicated the model of the projector, except to say it is a Powers. The older model Powers did not have a very efficient upper magazine tension, but if you have 2,000-foot magazines, I am sure the matter can be taken care of adequately. I am asking the International Projector Corporation to communicate with you at once. I think they will be able to help you.

BUILD BURGLAR PROTECTION into YOUR TICKET OFFICE

THE installation of a YORK Round Door Chest is so easy and economical that you cannot afford to be without this protection for your cash receipts. Anchored in a block of solid concrete, this sturdy little safe defies all menace of fire and theft. It cannot be removed from the building or attacked at any point except the heavy door. And that will stop any burglar.

When desired, the YORK Chest is also provided with the "Hold-up Partition" as illustrated. Provided with a slot for the insertion of money, this inner door may be kept closed and offers a disconcerting obstruction to bandits who attempt raids during business hours. The saving in burglary insurance alone will pay for a YORK Chest in a reasonable length of time.

WHEN WIDER FILM AND SCREEN?

DURING THE PAST year or two I have had a very considerable number of inquiries from exhibitors owning small and rather narrow theatres. A typical inquiry was received recently from Robert S. Keys of South Hampton, Ontario, who said, "We would appreciate it very much if you could advise us with reference to the advisability of remodeling our present theatre building. The matter which is worrying us most is in regard to the wide film and the larger screen which will be necessary. Our present building is about 90 feet long and only 24 feet wide. Allowing for exits, we can only use a screen about 14 feet wide. We are afraid this will be of no use when wide film comes.

It would cost us about one-half the price of a new building to remodel our present one. Naturally we do not wish to go to this expense if we cannot use it for many years to come."

Knowing that at least one of the great producers is working and experimenting continuously with wide film, I referred this matter to two large producers, one of whom replied that in their opinion there was nothing to indicate that wide film would be used in the near future. However, it is their thought that, where possible, builders of new theatres should make provision in their proscenium opening to accommodate the wide screen. One paragraph in the letter reads, "While we believe that everything today points to a delay of wide film as a standard form of entertainment, there is an element of showmanship in the use of "magnascope" which should not be overlooked, and where new theatres are being erected, thought should be directed to this end."

In this matter, however, without in any way meaning to detract from the "magnascope," we must not forget that it cannot do what wide film can do. I have said from the first time I laid eyes on the wide screen image, and I say now more positively than ever, that wide film will add vastly to motion picture entertainment when it is made available.

After I had communicated with the above corporation, another (Fox) offered to give me a demonstration of wide film projected at different widths of screen image. This demonstration served to do two things: to cement my former views that wide film would be a tremendous advantage from a box office viewpoint, and to prove to me that while the effect is not so good when the wide film screen image is cut down to as low as 12 feet, it nevertheless is most excellent.

The widest picture they were able to project in the studio was about 15 feet. At this width the naturalness is nothing short of amazing. Also, the shape of the picture is, in my opinion, far superior to that of our present three-four size. After witnessing this demonstration, I can say positively that the theatre which is not limited to less than a 12-foot picture need not worry as to wide film

1,000-FOOT OR 2,000-FOOT REELS?

R. W. FLAUDING, of the Hines theatre in Portland, Ind., says, "I have wanted to write to you for a long time, but something always seemed to interfere. Film mutiliation seems to be very bad and the subject of much talk. Doubling-up seems to be the major cause, at least insofar as the changeovers and standard prints are concerned.

"Personally I do not double up reels, but I have done so and do not find much of any advantage in the process. It is quite true that one may be beside his projector more if the reels are doubled up, until the last show when the reels must be again disconnected. Then he must spend much more time in disconnecting than would be required in threading the 1,000-foot reels. Also, while disconnecting he cannot glance at the screen occasionally, as he can do while threading a projector. In this I refer to the one-man projection room, that being the condition here.

"As to disconnecting on the last show, it has to be done that way here, since our films are all shipped out by truck, and the truck usually is waiting for them when we get through with the last show. The disconnecting therefore cannot be done after the last show is over. So much for that. It looks to me that the only solution to this trouble is for the producer to release films on 2,000-foot reels.

"And now here is a very real trouble: I have Strong standard low intensity lamps. (Hertner M.A. 30-60 transverter). One of these lamps works wonderfully well, but the other will let the carbon separate too far—separate, in fact, until the amperage has fallen to 18-20. Then the arc control will start, bring the carbons to the proper gap and maybe too close, whereupon the arc will sputter. Briefly, the arc control motor runs intermittently. Not infrequently the light is lost entirely, as the supply lines from the power plant are never at a steady voltage, and the arc control motor does not start soon enough."

Yes, Friend Flauding, I agree with you that the only solution of the trouble is for producers to maintain their films on 2,000-foot reels, and while there are some very legitimate objections, I believe that is what it will finally come to.

As to your arc trouble, I can say that the Strong arc control functions perfectly when it is in good repair. The fact that one of them does function perfectly in your case is proof that the power line is not to blame for your trouble. I assume that there is something wrong with one of the motors. I will have the Strong people get in touch with you at once, they being the logical ones to tell you exactly what is the matter.

Incidentally, I again say to you all that when you have trouble with any particular type of apparatus, if you will tell me about it and enclose a self addressed envelope, I will either myself tell you what is wrong, or will have the manufacturer attend to the matter, and I think you will find that any trouble I may refer to the manufacturer will receive prompt and thorough attention.

S.M.P.E. RESCINDS "PRIVACY RULE"

AT ITS LAST meeting, the Practical Projection Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, found itself paid a rather signal honor. Doctor Goldsmith, president, and General Manager Sylvan Harris were present when the committee met, staying during the entire session and taking a very interested and helpful part in the various discussions.

I say this was an honor to the committee, because it is the first time in its history that anything of that kind has happened. It must be remembered, too, that Doctor Goldsmith is not only president of the S.M.P.E., but he also is one of the high officials of R.C.A., and we certainly have the right to infer that the importance of projection is being recognized when such men attend a purely projection meeting and remain for three or four hours.

Heretofore there has always been a rule prohibiting publication of details concerning anything which might happen at various committee meetings, or at conventions, unless it be copied from the society's Journal. That night Doctor Goldsmith made it very clear that this practice would no longer be maintained. He made it clear that there is no secrecy concerning the Society affairs, which decision I hold to be good common sense from almost any possible viewpoint.

The Journal of the society is an excellent monthly publication, but it is not a publication which is ever likely to receive general circulation among theatre people. It is of necessity highly technical in its character. Often an entire issue will be filled with most excellent matter, but matter totally incomprehensible to most theatre managers and exhibitors.

In view of these facts, it seems to me rather foolish to try to prevent publication of such matters as may be of interest to theatre people, in other publications. Nor does it seem necessary that publications which desire to use interesting data should be obliged to secure the consent of the officials of the society to such publication until after it has appeared in the Journal.

ON THAT MATTER OF CHANGEOVER

LOUIS A. GOLDMAN, assistant projectionist of the Puritan theatre in Boston, writes, "I must take issue, in some points at least, with the statements by Projectionist Leslie E. Jeffres on Page 37, February issue of BETTER THEATRES, which were approved by you. I think the approval was a bit hasty, Brother Richardson.

"Projectionist Jeffres claims that all changeover marks are standard. This is an error. They are not all standard. I find that Columbia films differ from the films of the other producing companies. Also, it is a fact that the changeover signals not infrequently are not, or very nearly not, discernible, as in the case of a long fade-out at the end of the reel, under which condition both the motor start and the changeover cues cannot be seen.

It also is claimed that the cues are obliterated. This may be true in some cases because of careless work on the part of some 'machine operators,' but a distinction must be made between the motion picture projectionist and the machine operator. Some projectionists make small circles inside the standard black dot, so that when they are waiting for the cue, they can look at the screen to see if they can find discrepancies of any sort, as compared with Mr. Jeffres, who keeps his eyes on the upper right hand corner of it, and even if he hears any number of patches, cannot shift his eyes lest he miss his signal, particularly if it happens to be situated in a dark scene.

"I receive many prints in which I find the distance between the changeover cue and the blank film varies from one to 10 frames. Often the cues themselves are missing, in which case is it, or is it not, permissible to make a correct changeover cue? I will agree with Mr. Jeffres to the extent of saying that there is an enormous amount of needless film mutilation due to careless and lazy men. I do think, though, that there should be a distinction made, and the situation should be thoroughly analyzed, which is something Projectionist Jeffres has not, in my opinion, done."

I must admit that, though I have not as yet viewed any samples in proof, it is possible some Standard Release Print changeover signals may occasionally be so placed that they are either invisible or very nearly so, especially if the screen illumination be rather low at the outer edges. That is one rather unavoidable trouble. The signals are near a corner of the screen, and some screens fall off quite heavily in illumination near the corners, or even near the sides. The screen illumination measurements now being made have already amply proved that, even on the screens of some very fine theatres.

If the changeover signal marks are placed in dense portions of the film scenes, that is entirely inexcusable, and the fault must be laid at the door of the producer, and to a lesser degree, on the door mat of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, whose "child" the Standard Release Print changeover signal is.

True, the producer may come back with the statement that dense scenes cannot always be avoided at the end of a reel, but that, with all due respect, is his trouble. If he wants his productions placed before audiences perfectly, it is up to him to have those signal marks always plainly visible, and we are not very much interested in his statement that it can't always be done. That is his tough luck, for when he fails he has every right to expect more or less punk results on the screen at the end of every reel in which the signals cannot be plainly seen.

The projectionist really wants to place all productions before audiences well, but if you don't give him a fair chance—well, you have absoutely no complaint coming if results are not so good.

Another thing: We are talking about film mutilation through the affixing of unreasonably conspicuous marks, or marks which are entirely unnecessary, as is the case if and when the standard signals are reasonably visible to him who really looks for them. In such a case as has been cited, I do not hold that the projectionist could be condemned for affixing a reasonable changeover signal, such, for example, as a carefully made opening in the emulsion, say, one sixteenth of an inch in diameter, about where the regular signal should appear. A piece of emulsion a quarter of an inch square, three or four marks from a quarter to a half-inch long, two or three, or even one big opaque sticker, and things of that sort, are not reasonable marks. They constitute film outrage.

Just what you have in mind when you say, "watching for discrepancies," I am not certain, so we shall let that pass. The projectionist, of course, need only watch for such faults in the screen image as it may be possible for him to control or correct. He should watch closely and constantly for faults in screen illumination, for movements or jumps in the screen image as a whole (which may be due to mechanism fault or to correctable faults in the print itself), for evidence of flicker tendency. In short for any and every possible fault which he may remedy. Presumably that is what Brother Goldman had in mind, though what he said might easily be understood otherwise. (In fact, Friend Daughter and I argued the point.)

Summing up, I hold the projectionist to have the undoubted reasonable right to affix an inconspicuous changeover signal where the standard signal is vague.

ON PROJECTIONISTS MAKING REPAIRS

JOHN H. LANDREY, of Erie, Pennsylvania, writes, "In the last BETTER THEATRES some chap by the name of Nadell tells us a lot about how to make repairs on different pieces of sound equipment, but he don't tell us how we are going to find time to do it. What right has the manager to expect us to do repair work when already we have more than one man ought to undertake to do? Is he willing to pay us overtime so we can do it before or after the show stops? And if we do it without overtime, what kind of trouble would we soon be in? It is all right to tell us how to make repairs, but I'll gamble that article will get us into a lot of jams with the boss, for he'll be wanting us to make the repairs, and we have no time to do it in."

There was a time long ago when the work of the projectionist was comparatively light. The equipment was rather simple and there was not much of it. The projectionist then could and did make most of his own repairs. It was quite in order for him to do that, and for the most part he did it.

Today things are very different. He now has anywhere from six to eight, and not infrequently nine, reels to the show. In many theatres he must handle a dissolving stereo, one or two spots, an effect projector, and in addition to all that, manipulate the house lighting. He must handle complicated sound equipment, which has many and delicate adjustments. The motion picture projectors themselves are now constructed in almost unbelievably minute mechanical tolerances, which must be maintained if screen results are to be kept up to the mark. He therefore, in the very nature of things, has little time to do repair work. He cannot do it while the show is running, save in dire emergency. If he does it after the show, then the union demands that he be paid double time, which is really not unreasonable.

Mr. Nadell's article is informative, but as you say, Friend Landrey, while it is very well to know how, still the really important point Mr. Nadell failed to set forth is just where the time is coming from in which to apply the knowledge he has supplied. If, as you believe, Friend Boss does as you believe he will, just spring that on him. Ask him how he can expect you to make repairs while the show is running, especially if it be a one-man projection room, as thousands now are, without neglecting projection and setting up ill effects on the screen and through the horns. Suggest to him that if he is willing to pay overtime and to provide the various instruments Mr. Nadell suggests, you will be willing to tackle the job, though without any guarantee of success.

The Projectionist should always be willing to save money for Friend Boss, provided it be done in a legitimate manner. Neglecting projection to make repairs, other than strictly emergency repairs, while the show runs, is not a "legitimate manner," nor is asking the projectionist to use his own time to make them really fair.

[Such comment on the various contingent phases of articles is indeed welcome. It really augments the original discussion. In the case of Mr. Nadell's article on repairing, it now appears relevant to point out that the author confined himself to projection technique rather than confuse his subject with projection department organization and the ethics and economics thereof. Mr. Nadell sought only to assist projectionists in instructing themselves for whatever situation they may find themselves in, now or later, regularly or as a matter of emergency. But although "another story"—one of justice rather than technics—the point raised above is important and interesting and one highly deserving of consideration in any reference to repairing, as a practice, by the projectionist himself.—Editor of BETTER THEATRES.]

STANDARD HEAD

● A standard sound projector has been brought out by the Holmes Projector Corporation of Chicago, well known for its portable equipment. This equipment, including amplifier, weighs less than 90 pounds. It is equipped with a 1,000-watt lamp, and the manufacturer asserts that it is capable of both sound and screen illumination for a theatre of 4,000 capacity.

PRICES REDUCED

● The price of the Best stereopticon manufactured by the Best Devices Company of Cleveland, has been reduced from $26 to $23. This equipment, which can be used with a 400-watt lamp, includes ten feet of lamp cord, a switch, slide carrier and bi-convex lens. A lens of any focus from 12 to 24 inches can be supplied.

The Arcturus Radio Tube Company of Newark, N. J., has reduced the list price of the 122 d. c. screen grid tube to $3.

MEDIUM-SIZED AMPLIFIER

● An amplifier designed to give full volume to theatres seating up to 1,000, has been marketed by the A-C Masterpack Company of Duncan, Okla. All current for the photocells and exciter lamps is furnished, the amplifier being designed to operate directly from the output of any make of sound head.

The amplifier is equipped for complete panel control—volume control, exciter lamp control, separate meters for each exciter lamp, changeover and photocell balancers to match the output from each machine. The manufacturers claim for the equipment full-range frequency reproduction.

ALL-A.C. AMPLIFIER

● An all-a. c. amplifier especially designed for theatres seating up to 1,000, has been developed by the Webster Electric Company of Racine, Wis. The amplifier measures 24 inches wide, 20 inches high, and 8 inches deep. It is also designed for any local conditions effecting permanent wiring arrangements.

Operation is possible on 100-, 110- and 120-volt, 50-60 cycle lines through a tapped power transformer and line voltage control. The amplifier will operate with any sound head using caesium photocells. Changeover between disc and sound-on-film is effected through a key-switch mounted on the front of the panel. Power consumption is 325 watts. Separate adjustments are possible for each of the photo-electric cells.

The manufacturers recommend for use with this amplifier, exponential dynamic speakers. Volume control at changeover is regulated in one operation through a combined control and fadeover device.

PORTABLE HEAD

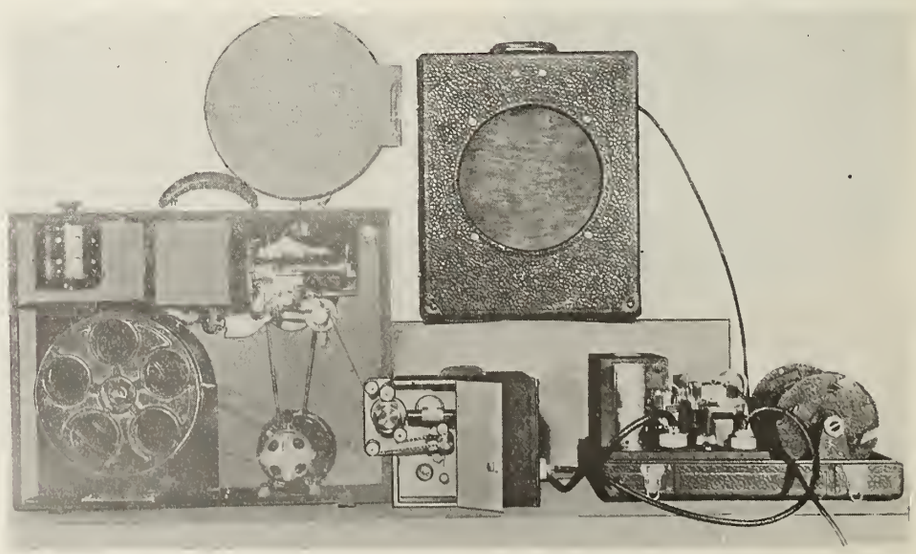
● A new sound-on-film attachment has been brought out by the Weber Machine Company of Rochester, N. Y., for all makes of 35-mm. portable projectors. In this equipment, the projector is driven from the sound head. The equipment was designed to make readily possible, the adaptation of any 35-mm. projector to sound without alteration to the projector mechanism.

The driving motor is within the sound head unit. The projector is driven by means of a flexible shaft of torque elasticity to prevent unevenness in projector transferance back to driving source.

Provision has been made for maintaining a loop of film between the projector and the sound head to prevent any projector mechanism imperfections from interfering with the positive feed of film in the sound head. Film sprocket is hardened and of the ground intermittent type. All bearings are of bronze alloy or ball bearings.

The optical unit is of the slit-less type. The front lens combination, or projection lens, operates at f-1.3.

All parts subject to wear through film contact are chromium plated. The case is of aluminum alloy, finished in black crackled enamel, and has a leather handle for carrying. Polarity plugs are built in the sound head.



In operation the film is drawn over the light aperture in the film control drum by means of a filtered driving mechanism, which is independent of the projector.

D.C. VERTICAL MOTOR

● A d. c. motor for vertical operation is brought out in a new type by the Century Electric Company of St. Louis. This type is designed with ball bearings, grease lubrication and arrangements for mounting on either a ring base or directly on the driven equipment, as installation conditions may require.

The top bearing bracket is protected with a cover, which may be supplied in an open, a screen or a solid type. Built-in sizes are obtainable from 1 to 150 horsepower.

The same company has also added to its line of slip-ring motors. The line now extends from ¼-horsepower, to 250-horsepower, 1,800 r.p.m., 60 cycles.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WE HAVE contemplated building a new theatre for some time and for this reason have been interested readers of your department, "Planning the Theatre."

The lot on which we plan to erect this theatre has a frontage of 50 feet, which extends to 100 feet on one side at a depth of 70 feet. The entire lot is about 200 feet deep. We would like to have about 600 seats, a shop on each side of lobby, two apartments over front, and a projection room about 10x20 or larger. Do you think we will be able to follow the above plan and keep our entire investment under $50,000?

Another problem which confronts us is the selection of an architect. Do you advise engaging an architect who specializes in theatres, or will any reputable architect serve our purpose?

We will appreciate an early response, as we are anxious to go ahead with our plans.—G. D.

The Answer:

YOUR LOT is large enough to erect a theatre of 600 seats. You did not state the cost of your lot, so I have disregarded that and feel that for your investment of $50,000 you can build a very nice little modern theatre by carefully planning and economizing where possible. You should be able to have a theatre according to your description, with center lobby, one store on each side of lobby, two small apartments and projection room above stores, and lobby with foyer and women's and men's rest rooms, and a one-floor 600-seat capacity auditorium, with about a 15-foot stage. This building might be built of fire-proof construction for that price, and the total amount of your investment would include the general, plumbing, heating, wiring, electric light fixture contracts, decorating, marquee, attraction boards, poster cabinets, carpets, drapes, booth equipment, chairs, etc.

The question of selecting an architect is a very important one. By all means employ an architect who has had plenty of experience in theatre designing, as mistakes are so easily made and so hard and costly to rectify. Besides, theatre designing depends largely on experience in that line, and it requires just as much skill and experience to design an inexpensive theatre as a more elaborate one.

An architect who specializes in theatre designing is continuously in touch with the latest improvements. Besides, he knows what is required for an inexpensive theatre so that it will not look cheap or unfinished, and because the amount of money expended is limited, is no reason why the essential features should be eliminated or neglected.

If you desire or are indebted to your local architect to have him connected with your building operation, an association with a reputable theatre architect can be easily arranged without greater cost to you.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

I HAVE noticed in a past issue an article in regard to reversing the incline of the theatre auditorium floor, which in my mind changes the present design of a theatre considerably. Instead of sloping the auditorium floor downward from foyer to stage, the new method slopes the floor just in the opposite direction.

As I intend to build a new theatre, I want to have it designed according to the most modern ideas, and as I have never seen a theatre designed according to this article, I am not able to make up my mind whether it would be the best and most proper way to carry out this new method. Therefore, I appeal to you to give me your opinion and advise me accordingly. Do you know of any theatres built with this reversed incline, and if so, please give me the names and locations of same so that I can inspect them.

Will you please state your own opinion of same and tell me frankly whether you could recommend it to me. I want your candid opinion, as I do not want to make any mistakes when I build a theatre.

I am planning a 1,400-seat one-floor house, so a balcony floor does not have to be considered. Do you think a house with a reversed floor will cost less to build than the present type of theatre. I am planning for a large stage with dressing rooms in basement of same. I will appreciate your reply in the next issue as I am very anxious to know what your opinion is in this change of floor slope.—V. A. C.

The Answer:

I PRESUME you are referring to a paper presented before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at a convention in Los Angeles, by Ben Schlanger, a New York architect. I also read this article with much interest, but by your question you place me in a position of critic, which of course, under these circumstances, would be impossible to fulfill. However, Mr. Schlanger, through his article, gave me food for thought.

It would be impossible to design such theatres in several states unless some of the state building codes are revised. For instance, the theatre building code of the State of Ohio does not allow the high point of the auditorium floor to be below the top of the sidewalk at the theatre entrance. The code further does not allow the use of steps to make up the difference between the two levels. Only inclines of certain slopes can be employed to make this difference up, should the top of the auditorium floor be higher than the sidewalk level.

Let us assume that the lot for the theatre is level, also the floor of the foyer and lobby. By inclining the auditorium floor upward towards the stage, the stage floor level will be so high above the lot level that there will be a great deal more height for basement under stage than ordinarily would be required, so the excessive space would be wasted, as 10 feet is all that is required. It would be practically impossible to unload scenery on the stage proper. Under these conditions, the auditorium ceiling would be much higher than would be required under present conditions, as the minimum height is regulated by the height of the proscenium, consequently the cubical contents would be increased and the cost of the building would be greater. I do not know what the requirements of your state code are, but you can easily find that out by communicating with the state department. In states where such conditions as described in Mr. Schlanger's article are allowed, I do not think there would be much difference in building cost either way.

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

Equipment News and Comment

NEW APPARATUS VIEWED

● The second International Heating and Ventilating Exposition, held this time in Cleveland, placed on public display many new developments in heating and air conditioning equipment. One of the leading types of exhibit concerned cooling and allied air conditioning units, while in the field of heating an impressive display was sponsored by many manufacturers of warm air furnaces, most of which were equipped with devices for humidifying, washing and circulation throughout a building.

Several new burner models were shown together with new accessory equipment. A gas adapter was shown for an oil burner designed and reported to be effective in meeting competition with natural gas. A new and novel oil pump of unusual efficiency and flexibility attracted considerable interest. Special fans and blowers were displayed for use in connection with some of this equipment to obtain better combustion. One exhibitor showed a special damper in duct for burning slack, run of mine, and other grades of small coal.

Chimney dampers were shown which were automatically controlled by the amount of heat passing through the chimney. Special materials are used in the construction of working control parts of this equipment.

Several exhibits were devoted to showing the latest designs and materials used in the manufacture of equipment for heat radiation. The old type large heavy cast iron radiators have been greatly improved. Equipment recently designed, very much smaller in size and more architecturally beautiful and graceful in appearance, is also regarded as more efficient. Concealed radiation was stressed by exhibits.

Various types of valves for feed and control of radiation were shown. Several exhibitors displayed control equipment for regulating temperature of each radiator individually or collectively. One firm showed a new product for control, the smallest now on the market, which created considerable interest. Another manufacturer featured a new type of concealed radiator. Special point was made of the fact that the heating element could be removed, and rust proof materials were used. This same company also demonstrated a new temperature regulation system whereby several thermostats placed at strategic positions throughout a building provide electrical impulses which are recorrelated to average room temperatures. A single main steam supply valve is operated by a motor which is activated by the electrical impulses: the valve automatically sets up a related sequence of adjustment which regulates the pressure, temperature, speed and quality of steam necessary to meet the heat demand.

Many interesting displays of louvers, registers and grilles were made. One manufacturer through the use of enclosed fins or deflectors can send the outgoing hot air in any desired direction. Whistling from the grille was shown to have eliminated through extensive research. This manufacturer displayed two gold-plated registers. Ventilators for diffusing air in theatres, churches, etc., were displayed.

One exhibitor had available information for cooling, using ice as a refrigerant. The installation cost for this equipment is low, and the operating economy is especially adapted for such public meeting places as churches where cooling is only necessary once or twice a week, or for small theatres not running on a "grind" policy.

Another firm displayed a small combination humidifier and deodorizer, eliminating foul or stale odors.

A locking device for dampers in air ducts, which are enclosed in the construction and not readily accessible, to keep them in a set position was shown. One firm exhibited a new air conditioning duct thermostatic device where the activating part of the control may be set remote from the part that protrudes into the duct.

Refrigeration as related to cooling and air conditioning was one of the high lights of the exposition. A great many of the leading manufacturers of this type of equipment, some of them pioneers in the field, displayed their equipment in operation. Automatic control of humidity was shown in connection with this equipment, as was the washing, filtering and circulation of air demonstrated in some cases, all in one operation. Some of these units can also be used for either heating or cooling, giving conditioned air at all times.

A filter and sound deadening exhibit showed it possible to elminate traffic noise and various other street noises. Various pipe covering materials were exhibited for insulation against heat and cold. Sheet material for covering warm air ducts was shown. An insulating material used in building was also shown, adapted for the building of ducts for warm air or conditioning. The use of this material in the construction of the ducts is particularly favorable inasmuch as it does not transmit vibration noise and the material resists fire and moisture.

LOBBY DISPLAY

● A lobby display combining traveling letters and transparencies has been marketed by the Reliance Specialties Manufacturing Company of New York City. The traveling message may contain up to 200 words, which can be readily changed. The unit is finished in crackled lacquer and is of furniture steel construction. A variety of colors and sizes are obtainable.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● The Steel Furniture Company of Grand Rapids, Mich., has changed its name to the Irwin Seating Company, and in announcing the new name, the company declares that it in no way introduces a change in management. The reason for adopting the new title is asserted to be the desire for one more descriptive of the product as seating equipment, the former name having sometimes led the buying public to regard the company as manufacturers of steel filing cabinets and desks.

The Duty to Ensure Safety

stances surrounding the case. However, it is generally conceded by the court that to prevent the accumulation of trash or other material which is likely to catch fire, is a duty on the part of the theatre operator.

For example, in the late case of Publix Theatres Corporation v. Powell (44 S. W. [2d] 1053), it was shown that a theatre operator leased a theatre building for a long term of years. Five years before the lease contract terminated the theatre building burned to the ground. The owner of the building filed suit against the theatre operator to recover an amount of damages equal to the actual value of the theatre building, plus the amount of the unexpired portion of the lease contract.

The counsel for the theatre operator contended that he should not be liable because he provided a watchman in the theatre whose duty was to prevent injury to the building. However, in view of the testimony which indicated that the theatre operator permitted trash to accumulate in the theatre building, and that the fire originated in this pile of trash, the higher court held the owner of the building entitled to recover full value of the theatre building together with the amount due on the rent for the balance five year unexpired period of the lease contract. This court said:

"There is sufficient affirmative proof going to show accumulation of trash in the building such as would quickly catch fire and spread fire and that due care had not been used to avoid loss by fire. . . . Negligence may be, as a rule, inferred from the circumstances of the particular case. The whole building here was shown to be in the control and possession of the defendant, and his servants, and the loss was such that in the usual course does not happen if proper care be used. There were no other sources of fire, and the circumstances conclusively show that the fire that destroyed the building originated in the building and spread over it, and that it was due to the want of care in the proper keeping of the building."

Negligence of Subordinates

THE COURTS have consistently held that a theatre owner is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron as a result of negligence on the part of a theatre employe, irrespective of the duties of the theatre employe, providing he was acting within the scope of the employment when the injury was effected. However, if the patron fails to prove that the injury resulted from negligence on the part of the employe, the theatre owner is not liable.

For instance, in McIntyre v. Kunsky Theatres Corporation (239 N. W. 890), it was disclosed that when a patron came out of a theatre about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the daughter-in-law of the latter drove up to the sidewalk at the entrance to the theatre in a seven-passenger automobile. As the patron approached the car the driver opened the door and the patron got in. Immediately thereafter the footman or doorman, employed by the theatre owner, quickly closed the automobile door and caught the patron's hand therein effecting serious injury. The patron sued the theatre owner to recover damages.

However, since it was shown that at the time the footman closed the door the persons in the rear of the automobile seat were seated, the higher court held the theatre owner not liable in damages because it was not shown that the footman's negligence caused the injury. This court said:

"The footman testified that it was his duty to stay 'right in front outside the theatre'; that there is a marquee extending from the building to the edge of the sidewalk, and that he looked before closing the door and saw that those in the back seat were seated."

Lease Contract Absolute

IN ORDER for a lease contract to be valid and enforceable, it is necessary that both the landlord and tenant be required to perform certain duties and obligations. In other words, if either the landlord or tenant may rescind the contract without liability, it must be shown that there was no absolute obligation for the tenant to occupy the premises, or pay the rent for a definite period of time.

For illustration, in the recent case of Lakeside Park v. Pepper Company (44 S. W. [2d] 1023), it was disclosed that an amusement company and a landlord entered into a contract. According to the terms of the contract both the landlord and the tenant were privileged to terminate the contract under certain conditions. The jury considered all the facts of the testimony and held that both parties were bound to fulfill the terms of the lease contract for the full period specified in the contract, since the conditions which privileged cancellation of the lease had not transpired. The higher court sustained the verdict, and stated the following important law:

"We do not think it can be said that the contract is absolute for the full term of five years. By its terms not only appellee but also appellant had an option to terminate the contract under certain conditions, and the question of whether or not those conditions existed were questions of fact to be determined by the jury. We note further that the jury found that the Lakeside Company was in no condition at times to induce the general public to attend."

Theatre Not Nuisance

COURTS HAVE held that where a theatre is conducted in a proper manner and at an appropriate place, it is not a nuisance unless it causes injury of a substantial character and impairs the ordinary physical enjoyment of property within its sphere, or tends to offend the quietude, peace, health or morals of members of the public. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is Commonwealth v. Phoenix Amusement Company (44 S. W. [2d] 830).

The facts of this case are that legal proceedings were filed against the owner of a motion picture show to prevent him from operating his theatre on Sunday. It was contended by the municipal officials that operation of the theatre on Sunday resulted in a legal nuisance. However, the higher court rendered a verdict in favor of the theatre owner, and said:

"The operation of a picture show is a lawful trade or business. Yet it is under the same obligation to observe and obey the statute regulating amusements, work and labor on the Sabbath as any and all other lawful businesses or occupations. A license is required for its operation, and the statute fixes the amount thereof. The city may require the owner thereof to obtain a license. It is therefore regarded by the law as a lawful business."

Also, in the cases of City of Chicago v. Weber (246 Ill. 304), and Lyric Theatre Company v. State (136 S. W. 174), it was held that the operation of a motion picture theatre on the Sabbath was not a nuisance.

There is a vast difference between the operation of a motion picture show and the engaging in a business which is a nuisance. The latter class constitutes a nuisance to the community, whether in, near to, or remote from it, whereas a lawful trade or business may or may not be a nuisance, according to its location and the manner in which it is conducted.

Mechanic's Lien Law

GENERALLY a contract is void by the terms of which a contractor enters into an agreement to perform illegal construction work. This rule of the law is applicable to contractors who perform repair or construction work on an enterprise which by state or city laws is illegal. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is Denver Amusement Company v. Kirchhof (3 P. [2d] 411).

The facts of this case are that a contractor entered into a contract with a property owner for the construction of an amusement building which later, because of its gambling features, collided with the state criminal law. The contractor filed suit to perfect a mechanic's lien.

It was contended by the property owner that the contractor was not entitled to a lien to secure payment because he was informed that operation of a gambling or betting enterprise is illegal. With respect to this phase of the law the court quoted, as follows:

"The weight of authority seems to be the effect that the knowledge of the unlawful purpose on the part of those furnishing materials or labor will defeat recovery."

In still another case, Spurgeon, v. McElwain (6 Ohio, 442), a contractor was not allowed to recover for his services in erecting a ninepin alley, use of which was prohibited by law.

Status of Insurance Policy

WHILE IT IS true that a theatre owner may obtain insurance and protect himself against damage, yet any material violation of a clause in an insurance policy may result in the theatre owner not receiving payment of insurance although the insured property is destroyed.

For instance, in the late case of Aetna Insurance Company v. Houston (49 F. [2d] 121), it was shown that an insurance policy contained a clause which required employment of a watchman at all times. The insured failed to comply with this clause in the contract, and when the insured property was destroyed the insurance company refused to pay the insurance. Although the lower court held the insurance company liable, the higher court reversed this decision and stated the following important law:

"The watchman warranty was very material to the risk. . . . It is inconceivable that an insurer would enter into a contract waiving this essential provision. Certainly that conclusion could not be reached unless clearly shown by endorsement on the policy in some way. The riders do not expressly waive this warranty and there is nothing in them inconsistent therewith. It may be said that this was the practical construction given the policy by appellee by employing a watchman."

Remedies of Purchaser

MANY HIGHER courts have held that a theatre owner has a reasonable time within which to inspect the article or product purchased, and that he is not required to rescind a contract until he discovers, within a reasonable time after delivery of the merchandise, that the seller breached the contract.

On the other hand, if the theatre owner knows of defects at the time of purchase, he automatically waives his right to rescind the contract and, therefore, becomes obligated to pay for the subject of the sale.

Also, it is well settled that after discovering the defects a theatre owner may elect within a reasonable time to rescind the contract and he may recover back the purchase price, but he may not recover back the purchase price unless the contract is first rescinded.

Another important point of the law is that if the purchaser has paid part or all of the purchase price he may retain possession of the article as security. If he has given a note as payment he may pay the same and bring suit for breach of the seller's guarantee, or he may refuse to pay the note and sue the seller for damages for breach of warranty; and if the purchase price has been paid in full or in part, the whole of the amount paid may be recovered by the purchaser. If the purchase price has not been paid, the theatre owner should be entirely discharged from liability.

Therefore, instead of rescinding the contract, the theatre owner may elect to retain the article and sue for damages for breach of the seller's warranty. In that case, the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of the article in its defective condition, and its value if it had been as warranted by the seller.

For example, in Coclin (159 S. E. 461), a buyer signed a written contract agreeing to purchase a certain merchandise for a specified sum. The purchaser refused to pay any of the balance due and the seller sued for the purchase price and repossession of the merchandise. The purchaser sued the seller for damages alleging that the merchandise was not as warranted.

It is interesting to observe that the higher court rendered a verdict holding the purchaser liable for payment of the balance of the purchase price amounting to $2,179, and held the seller liable to the purchaser for $2,161 damages for its failure to deliver merchandise equal to the guarantee made at the time the sale was completed. This court said:

"It is clear that respondent (purchaser) had a right to sue for breach of warranty, or to set up counterclaim for such breach, without paying in full the purchase price, and he would have had that right even after the article purchased had been repossessed by the appellant (seller)."

Sign Held Legal Fixture

GENERALLY SPEAKING, any apparatus or equipment which is affixed to a theatre building in such a manner that its removal will result in damage or injury to the building is termed a legal fixture. However, any device which may be removed therefrom without material damage to the building is known as personal property and may be removed from the structure by any person who has legal title thereto.

For instance, in the late case of Hollywood Improvement Company v. Blanchard (50 F. [2d] 737), it was disclosed that an electric sign was attached to a theatre building.

Litigation developed over the question of whether or not this sign should be termed a legal fixture or personal property. In holding the sign to be personal property, the court stated the following important law:

"A tenant may remove from the rented premises, any time during the continuance of his term, anything affixed thereto for purposes of trade, manufacture, ornament, or domestic use, if the removal can be effected without injury to the premises. . . The tapestry upon the walls, the tables and beds in the rooms, the settees in the lobby, the chairs, the lamps, and all other similar property obviously never lost their character as personal property, nor in the opinion of the court did the draperies, curtains and shades. . . . We are therefore led to the conclusion that the title to the sign remained with lessee (tenant)."

State License Not Conclusive

THE LAW is well established that a state law invalidates all other minor laws, such as those enacted by city councils, providing the state law contradicts the minor laws. On the other hand, the fact that the owner of a theatre obtains a state license to conduct a theatre does not relieve him from responsibility from complying with taxation, license or permit regulations enacted by city councils, township boards, and the like, particularly if the latter regulations do not contradict the provisions of state laws.

For example, in State v. Ukkelberg, (239 N. W. 168), it was disclosed that a proprietor obtained a state license to operate a place of amusement. This license was issued by the attorney-general in compliance with a state law. The board of the township in which the business was conducted enacted regulations which required permits to operate places of amusement. The proprietor refused to obtain a permit from the board of township supervisors and litigation resulted.

The proprietor contended that since he had obtained a license from the state it was unnecessary for him to obtain a license or permit from the board of township supervisors. However, the higher courts held that a license issued by the sate is not conclusive and that the proprietor was required to obtain the township permit. This court said:

"A license from the attorney general no more frees the applicant from prosecution for not securing a permit from the board of township supervisors than a license from the United States government to sell intoxicating liquors under the old condition of affairs exempted a saloon keeper from the operation of state laws prohibiting the sale entirely."

Employment Contracts

MANY COURTS have held that a theatre operator who breaches a valid employment contract and illegally discharges an employe, is liable for an amount of damages equal to the salary which would have been earned by the employe had he been permitted to fulfill the remaining terms of the employment contract. Other courts have held that the employe is entitled to recover damages equal to the lost salary, less the salary the employe should have earned had he exercised due diligence to obtain employment with another employer.

For illustration, in Goudal v. Cecil B. De Mille Pictures Corporation (5 P. [2d] 432), it was shown that a motion picture actress was employed by a motion picture corporation on a salary of $5,000 a week. Before the employment contract terminated the corporation discharged the actress on the grounds that she had failed to report promptly for work. The actress filed suit against the corporation to recover the sum of $34,531 damages alleged to have been the remainder of the salary she would have earned had the corporation not discharged her.

During the trial testimony was introduced showing that the actress had failed to obtain other employment, and it was contended that for this reason she should not be entitled to recover the full amount of salary she would have earned had she not been discharged by the corporation. It is interesting to observe that the higher court held the actress entitled to a full recovery, and said:

"The measure of recovery by a wrongfully discharged employe is generally and primarily . . . the agreed wage for the unexpired part of the term; and the burden is upon the employer to rebut this presumption by proof that the damages sustained were actually less. . . . The measure of damages in such cases is the amount of the salary agreed upon for the entire period of service, less the amount which the servant has earned or with reasonable effort might have earned from other employment. . . . The burden was on the defendant (employer) to show, not only that respondent remained unemployed, but also that she could by diligence have secured suitable employment elsewhere. . . . There is no willful tardiness nor valid excuse for absences, the instances of tardiness here being covered by the general description that those delays were occasioned by the requirements of the scenes to be enacted on those particular days."

Rental Contracts

IT IS WELL settled law that the parties to a lease contract are bound to fulfill the obligations expressed in such lease. Moreover, the courts will not read into a lease contract a legal interpretation which is not apparent on its face.

For instance, in Hockstein v. Stanley-Fabian Corporation (157 Atl. 113), it was disclosed that a theatre owner and a motion picture theatre operator entered into a lease contract which contained a clause to the effect that if the theatre operator increased the price of orchestra seats above 35 cents he should pay a specified additional rental for the remainder of the term of the lease.

Some time after the theatre operator took possession of the theatre he increased the price of orchestra seats above 35c, thereafter paying the property owner rental on the increased scale specified in the contract. Subsequently the theatre operator closed the theatre and demanded that the theatre owner should reduce the rental to the amount applicable before the orchestra prices were increased.

However, since the lease contract did not contain a stipulation that in the event the theatre operator closed the theatre, or reduced the price of theatre tickets, the rental should be reduced the court held the property owner entitled to recover the full increased rental, and stated the following important law:

"It seems to me that there is no ambiguity concerning this subject in the lease. The pertinent part of the above-quoted clause, after stating that, in the event of an increase in the price scale for orchestra seats to at least 35c for orchestra seats goes on to provide that, the annual rent to be paid by the party of the second part shall be at the rate of Sixteen Thousand ($16,000) Dollars payable in monthly installments of Thirteen Hundred Thirty-Three ($1,333) Dollars . . . which will be the increase in the price of admission as hereinabove designated, until the end of the eleven year term, for which this agreement is made.' It is to be noted that nothing whatever is said about a reduction in the increased rental in the event of the price scale being reduced or the theatre being closed."

CONTRACT NOT TO ENGAGE IN BUSINESS

ANY REASONABLE contract, by the terms of which a seller of a theatre agrees not to engage in a competitive business, is valid and enforceable. The latest higher court case involving this important point of the law is Colton vs. Duvall (237 N. W. 48).

In this case it was shown that the owner of a business sold it under a contract containing the statement, "I have sold my business to Kenneth Colton and my good will." Also, it was proved that the seller agreed verbally not to engage in a competing business.

The seller left the city for a short time and then returned and engaged in a competitive business. The purchaser filed suit against the seller and asked the court for an injunction to restrain him from continuing in the competing business. Although the lower court held the purchaser not entitled to a verdict, the higher court reversed this decision, and said:

"The consideration paid for the business and good will was sufficient. No further consideration was necessary to support the sale and transfer of good will. . . . Though it is sometimes said contracts in restraint of trade are void as against public policy . . . public policy requires when a man has created a business which he wants to sell he should have the right to sell it in the most advantageous way and to preclude himself from re-engaging in business directly competitive with that sold. . . . The rule is that contracts of this nature will be enforced in equity where the restraint is only partial and is limited to a particular place. . . . It was a fraud to sell that which he (seller) did not mean the purchaser to have; to pocket the paid price and attempt to recapture the thing sold."

DESTROYS THEATRE TO AVOID LEASE

THE HIGHER courts have consistently refused to reverse decisions of lower courts on mere technicalities, irrespective of the nature of the litigation. An illustration of this phase of the law is found in Kleihege v. State (177 N. E. 60).

It is settled law that a person cannot legally be convicted of a crime on the sole testimony of an accomplice. However, if other and relevant testimony is introduced which convinces a jury that the accomplice's testimony is truthful, a higher court will not reverse a verdict of "guilty" rendered by a lower court. Moreover, the fact that a law specifies the same penalty for two or more offenses does not render the law void.

In this case it was shown that a man named Kleihege held a lease on the State theatre. In the six months he, with a partner, operated the theatre, they suffered a loss of over $40,000.

It was decided to destroy the theatre with dynamite to avoid liability on the lease. The details of the dynamiting were disclosed by the testimony of the business agent of a labor union who testified that he received $1,000 from Kleihege for "doing the job." He testified that a party of four persons left the labor temple in an automobile with a package of dynamite in the rear seat. They drove to the State theatre and at 1:30 A. M. placed a bomb in an aisle on the main floor of the theatre and lighted the ten-foot fuse attached thereto. After the bomb squad left the theatre they heard the explosion. The destruction wrought the theatre building, both inside and out, was terrific, as shown by photographs displayed at the trial of Kleihege, who was arrested for having violated a state law entitled:

"An Act concerning the crime of arson and certain other crimes connected with the destruction or attempted destruction of property by fire or explosion . . ."

In addition to the above mentioned testimony the labor union's business agent testified that Kleihege had paid $1,000 to have the theatre destroyed. Also, there was testimony that on two different occasions Kleihege had said "if the maniac who had blown up the Michigan school had blown up the State theatre it would not have resulted in the loss of life and he would have made himself some money besides." There was also testimony that Kleihege twice made an effort to have the night watchman at the theatre discharged.

The lower court convicted Kleihege of having committed the crime of arson. He appealed to the higher court on the contention that the confession of an accomplice cannot be used and, further, that a law is void which specifies the same penalty for both crimes of fire and explosion. However, the court upheld the conviction, saying:

"All the crimes defined by the law are connected with the destruction of property by fire and explosion, they are logically and properly grouped together in this statute. . . . At common law, and in this state, it is held that the testimony of an accomplice, if it satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of a defendant, is sufficient to warrant a conviction, although it is not corroborated. . . . This conviction does not rest, as appellant contends, solely upon the testimony of the accomplice. The evidence introduced by the state, if believed, not only shows a motive for appellant's (Kleihege's) entering the conspiracy, but it shows other facts tending to prove that he did enter it."

RIGHT TO OBSTRUCT STREET

THE PARAMOUNT right of the public to the use of the street is the right to pass over it freely and without impediment whenever they have occasion to do so. However, it is not an absolute right in every person at all times. Such right is subject to incidental and temporary obstruction as may be necessary. The stopping of vehicles in the street for any temporary purpose interferes with free use of the sidewalk or street by others, and the lawful use of the street by street cars and railroads interferes with such use by other vehicles and by foot passengers. However, such cases are valid and lawful.

Therefore, the owner of a theatre has the right to make all proper and reasonable use of the sidewalk and street for the convenient operation of the theatre, not inconsistent with the paramount right of the public to the use of the street. The delivery of merchandise, fuel or other supplies at a theatre is a necessary incident to the use of a public highway. Also, stopping of vehicles to discharge persons who intend to visit the theatre is deemed a necessity.

In fact, various courts have held that a theatre owner, or his patrons, may temporarily obstruct the street and sidewalk in front of his theatre for loading and unloading passengers and goods, notwithstanding city ordinances, if the unloading does not unnecessarily or unreasonably interfere with the traveling public.

Municipalities have the power to regulate the use of the streets and the traffic upon them and to prevent the obstruction of them. In other words, parking may be regulated as to time when, place where, and length of time permitted, due consideration being given to the necessities and convenience of those desiring to use the streets for going from one place to another, and of those who desire to use them for the transportation, delivery and shipping of merchandise, materials, fuel and supplies and the character of the traffic affected. However, any unreasonable regulation is void which is intended to deprive one class of street users of their rights.

For instance, in Haggenjos v. City of Chicago (336 Ill. 573), an ordinance was held void which provided that no person operating any vehicle "shall cause or permit such vehicle to stand on any public street or alley in Chicago within the district" and during certain hours specified.

The court held this ordinance void and explained that a passenger car driver may have occasion by necessity to stop his vehicle while unloading passengers, and that for this reason the ordinance is unreasonable.

Reasonable Ordinance Valid

ON THE other hand, various courts have held that a city council may enact valid ordinances intended to reasonably regulate and control the use of the streets, highways, alleys, and other public thoroughfares.

For example, in City of Chicago v. McKinley (176 N. E. 261), it was disclosed that a city ordinance was held valid which provides that no person "shall cause or permit any passenger vehicle to stand for a period longer than is necessary for the reasonably expeditious loading or unloading of passengers, provided such loading or unloading shall not consume more than three minutes."

In holding this law valid, the court said:

"Is such an ordinance a reasonable exercise of power by the city? A negative answer to this question must be based upon the promise that persons using the street for personal transportation have a right to park their vehicles on the street for their convenience while they leave them for the transaction of business with the merchants, lawyers, stores, banks, hotels, and the occupants of offices and buildings in the street. . . . The city council had the right to regulate the use of the street by ordinances, so as to prevent, as far as possible, the loss and inconvenience arising from traffic congestion. It was for the council to determine what means should be adopted to remove the causes of such congestion, and its determination of such means cannot be disturbed, unless the means adopted are unreasonable."

Duty to Keep Sidewalks Clear

MUNICIPAL corporations hold their sidewalks in trust for the adjacent property owner, and as a rule the right of the public to use the sidewalk in a proper way is absolute and permanent. In other words, the law is well settled that the title to a sidewalk is in the adjacent property owner, but is held by the municipality in trust for the use of the public.

For these reasons, irrespective whether a city grants the right to a theatre owner to obstruct a sidewalk, either the city or the theatre owner, or both, may be liable in damages for injuries resulting from negligence in maintaining the sidewalk in a reasonably safe condition. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is Swinson v. Cutter (156 S. E. 545).

The facts of this case are that a property owner constructed a theatre building having a hydrant which projected nine inches over the inner edge of the sidewalk. This structure was permitted by the municipality, but owned by the property owner. One dark night a woman, who was unfamiliar with the location of the hydrant, walked into it and she was seriously injured. She sued the theatre owner for damages, and although a lower court awarded her damages, a higher court ordered a retrial.

screw, one uses a 5/32-inch lead hole.

As stated above, the design of the hinge and the design of the back fastening can contribute a great deal to reducing the amount of maintenance required to keep the chairs tight to the floor. Much progress has been made recently in securing better floor fastening for concrete, and nearly all theatre chairs are now installed on concrete floors. Field investigations, extending over many years conclusively demonstrate that it is possible to eliminate almost all of the maintenance on floor fastenings if the proper anchor is chosen. Fig. 5 shows a type of anchor which has been very successful. By means of the caulking tool shown, the lead sleeve is spread out so as to take care of the irregularities in the hole and make a secure fastening for the theatre chair.

Fig. 6 shows how a further possible source of maintenance can be eliminated by use of a lock washer above the standard floor underneath the nut.

Even with proper chair design and the best possible expansion anchor, there will still be some floor anchorage maintenance due to failure of the concrete. This failure is usually due to one of three things. Either the anchor has not been properly installed, the hole has been placed too near the edge of the concrete, or the concrete is poor. If failure is due to the first instance, it is usually because the anchor is not sufficiently deep in the concrete, or because the hole is too large. To remedy the first instance the hole should be drilled deeper; to remedy the second type of condition, a larger anchor should be used.

The second failure mentioned is usually caused along aisles or stairways where there is a drop just beyond where the chair stands. In some cases it is possible to overcome this difficulty by grouting the anchor in with concrete. In other cases the difficulty can be overcome by the use of specially prepared cements.

These are not Portland cements, but are cements which set quickly and which expand upon setting. Where the concrete is poor in small spots, it is usually possible to correct the difficulty by the use of these cements. They will also take care of a condition where the floor is generally poor, but more work is involved. The best way of taking care of a floor that is poor throughout is to set a bolt in the hole and pour in enough special cement to fill the hole. Most of these special cements are liquid at about the temperature of boiling water. Sufficient heat can usually be obtained from wood alcohol or a similar source.

motif above the arch, and an imposing column treatment at the proscenium. The latter is associated with the three-color mobile lighting arrangement previously referred to.

The organ screens are designed in a vertical direction, with fluted and reeded columns which intermingle above in volutes and spirals.

The proscenium column treatment consists in flanking pillars, semi-circular with a radius of 5 feet, and a height of 50 feet. They are of silvered fluted sheet metal, designed in sections with intermediate spaces, through which shines the light of invisible lamps within, illuminating also the extruded silver surfaces with a graduated glow. The whole effect approaches one of a column nearly translucent, its luster capable of varying blends of color.

This dynamic lighting scheme is extended to the ceiling, which is a sort of "canopy of light" achieved by means of a central motif from which radiate metal fins, between which ornamental piercings emit light from invisible lamps in the recesses above. Thus illumination participates essentially in the whole architectural and decorative pattern and spirit of the auditorium, and through the gradual color changes possible in the light emitted, this auditorium acquires considerable optical and emotional fluidity.

Besides the facilities for motion picture exhibition, the Oakland Paramount has a stage of dimensions suitable for full-sized productions (the proscenium opening is 66′ x 35′ 6″), with complete rigging, by Peter Clark. The house is also equipped with an organ, by Wurlitzer, with lift facilities.

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on March 8. The list also includes remodeling projects and contracts awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

Theatres Planned

California

BERKELEY—The United Artists Theatres of California, 333 South Broadway, Los Angeles, Calif., has revised plans by Walker & Eisen and C. A. Balch, Western Pacific Building, Los Angeles, Calif., for reinforced concrete theatre to be located on Shattuck avenue. Former contract recinded. Estimated cost, $200,000.

WOODLAND—National Theatre Syndicate, 25 Taylor street, San Francisco, Calif., has plans by Bliss & Fairweather, Balboa Boulevard, San Francisco, Calif., for a Class A medium type theatre to be located on Main street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Florida

MIAMI BEACH — Wolfson-Meyers Theatre Enterprises, Inc., Sidney Meyers, president, 9 N. W. Third street, plans the erection of a Spanish type theatre to be located on Washington avenue, near Fifth street, with seating capacity of 1,000. Robert L. Weed, architect, 2620 Biscayne Boulevard, Miami, Fla.

New Jersey

NEWARK—Owner, care F. P. Friedman, architect, 9 Clinton street, will soon take bids on the general contract for the erection of a two-story brick theatre and store building. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Kansas

WICHITA—D. Walker and associates plan the erection of a new brick, terracotta and reinforced concrete theatre at First and Main streets.

Louisiana

ABBEYVILLE—R. J. Montagne has plans by Charles Davis, 1204 Jackson avenue, New Orleans, La., for a proposed modern theatre, 50 by 120 feet.

Maine

HOULTON—Aroostock Hotel, Inc., H. Marricott, president, has postponed indefinitely the erection of a three-story brick theatre, office and store building on Main street. H. W. Rhodes, architect, 145 High street, Portland, Me. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Maryland

BALTIMORE—Frank Price, Jr., 4302 Garrison avenue, and J. S. Cook, Court Square Building, are reported interested in erection of a one-story brick picture theatre at 4607 Liberty Heights avenue, about 80 by 150 feet. E. H. C. Browne, architect, Ambassador Apartments. Estimated cost, $175,000.

Massachusetts

BOSTON — North Station Theatre Company, care Boston & Maine Railway Company, North Station, has plans by Funk & Wilcox, 26 Pemberton street, for theatre to be located on Causeway street at North Station. Estimated cost, $150,000.

BROOKLINE—Owner, care C. P. Coughlan, 100 Milk street, Boston, Mass., plans the erection of a new theatre at 147 Harvard street. Private plans. Estimated cost, $350,000.

GARDNER—L. G. McKnight, 324 Main street, plans the erection of a new brick theatre on Main street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

PEABODY — Mutual Development Company has plans by M. Coins, 73 Cornhill sreet, Boston, Mass., and has called for bids for a one and two-story granite, marble and reinforced concrete theatre, store and office building to be located on Main street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Rhode Island

CENTRAL FALLS—Monast Realty Company, L. Monast, 188 Main street, has plans by C. W. Swanson, 21 High street, Pawtucket, R. I., for a brick and concrete theatre to be located at 754-58 Broad street. Estimated cost, $175,000.

Texas

FORT WORTH—Meredith Cramer, care Meredith Cramer Enterprises, Inc., plans the erection of a theatre and apartment building at Eighth avenue and Pennsylvania street. Theatre will have seating capacity of 1,400. Estimated cost, $450,000.

Canada

MONTREAL, QUE. — Confederation Amusements, 1449 St. Alexander street, has plans by R. Charbonneau, Ltd., 360 Sir George Etinne Cartier square, for a proposed new theatre. Cost not announced.

SARNIA, ONT.—M. Harris, 264 Brock street, N., has plans by S. Alliston, 174½ Christiana street, for a brick and tile theatre, 80 by 175 feet. Estimated cost, $200,000.

Remodeling

Connecticut

STRATFORD—A. Pickers has plans by J. A. Julianelle, 42 Church street, New Haven, Conn., for alterations and construction of a one and two-story addition to theatre on Main street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

District of Columbia

WASHINGTON—H. H. Brenner has plans by Nelson B. Durfer, 1328 Jefferson street, N. W., for alterations to theatre at 2523-27 M street, N. W. Bids in.

Massachusetts

NEW BEDFORD—Zeiterion Realty Company, 647 Purchase street, has plans by F. A. Walker, First National Bank Building, for the remodeling of a one-story brick theatre on Union street. Improvements estimated to cost $150,000.

New Jersey

ENGLEWOOD—M. & R. Realty Company, S. Lippman and L. Gottlieb, 491 East Twenty-seventh street, Paterson, N. J., will receive bids soon on the general contract for a two-story brick and reinforced concrete theatre, store and office building addition at 16 West Palisade avenue. Estimated cost, $150,000.

North Carolina

GREENSBORO—Southwestern Theatres, Inc., L. F. Barnard, 746 Percy street, has awarded the contract to Moser & Burgess for remodeling and enlarging buildings at 220-22 North Elm street for an up-to-date picture theatre. House to be known as the Paramount. J. Burton Wilder, architect, Milliken Building.

South Carolina

COLUMBIA — Paramount-Publix Theatres Corporation, Paramount Building, New York, has leased theatre here and plans expending $10,000 to remodel.

Contracts Awarded

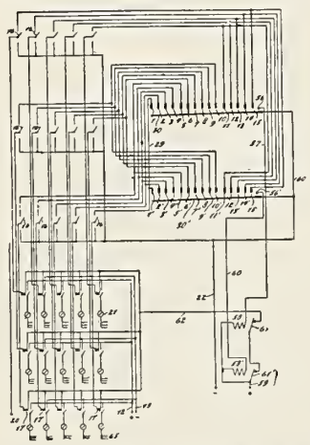
Connecticut

OLD LYME—R. G. Bloomer, Ridgewood, N. J., has awarded the contract to Pieretti Brothers, Centerbrook, N. J., for the erection of the one-story brick Colonial Theatre, 60 by 145 feet. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Indiana

ANGOLA—Westley Corporation, 228 North La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., has awarded the contract to C. W. Holland for the erection of a new two-story brick and stone-trim theatre, 60 by 200 feet. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Maine



GARDNER—H. Johnson, care Bunker & Savage, architects, 256 Water street, Augusta, Me., has awarded the contract to F. A. Rumery Company, 533 Forest street, Portland, Me., for the erection of a three-story brick theatre and store building on Water street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

New York

NEW YORK—Todd, Robertson & Todd Engineering Corporation, 347 Madison avenue, have awarded the contract for twenty-six elevators for two theatres and one office building, Radio City, to the Otis Elevator Company, Eleventh avenue and Twenty-sixth street, for the Metropolitan Square Corporation, 61 Broadway.

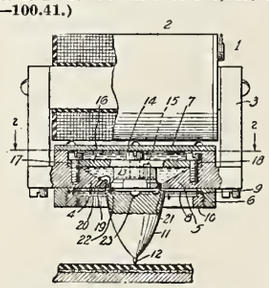
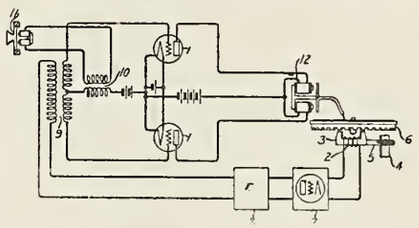
1,799,789. STAGE-LIGHTING SYSTEM. Walter C. Gwynne, Hollis, N. Y., assignor to Metropolitan Electric Mfg. Co., a Corporation of New Jersey. Filed Jan. 7, 1928. Serial No. 245,133. 5 Claims. (Cl. 171—97.)



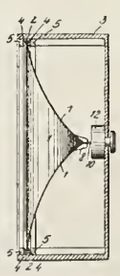
1. In a stage lighting system, an assembly of lighting circuits, a master switch for selecting and energizing any two or more of said circuits, and safety means including a contact on said switch functioning with said master switch to prevent the closing of said circuits.

1,799,646. SOUND-EMITTING APPARATUS. Samuel Ruben, New York, N. Y. Filed Aug. 16, 1929. Serial No. 386,476. 7 Claims. (Cl. 179—113.)



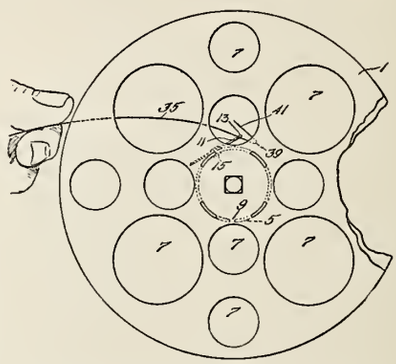
1. An apparatus for reproducing sound waves in a gas comprising an aspirator having no moving part and a member of which is conical in form, a sound directing body, a wall of the aspirator being employed as an anode, a cooperating cathode extending within the space surrounded by said anode, means for ionizing the gas between said electrodes by the discharge of a current through the cathode, and means for varying the volume of the gas between the electrodes by potential variations of a current at audio frequency impressed upon the circuit of the electrodes.

1,799,799. SOUND REPRODUCER. Warren C. Jones, Flushing, N. Y., assignor to Bell Telephone Laboratories, Incorporated, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Oct. 4, 1928. Serial No. 310,245. 4 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.41.)



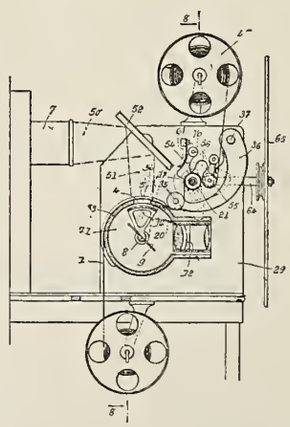
4. In a sound reproducer a casing containing viscous matter, a magnetic circuit carrying flux, a diaphragm forming a closure for the casing, a coil attached to the diaphragm and disposed in the flux and a stylus adapted to flex the diaphragm about a diameter.

1,799,795. SOUND RECORDING AND REPRODUCING. Joseph W. Horton, Millburn, N. J., assignor to Bell Telephone Laboratories, Incorporated, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed May 5, 1928. Serial No. 275,409. 10 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.4.)



2. A method of recording and reproducing a band of frequencies extending down to zero frequency which consists in translating said band into other frequencies representative of said band, recording said other frequencies, reproducing said other frequencies and retranslating said other frequencies into said band.

1,799,942. SOUND TRANSFORMING AND REPRODUCING APPARATUS. Günther Wurdel and Fritz Spiegel, Berlin, Germany, assignors to Walter Vollmann, Berlin, Germany. Filed Sept. 5, 1928, Serial No. 304,000, and in Germany May 5, 1928. 12 Claims. (Cl. 181—31.)



1. Sound transforming and reproducing apparatus, comprising a box, and a diaphragm of large area mounted on said box and composed of a plurality of sections having independent movement, said sections being separated from each other at their adjacent margins and connected with each other at their median parts, and flexible members covering the gaps provided between the adjacent edges of said sections.

1,799,748. FILM REEL. Arthur C. Hayden, Brockton, Mass. Fi'ed Oct. 3, 1927. Serial No. 223,501. 5 Claims. (Cl. 242-74.)

1. A film reel for motion picture apparatus comprising a pair of plates, a hub between the plates adapted to have a film wound thereon, and a spring member located tangentially on the hub and secured thereto, said spring member having a free end with a pair of spurs thereon adapted to enter feed holes in the film, the free end of said member normally being a substantial distance from the hub to facilitate the spurs catching into holes of the film when the film is dropped between the plates toward the hub.

1,808,603. MOVING PICTURE RECORDING AND PROJECTION APPARATUS. Marcel Remy Huc, Toulouse, France. Filed Mar. 19, 1927, Serial No. 176,742, and in Belgium Mar. 23, 1926. 7 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.8.)

1. A film manipulating apparatus comprising in combination a fixed cylindrical film guiding surface having an aperture formed therethrough, a film storage reel, a film wind-up reel, a rotatable shaft located intermediate said reels, a cam mounted on said shaft, a

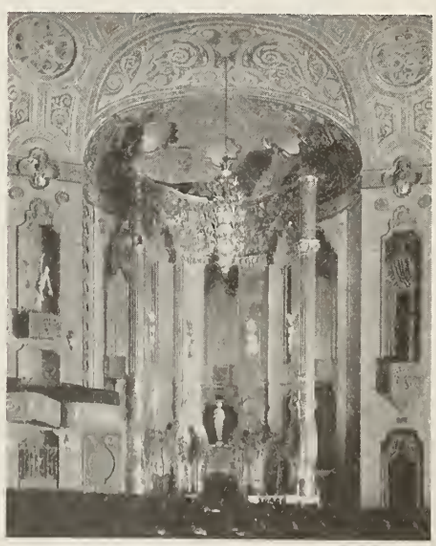
THE EXHIBITOR DEFINED

By SYLVAN HARRIS
Editor–Manager, Society of Motion Picture Engineers

IT APPEARS that the name exhibitor can be applied, at the present time, to any individual who is resposible for the general conduct of a theatre, and so may have functions and may be required to have attributes which which will vary considerably from one case to the other, depending upon the type of theatre in his charge, the nature of the show—whether it consists mainly of the picture show, or include a stage performance—and upon whether he is the owner of the theatre or not.

In the case of small theatres—local or neighborhood theatres—the owner himself is often the exhibitor, and as such, takes charge of practically everything that goes on, from the attention-arresting devices placed about the boxoffice to the projection room itself, allowance being made of course for the limitations imposed upon his scope of activities by union, fire and other regulations. At any rate, he is called upon to possess qualifications which admit of attracting patrons to his boxoffice, of efficiently administrating the financial matters of the theatre—keeping of books, purchasing, paying of bills and salaries and the like—of deciding upon the types of picture which will attract patrons to his theatre, of supervising the many details which contribute effectively to the quality of the performance—including the process of projecting the pictures—of supervising the maintenance of the house and of the details which contribute to the comfort of the patrons, of deciding what changes to make in the house to improve the quality of the screen picture and whether the returns will justify the expense involved in making the changes, and of doing a host of other things.



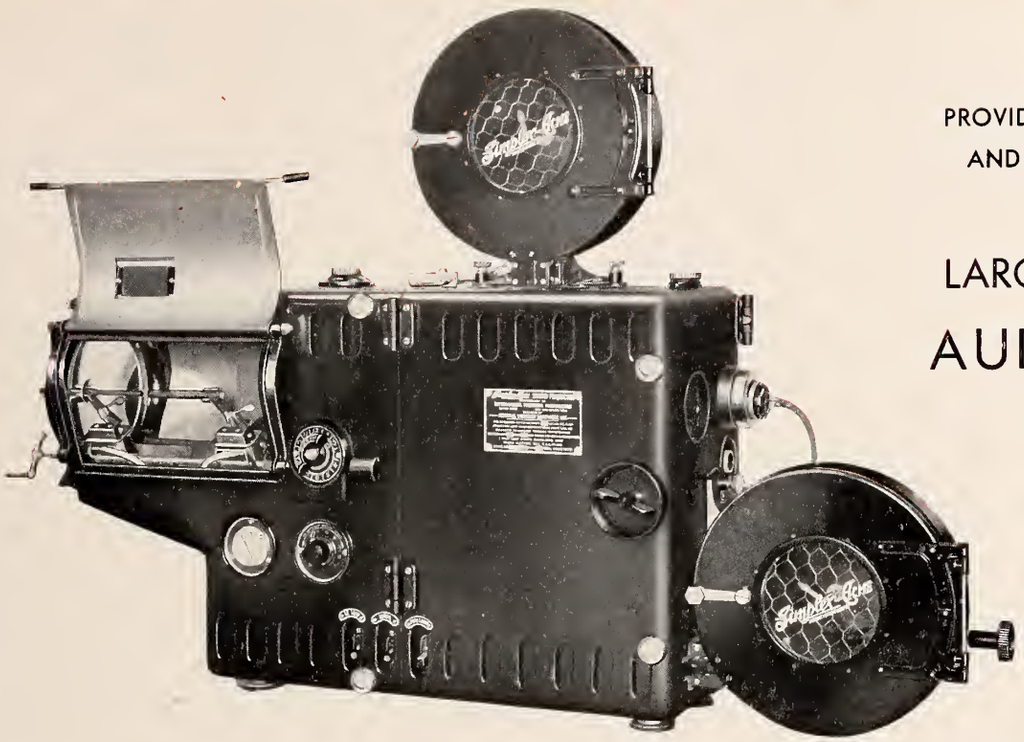
Such is required of the exhibitor who has charge of a typical neighborhood theatre; such is the definition of exhibitor for this particular circumstance; and truly, it is a big bill that this exhibitor is called upon to fill. As a consequence, seldom is it fulfilled as it should be; those whose qualifications encompass such a wide expanse of knowledge and ability are few. As for the others, their accomplishments are evaluated in terms of the boxoffice receipts, which, finally, are a measure of the extent to which the exhibitor possesses these qualifications.

In the larger theatres, the exhibitor must become specialized, for reasons which are obvious. Generally he is now the owner, and so becomes a manager; he must perforce be an executive, and as a consequence, must divest himself of many of the details mentioned before. He can no longer devote his time to the purely mechanical phases of operation; he must engage others to do this work, and must direct his attention rather to principles, policies, and—the show. The exhibitor thus becomes a showman.

It is principally in this capacity that the exhibitor can find his opportunity. Burdened by the thousand details with which the exhibitor has to contend in the smaller theatre, he might not find it possible to develop the principal thing in which the patron is interested—the show. Yet, when freed of these burdens, he finds new ones to take their place. He could originally have discovered these new burdens and have shouldered them; but his ability to do so was the measure of his ability to raise the status of his class "X" theatre to that of one rated farther toward the front of the alphabet.

He now realizes that the effectiveness of his performance and his theatre in attracting patrons to his boxoffice lies not only in the "bill" which he provides, or in the scare-head posters which adorn the entrance and the lobby; lies not only in his providing purely physical luxuries, gaudily adorning the theatre, or in "ballyhooing"; but, in addition, it lies in the pictorial quality of the show—considering now only the picture performance—and in the acoustical quality of the reproduced music and speech. After all, the prime function, or rather the reason for the existence, of the theatre, is to provide the show; the patron might find other places where sumptuous lounges, beautiful architecture, and the rest, can be enjoyed. It must not be understood, however, that these are not contributing causes which attract the patron; the point is that, lacking a sufficient degree of quality of the performance, their effects will be nil.

The exhibitor needs to know, then, the factors on which the quality of his performance depends, aside from the story of the picture or the actors playing in it. The quality of the picture projected to the screen may vary widely, depending upon the conditions under which the projecting is done; this pictures projected from a film of marvelous photographic quality may be quite unsatisfactory if the technique of projection is not satisfactory, if the projectionist is incompetent, or if the projecting equipment is unsuitable in either design or condition; the sound which is reproduced from the film, or from the disc, may also be as unsatisfactory for similar reasons. Both the picture and the sound may suffer owing to the very construction of the theatre itself—the lack of adequate acoustic treatment, the presence of sound pockets under balconies, the uncomfortable lines of sight provided by the existing arrangement of seats, an inordinately great angle of projection, the presence of exit lights within the angles of vision, and so forth.



The exedra, or elliptical alcoved organ screen of the Southtown theatre, Chicago. C. W. & George L. Rapp, architects.

Thus it is that besides being a showman, the exhibitor—be he the operating owner or the manager—must also have at least a general understanding of the technics fundamental to successful theatre operation today, most of which are intimately involved in economy as well as theatrical effectiveness. This dual requirement is not peculiar to show business, but it is perhaps more exacting than in many other fields, and as a result of it we have not only business and technical publications designed to give the theatre executive instruction, both fiscal and technical, but gradually there have been created resourceful and responsible organizations such as the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, serving the showman by seeking ways of improving the motion picture art that he sells. These bodies themselves issue reports of their activities, the former even publishing a monthly Journal devoted to such reports, which take the form of papers by leaders in motion picture science and of communications from committees appointed by the society to investigate special fields.

All these organized efforts to meet the exhibitors need for current instruction are important to the industry as a whole and deserve not only support, but an interest fostering growth, and this interest must be drawn from the whole industry, not an isolated section of it. Membership in the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, for example, is open to exhibitors in spite of its somewhat formidable name, and membership entitles him to receive the Journal regularly, which is published by the society itself from its headquarters at 33 W. 42nd Street, New York City. Doubtless more and more exhibitors will join this movement as time goes on.

Gentlemen:

After thoroughly examining the Simplex-Acme Sound Projector, we want to tell you that in our opinion the design and workmanship are the finest we have ever seen.

The way in which you have assembled the various essentials of this equipment is remarkable. Its compactness and efficiency are really wonderful. Everyone here thinks that the Simplex-Acme Sound Projector is a marvelous job.

We take our hats off to all of you and when the writer is again in America it will be a great pleasure to repeat the extremely favorable comments on Simplex-Acme which have been made by many others.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

For and on behalf of J. FRANK BROCKLISS LTD

PERTINENT QUESTIONS ON

MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE SOUND PROJECTOR EQUIPMENT

ANSWERED RIGHT OFF THE REEL!

1. Do you know — that complete Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment includes amplifiers, speakers and two complete Motion Picture Projectors designed for sound with built-in sound units?

2. Do you know — that if you already have Motiograph De Luxe Projectors, Motiograph De Luxe Sound Equipment can be built into these projectors, and that we have arranged special Motiograph De Luxe Sound Reproducing Equipment to match?

3. Do you know — that if you do not have Motiograph De Luxe Projectors, you can turn in your present projectors as part payment on Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment?

4. Do you know — that if you do have Motiograph De Luxe Projectors, you can purchase complete Motiograph De Luxe Sound Equipment at a very great saving over what you would pay for so-called standard equipment?

5. Do you know — that Motiograph De Luxe Sound Equipment is sold outright and becomes your property and that there are no service charges or license fees?

6. Do you know — that Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment is so simple to maintain that weekly or monthly "service" is unnecessary; but that service is available if needed?

7. Do you know — that Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment is sold direct from factory to user and is priced accordingly?

8. Do you know — that each Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment is set up complete, inspected and tested as a unit and put under actual operating conditions as in your theatre before it is shipped to the buyer?

9. Why — be satisfied with second choice sound, when first choice sound costs no more?

EASTMAN--A DISCIPLE OF DISCIPLINE

by TERRY RAMSAYE

MR. GEORGE EASTMAN, the most successful man in the world of the motion picture and a figure of great but unsought fame, has written "The End" and closed the Book of Life. His going was like his coming, of a piece with a calmly deliberate, relentlessly applied individual, executive program. His last decision, adequately understood by a knowledge and fair measure of his career and the many, many lone decisions he had made before, must be taken with them, without need of temporizing apology.

Comment exceedingly to the point is quoted from Mr. L. B. Jones, vice president of the Eastman Kodak Company, saying: "My anxiety is that he should not be misunderstood. George Eastman played the game to the last. By his own hand he lived his life and by his own hand he ended it."

It is now rather for us to consider with interest that life that he lived in the progressive unfaltering attainment of achievement so far beyond the great human average. It is significant indeed that Mr. Eastman, as the creator and producer of the basic raw material of the motion picture industry, the film, should have built an institution comparable in scope with the whole of the screen's business and a personal dollar success manyfold greater than any considerable group of the users of his wares.

Because of that challenging fact the motion picture world can well consider with awed interest the extraordinary adherence to program and principle, the deliberate, scientific cautions and the firmness of decision which characterized Mr. Eastman's entire business career. These all pertain to or came as expressions of his most important gift, that gift of discipline and disciplined judgment.

Mr. Eastman through his practical creation of the photographic industry was a tremendous servant of the related and dependent arts. He was as a citizen also a very considerable patron of the arts. Yet there was not about him the slightest coloration of the artist, and no coloration of an art quality is to be found in any of the multiple expressions of his personality. Rather he placed the stamp of an astonishingly well ordered good taste upon all that he touched, and it is unlikely that in the whole field of world industry could be found his equal in the impression of personal taste and principle on widespread organization. To those who knew Mr. Eastman he and his personality could be seen in crystal restraint in every bit of mechanism, every can label, every piece of literature or advertising layout, every newel post or doorknob of the Eastman plant.

Equally astonishing was this attainment of a crisp, comfortable, satisfying precision even in his home. It was said that he spent a million dollars building it, yet the visitor never thought of a dollar when once he entered. It was the place in which Mr. Eastman lived. He made it and maintained it handsomely, regally, but with such a poise of purpose that it was after all just a place to live, in nowise a show place nor a play place for the conspicuous airing of any extravagant fancies, hobbies or foibles. It contained a large array of beautiful things. It was profoundly precise as to appointments and schedules of operation. But so did each object and function relate to the other that there could be nothing conspicuous. It represented just George Eastman and was thoroughly his house.

The same atmosphere and spirit pervades his plant and all his business machinery. It has grown out of his stern adherence to what he deemed the proprieties and the right and correct, never permitting himself to be swayed in the least by the slightest element of emotionalism or sentimentalism.

Mr. Eastman's business career, which comes near to having been the whole of his life, was committed to what appeared to him to be durable certainties. The surges and sweeps and trends that swept through the industries of expression, which he served, flowed around the Eastman Kodak Company and all that pertained to it. There was no effort too great and no price too high for the maintenance or betterment of standards of his products, as measured by the needs of the consumer. Beyond that Mr. Eastman was unmoved, often appeared somewhat strangely immobile from special points of view.

Perhaps most significant of all to this industry of the screen, was Mr. Eastman's tempered, accurate measure of the public, its needs and desires. He had a measure of the simplicity, the impatience, and the inertia of the public with what appears to have been greater accuracy than is to be observed in the pattern of any comparable enterprise. He was much too wise to use the word "foolproof" but he utilized the principle with amazing effectiveness. He did not write, talk or build down to his public. He wrote, talked and built for it with a lucid plainness of purpose and service. Despite the fact that he in effect founded a new industry in making photography an activity of and for the masses, he never, most remarkably, seems to have made the mistake of offering departures before the market was ready—and this in a field of endeavor in which a growing technology was bringing constant change.

George Eastman was a great exemplar of temperate determination.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

FOREIGN

Says the NEWS of SAN FRANCISCO in CALIFORNIA regarding Congressman Dickstein's bill to bar foreign stars of the cinema from America:

If Congressman Dickstein's bill to bar foreign movie stars from America were left to a vote of American movie audiences, there is no question what their answer would be.

Greta Garbo's name draws packed houses everywhere. Even Mary Pickford was born in Canada. A very large part of the improvement in pictures during the past 10 years has been the work of foreign directors and actors.

Today Hollywood needs foreign actors as never before. The same films made here with American actors are released in foreign countries with dialogue in the language of the country, spoken by foreign actors who never appear on the screen.

We don't blame New York's unemployed actors for demanding the same policy applied to them that has enriched our tariff-protected industries. But if their bill passed it might easily lead to fewer jobs for Americans in Hollywood than there are now.

VALEDICTORY

Quality entertainment is the first prerequisite for any return of vaudeville to the theatre in Columbus, Ohio, says the DISPATCH in that city, thus:

Vaudeville's exit from the Palace theater leaves Columbus without this form of entertainment unless, by a long stretch of the imagination, the stage presentations at another chain house can be called that. It is useless to protest, of course, against the edict of the moguls in faroff New York, but there is no law against feeling sad about it.

There was considerable rejoicing among the thousands of local variety fans when vaudeville was reinstated in the Broad street playhouse after a long absence, for it is an old institution here. At that time, we expressed the hope that its come-back would be glorious and permanent and the opinion that it would be, if given a fair chance.

But did it have a fair chance? Frankly, we do not believe it did. In more prosperous times, the people might have paid liberally at the box office for the sort of entertainment that was offered, but in these days when money for recreation is more carefully spent, greater consideration is given to quality. The most recent vaudeville fare was not very tempting.

Changes in the amusement field, due partly to the depression and partly to the sudden appearance of the talkies, drove many of the higher class artists from vaudeville to other fields. As a result, good acts undoubtedly are scarce. But to attempt to bring back vaudeville without first recruiting suitable talent is an inexcusable blunder. As the result of this blunder, the local house now turns a number of employes out of their jobs and removes a part of the little relief from an enforced talkie diet the public now has.

But it has not been proved that Columbus does not want "flesh" entertainment. We believe it does, but it is too theater-wise to buy the "turkey" variety.

UNJUST

It's "unjust censure," says the NEWS from HAYS in KANSAS, of those "forever lambasting the makers of motion pictures," adding:

Despite the adverse conditions that have existed, producers time and again have made pictures of a class they knew would be money-losers but trusting, by degrees, to educate the public taste to a higher standard of cinema production. . . . No business can be conducted indefinitely at a loss, it goes without saying. The big film companies cannot justly be accused of failing to put forth an honest effort to improve the quality of their product.

CRITICS

The JOURNAL-POST of KANSAS CITY in MISSOURI cites the popularity of the motion picture and "the high cost of legitimate productions" as the prime reasons for the difficulties of the stage, thus:

If the average critic really believed that he could make or break a play or revue he would be an insufferable egotist. Some of them are conceited but by temperament, not because they feel that the public faithfully follows their advice on the drama.

The most humiliating blow that the critics have received since the war was the success of "Abie's Irish Rose."

Every critic has a following that depends upon his reports, but that following is a small minority of the theatre patrons. In the long run all that the critics do is keep up a discussion of the theatre. What makes or breaks a given production is word-of-mouth advertising.

Members of the house committee on patents, by reflecting on their own theatre going habits, ought to realize that the movies and the high cost of legitimate productions are chiefly responsible for the woes of the legitimate theatre.

However, Chairman Sirovich is the author of a play and the majority of playwrights, unwilling to blame themselves or the public, blame the critics for the failure of plays. The chairman has a chance to bawl out the critics publicly and it is only human for him to want to take advantage of the opportunity.

If he gets the critics before him he no doubt will have a great deal of satisfaction in telling them what he thinks of them, but his denunciations will not save the theatre. That is up to the producers.

THE CAUSE

An editorial writer in the TIMES of HAMMOND in INDIANA raised the question whether censorial action overseas against American pictures is prompted by their successful competition with homeland productions, putting it this way:

. . . The fact that there is today less interference with the public's reading, thinking and entertainments in the United States than in some of the European countries that have been most critical of us. . . .

. . . The experience of the American movie audience has been that the European film is more "sexy" and daring than the domestic product.

There is a suspicion, not without foundation, that some American films are banned, not because they offend the moral sensitiveness of the European censor, but because they compete too successfully with the motion picture industry in the country barring them.

MOVE TO SETTLE TRADE PROBLEMS WITHIN INDUSTRY VOTED BY MPTOA

Convention Delegates Accept Lightman's Keynote That "We Gain More by Laying Bricks Than by Throwing Them"

By COLVIN W. BROWN

Several hundreds of exhibitor delegates assembled at the twelfth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, held at the Mayflower hotel in Washington on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, accepted a convention keynote from their president, M. A. Lightman, of Memphis, who said: "It is well known that we gain more by laying bricks than by throwing them." And immediately thereafter, until adjournment on Wednesday, the convention halls virtually echoed the biblical passage: "Peace on earth and good will toward men."

The convention closed with a remark from Julian Brylawski, who said: "We have prejudice toward none, and tolerance to all."

The policy of attempting to solve industry problems within the industry, adopted early in the week, was affirmed at the closing session after a debate, following which the convention voted to strike from an amended resolutions committee report, that part which instructed MPTOA officials to bring the issue of forced short subject selling to the attention of the Federal Trade Commission. Simultaneously, the convention defeated a co-related amendment which sought to have "proper legal action" taken to divorce the sale of short subjects from features.

Correction from Within

The vote was recorded near the termination of a most harmonious convention, during which, as had been previously promised, President Lightman gave free and wide rein to all for an expression of opinion on industry matters.

Differing somewhat from the recent fiery meeting of the competitive body, Allied States Association, which seeks industry reform through the sponsorship and the support of adverse legislation the MPTOA set about to adjust problems of the industry through "well-intentioned discussions by those directly interested."

The convention admitted that changes are needed, but its leaders believe that a "sane appeal to all interested" will bring about these changes in a manner most beneficial. They warned that "this business can never be made prosperous on borrowed money, stock juggling, refunding processes, cutting proper salaries, charging unfair prices for product, sharp dealing or any other questionable process," and pointed out as the "plain duty of all concerned" the arrangement of the business machinery of our industry so that "all will have a square deal and suspicion will give way to cooperation, enabling all to work in reasonable business harmony," giving the only source of revenue—the exhibitor—"the real chance to produce, so that all may live and advance."

MPTOA delegates decided on "round table" settlement of the industry's problems, declaring for a policy of constructive accomplishment, although admissions of malpractice were heard from the convention floor. The association moved to bring the problems of protection, selective buying, standard contract, double billing and voluntary arbitration, to the attention of distributors and to attempt their solution "by displaying sanity at the 'round table'." Sidney R. Kent and Walter Vincent each struck the keynote with regards this "constructive" policy, Kent when he concluded his speech with the remark: "If we haven't enough sense or desire to sit down and talk, we don't deserve to succeed; some outside agency should come in and kick us out and our investments with us."

"With fair play, common sense and a common honesty, it can be done with fairness for both sides," said Vincent.

A double-barrelled endorsement of the present regime and its policies was made when delegates re-elected President M. A. Lightman and several other officers and then adopted the managment's prviously-announced plan to wrest majority control from circuit members and turn it over to independents. The MPTOA, therefore, emerged from the convention with a brand new corporate and operating structure, practically entirely in the control of independent members, although the circuits will continue to furnish the major portion of financial support.

Besides Lightman, the convention re-elected Secretary M. J. O'Toole and Treasurer Jay Emanuel. New vice-presidents are M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Walter Vincent, New York; Joseph Denniston, Monroe, Mich.; Love B. Harrell, Atlanta, and A. Julian Brylawski, Washington.

Three State Units

The ranks of the association were strengthened appreciably when three state organizations joined the national unit, which now has 16 territorial affiliations, and six more announced they would consider affiliation. Ten others will be solicited for membership. Directors named on Monday, as their organizations announced affiliation or pledged continued support were:

O. C. Lam, Southeastern Exhibitors' Association, Atlanta; J. B. Fishman, M.P.T.O. of Connecticut; Ed Fay, M.P.T.O. of Rhode Island; Judge Roy Walker, M.P.T.O. of Texas; Ed Kuykendahl, M.P.T.O. of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee; C. W. Piquet, M.P.T.O. of North and South Carolina; Sidney Lust, M.P.T.O. of District of Columbia; Jack Miller, Chicago Exhibitors Association; Fred Wehrenberg, M.P.T.O. of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois; Earl Van Hyning, M.P.T.O. of Kansas and Western Missouri; Charles Williams, M.P.T.O. of Nebraska and Western Iowa; R. M. Clark, M.P.T.O. of Oklahoma; William Benton, Albany exhibitors; Arch Hurley, New Mexico; Frank Walker, New York. Walker does not represent any particular exhibitor group and will serve as a director-at-large, Lightman believing his services would be valuable to the board.

Charlie O'Reilly, on behalf of the T.O.C.C. in New York City, indicated that his association might join, and so did representatives of Ohio, eastern Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Colorado, Wisconsin and Buffalo, each of which will discuss the advisability of affiliating, with their respective units, reporting on the outcome within 30 days, at which time national executives will place in work machinery to revamp the constitutions to permit directors to elect an executive committee of six independents and one circuit representative. This committee will govern the organization's activities and

WHAT THEY DECIDED AT CLOSING SESSION

The closing session of the M.P.T.O.A. convention on Wednesday was largely field day for resolutions. In one resolution the convention held that a standard contract is essential and voted that a committee of seven be named to petition distributors for cooperation in developing an agreement. They also voted for a "fair," voluntary arbitration system and protested against distributors' practice of compelling exhibitors to buy reissues to get new product.

The convention resolved to ask producers to make more family pictures and voted against M-G-M's alleged lack of uniformity in its percentage selling. Still another registered opposition to the practice of employees of distributors operating theatres in competition with exhibitors.

Delegates requested in one resolution the establishment of local zoning with a national arbitration structure to handle disagreements.

Also among these final resolutions was one against elimination of poster exchanges.

Two resolutions were passed affecting the electrics. One, described as "unethical, unwarranted and wholly unjustifiable" the disabling of reproducers because an exhibitor is in default of payments, unless the exhibitor is given 10 days' notice by registered mail. The other empowered the organization to obtain a reduction in service charges from Erpi on the ground that RCA did so, with considerably fewer installations.

A resolution, commending the trade press, said: "They deserve thanks for their diligence."

TIME FOR CALM THINKING, SAYS KENT

policies, which heretofore were handled by ten directors and five regional vice-presidents.

Lightman, O'Toole and Fred Wehrenberg were delegated to divide the country into six zones, each to be represented by an independent on the executive committee. Frank Walker, E. G. Levy, Dave Barrist, Jay Emanuel and Ed Kuhkendahl will redraft the constitution.

Major Leslie Thomson of RKO, and Fred Desberg, Loew's, are expected to be named directors, and Fox, also, is expected to have representation. This concern is not represented at the moment.

Vincent, in an address to delegates on Tuesday, discussed block booking, and in this connection admitted that the practice is "as wrong as anything I know." Yet, he said, "how can you expect producers to sell you the cream and throw away the rest?" Vincent further went on record as opposing the tying in of shorts with features in negotiating sales contracts, and suggested that a certain number of rejections be permitted exhibitors when buying en bloc. "Over-selling, over-seating, gift nights and cut-rate problems should be solved via the round table route," he said.

Sidney Kent's approach to the rostrum was marked with applause. Kent began with the observation that "this business is no worse off than any other." However, he said, "this is a bad time to rock the boat. It is time for cool, calm thinking. The business has inflated itself and is now trying to deflate."

Kent on Allied Points

At this time, Kent launched upon a discussion of the "eight points" which constituted the platform of the Allied convention last week.

Discussing point one, which Allied termed "obnoxious, unreasonable protection foisted upon independents by producers and circuits," Kent said he would amend to include "obnoxious, unreasonable protection foisted upon independents by producers and circuits, also independent circuits." Legislation is not the way to settle the matter, which should be done locally, and if it cannot be settled that way a national board sitting in New York should handle the job, he said.

"I don't know if you know," he said, "but protection is the life blood of the producers as well as of exhibitors. Sixty to 65 per cent of the negative income is carried by 1,000 houses in the United States," he continued. "I don't know if you know that $10 rentals are possible only because some one ahead of you first paid big prices.

"The protection problem was exaggerated because depression is making all problems abnormal," he continued.

In discussing point two, which Allied terms "unfair and unreasonable percentage policy and playing arrangements practiced by several major producing and distributing organigations," Kent said the text is so general that he does not know what companies are referred to. However, he stated, he does know that by sitting at a round table the problem can be adjusted.

In discussing Allied's third point alleging poor quality pictures, Kent said he imagines "circuits will join independents on that."

"If quality is high enough," he said, "the kind of contract and the price are not so important. Nothing can be gained by damning the Hollywood end of this industry. Men out there have never worked so hard to straighten out production problems. Men in New York, and this includes me, must accept part of the blame for poor pictures. It is fashionable to blame Hollywood today, but you men don't realize the extent of the production problem. Building new personalities never was tougher than today.

"If you want to help, I suggest the sending of a committee to the Coast to meet with producers and to stay long enough to understand what goes on. Better films can only come with more and more man and woman power."

On Allied's point four, calling for elimination of distributors from the theatre business, Kent said that he believes that circuits are "finding from experiences and losses what kind of houses they can and cannot run."

Kent ignored point five on legislation, saying others were more competent to talk on the subject.

On point six, which calls for elimination of compulsory block booking, Kent said the system was "no pet of mine" and that when any sales system becomes old it will be scrapped automatically. Modifications in block booking may well be considered, he said, but the system should not be thrown out entirely.

"All depends on picture quality," he declared. "There is no consolation for the exhibitor to buy individually if pictures prove to be bad. I admit some change is needed."

Holds Contract Vital

On point seven, calling for elimination of the double feature practice, Kent said he always felt double features were an evil.

"Like morphine for a sick man, it affords temporary relief, but always leaves something behind," he said.

"I regret to say that certain big elements in the industry have set the double feature example for others to follow."

Kent passed up point eight concerning the "music tax," declaring that Senator Dill would cover it fully.

Ending the comment on Allied, Kent discussed the proposed 5-5-5 contract, drafting of which he sponsored, declaring that if it is scrapped, "some one else must take the responsibility for it."

"It is necessary for both sides," he continued. "If the contract on which I spent much time doesn't fit, it's time to talk about a new one, but not throw its principle out of the window.

"The sanctity of the contract is a big job. I pledge everything I've got along sane and constructive lines when I get back," concluded Kent.

Charles Williams of Nebraska and Iowa charged that Allied's connection with the "ballyhooing" of the Youngclaus protection suit in Nebraska was to "pin" an Allied organization in Iowa and Nebraska.

A resolution proposed by Edward Levy, Connecticut, providing for the appointment of a committee to develop a new voluntary arbitration system to operate by states, was passed at the session on Tuesday. President Lightman immediately appointed Levy a committee of one to develop the plan.

The organization will set to work to devise ways and means of creating a new standard exhibition contract. Decision has not as yet been made with regards its nature, but Lightman believes that many current problems will be dissipated if the contract and voluntary arbitration are effected.

Meyer Fine, Cleveland, discussed the percentage situation as it affects his territory. Fine operates the Varsity Circuit in Ohio.

M. A. Schlesinger, of General Talking Pictures, who, with his brother, controls the amusement industry in South Africa, was placed on the defensive in a verbal tilt with Ed Schiller of Loew's. After listening to Schlesinger's "defense" of independents against the electrics, Schiller told him his talk was "out of place." and said: "God help the independents in this country if other companies operated as Schlesinger in South Africa!"

William Orr of MGM discussed censorship, which he declared to be a political issue. "Congress or states shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or of the talking motion pictures," said Orr.

U: S. Senator James Davis, Pennsylvania, told the delegates that "the industry will grow through your own regulation, plus your common sense, without legislation."

"Fair" Zoning Urged

Protection came in for lengthy discussion on Tuesday. As chairman of that committee, E. Van Hyning, Kansas-Missouri, advocated fair and equitable zoning as the only method to relieve the present system. However, he said, "no plan will satisfy all." Van Hyning predicted that exhibitors will pass out of business unless relief comes.

Senator Clarence Dill, Washington, offered a ray of hope with regards the music tax when he predicted the elimination of the seat tax collected by the American Society of Composers, if and when Congress passes a bill which Dill has introduced in the Senate.

Metro's alleged "unfair" sales methods were condemned by Dave Barrist, of the Philadelphia exhibitors' association, which sponsored the protest meeting against MGM last September.

President Hoover sent a message regretting inability to appear before the gathering.

Protection was the subject of further discussion at this point when Jacob Conn, Providence owner, criticized sales companies for giving better protection to circuits than to independents.

"We need more business ethics and less politics in the motion picture industry," said Ed Kuykendahl of Mississippi. He discussed adverse legislation and admission taxes.

Representing the AMPA was Ed Finney, its president, who told the exhibitors to stick to facts in theatre ad copy and eliminate "bunk" and ballyhoo.

The initial business session got under way on Monday afternoon with a welcome by Sidney Lust. Lightman and O'Toole were on the dais and Lightman stressed the value of organization. He was followed by Secretary O'Toole, whose report of 47 pages was dodged by the convention, which adopted a one-minute boildown of the detailed document.

Fred Wehrenberg, chairman of the board, reviewed the past year. Jack Miller spoke on the double feature "evil"; Congressman Sol Bloom stressed the value of organization in

INDUSTRY FIGHTING TO RAISE TAX EXEMPTION FROM 24 TO 50 CENTS

Representative McCormick, Member of Ways and Means Committee, Would Have Assessment Start at 51 Cents

By F. L. BURT, Washington

With a battle cry of "fifty cents or bust," leaders of the motion picture industry and exhibitors everywhere have launched a campaign for amendment of the pending federal revenue bill to provide exemption for admissions of 50 cents or under. The pending measure would tax admissions starting at 25 cents 10 per cent.

Representative McCormick of Massachusetts, a member of the House ways and means committee, is one of those actively endeavoring to obtain an increase of the exemption to include 50 cents. Under his plan, which is receiving the support of the industry, the tax would begin at 51 cents, which, it is believed in Washington circles, would eliminate all but the deluxe houses.

Warn of Closed Theatres

A tremendous volume of communications has been received by members of Congress opposing the 24-cent exemption. Theatre owners from all sections of the country are protesting that this would give them no leeway whatever and that imposition of the tax on this basis would darken a large number of houses.

Efforts are being made this week, during consideration of the measure in the House, to obtain adoption of the 50-cent examption, with good possibilities of success. If, however, the move fails, the fight will be carried to the Senate and a plea will be laid before the Senate finance committee during its hearings on the bill. "We will not quit until the bill is signed," the theatre men declared.

Working among the members of the House, representatives of the exhibitors have pointed out that it is literally "fifty cents or bust" for thousands of houses. Considerable sentiment already has been aroused, as indicated by general debate last week, when several Congressmen took issue with the Treasury's estimates that a 50-cent exemption would give only $33,000,000 revenue, declaring that it would raise at least $60,000,000. The 25-cent exemption carried in the pending bill would be useless to the bulk of the houses, it was declared, and the $90,000,000 which the tax is expected to raise might fall far short of accomplishment, as houses in all sections of the country might find it impossible to continue.

Not the Only Burden

The admission tax is not the only burden upon the exhibitors, it is pointed out. The manufacturers' sales tax of 2¼ per cent would apply to film rentals; the tax on electricity would apply to theatres, extensive users of current; everything the theatre buys, leases or uses will be taxed, equipment included.

At the moment, members of the House are dividing up into the groups which will wage the fight for and against the measure. There is, first, the group which will defend it, composed of leading members of the two parties on the ways and means committee and their followers. Second, there is the group which will fight the sales tax "to the last ditch." Third, there is a group opposed to special taxes, such as the admission tax, who do not believe it necessary to balance the budget, the goal of the bill. And, fourth, there is a group, less coherent than the others, but still important, who are opposed to the rates of the bill. This last group will swell and shrink, as members join it temporarily to obtain some change in the bill, and will be especially large when the admission tax is reached.

Should the sales tax be defeated, which is highly improbable, the exhibitors would benefit to that extent, but their chief hope of relief is in the raising of the admission tax exemption from the present 24 cents to 50 cents. This has the sympathy of many leaders of the ways and means committee. There would, it has been indicated, be little real opposition to such a move. In fact, it might cheerfully be granted if by so doing those responsible for the bill could attract support for more bitterly contested provisions—the sales tax, for example.

Little has been said on the subject, but it is known that the estimates of revenue from the bill as now cited by the ways and means committee are considerably lower than members privately believe will be raised. They are the estimates of the Treasury Department, notably conservative to the nth degree. The committee's own experts have figured that many millions more will actually be obtained. Thus, there will be less objection to relief for the theatres and certain other lines which are represented as overtaxed than would be the case where the Treasury estimates the maximum, instead of the minimum, of the returns.

Members of Congress, discussing the tax informally, have expressed the opinion that the bill, when it goes to the Senate, will carry a 50-cent exemption. If by any chance it does not, they point out, the Senate is known always to have been more liberal in tax matters than the House.

NO DEAL HAS BEEN CLOSED, SAYS KENT

No deal for his services has been closed as yet, Sidney R. Kent declared in a statement issued in midweek on his return from Washington, where he addressed the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Commenting on a reported connection with Fox, Kent said, "I have had several talks with Mr. Edward R. Tinker, but we have closed no deal."

In the event that a deal is made, it is understood that Kent will become associated with Fox in the capacity of a vice-president, with Tinker continuing as president.

Kent denied responsibility for statements attaching significance to conferences in which he has participated with Roy J. Pomeroy, Hollywood production executive, at Florida and in New York. Press information emanating from Pomeroy's Hollywood office advised that the latter was planning a cooperative producing and distributing organization in which "Kent and several other prominent film personages were interested."

"Mr. Pomeroy did come to Florida to see me," Kent said, "and I have talked to him here in New York, but all we have done so far is to discuss the independent producing situation on the Coast—nothing more definite than that."

Exhibitors Warn That Taxing Admissions from 25 Cents Up at 10 Per Cent Rate Would Close Many Houses

One of the most widely organized and concerted efforts ever staged to fight adverse legislation has been launched throughout the country by independent and affiliated exhibitors. Aided by representatives of the MPPDA, and by executives of Allied States Association and the MPTOA, theatre owners have literally flooded Washington and Capitol Hill with vigorous denunciations of the proposed revenue measure; complete and detailed provisions affecting this industry having appeared in the last issue of Motion Picture Herald. Thousands of letters and telegrams have reached the attention of Congressmen from exhibitors in every part of the country.

William Fox Fights Suit for $692,821

General denial has been entered by William Fox to a suit charging fraudulent representations and asking $692,821 damages. The suit was filed in Supreme Court at New York, this week, by Louis and Morris Golde, who identified themselves as "stockowners in Fox Theatres Corporation."

The Goldes, who ask examination of Fox before trial, charge that Fox falsely informed them that the U. S. attorney general had approved a proposed Fox-Loew's merger, thereby inducing them to retain Fox Theatres stock and to buy additional stock. On Fox's advice, they said, they purchased at various times 10,000 shares of Fox Theatre Class A stock at $25 per share; 2,000 additional shares at $26.75 a share; 8,000 additional for $200,000; 3,000 for $82,684, and 2,000 for $51,137.

EASTMAN, THE MASTER, PASSES; BEGAN MOTION PICTURE HISTORY

Founder of Photographic Industry Writes "My Work Is Done" After Dominating a World Business Fifty Years

By TERRY RAMSAYE

A hush has fallen on the great mansion at 900 East Avenue in Rochester which was the home of George Eastman, the master of the photographic industry and the weaver of the world's magic carpet, the motion picture film.

The quiet rhythmic routine of the methodical mechanism of that remarkable household has come to an abrupt stop after these many years. The sonorous pipe organ which announced each day at 7 o'clock and broke again into a program of rippling morning melody for the breakfast hour in the flower bowered conservatory breakfast room at 8 is stilled.

Today there is no George Eastman. He planned and willed it so, with the will that built and dominated a world industry for half a century.

Thursday afternoon brought the ritual of a funeral at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Rochester, where Mr. Eastman had occasionally attended services, and after that cremation.

It is the complete and final dissolution that George Eastman sought and forecast a few years ago when, retiring from the presidency of the Eastman Kodak Company to the chairmanship of the board of directors, he observed: "I am in the process of making a fade-out."

The only poignant drama of Mr. Eastman's life, the only flare of high color in his seventy-eight years of unparalleled attainment of fortune and fame, came with the striking of the lights of that last scene.

For some months Mr. Eastman's health had been failing. Last week he called attorneys and witnesses to his home and wrote a codicil to his will. He was in a gay mood and joked with the lawyers. Last Monday shortly after noon he was chatting with his personal physician, Dr. Audley W. Stewart, and his nurses, when he abruptly remarked: "I have a note to write," and asked them to leave.

Then Mr. Eastman drew up a bit of note paper and wrote: "To my friends. My work is done. Why wait?—G. E."

Next he carefully extinguished his cigarette and replaced the cap on his fountain pen.

Outside in an adjacent room Dr. Stewart and the nurses heard the reverberation of a shot. They rushed into the room and found Mr. Eastman dead with a bullet through his heart.

By the dead man's side was a heavy 9mm. calibre Luger automatic pistol of the German military type, from the collection of firearms in the gun and trophy room on the top floor of the mansion.

So within the twelvemonth I have come to the recording of the passing of three of the vitally important founders of this industry of the motion picture, Mr. George Kleine, the organizer and merchandiser, Mr. Thomas Alva Edison, the maker of the basic mechanisms, and George Eastman, who evolved the material which empowered that mechanism as the new machine tool of the art of expression and the business of entertainment.

Not so long ago I strolled about that gun and trophy room with Mr. Eastman, as we hefted and sighted guns and rods and talked of the hunts and safaris with which he was filling the playtime of his fade-out years. The Luger was there then, in the pistol rack near by the case that held the big elephant guns for Africa and the sporting rifles for Alaska.

It was one of Mr. Eastman's most idle carefree days, with time to let thoughts and words stray about. Down in the expansive living room he built a fire of hard maple on the hearth, with a whimsical word for the notion of the fetichism which makes us admire an open fire in the house where electricity and a thermostat guard the temperature within a range of a degree in every room.

And so there was talk, too, of the pioneers and the hardy Yankee stock from which he sprang, and that Roger Eastman, a young carpenter of Wilshire, who came over the Atlantic on the Confidence in 1638 to the Massachusetts Bay colony, first of the American family.

On the mantel over the maple fire was a row of seven pictures of Maria Kilbourn Eastman, Mr. Eastman's mother, and one of his father, George Washington Eastman.

Maria Kilbourn, his mother, was the only woman of importance in George Eastman's life. Keyserling's book on marriage was there on a reading table, and so we talked about women, too, for a moment. It was not much of a subject with Mr. Eastman.

"You see, when they put me together,

He never took a chance. He attended to everything.

Not at all the metropolitan picture presented by the formal front and terraces, but in truth a country estate and a farm of ten acres

CONSISTENCY MADE LIFETIME POLICY

they left sentiment out," he remarked, meaning, of course, not sentiment but romance.

Looking again at the pictures of his mother on the mantel, he remarked: "I wish now that I had changed my name and signature to 'George Kilbourn Eastman'."

The stamp of Kilbourn was strong upon this Eastman. It made the letter "K" a mark and symbol in all his life and works. It meant all of sentiment and strength to him. It ordained the word "Kodak," the synthetic trade name that has these many years ago gone into the orthodox lexicons, with a whole conjugation and a sequel of endless derivatives.

We prowled about his workshop with his carpentering bench and great array of exquisitely perfect tools, all stowed neatly in cases, and the darkroom where he now and then indulged in the laboratory processes of his still quite amateur photography. It was a whimsical fact that Mr. Eastman never had quite enough faith in the sunshine and tended to overexpose all his films.

"But I manage to get pretty good developing service at the laboratory at Kodak Park," he admitted with a dry Yankee grin.

Out on the grounds about the house one discovered that here was, in fact, not at all the metropolitan picture presented by the formal front and terraces, but in truth a country estate and a farm of ten acres, with cows and chickens, all this in the heart of the city of Rochester.

"It may be stretching the municipal code just a little, but they let me do it," Mr. Eastman observed. "I like my cream and eggs fresh."

And in fact Mr. Eastman was with a certain moderation considerably given to the pleasures of the table. He was exacting about the menu and its quality, and on occasion could go into the kitchen and demonstrate. With no outward flourish of pride he would make a rather better cake than most housewives.

Among the several greenhouses of the city estate was one devoted almost entirely to orchids, with only two or three types represented.

"It's a curious collection, with such a narrow range of variety in so many plants," I remarked.

"It is no collection at all," Mr. Eastman parried. "It is an orchid farm. I do not care so much for them. I like roses and carnations better, but my women guests seem to like orchids, so I have plenty of them."

A bit of whittling at a stick brought us, like a pair of schoolboys, to comparing pocket knives and Mr. Eastman to the remark that it was becoming such a rarity, in this automatic machine age of ready-made things, for a man to carry a knife, that a friend of his in the cutlery business was experiencing difficulties.

"CUT!"

"That tendency was capitalized in your Kodak slogan, 'You push the button, we do the rest'," I remarked. And so we were around to business again.

"Yes, and until anything is that simple," observed Mr. Eastman, "it is not a success, for the public."

He was not to be drawn into remarks, however, about the simplicity of the motion picture public, or any opinion of the screen, save by indirection. A comment was offered that when it came to important encouragement and patronage of the arts, he had elected music.

"Our machine age gives the workers a great deal of leisure to spend," he answered, "and I favor music as something that can not readily be abused or led astray."

It is to be recorded that Mr. Eastman's adventures and endeavors in making motion pictures had been limited entirely to considerations of utility, pictures of scientific record, especially in medicine and surgery, and teaching films intended for the class-room. His concern with the motion picture as an art has been solely in the evolution and making of the basic photosensitive materials and chemicals for laboratory processes.

The rise of George Eastman, and every step and development, has been conditioned by a carefully, deliberately considered policy. Probably in no other career of a great American business man has the quality of consistency been so demonstrated through an entire lifetime. It may be said of Mr. Eastman that he never "just took a chance," that he left nothing whatsoever to the casual processes of nature, time and propinquity, from the day of his first job to the instant of his death. He attended to everything.

The building of the Eastman fortune, which including all of his vast gifts to education, music and science, can be estimated at in the vicinity of a hundred and fifty millions of dollars, was by the consistent working out of a policy and principle, until, as he once remarked in a trade controversy, "there is at least a quarter of an inch of ice over the hottest part of the hottest region mentioned in religious history."

He came into the world in an era when people did things for themselves and he came of the resourceful Yankee stock which had made a country out of bleak New England, a culture out of a soil of rocks. He was born at Waterville, New York, July 12, 1854. His father was an expert penman and tried to operate a business college for a time. The next venture was a nursery business in Rochester. While George Eastman was a small boy his father died and the mother, Maria Kilbourn Eastman, opened a boarding house, sending her children to school the while, and rearing them in the stern New England tradition.

It was while his mother was still operating the boarding house that the boy George came home from school one bitter winter's afternoon and found his mother sitting by the kitchen stove with her head wrapped in a shawl, fighting silently against pain. She had had seven teeth extracted in that day before dental anesthesia. And that incident explains why in years after George Eastman gave millions to medical and dental institutions and research.

When Eastman left school he went into clerical jobs, first in insurance and then in accounting. He saved money every week, and kept methodical accounts which still survive. In time, it was in the days of General Grant's administration, the young man thought he might afford the extravagance of a long vacation trip and decided to go to San Domingo, where the government was projecting an important naval base. A friend at the next desk suggested that he take a camera along. This introduced Eastman to photography, which immediately became so much trouble to him that the vacation trip was forgotten while he wrestled with the camera and the old tedious "wet plate" process.

From this amateur experience, Eastman evolved a process of making dry plates, and presently became a manufacturer of them. His difficulties were many and the entire product of his first winter's work was spoiled with the coming of the warm summer. He called in all the product and started over. From that defeat and the reversal of it came all the success of the years that followed.

Eastman had an apparently intuitive

GAVE MANY MILLIONS

understanding of the habits of the human average. He deliberately set about the evolution of photographic instruments and materials which would make the camera as handy and facile "as a pencil." He invented "roller photography" and brought forth the "Kodak" which was loaded at the factory with a roll of negative paper for some sixty exposures. The camera, when the pictures had been exposed, was mailed back to the Rochester plant and there by a complex process the thin negative emulsion was developed, transferred from the paper to glass and the pictures printed. This was too complicated. Eastman sought, and at last in 1889 attained a flexible, transparent base to take the place of the paper and so simplify the process that any amateur could develop and print his own pictures. That was film, a nitro-cellulose compound not unlike celluloid.

Meanwhile, as has been amply related in screen history, Thomas A. Edison had completed an adequate mechanism for the motion picture and lacked only the proper vehicle or medium to carry the pictures. He heard of Eastman's film, before it had reached the market, and sent for a sample, paying $2.50 for a strip one inch wide and fifty feet long. That strip of film proved the motion picture machine and began motion picture history.

Markets broadened in many directions for Eastman products, here and abroad, and the company grew tremendously and continuously, reaching at last the proportions of a quarter of a billion dollar enterprise, with branches over the world and products distributed to the uttermost trading posts. Mr. Eastman had his first clear cash million in profits, apart from the business, in the middle nineties, and hurried home from London to tell his mother about it.

"That's nice, George," remarked Maria Kilbourn Eastman, who never again said a word about it. "That," observed Mr. Eastman, relating the matter years after, "made me think not so much about it either."

"Is there," I asked Mr. Eastman, "any important difference between having a million or two and having a hundred million or two?"

"No," he replied, "there is not, except that the hundred millions bring with them a great deal of responsibility to the fortunes of other persons."

The early Eastman motion picture film product was sold exclusively to the members of the Motion Picture Patents Company. It was Jules Brulatour of New York, dealer in photographic supplies, who negotiated with Mr. Eastman and at last won concessions which made it possible to supply Eastman film to the rising independent producers, conspicuous among them Carl Laemmle's "Imp" and related projects. It was not until the independents, in about 1912, got Eastman film that they were able to compete with the Patents Company producers on equal terms of picture quality. The Brulatour connection survives today.

Some commentators on pictorial affairs have made much of the long litigation between the Eastman Kodak Company and heirs, successors and assigns of the late Reverend Hannibal Goodwin of Newark and Brooklyn, claimant to invention of film. It is a long, involved story, in which non-technical writers have made much capital of the picture of a neglected, downtrodden minister-inventor. Examination of the facts indicates that the Goodwin patent had no relation to the Eastman process and that Goodwin had not a process of making film but a notion about making it expressed entirely on paper. Ultimately, through a maze of complexities, many of them involving much more of commercial politics than photographic technique, and many court actions, Eastman settled for sums variously reported at three and five millions of dollars. That was some years after he had had an offer to sell out at a mere fraction of the sum, and declined on the ground no value was involved in the offer.

It is a curiously significant fact that the Goodwin patent formulae indicated in his official papers had not yet been made, by the most expert photographic chemists, to produce a film.

Current reports tend to indicate that Mr. Eastman left an estate of some fifteen millions of dollars and that his total gifts to institutions were about a hundred millions. None of these figures is final and they are unlikely to be more than approximations. Some of his philanthropies are currently estimated thus:

University of Rochester, including the Eastman Theatre and School of Music	$35,500,000
Massachusetts Institute of Technology	19,500,000
Kodak stock to employes	6,000,000
Rochester Dental Dispensary	2,500,000
Musical instruments for public schools	15,000
Young Men's Christian Association	350,000
Young Women's Christian Association	30,000
The Shelter	45,000
Friendly Home	50,000
Rochester hospitals	675,000
Rochester parks	100,000
Mechanics' Institute	625,000
Stevens Institute of Technology	400,000
City and State research bureaus	300,000
War relief	1,075,000
Community chest	950,000
Chamber of Commerce Building	1,350,000
Hampton Institute	2,000,000
Tuskegee Institute	2,362,000
Waterville High School	300,000
London Dental Clinic	1,500,000
Oxford University	200,000
Rome Dental Clinic	1,000,000
Paris Dental Clinic	1,000,000
Brussels Dental Clinic	1,000,000
Stockholm Dental Clinic	1,000,000

There is a large array of unreported benefactions and it is likely that many of them will never receive publicity. It was years before his large gifts to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology became known.

France To Enforce Inflammable Decree

It is now definitely understood that as of October 1, 1932, the French government will enforce its decree making compulsory the use of non-inflammable stock in public film exhibition, according to George R. Canty, American trade commissioner in Paris.

The decree, which is 10 years old, has been postponed on six different occasions. It is further understood that all films censored prior to October 1, will be exempt from compliance with the decree, but that all censored after that date will come under the jurisdiction of the regulation.

No logical reason is presented for the decision to enforce the decree at this time, according to Canty, but the suspicion is widespread that film politics has much to do with it. All trade interests are said to be preparing for efforts to have the decree again set aside.

Paper Sees More Order on Coast

The general trend of Hollywood production has been for a more orderly production schedule which will make for the elimination of expensive rush production, according to The Pacific Coast Wall Street Journal. The trend is seen by the financial publication as reflecting the studio efforts toward house-cleaning.

Observers are not anticipating the usual amount of temporary studio closings general at this time and later when production schedules are completed, the Journal states. Reduced operations last year now necessitate rebuilding of film inventories, it continues.

Leading studios are noted as reporting increased activity, which fact is seen by the publication as a result of the double-featuring practice on the one hand and the belief that a steady production schedule is advantageous, on the other.

Society of Cameramen Names Amateur Contest Committee

John Arnold, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, in Hollywood, has appointed a special committee to complete the organization of the Amateur Movie Contest being conducted by the society's magazine, "The American Cinematographer."

The committee is composed of: George Schneiderman, chairman; John Arnold, Dan B. Clark, Charles G. Clarke, Elmer G. Dyer, Frank B. Good, Arthur Miller, John F. Seitz, William Stull. The contest is to be judged by a board consisting of notable producers, directors, writers, actors, cameramen.

Quebec Group Opens Office

The newly organized Allied Theatrical Industries, Canadian association for both exhibitors and exchange managers of cities in Quebec, has opened a permanent office in the Mount Royal Hotel, Montreal.

ALLIED RETURNS HOME WITH REFORM PLANS

Extent to Which Brookhart's "Cure-Alls" Will Be Supported Depends Upon Modifications to Be Obtained

Independent exhibitors this week once again turned their attention to the serious business of theatre operation, returning from Detroit where Allied States Association met in annual convention last week and duly passed the usual resolutions condemning the usual trade practices which are supposed to be detrimental to the wellbeing of the unaffiliated operator. Some of these resolutions were in the form of endorsements of proposed legislation through which Allied hopes to effect a series of reforms and modifications of certain trade practices.

Much effort was exerted and quite some energy expended by leaders of Allied in their successful attempt to let it be known that the convention dissapproved of many policies as now practiced by distributors and by affiliated circuits, and approved of their correction through endorsement of Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart's assorted legislative documents. However, the extent to which Allied will actually support the "cure-all" which had been previously presented to the Senate at Washington by the senator from Iowa depends entirely upon the nature of modifications of these trade practices obtained by Allied in the interim.

The Decisions

The entire convention business revolved around 11 committees, each of which was delegated to sift the charges of the various socalled "unfair" trade practices and to duly report its findings on the convention floor. The results were:

Resolutions favoring Senate bills introduced by Brookhart and providing for a Congressional investigation of the industry and for the abolition of compulsory block booking. All senate members are to receive copies of the resolutions. By this time, the House patents committee has probably heard of a third resolution in which Allied went on record as favoring certain changes in the copyright law, which includes a reduction of the music tax and the transfer of "holdovers" from the status of copyright to contractual violation.

Charge Intimidation

Further resolutions resulted in Allied withdrawing its previous endorsement of the 5-5-5 contract on the grounds it is "obsolete." Directors were authorized to draft a new form of agreement, if this were deemed advisable. Another denounced double featuring as wasteful and uneconomic and the blame for this practice was duly placed on block booking and "unfair" protection. Of protection, much was said on the convention floor, but delegates heard nothing which would indicate that a definite and an amicable plan of adjustment is available.

The alleged intimidation of a Minnesota exhibitor by MGM because he did not buy MGM product was denounced in one of the later resolutions, although Felix Feist wired the convention that he considered MGM's attitude fair. A theatre, in which MGM is interested, is now in construction at Bemidji, Minn., scene of the situation.

The trade press was mentioned in two resolutions. In one, the convention thanked the press for its cooperation, while the other requested trade papers to refrain from publishing star salaries or box office figures, unless these figures were verified. Sales policies demanding percentage playing were condemned in a resolution which was passed unanimously.

Dick Dickson, a circuit operator, sought Allied's backing in a new circuit. Basically, Allied would receive a small fee in return for which it would buy films, equipment, insurance and incidentals for houses of the proposed circuit. A project by which Allied was to tie-in with American Newsreel was held up and authority was given to directors to negotiate. Give-away premiums in all Allied houses will be cleared through the Theatrical Premium Company, New York, through which Allied hopes to receive at least $30,000 yearly. Another deal may be effected between Supreme Screen Service and Allied on trailers.

Richey Business Manager

Temporarily, at least, H. M. Richey will continue as business manager. There was no election at the convention.

Chairman Abram Myers indicated that a merger deal between Allied and MPTOA is remote.

A resolution asked Allied members to darken theatres beginning June 1 unless reductions are obtained in film and theatre rentals, score charges, advertising accessories, music tax, insurance, light, power and other fixed charges.

One prominent phase of the convention was the demand that producers divest themselves of circuit holdings, except de luxe houses, and it was decided to enlist public support in the fight to bring about this divestment. The same method was decided upon regarding protection.

The convention got its keynote speech from Abram Myers, who outlined Allied's views on many of the socalled "unfair" practices. The convention pledged $60,000 with which to "carry on."

S.O.S. Firm Takes Physical Assets of Royal Amplitone

The S. O. S. Corporation, New York equipment manufacturers, through its salvage department, has taken over all physical assets of Royal Amplitone Corporation, a sound-on-disc manufacturer. S. O. S., however, has not assumed any control or liabilities of Royal Amplitone. The Pulverman Corporation, which controls Royal Amplitone, continues to operate and distribute sound equipment.

Films at Exhibition

Film photography and television will form parts of the international exhibition scheduled for May 6-16 at Amsterdam, Holland.

Accessory Resale Ban Is Aimed in Distributor Plan

In a move led by Fox and aimed at independent poster exchanges engaged in resale of advertising accessories, larger distributors are planning to incorporate into new sales contracts clauses requiring leasing of accessories from the distributor and prohibiting their sale, lease or other disposition by the exhibitor.

Independent exhibitors of Greater New York and New York poster exchanges are protesting the move on the ground that theatre economies are to be effected through resale of accessories, and that the economies are of more than ordinary significance at this time.

Directly counter to the move is a plan being put into effect by Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska for the establishment of an organizational poster exchange to serve members. The exchange is to purchase advertising accessories from members at nominal prices and engage in their resale to other members at a margin of profit, it is planned.

Fox already has drafted its restraining clause for inclusion in new contracts. Under the heading of "Exhibition and Advertising," the ninth clause in the new contract reads:

"All advertising accessories used by the exhibitor in connection with the exhibition of said photoplay must be leased from or through the distributor and must not be sold, leased or given away by the exhibitor."

Paramount, too, is preparing restraining clauses, holding that its advertising material is leased and cannot be resold. Both Fox and Paramount will demand that material be returned to the exchange after it is used. Other large distributors are also reported ready to invoke some method of controlling resale of accessories which, they say, has grown to such proportions that poster departments are being operated uniformly at serious losses.

A mass meeting of independent exhibitors of Greater New York has been called to protest the efforts to curb the independent exchanges. It will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, March 21. Possible action of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, was seen in the statement of President Charles L. O'Reilly that the organization would act if "exhibitors' rights are invaded."

A meeting of New York film exchange managers was scheduled for Wednesday at the New York Film Board of Trade to discuss copyrighting of advertising accessories. Responsible legal opinion has held in the past that copyrighted advertising accessories, when numbered, may be replevined by their owners whenever found to be in illegal possession of another.

Named Warner Zone Manager

Sol Hankin, former Warner Pittsburgh district manager, has been named zone manager in Wisconsin. I. J. Hoffman, assistant general manager of theatres; Stewart MacDonald and Dave Weshner, home office executives, returned on Monday from a two-weeks' inspection tour in the East.

SEEK CONSTRUCTIVE ZONING SYSTEM

fighting adverse legislation; E. O. Heyl, general manager of Photophone, outlined that firm's new equipment and service charges and Jules Michaels of Buffalo spoke of cut prices and outlined the attitude of the attorney general's office on the standard contract arbitration and zoning.

Lightman, in his opening remarks, defended producers and poor product, declaring that "no producer deliberately makes poor pictures." This attitude was in marked contrast to that taken by Allied last week, when the organization headed by Abram Myers and Al Steffes vigorously and vehemently derided producers for making poor pictures. "The major troubles today," said Lightman, "rest not with the producer, distributor or exhibitor, but with the public," adding as his opinion that there is nothing in the product of reputable companies requiring censorship, if parents would take the trouble of approving what pictures their children should see.

Any organization built on a solid structure is "bound to succeed" and "any with sand as its foundation will crumble," Lightman declared. He said there "is no use raising objections unless the objectors substitute something better."

Protection and zoning he referred to as "troublesome," but said he anticipated that a constructive method of solving the problem would be developed. He asked the delegates to remember that the question has two sides.

"We are here for a purpose," he said. "This is not a political machine. I will refuse to clutter the floor with problems that can be handled in small groups."

Miller Protests Double Bills

When Miller, of Chicago, addressed the delegates, he launched a healthy tirade against double featuring and cited many alleged "evils" of the situation. Miller revealed some intimate and interesting details concerning the practice in Chicago, the so-called "hotbed" of double billing. During the course of his remarks, Miller charged Gabriel L. Hess, of the MPPDA, with being "the father of the double feature." Hess quickly came back with a denial which took the form of an official statement issued to the industry at large through its trade press. Said Hess:

"It was as great a surprise to me as it must have been to the trade generally to learn that I was the 'father' of the practice now prevalent in Chicago of showing two or more feature pictures on a single program. It is not my function as general attorney of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to advise exhibitors, nor have I the authority to order or direct distributors or their exchanges to supply or refrain from supplying features or any other class of motion pictures. I do not know Mrs. Garring of the Rosewood Theatre in Chicago, and I never have been in communication with her in regard to any matters."

The Mrs. Garring referred to by Hess was mentioned by Jack Miller in connection with a triple feature policy at her Rosewood theatre, Chicago.

Miller was on the program for an address on "Score and Service Charges," but suddenly and without warning switched to double features.

Michaels, who represents western New York owners, read to the convention a communication attributed to U. S. Assistant Attorney-general John Lord O'Brien in which O'Brien was quoted as saying that the government is not opposed to a standard contract if it is "fair and reasonable," nor to arbitration if not compulsory and favors zoning.

M. E. COMERFORD
Vice-President

O'Brien was further quoted by Michaels, as having asked what has become of the 5-5-5 contract. Michaels, in hitting cut rate admissions in theatres of his territory, said that zoning on a "fair and equitable basis" is the only cure.

Heyl, of Photophone, reiterated the nature of changes in the company's equipment and servicing charges, made last week at Allied's convention, and details of which were published in Motion Picture Herald, issue of March 12. With regards service charge reductions, Heyl said that there would be a saving to exhibitors of more than $40,000 monthly to the 1,000 exhibitors whose types of equipment call for a reduction to $32.50 each month. Owners of other types of apparatus will benefit accordingly, said Heyl.

Even though exhibitors lose their fight to escape admission taxes, they should protest against the imposition to their senators and congressmen, Representative Sol Bloom told the delegates in a welcome address on Monday. Otherwise, he said, some day the increase may jump to 20 per cent instead of the 10 per cent now proposed. He is opposed to all tax legislation on articles under $1 and to censorship, declaring the public is the final judge of pictures. He stressed the value of organization in fighting proposed taxes.

Attacks Regulation Plan

Judge Roy L. Walker, of Texas, told the delegates that proposed government regulation of distribution "strikes at the foundation of free and unrestricted contact between individuals and corporations." Obviously, Judge Walker's condemnation of government interference had to do with the various measures recently proposed in the senate by Smith Wildman Brookhart.

Four general classes of legal propositions affect the exhibitor, Edward G. Levy, secretary of the M.P.T.O. of Connecticut, pointed out in discussing "Legal Principles an Exhibitor Should Know." They are: 1. Leases; 2. Injuries to employes, patrons and others; 3. Contracts; 4. Miscellaneous. Levy's discussion contained much of interest to owners. He explained in minute detail the various machinations and legal phraseology affecting these four important phases of operation.

The charges made by Al Steffes during the recent Allied convention at Detroit regarding the alleged dominance of MPTOA by the Hays organization reacted at Washington where the MPTO leaders ridiculed Steffes' assertion and then questioned the ethics of Allied in making commercial tieups with producers and equipment concerns.

Convention activities then came in for a thrashing when Jack Miller, Chicago, charged that a number of the speeches were "the bunk." Miller appeared to favor "action" rather than speeches, and placed his stamp of approval on Allied's efforts in their fight against arbitration and for the Brookhart bills.

The convention, held at the Mayflower Hotel, was the 12th annual event and was dedicated to the current national Washington bicentennial. Arrangements for the convention were in the hands of A. Julian Brylawski, Harry M. Crandall, Sidney B. Lust, William B. Herbst, Nat Glasser, Carter Barron, Hardie Meakin, Rodney Collier, Maurice Davis and A. Lichtman. All operate in the Washington-Baltimore territory.

Sub-committees included: Publicity—Corbin Shields, Carter Barron and Don Reed; Exhibitions—Hardie Meakin, Sidney Lust, Corbin Shields; Entertainment—Guy Wonders, Harry Crull, Carter Barron and Hardie Meakin; Motion Pictures—Nat Glasser, A. J. Pratt and George Werner; Reception and Dinner—A. J. Brylawski, Harry Crandall and Harry Crull.

When the convention opened on Monday, committees were appointed on credentials, resolutions and public service relations. Delegates appointed were: Credentials—Ed Kuykendahl, Columbus, Miss.; Sidney Lust, Washington; William Quigley, Pennsylvania; Edward G. Levy, New Haven; Martin G. Smith, Toledo; Resolutions—Earl Van Hyning, Kansas City; Jack Miller, Chicago; M. J. Kallet, and Frank C. Walker, New York; Love B. Harrell, Atlanta; Lew Pizor, Philadelphia; Public service relations—George P. Aarons, Philadelphia; Lou Ainsel, Missouri; William Benton, New York; H. D. Wharton, Arkansas; Joseph Dennison, Michigan.

1,400 at Banquet

Although official attendance figures were not forthcoming, it appeared that the delegation was larger than any in recent years. While many states and territorial exhibitor units sent unofficial "observers," delegates were officially registered from the following city and state units:

Dallas, Atlanta, North and South Carolina, eastern Missouri, southern Illinois, Kansas, western Missouri, Nebraska, Albany, Connecticut, northern New York, Philadelphia, Ohio, New York City, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Wisconsin, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., Virginia, Chicago, Rhode Island and Oklahoma.

The banquet at the Mayflower Hotel on Tuesday night was the big social event and one of the convention highlights. Fourteen hundred crowded the large hotel ballroom, including 350 senators and representatives of the federal government who were the guests of the convention. Hundreds of theatre owners and many executives of the larger film companies were there and so were Eddie Dowling, acting as master of ceremonies; Clive Brook, June Collyer, Claudette Colbert, Conrad Nagel, Stuart Erwin, Jacqueline Logan and Ernst Lubutsch. M. E. Comerford spoke and he was followed by Walter Vincent, President M. A. Lightman, Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times; Sidney Kent, Rabbi Jacob Tarshis, of Columbus, Ohio, and Reverend Norman McCloud, of North Carolina.

Louis Wiley addressed the delegates at the banquet on behalf of the nation's press. Wiley urged the industry to continue the maintenance of a high production standard and cautioned the delegates to place the problem of adverse legislation only in the hands of their wisest leaders. A complete account of Wiley's remarks appears elsewhere in this issue.

A telegram from Will H. Hays was read at the banquet and delegates received its message with hearty applause. "No finer example of courage and public spirit has been set by any group in the national emergency than the attitude and performance of exhibitors," wired Hays. "You were the front line of industry cooperation in the raising of large sums for local unemployment relief agencies throughout the nation and your theatres, as always, have been at the complete obedience of every worthwhile enterprise," he said.

Continuing, Hays declared: "Fundamental in importance, you have realized the vital necessity of maintaining unimpaired the nation's supply of entertainment at a time when an ounce of morale is worth a pound of gold. You have made tremendous strides in availing yourselves of community leadership in support of the finest pictures and you are wisely shaping your programs with the whole American public in mind, working with the producers to create and satisfy an increasingly higher level of entertainment demand. All this progress and service at a time when economic conditions cause you to operate on so slender a margin of possible profit that the public is substantially in your debt.

Pledges Good Pictures

"Be sure, too, that this courage and enterprise will bring you just reward. On behalf of the producers, I pledge you first no slackening anywhere in our efforts to give you the finest pictures the studios can make; second, an unfailing recognition that your interests and ours are mutual, with full disposition on our part to cooperate with you as partners in a thrilling and essential endeavor. We will go around that corner together and meet prosperity—not wait for it."

Elective planning of play-dates, with a program suitable for the entire family at weekends; close cooperation of local civic leaders and groups, and development of a community sense of responsibility for the quality of motion picture entertainment were advocated by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, in his banquet speech.

"The producers have found that Mr. Hays' policy of inviting public leaders to counsel with the makers of pictures, at the studios, has resulted in better understanding of industry problems and in a steady increase of high quality pictures," Milliken told the convention.

Community Responsibility

"Exhibitors are more and more beginning to follow a similar policy in their respective communities, counselling with the best available public-spirited leadership in the planning of programs. The parent, the teacher and the minister have a definite responsibility for the quality of the motion picture entertainment offered and patronized in the community, and they have a very definite obligation to work with the theatre-owner or manager to see that the entertainment needs of the child are selectively and suitably met.

"The stimulation of a demnd for the best in pictures is an absolute requisite if the industry is to continue and increase the present high percentage of so-called serious entertainment coming from the studios. Through the preview system, of which more than 12 national organizations, disinterested and unbiassed, now avail themselves, it is practicable for leaders in any community to secure, regularly, impartial and careful judgment on forthcoming picture product.

"Word of mouth advertising for the best pictures means more pictures of the same type. The exhibitor, the producer and the public all profit where there is cooperative effort by the industry and the citizens who are interested in maintaining high picture standards."

One of the high lights of the banquet was the explosion of the "high salary myth" in production, by Conrad Nagel.

Only 23 individuals out of 25,000 actors and actresses in Hollywood draw "headline" salaries, Nagel, who is vice-president of the Academy of Arts and Sciences, told the banquet guests.

"As president of the Motion Picture Relief Fund," Nagel said, "I conducted a drive a few months ago to raise money for our fund. All salaried people in the industry were asked to contribute one-half of one per cent of their salaries every week. Before staging this drive, I had to make sure that such a procedure would secure sufficient money. So I was permitted to examine the salary lists of the various studios. To my amazement, I found that with 25,000 registered actors and actresses in Hollywood, there are actually only 23 of the so-called 'headline' salaries—the amounts which, plus an added cypher or two, make startling news stories or material for a certain type of radio gossiper."

British Films Must Improve To Match U.S., Is Contention

English voices must be more distinct and "unsavory features" eliminated before British product can hope to compete with American films in British Columbia, Canada, it was contended by Major George A. Walkem, Vancouver legislator, speaking at Victoria on a British quota bill for the province.

Walkem also urged a better censorship. In agreement with him was A. M. Manson, who urged the government discard the present board of appeal in the province, and "leave it to the censors." He expressed the belief that a cabinet minister should have the power to set a policy as to what class of film should be shown.

Pantages Plans National Circuit; May Make Films

Alexander Pantages is planning the formation of a nationwide theatre circuit to include 200 to 500 houses. The plan calls for operation on a combination vaudeville and picture policy, possibly with acts and films produced by his own company in Hollywood.

John Considine, who is Pantages' son-in-law, and Alexander, Rodney, and Lloyd Pantages are partners in what they describe as a new and tremendous deal.

Considine, in New York negotiating for theatres, is scheduled to have entire charge of film production. Rodney and Lloyd Pantages will supervise the production and staging of vaudeville. Alexander Pantages is slated for supervision of theatre operation.

Wisconsin MPTO Asks Houses Admit Blind Without Charge

The MPTO of Wisconsin, of which Fred S. Meyer is president, has addressed a communication to all theatre owners in the state, recommending that blind people be admitted to the theatres without charge, provided they are accompanied by one paid admission.

The letter explains that the recommendation is prompted by a desire to fix responsibility "for the safety of these blind people while they are in the theatre." John T. Kostuck, assemblyman from Stevens Point, Wis., said: "Talking pictures mean more to the blind than I can express in a few words."

Ezra Winter To Do the First Mural for Rockefeller Center

The Metropolitan Square Corporation, John D. Rockefeller, Jr.'s, holding company for Rockefeller Center in New York, has signed the first contract for the extensive decoration program planned. Ezra Winter, distinguished mural painter, will execute the mural in the lobby of the International Music Hall.

Winter's preliminary sketch was selected from among the many submitted to the advisory art commission for the center. The general decorative art program for the center, it is said, will be on a scale hitherto unprecedented in commercial buildings.

McClusky Sees Films as a Real Adjunct to Education

Dr. F. Dean McClusky, president of the National Academy of Visual Instruction, in Washington last week envisioned history classes of the future studying motion pictures instead of "cramming" on text book data.

"The superior learning of children taught with well-constructed pictures as an adjunct to oral and written instruction has been indisputably proven by independent investigations," said Mr. McClusky. He stressed the educational value of many current films, and noted the great potentialities of the newsreel.

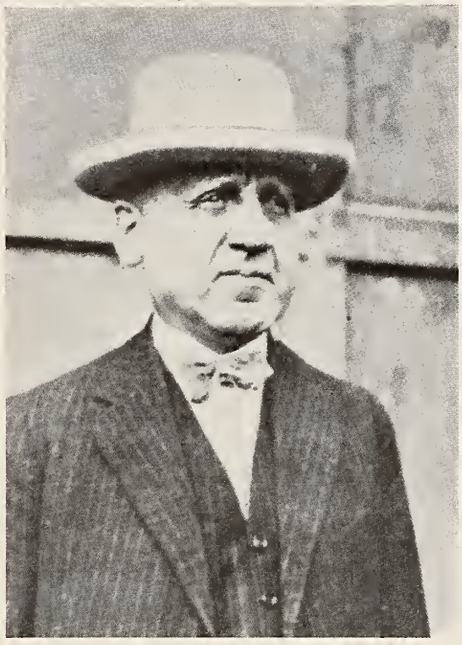
WILEY URGES CLEAN STANDARDS; CAUTIOUS COURSE ON LEGISLATION

Soundest Opinion Favors Minimum of Law Making to Set Up Censorship, Business Manager of N. Y. Times Tells MPTOA

Adherence to clean standards of showmanship and a cautious course of dealing through wise representatives with reference to proposed legislation were urged upon the industry by Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, speaking before the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at a dinner at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington Tuesday night.

"Part of the name of your organization is 'Owners of America.' America can be bought more cheaply today than a few years ago, and it is well worth buying as an investment. The skies are blue over our land, but the United States is not a blue sky investment," said Mr. Wiley.

"On the letterhead of your energetic and able secretary, Mr. O'Toole, is the slogan, 'Protect Your Investment—It Is Worth Fighting For.' I assume some one is interfering with the motion picture theatre business. The desire of some people to meddle with other people's businesses amounts almost to an epidemic and is particularly virulent among legislatures. I do not know in detail what battles you have on your hand just now, but it is well to have a man named O'Toole to lead the fighting.



Deal Directly With Public

"Your business is much like that of newspapers in one important particular. We both deal directly with the public. From this constant contact we derive many advantages and a considerable number of worries. It is reasonably easy to learn the opinions of an individual. It requires statesmanship to learn and be certain of the collective opinion of large groups. Whoever must deal with public opinion must never relax his vigilance. Public opinions, public preferences, prejudices, are all fluid. We must be prepared to recognize rapid changes in taste and in interests of the people who attend motion picture theatres and buy newspapers. The shrewd leader in motion pictures and in journalism is one who can forecast accurately the coming changes.

"Newspapers and motion pictures also have in common the quality of being universal. The languages in which the newspapers are printed or in which the characters on the screen speak may change. But a demand for news is present in all countries, and the interest in the drama on the screen and the pictures you show is born in the human race. Newspapers and the industry you represent serve the universal needs of information and entertainment.

News in Pictures

"The most valuable quality in newspapers is news. I do not claim to be an expert on motion picture theatre management, and as an appreciative patron of your theatres I know that one of the greatest assets of your program is to have what is new as well as what is good. It is a strong human desire to know the news, to be in touch with the latest events, to be first to know what is happening in the world.

LOUIS WILEY

"When Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of The New York Times, began his newspaper career in Chattanooga, more than half a century ago, he determined that news should be the cornerstone of his newspaper.

"Mr. Ochs, who knew so fully the value of news, recognized the worth of real news pictures. He was a pioneer in introducing the rotogravure picture section to the United States, making such a section a regular part of The New York Times in 1914. Mr. Ochs sought interesting news pictures to be printed in the most beautiful way.

"News pictures, of course, are not the greatest attraction at your beautiful and well-managed theatres. I think you will all agree, however, that your audiences keenly enjoy the news reels. The public is interested in the news of your industry and what it offers. A local theatre manager will always do well to play up the news quality in his presentations.

Censor Not Wisest Agency

"We hear a great deal concerning the mistakes of censors, of the different standards of censorship existing in the many States, thereby making the operations of your business more difficult.

"In the public interest we need some form of restriction of excesses, but it is rare in human experience that a censor has been found to be the wisest agency for setting up such restrictions. Newspapers are aware that some publications have degraded journalism and have obtained circulation among those of low intelligence and standards by pandering to the baser instincts and interests. There are always some who are willing to make money by exploiting the low and salacious. Public taste seems to go in waves, and we know that serving the lowest tastes may be profitable for a time until an aroused public opinion interferes. In the long run, however, real success and, above all, the real satisfaction of life can come only from truly serving the intelligent and discriminating members of the community and building up the permanent good-will of the better element.

Too Many Laws

"Newspapers, the drama, motion pictures, the cause of free speech in every form, have a common interest in watching restrictive legislation which would endeavor to limit their lawful freedom.

"The soundest opinion is in favor of a minimum of legislation which attempts to set up standards of censorship. We have too many laws in this country not supported by public opinion. A strong and aroused public opinion is the best guarantee that laws will be enforced. I urge you to put the matter of dealing with proposed legislation in the hands of your wisest men, who always by their actions and statements will place your industry in the best possible light before our people.

"No question with which your association can deal requires abler or cooler heads than that of representing the motion picture theatre owners before the American people, whom it is your privilege to serve."

Desire of Some People to Meddle With Other People's Businesses Amounts Almost to an Epidemic, Convention Is Told

Hughes-Franklin Houses Reverting

The Midwest division of Hughes-Franklin Theatres is in process of being disbanded, with the houses involved either reverting to former owners or being otherwise disposed of. The Lindbergh theatre, de luxe Kansas City suburban house, is the first to revert. It is understood four additional houses in Kansas City and one in Chillicothe, Mo., will be dropped shortly.

When the Hughes-Franklin circuit bought a group of houses in the territory more than a year ago, rentals were paid one year in advance on leases running five or 10 years. It is said that in certain instances, where the advance rentals have terminated, no rent has been paid.

Educational 1932-33 Program Probably Will Equal 1931-32

Educational will release approximately the same number of short subjects next season as during the current production year, Earle W. Hammons, president, has announced.

During the 1931-32 season, 52 two-reel comedies are on the schedule. Hammons will leave the home office for the Coast shortly to conclude next season's production conferences, now in progress in New York.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

REGARDING his activities in cutting overhead, Manager Tom Forhan, of the Capitol, at Welland, Ontario, writes to the home office of Publix as follows:

"For quite some time I wanted to put up a marble counter for my box office. Each time I secured a price for the material I was quoted $25, plus labor. For my size operation, I considered this price prohibitive, but not satisfied I questioned members of my staff about their occupations before coming to this theatre, and found my fireman had been a tombstone man, excellent on inscription work. He at once settled my problem.

"He advised me that he could go into the local cemetery, secure a slab of marble, cut it in two, polish it, and cut it into shape of my ticket window for $8.50. This $8.50 was spent as follows: $2.00 for the marble slab, which is as good as new; $5.00 for the fireman's labor, and $1.50 for a carpenter. So I saved $16.50 and have a permanent window of marble.

"I am wrong about my cost for the marble. The total cost of the material and work was $5.00 and not $8.50, as I induced the stone man and the carpenter to take their pay in passes. Besides I still have enough marble left to make ornaments in marble for my mezzanine floor."

A 116-page newspaper with a circulation of only 15 copies was published the other day by the printing department of Paramount's studio on the Coast. ▽

Evidently, titles of feature attractions do not mean a thing in newspaper advertising out Denver way, where the RKO Orpheum last week ran a two-column by four-inch ad in which considerable decorative material, cuts and 150 words were crowded into this limited space ballyhooing short subjects, organ solo, a midnight show, vaudeville headliners, stage band and whatnot. But not a single mention was made of the current feature title, although considerable space was devoted to the stars appearing in it.

Paramount's divestment of one-half interest in Columbia Broadcasting brings to mind one rather interesting incident which occurred during original negotiations between these two concerns a few years ago.

Warners were dickering with Columbia for the purchase of one-half interest, but when Columbia submitted financial terms, executives at Warners took the matter under advisement. The figure asked by Columbia was thought by the Warner Brothers to be too high and so they postponed the affixing of contractual signatures for about three hours. In the meantime, Paramount stepped in and tied up Columbia and its broadcasting activities.

In view of the widely touted and so-called precarious economic condition of independent exhibitors, we wonder why Allied States Association dubbed the social event which followed its recent national convention banquet: "The Millionaires' Party!"?

Armed with information gleaned during his duscussion with Meyers, Kain hopes to induce the Berlin censors to waive their objections and pass the picture.

Theatre owners of the Long Island towns of Jamaica, Hollis, Bellaire, Hillside and Queens Village are disturbed over threatening inroads on box office receipts as a result of Publix' offer to the public to "ride free" on Long Island trains when fans travel to Paramount's theatre at Brooklyn.

Rudy Vallee prefers crooning over the radio to any other musical effort, including stage and screen, he confided to our correspondent at Kansas City, the other day. That he "hoped to be able to land a job" at Rockefeller City upon its completion was one of his admissions. He also revealed, without the necessity of permission from the copyright owner, that he favored a federal tax of, say, 50 cents on each radio set, said fee to be paid annually by the owner. Revenue obtained in this manner, he said, would be used partly to compensate music composers, "whose work now is not recognized adequately." Payment of the tax would make listeners-in take greater interest in the programs and would give them a "more logical basis of complaint as to 'too much advertising,'" Rudy averred, adding as an afterthought that they would have more right to complain about the crooners, too.

While "buzzing around" the Southwest the other day, Wesley Trout, our representative in that neck 'o woods stopped in to chat with that pioneer exhibitor, "Dad" Spearman, who now operates the Gem at Edmond, Oklahoma.

Many will remember "Dad" for his untiring efforts in behalf of the M.P.T.O. of Oklahoma and for those snappy little M.P.T.O. bulletins that he used to make-up, print and edit in his own little print shop in the rear of the theatre.

Recently "Dad" purchased 160 acres a few miles near Edmond and on the farm is a lake in which dad is going to raise minnows, later developing it for fishing. Many film and theatremen are interested in the project, which will sponsor a private clubhouse where the "gang" can browse about.

Trout, on his current swing through the Southwest, heard many reports of a movement now under way to bring back airdromes.

ASPIRANTS to the presidential chair at the White House might study thoroughly the results to date of a unique sales campaign which is being conducted by the Warner field organization.

The contest is getting exciting as it enters its sixth week—the halfway mark. Returns to date show the Democrats with a substantial lead and their standard bearer is already claiming an overwhelming victory.

It is quite difficult to gauge the extent to which the voting is influenced by partisanship, in view of the fact that each dollar's worth of sales of Vitaphone shorts and trailers counts as a vote.

Publix has issued the following order to its staff, in line with a move to "anticipate and forestall the marked drop in business that comes with spring and summer:"

"Every theatre manager and district manager must immediately analyze each individual theatre operation and submit a report to the division manager in charge, giving a specific account of what the theatre may be expected to do from April to September."

The report must include not only expected earnings in the light of decreases during warm weather periods, but must include all possible suggestions for maintaining the house on the most profitable basis during the period. Each manager is asked to consider the possible effect on his theatre of a change in policy or price and is requested to make the recommendations which he deems best. In extreme cases, managers are told, the advisability of closing the theatre should be considered.

"THE INSIDE STORY"

Louis Corrotto, the "gang biggie," is calling Eddy Robinson with twelve mouths.

George Bryant and Francis M. Verdi have unveiled in a gripping and startling crook melodramatic, "The Inside Story," the whole nasty secret of gangdom's power.

Louis Corrotto, the "big shot" of a "Mid-Western State," controls the governor, the district attorney and the police because he has contributed big sums to their campaigns. He has other gentle persuaders in the form of threateneng the defence lawyer with the kidnaping and quartering of his child. It seems to be all shudderingly true. Exaggeration merely emphasizes the fact.

In 14 scenes on a revolving stage, the play tells a closely-woven story of how Corrotto pinned a crime on an innocent boy, how the boy nearly went to the chair, but was saved by his girl murdering the slick Louis in the nick of time. We see the frightful cowardice of a governor just before the boy is going to be electrocuted. It bristles, bristles, bristles.

The play is well done. Louis Calhern is at his tallest and best as the cynical Corrotto. Marguerite Churchill was convincing as the girl. The boy was handled effectively by Roy Roberts.

This play, under the eye of Al Woods, makes a strong dramatic appeal. With the kidnaping angle it should be gobbled up for the screen.

"COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW"

"Counsellor-at-Law," another play by Elmer Rice, is loaded with characterization, drama and comical situations.

It is the hectic comedy and hokum in the everyday life of the New York lawyer, and although at times it is prolix and sprawling it grips you by the fine work of Paul Muni as George Simon, an Eastside boy who has risen to be the big "biggie" among the lawyers.

Simon is a vital character, a real person. His wife deserts him; he has a tussle with a Mayflower-descended legal "smarty" who wants to "get him" for an early professional indiscretion; he is laid flat verbally in a fine scene by a communist client; his secretary is in love with him and he is about to leap out the window toward the last curtain when (à la "The Front Page") he gets a big case from the U. S. Steel Corporation. Let's go! Let death wait! More "mazuma!" It's all raw and gripping. It will reel stunningly.

Supporting Muni is a long and excellent cast. They sweep through his office—acquitted murderesses, divorcees, chorus girls, what-not. It's all a "chunk" of New York, which Mr. Rice knows so well. The characters that pass through Simons' office would alone make a reel of continuous laughs with a good dialogue doctor on the job.

"WILD WAVES"

The radio studios take it "on the chin." The chin doesn't know it.

This new comedy, "Wild Waves," by William Ford Manley, is a brave attempt to satirize the "hooey" and "muck" that come over the radio. It is laid inside of a broadcasting station, where there is an attempt—heavy and clumsy—made to show us what goes on there.

I do not believe half of it, for I have been in many of these broadcasting stations and everything seems to work smoothly enough. The humor goes flat through over-insistence.

The story would have been better if it had been played a straight farce. But it takes a pathetic turn now and then that ruins what titter there is in it.

The burden of the work fell on that amazing fellow, Osgood Perkins. He squeezed every bit of fat out of the part. He's always top-notch. The rest of the long and overcrowded cast worked hard.

I could vizualize this as a peppy screen-farce, the more idiotic the better. The gunman angle in the stage play would have been much better if played as burlesque.

"MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA"

O'Neill's latest sixhour-drama ought to make one of the most powerful and absorbing screen dramas that we have ever had. The risky scene between the brother and sister must be currycombed for the children. Outside of that it ought to run as is.

This play of a hex on the house of the New England Mannons is a ready-made scenario, dialogue and everything else. I wonder whether O'Neill didn't have that in mind when he wrote it.

As the Theatre Guild put this play on, I did not like it as well as the book, which I read in manuscript form. It is a whale of a story taken from the Greek legends of Electra and what she and her brother Orestes did to old lady Clytemnestra, who herself "bumped off" their father.

The whole story is laid in a village right after our Civil War. There are two murders and two suicides. Between these pastimes there's enough goose-flesh dialogue to freeze the gizzards of a kidnaper.

When screened there will be no hour and a quarter for dinner between acts. It's worth 12 reels with a two-minute intermission. There'll be no walk-outs on this!

Nazimova and Alice Brady walk away with the play. They ought to do the picture, too.

"REUNION IN VIENNA"

"Reunion in Vienna" is gay, robust, sophisticated, popping comedy, by far the best play—next to "The Road to Rome"—Robert E. Sherwood has yet written, and certainly the greatest Guild production of a comedy since its memorable "Volpone."

But, nevertheless, this play of a reunion in Vienna of the fallen Hapsburgs and their entourage with its triangular love-story that involves a Grand Duke, a famous psychoanalyst and his wife would be pretty thin if the two main characters had not fallen into the hands of Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne. Their gorgeous work puts them at the peak of their careers. They romp away with the Comic Spirit Sweepstakes!

Lunt, as Rudolph Maximilian von Hapsburg, back in Vienna disguised as a yodler to join the reunion at an old hotel and also to look up his former mistress, now married to a celebrated Dr. Anton Krug, portrays a Rabelaisian, ego-bloated, ranting, romantically fascinating prince of the blood as it has never been done on the stage before.

You love this erotic brute. He is something new in comic literature. And Lynn Fontanne as the wife (finally conquered by her ex-lover) never looked more beautiful or acted with a rarer understanding.

The two of them stage a love-scene on a couch while three musicians circle around them playing satanically-erotic airs that is the high-point in delirious comedy. The screen producer ought to fight to his last ditch for this delicious bit.

Helen Westley, Minor Watson and Henry Travers added to the gayety of the evening.

Let Lubitsch do it! I wouldn't miss it!

"TRICK FOR TRICK"

I may claim, with all due modesty, that I believe I am fairly well acquainted with all the important plays that have been written from the Greeks to O'Neill, but I cannot recall when playwrights have ever shown such a venomous hatred for doctors. Can Doc. Freud account for this phenomenon? On the screen the doctors are such "nize" fellers!

Here are five current plays in which a doctor turns out to be a murderer: "The Dark Tower," "The Fatal Alibi," "Monkey," "Riddle Me This!" and "Trick for Trick." Gentlemen, this isn't healthy satire. It's just nastiness!

"Trick for Trick," by Vivian Crosby, Shirley Warde and Harry Wagstaff Gribble, is mainly notable for the sleight-of-hand

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS

for February

Box office figures on pictures having regular play-dates during the month of February show in two instances a carry-over from the month of January. But, it is interesting to note, in reversed positions. In January, it was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Emma," starring Marie Dressler, that led the six so-called "champions" selected, with the same producer's "Hell Divers," a thrilling type of melodrama, in second place. Continuing to bestow her favor on both, February decided, however, that "Hell Divers" should enjoy the initial spot. The month also brought into the key-city theatres the distinctive production by United Artists of Sinclair Lewis' novel "Arrowsmith," and it immediately took third place. Fourth place for the month went to RKO Pathe, with "Lady With a Past," while Warner Brothers vigorously rounded out the roster with both the fifth and sixth places, winning them with William Powell's "High Pressure," story of modern salesmanship; and George Arliss' notable contribution to dramatic entertainment as well as to the art of the cinema, "The Man Who Played God."

Besides offering considerable information of value in booking, the "champions" shed some light on public preferences as reflected in titles and types. In general, the six productions chosen by the box office during February are equally divided between heavy drama and comedy-drama. Yet they are to be grouped under drama, rather than comedy, and to this extent seem to bear out the theory that in times like the present the theatre-going public is inclined to seek the more serious outlets for its emotions.

CONGRESS GETS TWO COPYRIGHT MEASURES

Dill and Sirovich Measures Are Introduced; Each Would Amend and Consolidate Present Protective Statutes

Copyright legislation has been brought squarely before Congress, with the introduction of bills, in the Senate by Senator Dill of Washington, and in the House by Congressman Sirovich, of New York, chairman of the patents committee, each of which seeks to amend and consolidate the copyright laws.

The Sirovich bill was introduced following weeks of hearings, during which the Congressman got himself reams of publicty by injecting personal matters, notably his 'plaint against the critics who, he charges, killed his brain child, the "Schemers," a play which never reached maturity.

During the course of the hearings Sirovich practically promised the motion picture industry it would be taken care of in his measure. Whether he has kept his word remains to be seen, for the bill, as introduced, is highly technical and very intricate and an understanding of it is made difficult by reason of his failure to refer to motion pictures anywhere except in the list of copyrightable materials.

The bill places the copyright in the name of the author, for a period of 56 years, and gives the divisible assignment privilege. The remedies of the copyright owner whose work is infringed include injunctions against the infringement and the recovery of "such damages as the owner of the copyright has suffered due to the infringement, and in the determination of such damages the prices currently paid for similar rights in the copyright works of the same or like character shall be considered.

"But where the infringer establishes that he has acted without intent to infringe," the bill provides, "the court shall limit recovery hereunder to an amount which will justly compensate the copyright owner for the use made of the copyright, and in determining the amount of such just compensation, the prices currently paid for similar rights in copyright works of the same or like character shall be considered.

"Where it appears to the satisfaction of the court that just relief cannot be given to the owner of the copyright under subsection (b) thereof, the court shall award statutory damages not in excess of $5,000 nor less than $100."

"It is believed," Congressman Sirovich declared, in discussing his measure, "that the enactment of the proposed act will represent a great step forward in our statute law as to copyright and will relieve authors and composers, as well as the great business enterprises that deal with copyright property, from burdens and difficulties which now exist, and will greatly facilitate the operations of all those industries which function under the copyright law.

"The existing system of copyright law contains many drastic penalties which were no doubt appropriate at the time the last act was passed in 1909, but which under modern conditions have ceased to protect the author and yet serve as an invitation to litigation against well conducted enterprises amounting almost to racketeering."

The main points of the Sirovich bill with respect to length of protection, copyright in the author and separable assignment are carried in the Dill bill. That measure, however, makes specific provision for unauthorized exhibition, providing statutory damages of not more than $10,000 nor less than $50 "for all infringement up to date of suit."

The Dill bill, however, has some provisions which have been lacking in other measures on the same subject, dealing with organizations such as the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. It provides that if two or more persons combine, either directly or by means of an organization to pool copyrights and issue licenses and fix and collect fees, charges or royalties for such licenses, they must file with the Register of Copyright a statement showing the names and addresses of the copyright owners and, if a corporation, the names of its officers, a list of all copyrighted works over which control is exercised and the names of the owners of such works and a statement of all fees, charges or royalties which are collected.

Such combinations of copyright owners may make "fair and reasonable charges" for the rights conferred, but such charges "shall be a fixed amount for a definite period of time." Failure of the copyright owners thus grouped to comply with the provisions of the bill will be a complete defense to any suit for infringement.

The bill provides that all licenses to any class of users operating under practically the same economic conditions and desiring to make a similar use of copyright works shall be without discrimination.

De Casseres Tells Of Broadway Plays

work of the always delightful and nimble James Rennie and Henry O'Neill. There is an ectoplasm also (an ectoplasm is the soul vanishing on rent day). In order to solve this murder mystery these two fellows actually turn a toothpick into a joint resolution and a rabbit into a Mahatma right before your eyes. And that's the way they get the M. D.

It is really, in a way, something new—this solving a murder by sleight-of-hand. It will make a hundred per cent entertainment picture. I'd like to see Harpo and Groucho do the Rennie-O'Neill parts. Kollossal!

"THE BRIDE THE SUN SHINES ON"

Have you ever heard a sudden explosion of laughter in a dead silence, an explosion from 1,800 persons—laughter that is like a thousand manholes blowing up, like a TNT factory going to Kingdom Come, like a terrific thunderclap out of a blue-blue sky?

Well that is what occurred at the second-act curtain of Will Cotton's comedy, "The Bride the Sun Shines On," when the wedding procession begins that is to make Psyche Marbury Mrs. Sattterlee. We had been gently and tickingly amused up to that point, and wondered what was going to happen next. The adorable Dorothy Gish was the Psyche. With her bridesmaids and parents preceding her, she carries a large bunch of lilies in her hand. The procession moves off-stage. She suddenly turns and looks at Hubert Burnet, the man she is not going to marry but with whom she is in love, smashes the lilies over his head and hisses at him "Take that, you goddam fool!"

You must see Dorothy do this to get the whole effect of the tragi-comic situation.

Everything works up to this climax. There isn't much before or after it. If this comedy ever reaches the screen I can conceive of a dozen words that will cover the oath just as effectively.

And in the third act, just after she has been married to the poor, inconsequential "sap" that had been wished on her by her family, she bolts with her first love while her mother, "stewed to the gills" on the wedding champagne, rocks herself sick with laughter when she hears what Psyche has done.

Henry Hull as the fellow who loved her since she was a baby and who gets the bridal lilies smashed over his head because he hadn't the nerve to abduct her at the altar played the part well, but he is still too abrupt and mannered of speech and gesture. Jessie Busley as the mother of Psyche was just grand.

"THE GOOD FAIRY"

Helen Hayes is always a delight either on the stage or screen. Since that night I first heard her in Barrie's "Dear Brutus" she has steadily improved.

Needless to say, in Ferenc Molnar's "The Good Fairy," put on in Gilbert Miller's best style, she is the show. As for Molnar, he has a champagne brain; but when the fizz and bubble of his fancy subside the wine that is left is somewhat flat—unless you gulp it down hurriedly in one swoop and think no more about it.

The story of "The Good Fairy" runs this wise. A girl and a man in a restaurant. The girl pretends she is married. She looks into the telephone book and gives the first name she comes across as the name of her husband. It happens to be an old lawyer about to go bankrupt. The man who wants the girl is rich, and in good old Continental-Molnar fashion offers to make her "husband" rich.

The high comic scene is in the office of the lawyer when the girl and the man blow in on her. She announces herself as his wife and the man as his patron. But, like all fairy stories, it just can't happen, and so it all blows up in the end, and the little girl, in the epilogue, marries a fellow whom you never suspected.

It's somewhat hollow stuff on the stage, but might work out rather cutely on the screen with Helen herself or Janet Gaynor in the part of the "Little Girl with the Good News."

Walter Connolly, an excellent actor, was not at home in the part of an old "hunks" who has been blown up into the Heavens of "mazuma" only to let down into the red—presto!

A PARAMOUNT EXTRA PROFIT SMASH!

Paramount Claims State Is Without Copyright Power

According to a bill of complaint filed on March 14 by Paramount Publix in connection with its suit to enjoin the Wisconsin department of markets and agriculture from holding its proposed hearing on March 22, the department has no power or jurisdiction to make any order, hold any hearing, or take any action in attempted interference with the exercise of copyright or to regulate commerce among the states.

The complaint also charges that marketing statutes regarding the methods of competition and trade practices, denies equal protection of law and violates the "due process of law" section of the national constitution.

Defendants named in the suit are Commissioners Joseph D. Beck and W. F. Renk, R. M. Orchard, assistant attorney general in charge of legal work for the department, and F. A. Staten, department investigator.

The complaint alleges that on February 18 Joseph D. Beck, "purporting to act" under authority of Chapter 99, "caused to be commenced a pretended proceeding" in an attempt to change the terms and conditions under which the corporation operates. Commissioner's action was started on his contention that the contracts imposed by the various distributors constitute a monopoly and that theatres are compelled under their agreements to take certain films whether they want them or not.

The Paramount-Publix complaint points out that its agreement used in Wisconsin is the same as that employed throughout the United States and that a uniform agreement is necessary to insure against discrimination as between dates and conditions and to coordinate exhibition of plays for avoidance of loss. Paramount-Publix, the complaint states, has licensed upwards of 248 photoplays by 219 exhibitors in Wisconsin annually, creating annual obligations of more than $739,346. Arguments in the injunction are scheduled to be heard in Madison March 19.

Fox Wins Verdict In Contract Suit

Fox Film has announced its victory in a breach of contract suit against E. S. and Z. Beam, former operators of the Princess theatre of Shelby, N. C., and the award by a jury of $1,565 damages plus interest and costs. The case was tried in superior court at Charlotte, before Judge Schenk. The decision affirms the validity of the contract in North Carolina.

The Beams had sold their theatre after having presented a Fox film, "In Old Arizona," and two Fox screen entertainments. Following the sale, Fox charges that Beams refused to recognize the validity of the contract. Approximately $2,700 was involved. The defendant invoked the Thacher decision and claimed the entire contract void on that basis.

ROBERT F. SISK

Sisk Made Ad Chief For RKO and Radio

Robert F. Sisk has been engaged by Radio Keith Orpheum Corporation to head the advertising and publicity departments of both RKO theatres and Radio Pictures. Sisk formerly was general press representative for The Theatre Guild, Inc., New York.

The post to be occupied by Sisk is a new one in the RKO organization, and was created through co-ordination of the advertising and publicity departments of the corporation. Theatre advertising and publicity is being handled by E. M. Orowitz, and picture advertising and publicity by Hy Daab. No personnel changes are contemplated by Sisk, who said his duties would be "both supervisory and active."

Sisk, who became active in the new post this week, has handled publicity for more than 50 Theatre Guild plays, including such successes as "Strange Interlude," "Caprice," "The Guardsman," "Mourning Becomes Electra" and "Elizabeth, the Queen." In addition, he directed publicity for all the recent American productions of George Bernard Shaw, the Eugene O'Neill plays and Ed Wynn's "Laugh Parade." Among the Guild stars whose publicity he has directed are such well known players as Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, Nazimova, Alice Brady, Arnold Daly, Dudley Digges, Edwin G. Robinson, Beatrice Lillie, Hope Williams, Claude Rains, Margalo Gillmore and Violet Kemble Cooper.

Sisk, who is only 28 years old, has authored several books and has been New York theatre and motion picture correspondent for the Baltimore Sun for the past nine years.

His association with the Guild has covered the period of the last six years. Prior to that he was with Variety for three years on motion picture reviewing and news assignments, and for the three years preceding that did general reporting, political assignments and was make-up editor for the Baltimore Sun. He was born at Easton, Maryland, March 29, 1903.

Western Electric Net $10,816,387 For Calendar Year

Western Electric Company, Inc., and all subsidiaries, reported net earnings for the year ended December 31, 1931, at $10,816,387, available for dividends, after interest deductions of $4,741,226. The net earnings before interest charges are recorded in the statement just issued at $15,557,613. The net after interest charges is equivalent to 1.75 per share dividends on common stock outstanding during the year, plus a balance of $316,387 carried to surplus.

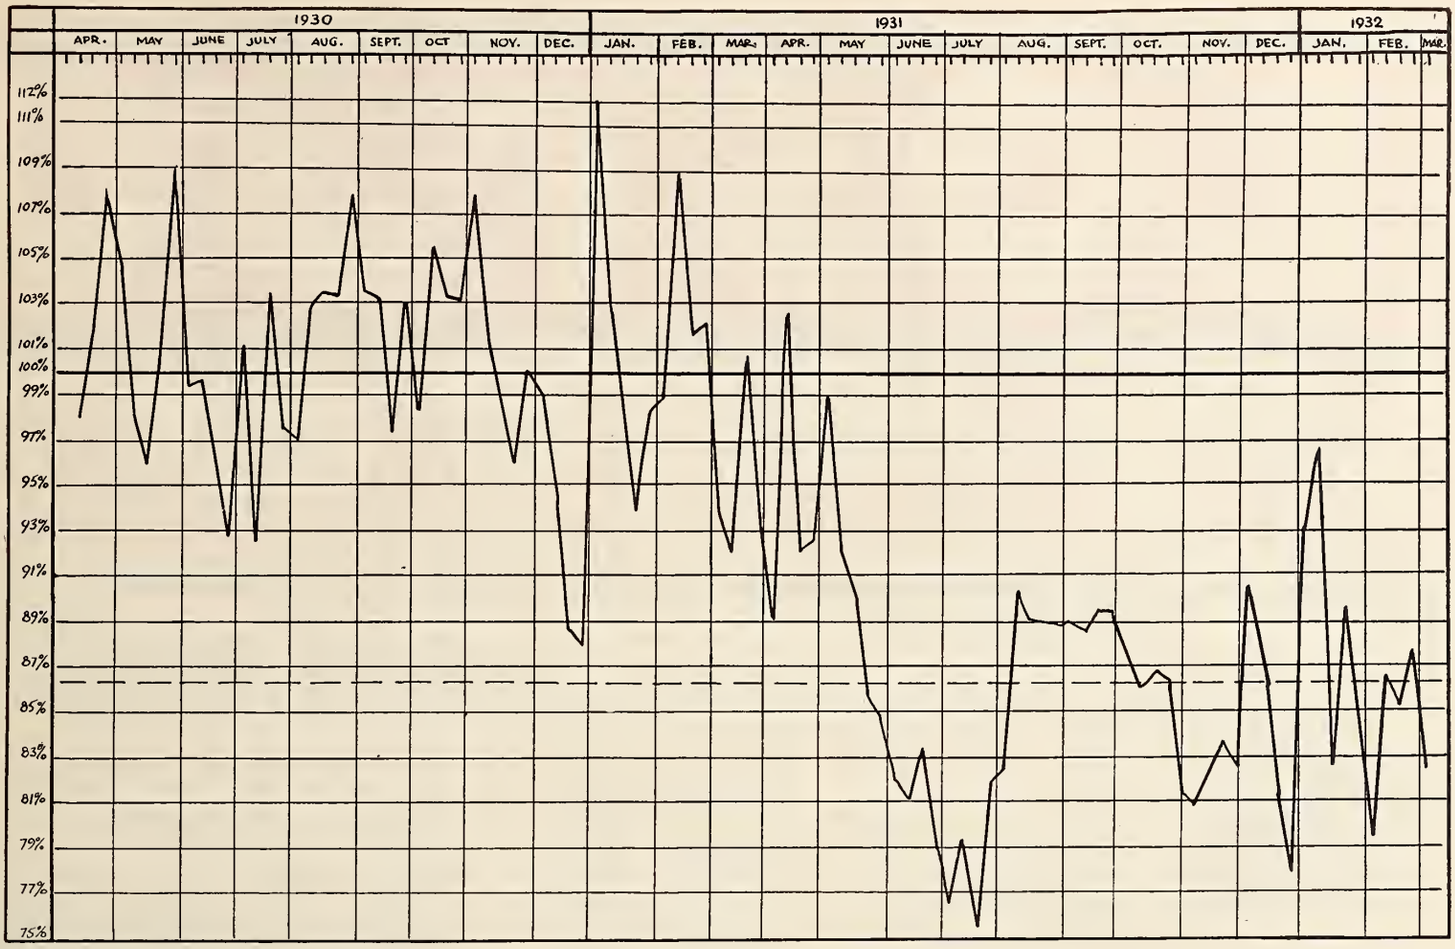
The net profit on sales during the period, according to the statement, reached $9,268,626; other net income is listed at $6,288,987.

Sales for the calendar year 1931 reached $228,955,524, which compares as follows with previous calendar years (thousands omitted):

1930	$361,478	1925	$239,531
1929	410,950	1924	246,944
1928	287,931	1923	198,537
1927	253,724	1922	168,321
1926	263,105	1921	153,411

The net profit rate on sales during the period covered by the report was 4.0 per cent, as compared with 3.4 per cent in 1930. While 1931 sales, states the report, were 36.7 per cent less than in 1930, earnings declined from $20,297,612 to $15,557,613, or 23.4 per cent.

The report, noting that Electrical Research Products, Inc., Western Electric's sound equipment subsidiary, has installed Western Electric apparatus in 8,600 theatres, states: "The market . . . for installations in theatres, is approaching saturation." In the non-theatrical field, the report indicates Erpi's development of the use of sound pictures for religious, educational and industrial work and in sales training and sales stimulation.



Milton Silver Joins Van Beuren Staff

Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of Van Beuren corporation, announced on Wednesday that Milton Silver, formerly director of advertising at Universal, has joined his organization as director of advertising, exploitation and publicity.

Silver has already started preparing a nationwide campaign on Frank Buck's animal picture, "Bring 'em Back Alive," which the company plans to road show. Negotiations are now under way for a theatre in the Times Square district where, according to present plans, the company will give the picture a "de luxe" opening early in May.

Maurice Schwartz Starts Suit

Maurice Schwartz, noted Jewish actor, has announced that he has instituted suit to prevent the re-release of two silent pictures in which he appeared several years ago. The two are "Broken Hearts" and "Yiskor." Schwartz is making "Uncle Moses" from play, for Yiddish Talking Pictures, Inc., in association with Weiss Brothers.

The trend of motion picture box office receipts from April 1, 1930, to March 1, 1932, is shown in the graph, based upon reports from 103 theatres in 16 cities of the United States, from the weekly compilation of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The horizontal continuous black line (100 per cent) shows the average receipts from April 1, 1930, to April 1, 1931. The broken horizontal line represents the average receipts from April 1, 1931, to March 1, 1932.

Paramount Writes Finis to Colorful New York Studio

With the closing of the Paramount Eastern studio last week, another chapter in the colorful history of the New York film plant ended.

In September, 1920, gala ceremonies marked the transfer of Paramount production in New York from the old barn on West 56th Street in Manhattan to the new and modern building in Astoria, Long Island. Since that time, the two huge stages in the studio have echoed to the footsteps of some of the screen's most celebrated actors and actresses. There the late Rudolph Valentino enacted many of his romantic roles. Gloria Swanson won success in the same place. With the advent of talking pictures the studio witnessed the film debut of Maurice Chevalier, the Four Marx Brothers, Tallulah Bankhead, Claudette Colbert and Miriam Hopkins.

Other luminaries of the film and stage who have worked there include Fredric March, Nancy Carroll, Gary Cooper, Richard Arlen, Pauline Frederick, Jeannette MacDonald, Lilyan Tashman, Ina Claire, Lou Holtz, Ed Wynn, Eddie Cantor, Mary Brian, Helen Morgan, Helen Kane, Clara Bow, Stuart Erwin, Walter Huston, William Boyd, Norman Foster, Phillips Holmes, Charlie Ruggles, George Barbier, Effie Shannon, Margalo Gillmore, Ernest Lawford, Clive Brook, Mary Boland, Betty Lawford, Monroe Owsley, Carole Lombard, Jack Oakie, Melvyn Douglas, Edmond Lowe, Irving Pichel, Adolph Menjou, Hugh O'Connell, Pat O'Brien and Herbert Marshall.

"The Smiling Lieutenant," "Animal Crackers," "The Letter," "Laughter," "The Royal Family of Broadway," "Cocoanuts" and "Young Man of Manhattan" are among the talking pictures which were produced there.

The studio was also the scene of Paramount shorts production. Prominent musical comedy stars, vaudeville headliners and orchestras figured in these one and two-reelers. A partial list of the stars who played in these subjects include Rudy Vallee, Ethel Merman, Lester Allen, Tom Howard, Lillian Roth, Johnny Burke, Smith and Dale, Dane and Arthur, Burns and Allen, Mitchell and Durante, Harry Richman, Vincent Lopez, Louis Armstrong, Billy House, Al St. John, Ford Sterling, and George Dewey Washington.

Many celebrities of both national and international note visited the studio during its existence. Last summer the King of Siam spent an afternoon inspecting the studio, sound equipment and cameras in which he is intensely interested.

Rogers Will Make Eight Pictures For Paramount Release

Charles R. Rogers, former Pathe production head, will produce eight pictures for release on Paramount's 1932-33 schedule, by terms of a deal completed with Emanuel Cohen, Paramount distribution chief.

Rogers will work at either Universal City or the idle Pathe studios, and will receive outside financing, Paramount being interested only in physical distribution of his productions.

Southwest Business on the Upgrade, Says Sales Chief

Harry D. Graham, southwest division manager for Universal, sees business in his territory on the upgrade, he indicated following a tour of exchanges under his jurisdiction. Graham is preparing for a regional conference of the branch managers under him, to be held in Kansas City shortly.

Graham attended a meeting of division managers in Chicago last week, in preparation for the regional session. The Kansas City sales branch has recently completed two drives, one national, the other local.

HOLLYWOOD STUNT FLIERS ARE HEROES OF GRIPPING DRAMA

By REGINA CREWE

Those thrilling idiots of the air, the Hollywood stunt fliers, are both fact and fiction heroes of the spine-chilling, heart-stopping drama which packed the Mayfair Theatre from floor to ceiling for its premiere last night.

Dick Grace, the aerial death-taunter of the cinema circus, authored the tale, and apparently he and his pals, Art Gobel, Frank Clark and Leo Nomis set out to do Dick's story justice when it reached the studios. For sheer tempting of Fate, motion picture history records few follies to compare with the mad, screaming plunges with which "The Lost Squadron" fliers leave their spell-bound audience gasping for breath. Crazy youngsters revelling in air stunts and motion pictures—all that remains of romance and adventuring. Leo Nomis never lived to see the picture. He met the Death with which his pals are on such easy and familiar terms. Sooner or later, as they'll tell you, there'll be a reunion of the quartet. Meantime the remaining trio will continue to make pictures like "The Lost Squadron."

'LOST SQUADRON' AT ORPHEUM HUMS

By R. E. H.

Machine guns spitting, bombs destroying a village, airplanes in battle, doing dizzy spirals, nose diving, crashing and burning—and, yet, "The Lost Squadron" isn't a war picture.

This new thriller, which comes into the R-K-O Orpheum today along with a bill of R-K-O vaudeville, is a tale of Hollywood — a vivid, exciting glimpse of a "movie" in the making. It is a story of the daredevil "stunt" flyers who make our sky-fighting pictures, and of a director who sends them up to risk their lives in the hope that the worst may happen and thus give his picture added realism.

NEW YORK SUN

By JOHN S. COHEN JR.

It is photographed superlatively well. There is genuine dynamic quality in its down-to-earth and up-in-the-cloud photography. There is also very excellent atmosphere in the dialogue and the general scheme of the picture.

Richard Dix does exceedingly well as the first of the dead pilots who is born again in Hollywood and who dies again. Joel MacRae shows an incredible improvement over his past performances and Robert Armstrong proves again that he is a first rate actor.

Lost Squadron Is Packed with Many Thrills

Story of Movie Stunt Men Pleases

By MAE TINEE

Screen Critic, Chicago Daily Tribune

Good morning!

Here's a thrill packed movie adapted from a story written by Dick Grace, a movie air "stunt man." The original appeared in Liberty magazine some months back.

"The Lost Squadron" proves unusual and arresting entertainment. It's not a war picture, and yet, of war and war's aftermath it sings.

The acting is splendid, in the main. Richard Dix gives a sincere and moving portrayal of gallant Capt. Gibson and Joel McCrea whose usual histrionic contributions have all the blazing appeal of a lump of cold lard, comes to life and is spontaneous and likeable as Red. Hugh Herbert, as the lowest brow of the three actors—their mechanic, in fact—is believable. Dorothy Jordan is adorable as Woody's sister, with whom both Gibson and Red fall in love.

Mary Astor is, as always, a lovely thing, and, though called upon this trip to impersonate a far from noble woman, she makes you like that woman with all her faults. As for Von Stroheim's Von Furst—B-r-r-r-r WHAT a beast!

The air sequences are breath-taking. Some of the "Buddy" scenes seem a bit thick and sentimental, but probably they're not when you consider what these boys had been through together.

"The Lost Squadron" Rates as a Corking Melodrama

By CHESTER B. BAHN

Cinema Critic, Syracuse Herald

"The Lost Squadron" is a corking melodrama, assured "box-office" and definitely a contender for "Best Ten" honors come next December when The Herald takes the annual fan poll.

A Radio Picture, it is easily that studio's outstanding production since "Cimarron," although critical honesty dictates the qualifying statement that it is lacking in some of the qualities which made Edna Ferber's romance a Hollywood epic.

Fast action, terrific suspense, a full complement of dynamic thrills and tender romance—these are the principal assets of "The Lost Squadron." How potent they are is demonstrated by the fact that up to 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon Keith's had sold 4,500 tickets. The doors had opened at 11:30; the theatre seats 2,514.

Thrills and New Idea in Film

By ROB REEL

Screen Critic, Chicago American

You birds who have been hollering for the movies to do something different, fly right over to the RKO State-Lake tomorrow! They have something different in "The Lost Squadron." It's not only unlike any movie done for yeahs and yeuhs, but it also happens to be grand entertainment.

"The Lost Squadron" is going to make you laugh and thrill and shed a tear or two. For the men and kids, marvelous airplane stuff; for the women-folks, lots of romantic angles (TWO triangles in this one) and the glamor of Hollywood as it is. And for ANYBODY a story that races as fast as its planes.

Dix Dominates This Stunt-Flier Picture; Air Shots Swell and Acting Good

By IRENE THIRER

Hats off to something really new in a celluloid thriller! "The Lost Squadron" starts off in papier mache France, finishes in real Hollywood, and packs a terrific punch all through eight reels worth of dashing action shots.

Richard Dix, starred in "The Lost Squadron," which opened at the Mayfair last night.

Eric von Stroheim and Mary Astor are shown in a scene from "The Lost Squsdron."

Joel McCrea and Dorothy Jordan as they appear in the latest Richard Dix talkie offering.

Robert Armstrong, featured in the new RKO Radio production.

It isn't a war film. And although its air scenes are simply swell, they don't cut out the script which boasts a neat little continuity concerning fliers and friendships, and does not once submit tb the saccharine, even when the occsion might permit it.

The Mayfair's new movie—screen play by the capable Wallace Smith—treats of four aces who find life entirely changed for them when they return to America from France—heroes of the World War.

Gibby—that's Capt. Gibson—learns that his actress sweetheart is having an affair with another man. Red can get his old job back but it means putting an older man out of his. Woody discovers that his partner has swindled him out of a fortune. And Fritz—well, Fritz is willing to tag along with his buddies who decide they'll face things together. They bum it across country to Hollywood, and spot Woody at a movie premiere—all dressed up. They learn he'a now doing stunt flying for Director Von Furst, and that it pays fifty bucks a shot. And the other boys join up for similar jobs.

Gibby's ex-girl friend is now married to this Von Furst, and leading a terrible life. He's cruel and mean. In fact he frames it for Gibby to crash, by putting acid on his plane wires. He doesn't succeed in his ghastly plan, but Woody goes to his death and the buddies avenge him.

Richard Dix neither has the spotlight all the time, nor does he win the leading lady, nor indeed—if you want to know—does he come out of the mess safely. It is Dix's picture, nevertheless, and he's grand in it without being a lens hog.

Joel McCrea, Robert Armstrong and Hugh Herbert share scenes with Dix. They all give dandy performances—especially Armstrong. Eric von Stroheim is a fierce director, via movie character.

Dorothy Jordan and Mary Astor do the girls' roles exceedingly well. Ralph Ince has an effective bit as a police officer. And credit for the actual stunt flying—magnificent, breath-taking, superlative—is to be tendered to Dick Grace, Art Gobel, the late Leo Nomis and Frank Clark.

"The Lost Squadron" is sure-fire entertainment. Our boy friends and their girl friends will certainly enjoy it thoroughly.

The Pay-Off

IN the money. No doubt bout it. Radio's "The Lost Squadron" as everything your box-office picture ould have and plenty more that a lot attractions have missed.

It's melodrama, makes no pretense at eing anything else, has some breath-aking air thrills, heroics by Richard ix and unvarnished villainy by Eric on Stroheim and what always gets udiences: a backstage, inside slant on ow they make pictures in Hollywood.

Von Furst, played by Von Stroheim ith a power and forcefulness that ake most of Hollywood's heavies look ink by comparison.

In all departments, "The Lost Squad-on" is there, right down the line to first class take-off on Von Stroheim layed by Von Stroheim himself. The cting is top-notch while a compara-ively unimportant war-time and, then tudio, mechanic, approaches the mem-rable in Hugh Herbert's hands.

The picture rates noise. If you make lenty, we don't believe you can go rong. Without a plug, it should sidle s way into real grosses. With a boost, looks like the real McCoy.

IF you don't believe one icture carmarked as a clicker can ise spirits into the hot-cha class, a our through the RKO offices yesterday ould have demonstrated otherwise.

Three test runs of "The Lost Squad-on" turned the trick. In Syracuse nd at the RKO Keith, the picture layed to $7,133 over Saturday and unday, or exactly $565 more than "Cimarron," previous two-day record older at that theatre. In Providence, aturday and Sunday turned in $5,977, roudly pointed to by the RKO as a ew all-time peak for the RKO Albee or that period. Then Washington. here the RKO Keith separated the ublic from $5,868 of its dough over he week-end and ended two rush days 3 shy of the house record which, as it appens, is likewise held by "Cim." he elements weren't friendly.

By MORDAUNT HALL.

Unlike its predecessors, "The Lost Squadron," a picture which came to tha Mayfair last night, is a story about aviators which can boast of a rich vein of originality and clever dialogue. It is an excellent melodrama, ably directed, with a background familiar to producers—for it is chiefly concerned with stunt flying before the cameras in Hollywood and a film director is the evil genius. It races along so effectively that it seems short, whereas it is really a production of the average length.

It is a picture endowed with suspense and humor. Wallace Smith is responsible for the adaptation and Herman Manklewicz and Robert Presnell are credited with added dialogue.

The scenes of flying are expertly photographed, particularly tha amash-ups and exploding fuel tanks. There are also some adriotly conceived dissolves, all of which add to the success of this sterling production.

Mr. Dix gives a forceful performance and ha is competently supported by Messrs. McCrea, Armstrong and Hugh Herbert. Dorothy Jordan and Mary Astor do good work in their respective roles

Film Capital Itself Basis of Air Epic

By WILLIAM BOEHNEL.

STUNT flying, picture making, love, hate, conceited directors, ambitious stars sweet ingenues—indeed, all those phases of life which make Hollywood so exciting and fabulous—form the melodramatic basis of "The Lost Squadron," Richard Dix's latest starring vehicle, which came to the Mayfair last night.

Although "The Lost Squadron" is still another chapter in that great and varied saga of movie air exploits, it differs considerably from most of its brethren in that it has a fresh and stimulating melodramatic idea and is a thoroughly enjoyable and entertaining picture.

'Lost Squadron' Stars R. Dix in Air Thriller

By JULIA SHAWELL

The most thrilling air stuff that has ever been photographed for film entertainment may be seen on the screen at the Mayfair Theater, where "The Lost Squadron" had its first New York showing last night. With Richard Dix as the star and a splendid supporting cast, this is an exciting film of post-war flying in the Hollywood sectors. It is unusually well made and finely enacted, a new note in aerial drama for the cinema and should hold its present tenancy at the Mayfair for the next two weeks.

ROSE PELSWICK

Stunt Fliers Given Their Due In Melodrama Depicting Hair-Raising Crackups

By ROSE PELSWICK.

The unsung heroes of the screen—stunt fliers who provide the breath-taking aerial sequences in aviation pictures at fifty dollars a stunt—are finally given their due in "The Lost Squadron," which opened last evening at the Mayfair Theatre. Written by Dick Grace, one of filmdom's ace stunt men, the story boasts a novel and intriguing idea and builds up into thrilling melodrama.

Rose Pelswick,

"The Lost Squadron" is the story of an air picture in the making. Three war-time aviators, finding themselves at loose ends after the armistice, go to Hollywood and become stunt fliers.

Captain Gibson (Richard Dix) has returned from the war only to find that his girl, Follette (Mary Astor), has furthered her theatrical career by cultivating important men. Red (Joel McCrea) realizes that getting his old office job back would mean that an elderly friend of his would be fired. Woody (Robert Armstrong) discovers that while he's been earning medals in France, his partner ran off with his money. So Woody is the first of the trio to find a berth in Hollywood where he's looked after by his sister (Dorothy Jordan), known as The Pest.

Plots Crackup

The jobs they get are in a film being directed by Arthur Von Furst (Eric Von Stroheim). The director, whom Follette has married, learns of his wife's interest in Captain Gibson and decides to get rid of him by applying acid to the control wires of the stunt plane.

The air scenes, which include three hair-raising crackups, are extremely effective. Author Grace, Art Gobel, Frank Clark and the late Leo Nomis are the stunt men who supply the spectacular aerial dramatics. And scenes showing how a flying picture is made lead up to a climax that packs a decided punch.

While Richard Dix is billed as the star and is on hand for a heroic finish, the other parts in the film are almost equally important. Von Stroheim offers one of the most villainous characterizations of the season in the role of the bullying screen director.

When Pete Harrison Raves, It's IN! . . . . . .

(Reprinted from Harrison's Reports)

Excellent. This picture is filled with action and suspense from beginning to end, and is packed with thrills. The thrilling situations are those in which the stunt flying is done. Some of these situations are filled also with deep pathos, as for instance when Robert Armstrong is up in an aeroplane, unaware that the control rope was gradually giving away, and finally falls to his death. But the most pathetic situation is where Dix, in order to save his friend Joel McCrea from a murder charge, takes the body of the murdered man in his aeroplane and then deliberately plunges it to destruction and to his death. There is much human interest in the friendship of the three men and their willingness to risk their lives for each other.

RCA Net Profit for 1931 Is $768,903; Asks Capital Reduction Plan Approval

Radio Corporation of America and subsidiaries, for the year ended December 31, 1931, had a net profit of $768,903, after interest, depreciation, amortization of patents and provision for federal taxes, according to the annual statement issued this week. The gross income is listed as $102,645,419. The net profit compares with $5,526,293 for the previous year.

The consolidated balance sheet, as of December 31, 1931, shows total assets of $177,061,156, comparing with $168,548,068 at the close of 1930, and earned surplus of $11,327,789 against $30,010,538 in 1930. Current assets, including $24,529,866 cash and marketable securities, amounted to $45,425,701 and current liabilities $24,611,626, which compares with current assets of $70,434,678 and current liabilities of $34,080,072, at the close of the preceding year.

The company's gross income declined 25 per cent, which, the company points out, was in a measure compensated by a reduction in controllable operating costs. The charges for depreciation were $7,842,912 in 1931, an increase of $1,210,000 over the depreciation charge for the previous year.

In a letter to stockholders which accompanied the financial report, David Sarnoff, president of RCA, requested consent by the stockholders to a plan, recommended by the board of directors for a reduction of capital. The plan provides for the creation of capital surplus by reducing the stated value of common stock approximately $4.22 to $2 per share. It is further proposed to cancel the treasury stock of the company, consisting of 36,100 shares of class "B" preferred, and 30,060 shares of common. Against the capital surplus of approximately $30,057,400 thus created, it is proposed to charge approximately $21,733,500 for reduction of book values of certain plants and equipment of subsidiaries and other fixed assets, and for reserves for certain investments and contingencies.

The remainder of the capital surplus is to be added to the general reserve, which will then amount to $9,823,900. There is also to be charged against earned surplus an amount of approximately $15,200,800, representing cost of treasury stock retired, write-downs of inventories, and reserves for certain investments and contingencies of the company and its subsidiaries. After these charges earned surplus account will amount to approximately $11,327,800.

Stockholders of the company at the close of 1931 numbered 103,851, an increase from 85,000 at the end of 1930 and from 25,000 in April, 1929.

Consolidated Net Is $1,303,561 for Year Ended Dec. 31

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., and subsidiaries, in a financial report just issued, shows net profit for the year ended December 31, 1931, of $1,303,561.78 after federal taxes and other charges. This compares with a net profit of $2,309,311.30 reported for 1930.

The 1931 net is equivalent to $2 per share on 400,000 shares of preferred stock outstanding and 96 cents per share on 524.973 shares of common outstanding.

With regard to the decrease in earnings, the report to stockholders says: "The decrease . . . is primarily accounted for by a reduction in price for release printing to our large volume customers." During 1931, the report states, the company reduced the goodwill valuation by $1,000,000 and the fixed assets by $906,406.95, charging both items to capital surplus. The subsidiaries included in the financial report are: American Record Corporation, Wyainoa-Elco Publishing Corporation, Combined Photo Industries, Inc., Combined Title Studios, Inc., Cinema Patents Company, Inc., Studio Camera Company, Inc.

The condensed consolidated income and expense statement for the year ended December 31, 1931, follows:

RKO Signs Coast Arbitration Pact

RKO Radio and RKO Pathe Pictures this week signed the production arbitration agreement of the Motion Picture Producers Association, of Hollywood, it was announced by President Hiram S. Brown. In this connection the following statement was issued: "After careful consideration we have signed the arbitration agreement because we believe it is constructive and fair in all respects and it will be a stabilizing factor of great usefulness to all branches of the industry."

BRITISH INVASION MAY BE AIDED BY STUDY OF U. S. SALES METHODS

Producers in England Awaken To More Cordial Attitude and Fewer Top Pictures; Five Executives in New York

By W. H. MOORING, London

The attitude of British film producers towards America as a potential market of great value in the distribution of their product, has undergone a complete change.

Until a few months ago, few if any British production executives had any real faith in their prospects in the American market.

Now things are changing. The attitude of America has probably grown more cordial under the influence of smaller Hollywood schedules, and fewer American pictures of first rank caliber. And British producers are awaking to their opportunities.

Paramount, with an Anglo-American unit operating in England, has probably done more than any other force to reveal to native producers the best and quickest way to make an appeal to America. Walter Morosco was placed in charge of this unit. Every inch an American with a keen grasp of U. S. studio methods, he has so far evolved a policy of Anglo-American reciprocity in production, as to point the way to others. And they have not been slow to follow.

Associated Radio Active

Associated Radio, which hopes to turn out pictures worthy of RKO sponsorship in the U. S., has obtained the services of Roland V. Lee as associate producer with Basil Dean. He will see to it that American angles are properly represented in the British films which ARP produces. Then again, Associated Radio is signing stars with American reputations. Like Paramount, they will play Corinne Griffith in at least one feature. They are to exchange other RKO Hollywood players at times for the same purpose. Now, native British concerns are to do likewise. British and Dominions have arranged for Victor MacLaglen to make one feature for them, and they have already completed a production with Jack Buchanan, established in the U. S. through his work with Paramount and through stage tours, etc. At the present, five leading British executives are in New York for the purpose of checking reactions among American distributors, trying to arrange something definite in the way of future release policy. Very shortly an executive of British and Dominions is expected to make the trip.

What can the U. S. A. teach these executives concerning the selling of their product in America when it is made? It must be acknowledged that one of the cardinal weaknesses in British film operation is an almost entire lack of the showman salesmanship methods which have placed American film product so far ahead of rival output in every part of the world. It is that lesson that the British will need to learn before they can accomplish anything worth while in the States.

A CORRECTION

In the department of "Theatre Receipts" the gross for six days of the German production, "Das Lied Ist Aus," at the Europa theatre in Baltimore was incorrectly stated as $300 in the issue of March 12. Martin Lewis, an executive of Associated Cinemas, Inc., operating the Baltimore Europa, said the actual gross was $1,600, "the greatest total for any German picture played at that house."

Theatre Customer Takes Pen in Hand

Under date of December 9, 1931, the Lyons, Kansas, News printed a letter from "A Mother" who disagreed with the proposal to set up local censorship by some of her townswomen. In her letter "A Mother" said: "I contend that we are not helping our children to learn how to fight the evil in the world by tying a black cloth over their eyes and telling them the evil is not there."

She further blamed mothers for letting their children go to any and all movies without accompanying them and she concluded her letter with this question: "I wonder how many who signed that petition go to the movies often enough to know what is really there?"

Carl E. Milliken, Secretary of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., wrote a letter to the editor of the Lyons News commending the sensible viewpoint expressed by "A Mother" and expressed the wish that there were more logical thinkers of that type in approaching the problem of suiting pictures to all kinds of tastes. This letter was published in the News and it elicited the following reply:

Lyons, Kansas.
March 4, 1932.

Mr. Carl E. Milliken,
New York City.
My dear Mr. Milliken:

A letter written by you to the Lyons Daily News in January, was brought to my notice by being published in the News. I've been wanting to write a letter of appreciation ever since, but have been hindered by unavoidable circumstances.

I am the "Mother" who wrote the letter which was the subject of your comments. I have been very glad to have been able to do something "for the cause," although I must confess I had no such thought in mind. I wrote that letter simply because I was boiling with indignation, and my feelings had to have an outlet. I had no idea that it would ever make me anything but trouble.

I have been a movie fan for a long time. I am deaf, not entirely so, but enough to miss a great many of the good things of life. When I got so that I could not hear a lecture or play or concert, I could still go to the movies and have just as good a time as anybody—better, because that was just about my only pleasure.

Then came the talkies—and I was desolate. My last prop had been knocked from under me. Lately, however, through an instrument called the Sonotone, I am able to enjoy the talkies almost as much as I would with normal hearing. It is wonderful to be able once more to "go to the show" with other folks. Not only that, but other things requiring good hearing.

I am rather a black sheep in my family. Even before I lost my hearing I was compelled to fight for the movies. I have a sister who would think she was lost if she attended a picture show. A sister-in-law who isn't much better. But I've always loved them, the pictures—also the girls! I can go and forget that such a thing as my own troubles are in existence. I go alone. I've never missed a chance to stand up for the movies.

I am a writer, and I analyze the plots, watch for the technical reason for this or that, without for one minute lessening the enjoyment. And I might add, I have never been guilty of using the least little thing that I saw there. But watching the unfolding of the story has a peculiar fascination to one who is all the time studying about the development of a tale that is in her own mind.

The educational features and the newsreels are a liberal education in themselves. I am not contending that all pictures are good. But, as I said in that letter, we see all this rottenness in daily life. Just as well see it at the theatre where it gets its just punishment.

In all my life, I only had to leave once because the picture was so horrible that I couldn't stand it. That was "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." I object strongly to those things being put on the screen. One little child was frightened horribly. Others had come, not knowing just what to expect, and hid their eyes. Just one glance at that horrifying beast of a man, might do incalculable injury. Please fight against a run of such pictures. I have heard that a series of such are being planned, because of the success of the one named, and "Frankenstein."

Again I want to thank you. I'm usually on the wrong side of the fence when some public question comes up, but this time I feel that I am absolutely on the right side.

Yours very truly,
MAY GRIFFEE ROBINSON,

P.S.—I meant to tell you—I have a school teacher in my home. Last night she was correcting papers. She had some essays on Lincoln, that had been written by the children. One small boy ended his thus—"And Lincoln went to the Fox Theatre and got shot."

This letter becomes of special value because so painfully few of the box office customers of the motion picture are really articulate. They all know when they are pleased or displeased, but seldom do they know or say why.—THE EDITOR.

FEATURE AND "STRONG" SHORT AS DOUBLE BILL

Public Shopping, Declares Vincent

Defending production talent and current picture releases, Walter Vincent, head of Wilmer & Vincent, eastern theatre operators, declared that lowered grosses were not the result of poorer pictures but of a shopping discrimination developed in a public with less money to spend on entertainment.

"Pictures equally as good as those which made money several years ago are now flopping at the box office," Vincent said. "Dozens of pictures with which there is nothing seriously wrong from the standpoint of production values could be singled out as box office failures.

"It appears that only the exceptional picture makes money today. The same situation prevailed in our oldtime vaudeville theatres during times of depression. Average vaudeville bills which earned money in normal times were unable to do so at other times. Only all-star programs succeeded in drawing any volume of patronage. The explanation is not that entertainment merits were less then, nor that pictures are worse now than before. It is merely that picture patronage has been reduced because the public has less money to spend. Having less to spend, people shop more carefully for their entertainment. In consequence, it is not unusual to find worthwhile pictures being slighted today in favor of something just a little bit better."

Vincent said he looks for "action of importance to the entire industry" to follow out of the M.P.T.O.A. convention that was held this week at Washington.

Warner and Government Case Postponed Until May Term

Trial has been postponed several times.

Jensen & Von Herberg's in Seattle Meets Competition of Twin Long Feature Programs in Own Way; Plays Up Shorts

Experiments at Jensen and Von Herberg's independent downtown Seattle playhouse indicate that a double bill of film fare can be had without running two features. A "strong" short reel and one feature of average type can be used successfully instead. The experiment brought very satisfactory receipts, it was pointed out, after equal emphasis had been placed on a feature booking and two-reel subject. Captions and display in newspaper and in other forms of advertising were equalized, with no mention made that the two-reeler is of that length.

When the plan was originated, it was a result of inability to get "strong" first-run feature attractions. Accordingly, such shorts as Bing Crosby's "One More Chance" and "I Surrender Dear," and Andy Clyde in "Taxi Troubles" and "Half Holiday" were given equal billing with features which the management considered of "average" merit only. In fact, Crosby's two shorts were billed over the feature in some cases.

No effort was made to give the public any impression other than the fact that they were to see a "strong" comedy in conjunction with the feature. No reference was made to the fact that this was a "double feature" bill. Instead, the theatre played up the comedy angles of the short, and also listed the other short subjects that appeared on the same program.

Patrons of the Liberty at no time expressed disappointment that they were not shown two long features, it was pointed out.

During the last few weeks, "real" double feature bills have been inaugurated elsewhere in Seattle, and even "triple feature" shows have appeared at second-run houses (consisting of a feature, a comedy and a two-reel drama). Since that time, the Liberty has made a slight downward revision in its prices, and also has shown one or two double feature programs, consisting of two full-length features. However, business on these occasions has not been particularly improved over other weeks. Or, perhaps, it would be more correct to say that the programs featuring a full-length feature and a "big" short, with other short subjects in addition, have been just as good for the box office as the bill of two long features with two weak pictures shown together.

The Liberty's policy depends entirely upon the pictures to be shown. If a feature with a strong star or a strong reputation is available, it is featured alone. If the feature is "average," an attempt is made to book and advertise a "strong" short in addition. If the feature is "weak," another weak feature sometimes is shown in conjunction. The middle road, that of a "normal" feature and a "strong" short, was most successful and is holding its own against competition from double-feature houses.

A CORRECTION

Gross intake of the RKO Victory theatre at Providence, R. I., was $4,886 for the week ending March 5, with "Explorers of the World" as the feature picture, according to an executive of Raspin Productions. In the issue of March 12 the gross was incorrectly stated as $3,200 for that week.

Academy Widens Technical Scope

Further investigation of the correlation of exposure lights in various motion picture laboratories will result from current workings of the film processing subcommittee, appointed by the producers-technicians division of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood. The investigation will be based on the tabulation of answers received to the questionnaire which has been circulated among executives of various laboratories and film companies in the past few months.

Already the Academy's recently created Research Council has started to function. Formed to coordinate and supervise the technical and artistic advancement projects of the Academy, the new council has 15 members, representing the art and technique committee, technical bureau, board of directors and producers-technicians committee. Cooperative investigations, experimentation and standardizations with the pooling and distributing of information which is undertaken by the Academy, will be centralized in the hands of the new council.

Jones Club Aids Child Attendance

The Buck Jones club, recently instituted by Columbia in connection with its western series starring Jones, was stressed as an important factor in the development of juvenile attendance, at the company's regional sales meeting at the Park Central Hotel, New York, Saturday, March 12. The same subject will be discussed at a Chicago meeting scheduled for March 19.

The club, started four weeks ago, has a present membership of 300,000, according to the company, and is increasing at the rate of 1,000 members a day. Early lethargy on the part of exhibitors, it is pointed out, was broken down by the result of a test in Monroe, Ga. At the Cherokee theatre there the club received 100 per cent cooperation from the mayor, civic bodies, and particularly parent-teacher associations. Merchants responded with full page cooperative advertising, Columbia indicated.

Town Bans Sunday Films

The board of commissioners of Abington Township, near Philadelphia, has passed an ordinance prohibiting Sunday films and embodying license requirements for all forms of amusement unless exempted by state law as for charitable purposes.

THE BEAST OF THE CITY (MGM)
90 minutes

An outstanding dramatic smash without any question of doubt. Despite its title and lack of strong b. o. names, it will do business wherever real acting and absorbing entertainment brings them out.

The title, while strong in itself, is far from the best. It would appear that showmen must tie in the actual plot of the story so as to make it better understood and more apt to attract the attention it deserves. It's a battle between organized gangsters and the police of any average large city. Walter Huston gives one of the finest screen performances of the year and ought to be played up as large as possible to further enhance his future b. o. strength. Other "salable" names in the cast include Jean Harlow, Jean Hersholt, Tully Marshall and Wallace Ford.

In "audience value" you will find that few pictures are as good. While mostly dramatic in theme, several good comedy situations are worked in where they will do the most good, especially the twin's pancakes in the early part of the picture. But you must understand that here is an intense, dramatic expose of police activity and police politics that is as timely as your morning newspaper and lends itself to unlimited merchandising angles and makes it possible for you to tie in your local police department for a strong campaign.

No doubt the censors will yank portions of it in various communities, so your best information on running time should come from the exchange serving your theatre. It is bound to vary.

It is not advisable for kids, but certainly as timely for a Sunday as a church sermon. So you can spot it where you can open to a whale of a big business because every one who sees it should go out and rave about it. Cash in on such word-of-mouth plugging by keeping your newspaper ad campaign alive throughout the engagement.

You have plenty to work with here, so take full advantage of a picture like this and make it count for heavy receipts. Tie the title in with the cast and the facts about the picture which are best suited for selling purposes in your community. A strong campaign for a strong picture is needed.

THE WISER SEX (Paramount)
74 minutes

Good acting really goes a longer way towards making this a fair program picture than story or direction. Dealing as it does with a combination of good merchandising slants, for example, gangsters, public investigations, murder trials, amateur sleuthing, the exploitation should give it a shove that ought to carry it through to at least normal business.

The title can be taken for a dozen different thoughts—and all of them can be wrong. But it has some real b.o. appeal that can be materially strengthened by plugging it along with the names in the cast and the catch lines that tie it in closely with the plot. For names you have Claudette Colbert and Lilyan Tashman on the feminine side and Melvyn Douglas and William Boyd on the male side of the quartet. That ought to give you enough to go to work on.

"Audience value" and strength are none too strong due to forced characterizations by practically the entire cast. While they perform well, they are obviously trying too hard to fit parts that just won't fit. So it won't send the customers home raving and shouting about it. But a smart showman can sell a picture like this for what it really is and then surround it with a high-grade program of shorts that would satisfy the most particular of patrons.

N. G. for the kids or for Sunday showings, but spotted elsewhere and shoved ahead with a smart campaign it ought to be quite satisfying to your box office. Just go easy on selling misleading ideas in connection with such a picture.

THE PASSIONATE PLUMBER (MGM)
74 minutes

For hilarious comedy plus some unusual slapstick, here is a picture that ought to give the customers plenty of bellylaffs. As for Schnozzola Durante, he almost steals the picture. The screen certainly grabbed a comedy natural when MGM signed up this comedian.

The title contains plenty of b. o. appeal without much else being depended on, but telling them that Jimmy Durante, Buster Keaton and Polly Moran, as well as Irene Purcell, are in the cast, ought to make this one a fairly certain bet for receipts. That it may fall a wee bit short of living up to what your customers may imagine it will be doesn't matter so much because they will feel well compensated by hearty laughter.

"Audience value," as can be judged from what we have just said, is satisfactory enough to warrant your best comedy-line in advertising campaigns. You haven't had many pictures with a plumbing background, so here's your chance to show what you can do to bring in business via this angle.

The plot is a sort of a burlesque on "Her Cardboard Lover," so if you recall that one you can get a general idea of what the characters can get away with in this picture.

The comedy is passable for kids and Sunday showings, especially in the larger communities where they like this sort of stuff over the weekends. But you are fortunate with a picture like this in your selling campaigns because it offers so many splendid opportunities to work on.

Sell that title, Keaton, Durante and Moran, and, above all, the hilarious comedy situations which ought to evoke enough interest to insure a far above average intake for this booking.

HELL'S HOUSE (State Rights)
75 minutes

This is a dramatic story of a reform school and the rather cruel treatment of the boys confined there. It is quite well done and aside from poor photography (which may have been due to the particular print we caught) it measures well up to the standard of the major company product.

The title possesses many selling slants, but it is best to sell it for just what it is. Tie in the title with the reform school angle so that they will immediately know what the title refers to. Added selling slants are, of course, the names in the cast, providing they hold some box office appeal for your marquee. You have Pat O'Brien (of "Front Page" fame), Junior Durkin, who is the actual star of the picture, supported by Junior Coghlan and Bette Davis.

"Audience value" depends on your community's taste for this type of story. At times it is rather morbid and depressing, but it is nevertheless mighty entertaining, too. Performances of the cast are very good, with young Durkin turning in one of the best of his career. It is advisable that you spot plenty of comedy in your surrounding program, especially right after the feature.

Tieup opportunities are very good for welfare organizations, and the like, but since it is a preachment for the benefit of the adults we would rather see it spotted away from the kids. Book it midweek and make your play for adults and not kids.

Compared to many major releases this season, "Hell's House" deserves a place with the best of them. If you can book it, do so by all means; it ought to get you some real returns, providing you get behind it with one of those real selling campaigns that you can engineer with a picture like this.

Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood

(Universal)
Comedy

(Seen in Hollywood)

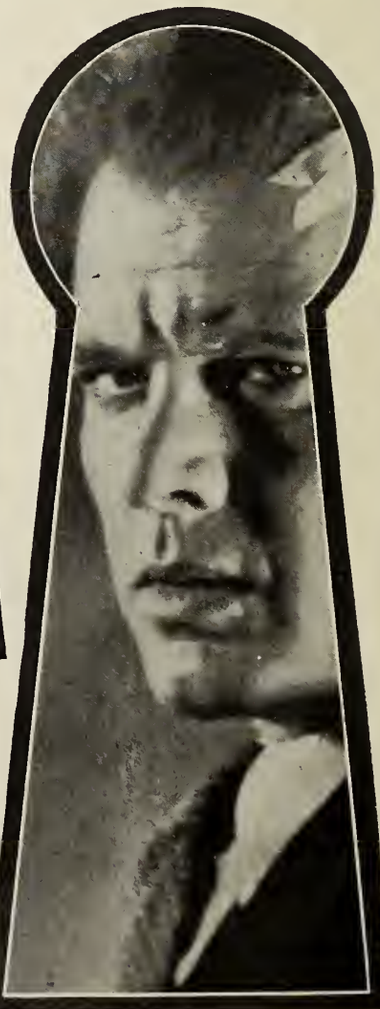
In bringing the Cohens and Kellys to Hollywood, Universal tops everything previously accomplished by the comedy team of Murray and Sidney. It surpasses chiefly by virtue of eliminating the slapstick element and confining it to a more wholesome and substantial level for obtaining laughs through the natural mannerisms and dialogue of the players participating in a smooth running series of situations depicting the true side of life in Hollywood.

In doing this, no attempt is made to ridicule or burlesque the town in which every devout theatre goer is more or less interested, but shows in true fashion what happens to a small town girl who suddenly becomes a picture star and later drops into the discard.

Story is so constructed that in addition to giving a panoramic view of Hollywood life, the inner workings of a motion picture studio are defined with such detail and simplicity that it even includes the origination of the theme song and shows the important part it played in the making of pictures shortly after the advent of talkers. This, like the star from Hillsboro, passes into the discard, making it possible for the romance between June Clyde and Norman Foster to become reconciled in a natural way in the final clinch.

Depiction of the Cocoanut Grove filmed in the actual location of the Ambassador Hotel proves to be a colorful setting for any production and served as a parading ground for many well known screen stars not listed in the cast. These were spotted in the supper room by the radio announcer and introduced in a very effective manner.

As for acting credits, performance of the principal players was thought evenly divided, with the exception of Luis Alberni getting the bulk of applause through his emotional interpretation of the temperamental picture director. George Sidney and Charles Murray, however, dominate the picture through their importance to the story, leaving June Clyde and Norman Foster to handle the romance as a relief to the comedy element.



Emma Dunn and Esther Howard, newcomers in the roles of wives to the Cohen and Kelly combination, adapted themselves to the parts very capably, it was agreed. The rest of the

The Passionate Plumber

(MGM)

Comedy

It was chiefly the nose of Jimmy Durante, and his antics and mannerisms, which kept an audience at the New York Capitol very nearly convulsed on numerous occasions during the showing of the picture which co-features Buster Keaton and Polly Moran.

Having much to do with the enjoyment with which the assembled patrons greeted the antics of the three principals, was the dialogue, prepared by Ralph Spence, and rendered, particularly by Jimmy of the nose, for all it was worth. A good part of the Keaton effort, of course, is registered through the frozen face of the comedian. Polly Moran has rather less to do than either of the other, but handles herself in a manner which on occasion drew laughs from the audience.

The story providing the opportunity for the humorous situations is naturally inconsequential, at the same time serving its purpose adequately. Buster, the plumber, becomes involved in a heavy romance when Irene Purcell, American girl living in Paris, asks the plumber to act as her lover to prevent her from seeing the man she thinks she loves. Polly is her maid, Durante her chauffeur. The man in the case, played by Gilbert Roland, is ardent in his attentions, but rather divided, the remaining third of the triangle being excitedly handled by Mona Maris as the tempestuous Spanish girl who demonstrates her love by throwing anything handy. Her specialty, however, appears to be dishes.

Keaton, with the ready and excited assistance of Durante, succeeds in proving, in a really funny sequence, that Roland is not all that he might be from the standpoint of fidelity. He arranges his appearance with the two girls present. They suddenly appear after Roland has given himself away, and then the fun begins. There is a good bit of slapstick throughout, but it was thought rather well handled. In conclusion, Buster wins his charge.

Highlighting the comedy sequences are the duel between Roland and Keaton, with Durante as Keaton's second; the scenes in the Paris casino, with Keaton pursued by waiters and players; Roland finding Keaton in Miss Purcell's room, and the concluding sequence.

The Stowaway

(Universal)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Universal's "The Stowaway," in cast, photography, backgrounds and general handling of the story showed excellent taste and judgment, it was agreed at a recent showing.

Produced for Universal by Samuel Freedman and directed by Phil Whitman, it is an interesting story of waterfront life and characters, with a number of thrilling episodes taking place at sea on a freighter between Los Angeles and San Francisco. The characters preserve a human, natural quality which makes the story convincing.

Settings, lighting and photography, both interior and exterior, are up to standard. The dialogue is natural. Whitman has handled his cast intelligently, comment indicated, and the players have portrayed their characters sincerely. The story opens in a taxi dance hall, where Fay Wray is having a difficult time in uncouth surroundings. Running away, she hides in the hold of an outbound freighter. Discovered by the second mate, Waycoff, he tries to hide her until they get to San Francisco, after he is convinced she is trying to escape a life of shame. She is discovered by Montague Love, as the hard-boiled first mate, and he tries to take advantage of the shipmate's secret. A terrific fight ensues, and Love is stabbed, but not by the second mate. When they land in San Francisco the real culprit is discovered, and Fay and Leon go over the side in search of a preacher.

So Big

(Warner)

The Ferber Novel

(Seen in Hollywood)

Warner has remade Edna Ferber's "So Big" for the talking screen with Barbara Stanwyck in the virile part of a typical American mother whose simple life epic is the backbone of America's greatness.

It was generally agreed that Warner has given it a fine production in cast, photography, background and direction. The Ferber classic should not disappoint those who enjoyed the silent version, comment indicated.

Plot is not the important thing in "So Big." It is characterization, the revelation of plain folk doing the things they do, saying and thinking the things they think, striving always toward a goal of useful citizenship. It revolves around a mother who struggles to make a farm pay, and whose greatest problem is a son who, dissatisfied with farm life, wants to become a "big business man" in the city. It goes back to the days when farm life was drudgery, but brings it up to the day of the tractor, the radio, the automobile, paved highways and so many other conveniences which have radically altered rural life.

Barbara Stanwyck's portrayal of the mother was considered generally convincing and sympathetic from the first episodes where she is a bride to the later ones wherein she has reached middle life and security. William Wellman has carried the episodic story along with a smoothness and sincere virility which sustained interest even when action was slow. Well received for their characterization in the various episodes, though none but Miss Stanwyck goes clear through, are: Alan Hale, Harry Holman, Blanche Frederici, George Brent, Guy Kibbee, Bette Davis, Dickie Moore, Donald Cook, Arthur Stone, Robert Warwick, Mae Madison, Dick Winslow and Earle Foxe. Dick Winslow and George Brent, playing the same character as a boy and later as a successful man, were particularly well received as a team.

The audience at the Forum received "So Big" with close interest and roundly applauded it at the finish.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by William Wellman. Screen play by J. Grubb Alexander and Robert Lord, from Edna Ferber's novel. Photography by Sid Hickox. Release date, April 30, 1932. Running time, 82 minutes.

The Missing Rembrandt

(Twickenham Films)

Conan Doyle Detective Story

(Seen in London)

Here is Twickenham's successor to "The Fatal Hour," with Arthur Wontner again superb as the master sleuth, Sherlock Holmes.

The story, which is as full of impossible wonders as most detective stories of the Conan Doyle repertoire, concerns a missing Rembrandt stolen from the Louvre and tracked (through many adventurous days) by Sherlock Holmes. There is a little of the underworld, a little of the lordly luxury in higher criminal circles, a little blackmail, a little murder and a lot of miraculous conjecture on the part of the chief character. The end is, of course, the restoration of the art piece and the complete break-up of the criminal organization which had stolen it.

Wontner is probably a better Holmes than he was in "Fatal Hour;" he certainly has a better (though the same) Doctor Watson, and the other players are sound, too. If "Fatal Hour" got by the American public this one can, only more so, and recollections are that the first named did a smash at the Warner theatre in New York, although it had been sold at a high figure by its English producers, just in order to try it out in the United States. Warners distributed in Britain, but would not take the American distribution.

Strictly Business

(Best International Pictures)

Comedy

Jacqueline Logan, one-time appealing actress of the American screen, offers here the result of her first directorial effort in England. At the Elstree studios of British International Pictures near London, Miss Logan produced this light comedy of the American brusqueness in not too serious conflict with the traditional English manners.

The film runs rather under the conventional feature length, requiring only some 35 minutes, but the dialogue is clever, the cast competent,

"KNEES are beginning to quiver . . ."

but NOT for the PARAMOUNT exhibitor!

The Pay-Off

KNEES are beginning to quiver with the warm weather not so far off. Summer grosses rarely are good grosses even in these days when de luxe operations are refrigerated. They get worse when distributors park real attractions on a siding awaiting the arrival of Labor Day and the accepted introduction of the fall season.

There may be some yelling over the statement that big shows are not released during the torrid months. Exceptions there may be, but they never amount to many if you compare them with the hold-outs. Distributors, in their bookkeeping, give each year its full quota of fifty-two weeks. In actual operation, they usually count July and August out of the running as two months when there is no business, then gear their releases accordingly.

THIS summer is going to be tough. Why substitute fancy for facts? But it stands less chance of being tough if producers grab opportunity by the forelock by thinking about the summer now while there is still a chance to plan an onslaught of real attractions against boiling temperatures.

Bankhead "Thunder Below"—to name a few! • And that's the kind of extra profit product they'll continue to get this spring and right through the summer! Top money pictures that make showmen who've booked them think every week is a record breaker, no matter what the weather! • Why substitute fancy for facts? Paramount has already grabbed opportunity by the forelock! And it's your opportunity too, Mr. Exhibitor!

making for an entire disregard of the slight length of the picture

Miss Logan herself wrote the screen play of "Strictly Business," which concerns the manner in which Betty Amann of the all-English cast, as the daughter of a typical American business man, played by Percy Parsons, almost wrecks the romance of Carl Harbord and Molly Lamont. Miss Lamont, incidentally, is noted by Miss Logan as her protege.

Parsons comes to London to conclude a business deal with C. M. Hallard, typically English business man of sterling character and steeped in tradition to his neat white hair. The scene gives opportunity for more than a little play upon the difference between American aggression in business and English tranquility. When Parsons expresses doubt about leaving his daughter in London during his trip to Manchester, Hallard suggests his son, Harbord, as a possible companion. Hallard unwillingly agrees to perform the service, but has fears for his romance with Miss Lamont. Miss Amann is warned by her father not to get into difficulties while he is away, and she proceeds to don horned glasses and clothes which make her look like an old maid school teacher on vacation. Her actions are in accordance.

Between his charge and his fiancee Harbord is led a merry chase. Finally, she changes to her normal appearance, which is decidedly attractive, and permits herself to be spirited away by a man who means no good. Harbord overhears and follows. He finally finds her, but not until her father discovers she has not been in and goes on the warpath. Miss Lamont finds the facts and, with Miss Amann, succeeds in appeasing her father, saving Harbord's job and arranging the marriage of the engaged pair.

A small projection group gave evidence of having enjoyed the light comedy. Interesting and excellently photographed shots of London and its sights are incorporated.

Sin's Pay Day

(Mayfair)

Drama

A melodrama of the city, revolving about the activities of a criminal lawyer whose defense of gangsters causes him to lose his wife, and who learns by a hard lesson that the honestly earned dollar is the right one, is presented by Mayfair, formerly called Allied Pictures.

Dorothy Revier, wife of Forrest Stanley, gives her husband the choice of giving up his crooked clients, or losing her. He, unable to give up the work which brings him his wealth, refuses, and his wife, leaving, takes up welfare work with an old friend, Alfred Cross, at his slum clinic. Stanley, who has just brought about the acquittal of Harry Semels, gang leader, partakes heavily of Semels' stock after his wife leaves, and loses his position, home and clients.

Wandering the streets, no more than a tramp, he sees Miss Revier when he goes to the clinic for a "hand out," but escapes without being seen. Mickey McGuire, appealing youngster, follows him to the street, takes him to the poor room he shares with his father, and the two become fast friends, with Stanley on the way to recovery of his self-respect. The lad is killed by gangster bullets and Stanley asks the district attorney that he be appointed special prosecutor, in order to obtain the conviction of Semels, whom he knows guilty of the murder.

Presenting himself as criminal lawyer again, Stanley obtains evidence from Semels himself. At the trial, Stanley seems about to lose his case when he reproduces a record of the conversation which he had held with Semels and the courtroom hears the gangster convict himself. A reconciliation between Stanley and his wife follows to complete a film thought entertaining, though rather highly melodramatic. The cast, it was generally agreed, performed creditably.

Cannonball Express

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Railroad Melodrama

George W. Weeks here presents an active melodrama of that excellent action medium, the railroad. Tom Moore, expert and old-timer among engineers, has visions of his two sons following in his footsteps behind the throttle of a locomotive. The sons, played by Rex Lease and Leon Waycoff, do not share his desire, particularly Waycoff.

Moore is promoted to the crack Cannonball Express, after the underhand tactics of Waycoff have turned Moore from Lease and to the other son. An accident, caused by neglect of duty on the part of Waycoff, is blamed upon Lease, who shoulders the culpability and is reduced to the menial post of section foreman. Waycoff becomes involved with certain crooks who plan a holdup of the express. The crime is carried through and Lease, on the line, comes upon the scene to find his father badly hurt. Another flyer is known to be racing toward the spot, and Lease undertakes to bring the train in safely. Of course he succeeds, running his train on a siding just as the other thunders by.

Lucille Browne, sweetheart of Waycoff, who has been usurped, so to speak, by Lease, overhears Waycoff dickering with the crooks for a split on the loot of the holdup. Waycoff is shot during the resulting argument, and Lease, drawn to the room with the girl by the sound of the shot, is arrested as the murderer of his brother. Lease tries to clear his brother's name, but Waycoff's dying confession reveals the truth and establishes the innocence of Lease. Moore of course recovers, and the two younger players are married. Ruth Renick was thought to have handled the role of the mother capably.

The Wiser Sex

(Paramount)

Drama

Claudette Colbert, most attractive, distinctly brunette, here takes upon herself the part of detective in an effort to save her intended husband, Melvyn Douglas, from a murder conviction when he, gang-clearing crusader, is framed by the objects of his prosecution.

An audience at the New York Paramount seemed but fairly entertained by the effort, with general opinion holding that there was little unusual about the story, little that is striking about the handling of it.

Miss Colbert refuses to marry Douglas at once, on the ground that his work will leave him very little time for his wife. She goes off to Europe, accompanied by her mother, Effie Shannon, and her wealthy admirer, Ross Alexander. Several attempts are made on the life of Douglas, by the gang, led by William Boyd. The prosecutor's cousin, Franchot Tone, becomes involved with Lilyan Tashman, "property of Boyd," and who previously knew Douglas. The boy goes to her apartment, finds Boyd, wounds him, and is himself killed. Douglas arrives in pursuit and is framed as the murderer of his cousin.

Miss Colbert returns to stand by, transforms herself into a woman of leisure, and takes an apartment next to that occupied by Miss Tashman. Alexander acts as her friend. Miss Colbert makes much of an acquaintance she strikes up with Boyd, but he discovers her identity and sends her "for a ride" with his chauffeur, Douglas Dumbrille. Detectives walk in, Boyd tries to escape but is killed and Miss Tashman makes a complete confession, clearing Douglas. He and Miss Colbert furnish the concluding sequence in the expected fashion.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Berthold Viertel. Based on the play, "Her Confession," by Clyde Fitch. Screen play by Herry Hervey and Caroline Francke. Photographed by George Folsey. Release date, March 18, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

SHORTS

Newsreel Scoops

(Sobol)

Novel, Interesting

The first in a new series of one-reel shorts which Louis Sobol, columnist of the New York Evening Journal, is making under an agreement with William Roland. Mike Simmons is the author of the scripts. No national distribution arrangement has been concluded as yet. The reel is interesting and novel, with Sobol, announcing, recording intimate pictures in the news of people yesterday and today. Pictured are Evelyn Nesbit and Harry K. Thaw, at the time of the Stanford White murder case, and today; a group of Broadway chorus girls, off for their initial nation-wide tour; others of another day shown in their present status, and similar subjects. The dialogue, delivered in rapid style, holds the attention, but it is just possible that the subject matter may be of greater interest to metropolitan audiences than those in smaller communities.—Running time, 9 minutes.

His Honor, Penrod

(Vitaphone)

Appealing

A group of youngsters is always appealing, this one no less so. Billy Hayes and Dave Gorcey play Penrod and Sam, Booth Tarkington's beloved and lively "kids." Penrod's father is running for mayor, and the gang, including Herman and Vermin (of color), get their heads together. Vermin is locked in the desk of the rival's office, and succeeds in obtaining evidence of crooked dealing in the form of a letter. The rival withdraws and "dad" is certain of election. Likeable youngsters performing in a likeable way.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Taxi Tangle

(Paramount)

Fair Comedy

A flirtation which comes to life in a traffic tieup on New York's Fifth Avenue, makes rather an unusual idea behind this short subject with Jack Benny in the lead. A few laughs are spotted through, but on the whole the comedy cannot be rated more than fair.—Running time, 10 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 182 theatres in 30 key cities for the calendar week ended March 12, 1932, reached a total gross of $2,170,572, a decrease of $140,833 from the previous calendar week, ended March 5, when the gross total was $2,311,405 from 181 theatres in 30 cities. One new high individual house record was established during the more recent seven-day period, at the Keith-Boston in that city, with "Three Wise Girls." During the same period eight new low individual figures were recorded. This compares with the preceding week, when two new "highs" and 12 new "lows" were noted.

SMASH TWIN OPENING

at the New York PARAMOUNT and Brooklyn PARAMOUNT Theatres on April first. A top-notch picture for top-notch houses! All set to do the biggest business in the metropolitan area. You know the Stanwyck of the past—you know how she draws—but you've never seen this Stanwyck before—a NEW Stanwyck—transcending every triumph of the past—reaching a new peak in emotional grandeur—turning a talent into masterly genius until her mere shadow on the screen takes on the quality of Life itself. Living through one of those rare stories wherein every range of human emotion is measured and every sensation plumbed. Such a happy combination of star and story can mean only one thing—a SUPERB picture and Stanwyck's emotional masterpiece!

It's the formula for BOXOFFICE!

A message to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America

A most important announcement was delivered at the Allied States Convention in Detroit, and the M. P. T. O. A Convention in Washington by the Photophone Division of the RCA Victor Company.

It was at the same time the most important announcement exhibitors have heard since sound became the screen's most dominating factor.

Cut to the bone and right down to the solid facts, it is herewith transmitted to motion picture theatre owners of America, large and small, from the largest circuit to the individual exhibitor.

Before one or the other contemplates the installation or replacement of sound reproducing equipment, investigation of the following information is respectfully suggested:

The Photophone Division of the RCA Victor Company announces

The introduction of two new all AC operated sound reproducing equipments, the Standard Super, designed for theatres from 2,500 to 4,000 seating capacity at $5,000 and Standard Large, for theatres between 1,400 and 2,500 seating capacity at $3,750.

Reduction in the price of the Special Size equipment from $1,600 to $1,450.

Other material reductions including contract service charges, all made possible by the recent merger of the RCA Photophone Co. with RCA Victor Co., Inc. Increases in capacity limitations of all A C operated Special Size equipment from 500 to 600 seats and all AC operated Standard Small Size equipment from 1,200 to 1,400 seats.

Gentlemen:-

The writer wishes to compliment your organization because of your enterprise in placing a copy of last Monday's "Motion Picture Daily" in the hands of each person in attendance at our Convention at New Orleans.

It was indeed a pleasure for each one to be able in this manner to keep in touch with the news of the Film Industry while away and to read the personal news items concerning our Convention as published in New York the day previous.

This is only another evidence of the speed with which your live-wire organization handles the news.

Very truly yours,

CHICAGO

The big movement to put Chicago back on a single feature basis got under way last week when ten west side houses went on the single bill policy. Five more were scheduled to follow a week later.

Joseph L. Stein, western division manager of the Copyright Protection Bureau, is back in Chicago making his headquarters at the Film Board of Trade offices following a conference in New York with Gabriel L. Hess and a trip to Washington with Hess and G. J. Levine in connection with the Sirovich committee on the copyright bill.

Jack Miller, head of the Exhibitors' Association, attended the MPTOA convention in Washington.

A number of local houses, among them, it is reported, the Sheridan, Jackson Park and Terminal, are now giving away automobiles on certain nights each week.

The Chicago contingent returned intact from the Allied national convention at Detroit—and apparently in the best of spirits.

The La Salle, sole surviving silent house in the Loop, is making preparations for the installation of complete Motiograph sound equipment.

Walter Branson, RKO Pathe branch manager, made a trip to New York to confer with home office officials.

A midnight trade showing of James Cagney's new picture, "The Crowd Roars," will be held at United Artists theatre March 31.

HOLQUIST

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE most significant reaction of the public to its motion picture entertainment has taken place within the past year in the astonishing growth of combined club groups and Better Film Councils, organized for concerted effort in behalf of better pictures. Two years ago, while there were many smaller clubs working in their community with motion picture committees, few of these had reached out to join hands with other organizations for increased power in their field and, conversely, for bigger audiences for their theatre men. From an unimportant small total, the number of Film Councils has sprung to the imposing number of fifteen hundred. Each week's mails and newspaper clippings bring accounts of new organizations made up of many smaller units, all preparing to exert a wider influence on audience reaction to better pictures in their city or state. Within the past month this important community activity has expressed itself in the formation of Better Film Councils in the following places:

Fortuna, Cal.
Lindsay, Cal.
Boise, Idaho
Paris, Ill.
Waukegan, Ill.
Michigan City, Ind.
Nevada, Iowa
Norton, Kansas
New Orleans, La.
Nutley, N. J.
Elmira, N. Y.
Massena, N. Y.
Providence, R. I.
Nyack, N. Y.
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
Staten Island, N. Y.
Hamilton, Ohio
Toledo, Ohio
Wooster, Ohio
Durant, Okla.
Salem, Ore.
Sheridan, Ore.
Columbia, S. C.
Victoria, B. C.
New Rochelle, N. Y.

Influence in Rhode Island

The Better Films Council of Rhode Island, Mrs. George C. Harrison chairman, pursuing its policy of endorsing fine pictures, isssued a bulletin approving every picture showing in Providence during one week of March.

The pictures and comments are:

"ARROWSMITH." Outstanding entertainment for the discriminating playgoer. Adults and older adolescents.

"SHANGHAI EXPRESS." Brilliantly produced and superbly photographed, swift, tumultuous and unusual in its settings. Adults.

"THE EXPERT." A very lovable and charming picture. Very Good. Family.

"TAXI." Adults and older adolescents.

"GRAFT." Villains are defeated and virtue transcends. Adults and older adolescents.

"FINAL EDITION." Sustained interest. Good entertainment. Adults.

"A WOMAN COMMANDS." Interesting. Adults.

"POCATELLO KID." A fast moving, enjoyable Western. Family.

Weekly bulletins of the Council are regularly posted in 25 churches, 16 libraries, and in more than 500 other places, including clubhouses and headquarters of the following 16 organizations, which belong to the Better Films Council of Rhode Island and subscribe to the judgments listed above: State Federation of Women's Clubs; Congress of Parents and Teachers; Council of Women; Federation of Women's Church Societies; Christian Temperance Union; Daughters of the American Revolution; Branch International Sunshine Association; Association of University Women; Federation of Music Clubs; Girl Scouts; Library Association; Catholic Alumnae; Homemakers, Inc.; National Council of Jewish Women, Rhode Island Section; Council of Italian Women; National Council of Catholic Women, Providence Diocese.

The Motion Picture chairman in Rhode Island of each of these sixteen organizations is active, Mrs. Harrison reports, in support of pictures that fulfill the Council's requirements.

Texas Sends a Report

There is excellent organization and activity among the motion picture groups in Texas. The state chairman, Mrs. J. C. A. Guest, sends us a copy of her state report read at their recent convention. She said:

"We shall endeavor to convey to each member of the Federated Clubs the importance of reading reports on pictures that are being distributed and produced, among them the previews by Mrs. Thomas G. Winter and the pamphlets and lists of Rita C. McGoldrick, the literature of the Library Club of Cleveland, and the Y. M. C. A. This circularization shall be accomplished through district chairmen.

"We urge every club in the state to sponsor at least one endorsed motion picture program during the year.

"We request every local chairman to see that newspapers reprint our motion picture previews.

"We shall endeavor to get all information on these activities to our Texas legislators recommending that a speaker in behalf of motion pictures be placed on the program of our state meetings.

"We ask permission from this meeting to print every month in our Federated News an article from an outstanding man or woman in this state on motion pictures.

"We should like to see this Board offer resolutions to the producers and to Mrs. Winter commending all that has been done toward the making of better films, but also condemning the vulgar, suggestive, sex relation pictures that are so prevalent at this time.

"The producers are storekeepers selling us a commodity—that commodity is our entertainment. If we require higher class material they will restock their shelves with goods of the same quality."

Macon's Consistent Performance

The Macon Better Films Committee, among the very first in the field in a city-wide activity in support of the best things of the screen, has not faltered over the years in its sustained and intelligent efforts. The chairman, Mrs. Piercy Chestney, broadcasting the message of the committee over WMAZ every Monday, is reaching an appreciative and wide audience in Macon and surrounding territory. In her talks for this month she has emphasized the exceptional pictures shown on local screens during March. These, announced with helpful reviews, are: "Broken Lullaby," Paramount; "Hell Divers," M-G-M; "The Man Who Played God," Warner Brothers; "Ben Hur," M-G-M; "Disraeli," Warner Brothers. Added to these, she has made brief comment on the outstanding shorts and on an elaborate Mother Goose pageant to be the feature of the children's matinees on March 19. The program, planned especially for little children, will include: "The Alphabetical Zoo," "Mother Goose Rhymes," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and a Gang Comedy.

In summing up, the chairman announces: "Go to see each of these exceptional pictures and be grateful for the heights to which motion pictures have climbed!"

Mrs. Ambrose N. Diehl, national chairman of motion pictures of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has accomplished a "scoop" in establishing a regular monthly service on better pictures with The Ladies Home Journal. These, printed in the name of the clubwomen, will appear each month beginning with the April issue, the advance sheet of which, sent to this department, marks an outstanding accomplishment in publicity for highgrade productions. The pictures featured in the first issue are: "Charlie Chan's Chance," Fox; "City Sentinels," M-G-M; "Dance Team," Fox; "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Paramount; "Der Andere" (The Other Man), Tobis; "Emma," M-G-M; "Hell Divers," M-G-M; "The Hatchet Man," Warner; "Ladies of the Jury," RKO Pathe; "Law and Order," Universal; "Broken Lullaby," Paramount; "Michael and Mary," Universal; "Puss in Boots," Picture Classics, Inc.; "This Reckless Age," Paramount; "Secrets of the Orient," Ufa; "Lovers Courageous," M-G-M; "The Man Who Played God," Warner Brothers; "The Expert," Warner Brothers. Short subjects: Boy Scout Series; Burton Holmes Travelogues; Grantland Rice Sportlights, RKO Pathe; Magic Carpet of Movietone, Fox; Mickey Mouse, Columbia; "Play Ball With Babe Ruth," Universal; "Silly Symphony," Columbia; Vagabond Adventures, Pathe.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

IT'S IN THE BAG, BOYS!

THERE is one consolation to this job, if your mind goes on a vacation and you can't think of what to write about you just dig into the mail bag and presto; here's what you unearth:

Hurrah for Jack Jackson; his letters always contain enclosures that are good for one or more special Club stories. Wait 'til you read the one on art shop economy. And his latest, which will make its appearance shortly, gives some excellent dope on digging up more business.

Ben Katz of Milwaukee suddenly remembered that he had been neglecting us so his latest letter contained some grand merchandising ideas plus a couple of photos to prove that he is doing things a wee bit better than a lot of his brother showmen. Incidentally, Ben ought to be ripe for a special yarn about show-selling. We don't know of anybody better able to write one.

Wallace Nordby of Indiana, Pa., binds all Club pages together in folders every month and then pastes an index on the cover of the pages covering that period. A veritable library of solid gold ideas we call that. And many other smart showmen are following this idea regularly.

Charlie Carroll is playing doctor to "sick" theatres these days and with his experience in handling the tough ones we know that the patient will soon show much livelier signs of life. "Back in harness" is what Charlie calls it, "a grand break for us," we calls it.

Bernard Edmundson of Asbury Park, N. J., doped out an idea for a mailing card and a throwaway that is both effective and economical. Accomplishing but one of those feats is something to boast of these days, but doing both at one and the same time calls for a vote of thanks to this smart manager.

Lee L. Goldberg, zone managing for Warner Bros. in Kentucky, finds our sample programs and house organs very useful. Just to prove that the Club service covers a wide radius. Anybody else want something?

Tommy Phelan of Long Branch, N. J., always seems to be doing something. We sometimes wonder whether he will ever run out of ideas. What a crazy thought that is. He can't run out of ideas; he reads the Club pages. (Pardon our blushes.)

Floyd Bell of Publix Publicity in Boston seems to be heading a particularly happy family of show-sellers in and around the Hub. Some other guys ought to develop Floyd's knack of working in harmony with a large group. His activities prove that plenty of smart showmanship is being used.

Russ Stewart has finally drifted as far south as Baltimore and is kept on the jump promoting newspaper space for the local follies in that town. Russ is acquiring an education in practical publicity that ought to stand him in good stead in the future. And he realizes it, too.

Frank Boucher must have more than the proverbial "it" when it comes to putting over a theatre. Boss Payette knows a good man when he sees one and we're all for agreeing when it comes to Frank and men of his calibre. We get a big kick out of Frank's snappy stuff too; maybe it's because we've had to play nurse to houses like his ourself.

Anna Bell Ward (and what a show-woman) redeemed herself in our eyes by coming through with a grand display of cutout figures for MGM's "Freaks." Many's the time the Club pages featured her outstanding displays. And can they bring business? Sorry we missed you on your visit.

Monty MacLevy of Randforce in Brooklyn, N. Y., is passing along some great show-selling tips to the managers throughout that circuit besides looking after five houses in his own little division. Quite a man-sized job that. But Monty's no midget.

Frank B. Hill and every one of the boys on Junior Mercy's Circuit out in the Northwest seem to be charged with high-powered electricity ever since they broke away from national circuit affiliations. Once more we can see where Junior and his managers will be featured in the Club section through their various activities.

Looks like we may promote another cartoonist for our pages in the person of Louis Sylvester of Perth Amboy. His first contribution shows great possibilities and we're gonna nurse him along until we get a good series out of him.

Evans B. Davis is the personification of that expression, "You can't keep a good man down." Many others would turn up their noses at a spot like Dolgeville, N. Y., but not Evans. He tackled it and, what's more, got to like it. Result: much active show-selling going on and business holding up fairly well despite existing conditions.

Gene Wilson of Marshalltown, Iowa, decided that a picture like "Shanghai Express" was worthy of something really different in merchandising, and what he finally accomplished in his campaign will be the subject for another Club story in an early issue. Tell us more, Gene.

Having reached a point where I've used up most of my weekly space, I can now sit back and try to think up something else for next week's issue. And if that's too tough a job, just remember that the mail bag is still filled to overflowing with much to talk about in this column. So what?

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

The moral of THIS cartoon is: Bosses should never start growling until they know what they're growling about. Otherwise they must take chances on barking up the wrong tree. If they get the horse-laugh, it's their own fault.

McCUAN IS PLUGGING ALONG AS USUAL OUT MISSOURI SHOW TOWN

Activities of Round Tabler L. W. McCuan, manager of the Cameo Theatre, Mountain Grove, Mo., while not dealing with immediate show-selling, indicate that he is still pounding home arguments in favor of his theatre.

For instance, he keeps up with all new pupils who enroll in a school they've got out his way by sending them a personal letter of welcome to the town with a guest ticket enclosed. This ought to be a good gag to remember when new terms are getting under way and particularly adapted to schools catering to out-of-town students.

Keeping in mind the thought that many fans like to collect photos of various movie stars, he arranged with one of the many firms who get out autographed reproductions of fan photos and then tied up with a few local firms for ads on the reverse side to cover the entire cost, of course reserving space for current and coming attractions at the theatre.

We also note that his '32 monthly calendar is arranged not only on a costless basis but the small boxes containing dates give the attraction a great break. The numerals for dates are imprinted in red, taking little space and yet very legible to the eye. Space at the bottom of card is reserved for four small ads. The accompanying cut will show you how it was arranged.

All of which we believe will be interesting to McCuan's fellow Club members and for that reason we're passing it along. What has been doing in the meantime out your way, Mack? Shoot along some information on recent events.

"MILT" WIGHT SENDS CORKING IDEA TO USE IN PAPERLESS TOWN

Publicity given by this department from time to time on the adaptability of the mimeograph to theatre advertising does not necessarily mean that we are conducting a campaign against the legitimate printing business, but every now and then, as in the case which we propose to tell you about, some one pops up with another excellent stunt in which this stepchild of printer's art plays the leading role. This time it's C. M. "Milt" Wight, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Pasco, Wash., who eagerly seized upon and is turning to profit a new and novel local publishing enterprise.

Pasco and its neighboring town, Kennewick, can be classed among communities which boast a weekly newspaper or none at all, or as in some instances, where entire dependence has to be placed on a paper published considerable distance away. Hence, any immediate publicity for theatre or merchant must perforce be circulated through the medium of heralds, handbills or some other printed form, or wait until the newspaper is issued.

A newcomer invaded Pasco, sized up the situation, and conceived the idea of publishing a three-column mimeographed tabloid consisting of four pages with 100 per cent free distribution. Samples at hand, and which we are reproducing here, date back to December and at that time the publisher's statement disclosed that the little sheet had a circulation of 1,700. Wight immediately took advantage of the opportunity offered to get across a daily message to his patrons and you will note from the larger cut that the theatre ad had the commanding position right underneath the masthead.

The contents of the four pages consist of city news, activities of local organizations, personalities, wisecracks and all are liberally supported with display and classified ads, which would bear out that others than Wight thought well of the idea. The practice of "stuffing" is also indulged in by the theatre, as you will note by the reproduction of a full sized "insert" on "American Tragedy," distributed along with each delivery a short time ago.

Theoretically, here's an idea for some smart showman in a newspaperless town to give some thought to. Maybe there's a mimeograph outfit in this type of community. If so, there's the possibility of selling the manager the idea of getting out such a sheet. If there isn't any such agency, there's the further and not so remote possibility of promoting the idea with some young fellow who aspires to become an "editor"—and believe us when we tell you, the woods are full of these individuals.

As we've outlined before, it's a comparatively simple matter to dress a sheet of this kind with the modern mimeo, through the tracing of photographs and use of cutout stencils. The only other tool needed is a good typewriter with suitable type style.

Wight is an active showman out his way, as we can note by additional evidence before us. Keeping in mind the fact that no newspaper was available at the time, he got out a four-page imitation paper in connection with "Five Star Final." The front page was well made up, the spread carried a large exchange mat and the last page more mats of featured players and a continuation of local news items. He also stands in well with local business men, as was testified to some time ago when the Pasco "Boosters" Club manifested their interest in local school athletics by each bringing along a player guest to a theatre party held in connection with "Spirit of Notre Dame."

Returning to the subject of the miniature newspaper, we'd like to hear from any other member who may see the possibilities attached to such a scheme and essay its trial. To our way of thinking a sheet of this sort could be made very live and interesting.

WILLIAMS TIED-UP WITH TAXI COMPANY FOR COSTLESS DEAL

One of James Cagney's recent pictures, "Taxi," inspired Tony Williams, manager of the Dewitt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J., to put over a neat little promotional stunt with a local taxicab company. It didn't cost a nickel and caused plenty of comment around the Dewitt's lobby.

The taxi firm had just purchased a number of new cabs and Tony induced the proprietor to place one of the new models in the theatre lobby. He also sold this man the idea of paying for the printing of 10,000 cards with theatre copy on one side and taxi ad on the other. He also paid the salary of one of the ushers who sat in the drivers seat and passed out the cards to patrons as they entered the theatre. The usher hailed each person with the word, "Taxi?", as he gave out the cards. Less than 100 of the cards on daily average were found on the floor, which means that the greater portion found their way into pockets and were taken home. Note in the accompanying photo that a large banner announcing star and title was placed near the cab.

The owner of the taxi company was so pleased with the stunt that he also permitted all his cabs to carry pennants on "Taxi," and instructed his telephone board girl to remind patrons that the picture would play at the Dewitt on specified date.

That was a neat little job pulled off by Williams and since this picture is a natural for tie-ups with taxi firms, it is taken for granted that this will serve as a reminder for others to contact their local transportation companies.

GLINNER PROMOTED A GREETING CARD AT NO COST TO THEATRE

A neat little greeting card was issued during the past holiday season by L. D. Glinner, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Chelsea, Mass., without any cost to house.

Two thousand of these cards, printed in red on green stock, were distributed through two well known local merchants. One side carried equally-spaced ads of the two stores and the entire space on the other side was devoted to the Broadway's wish that its patrons have a prosperous and Happy New Year. "Bigger and Better Pictures for 1932" were listed. A line directed the reader to shop at the two stores.

Greeting cards are somewhat out of season at this writing but there are certain holidays in the offing which might be observed in this way. If not, Glinner's costless effort can be put in the pigeon-hole as a reminder for next season.

BRYAN SENT SERIAL OFF TO GOOD START WITH A BIG PARADE

One of the highlights used to publicize a recent serial by Bunny Bryan and his staff at the Belmont Theatre, Chicago, Ill., was a parade arranged through the courtesy of a local drum corps, said to be the largest of its kind in this country.

Parades are difficult to arrange in Chicago and the fact that 150 of the boys did their stuff through the streets in Belmont territory on a Saturday afternoon is a feather in the cap of the theatre management. Note by the accompanying photo the line up of members of the drum corps as the parade ended in front of the theatre. The stunt resulted in holdouts from 3 P. M. Sunday and 1,200 kids present at the opening.

The above stunt not only helped get the serial away to a good start but was also used to good effect in publicizing a new policy of five acts of Loop (big time) vaudeville, an orchestra and a single feature, all of which is considerable of an innovation for Chicago. Other advertising in connection with the new policy consisted of good breaks in all dailies; trailers on screens of B&K North and Westside Theatres; 500 two-sheets, and 100 one-sheets; 500 window cards; 15 window tie-ups in the neighborhood, and the usual advance lobby displays.

Another stunt used at the Belmont recently that has been going over like hot cakes is the auctioning off by a local celebrity of the entire wardrobe from a living model on the stage. Since the girl wears a bathing suit underneath all other garments, even the "undies" go the route.

Country Store night is still going strong at the Belmont on Tuesday nights, the 14th consecutive performance being recorded about a month ago, and give-aways are also proving one of the most consistent money-getters the house has ever tried out.

Sum it all up, Bryan and his crew at the Belmont are putting the house over in a bang-up style and this Club member modestly states that much credit for the excellent showing is due to his assistant, G. A. Romine, and members of the service staff, all of whom are turning out to be real merchandisers. It is gratifying to be in touch with Bryan again and we can see that he's stepping on the gas in his usual aggressive fashion.

Keefe in Elyria

James Keefe, formerly associated with Warner theatre publicity in the Cleveland district, has been named manager of the Warner Theatre, Elyria, Ohio. Frank Gear, former manager, recently resigned to take a post with the Skouras forces.

CATCHING THE EYE!

The above ad caught our eye and that is why we selected it for special reproduction. Yes, it's another product of that famous Holt-Lawler team in Wichita, Kansas, and further proves that there is no end to ideas in newspaper advertising as far as they are concerned.

We are hopeful that the various ads we have reproduced in this form or on the weekly ad page are helping many showmen liven up their own ads. Certainly they contain enough good ideas to improve anybody's advertising.

If YOU have some "pet" ad that you believe worthy of such special treatment please send it along and let us get a look at it. Oke?

Milwaukee Transfers

Ben Cooney, for some time manager of the Riviera, Granada and Juneau, all Warner houses in Milwaukee, has been appointed manager of the Granada.

Victor Poynter will handle the Riviera, and Eugene Arnstein, a former booker, will take charge of the Juneau.

Gregg At Durham, N. C.

L. A. Gregg has been appointed general manager of a new independent theatre soon to open at Durham, N. C. The house is being erected by the Criterion Amusement Co., headed by J. M. Gregg and L. C. Snipe, and opening is about a month away. It is credited with being the only independent house in the city.

HALL AROUSED LOCAL INTEREST WITH STUNT BOX ON FRONT PAGE

A two-column box on the front page of a recent issue of the local newspaper, announced a gag used by W. H. Hall, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Texarkana, Tex., to arouse interest in "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde."

The box was headed, "If you have a strong heart here's a chance to win $2.50," and went on to state that this amount would be paid to both a man and woman to sit through a performance of the picture at midnight. It was further stipulated that both stand a physical examination to determine fitness and sign a waiver releasing the theatre from responsibility. The man was to sit on one side and the woman on the other. Doors were to be locked and lights extinguished. Applications were to be made at either theatre or newspaper office.

The above is practically the same gag that was used so successfully with "Frankenstein" and what was good for the goose ought to be good for the gander, since these pictures are somewhat on the same order. However, we just want you all to know that Hall certainly got a great publicity break on this one with his newspaper.

Is it promotion, this Round Tabler asks, when over $700 worth of attractive articles are gathered together for give-away at not one cent of cost to theatre, to say nothing of incidental advertising and printing of heralds without cost? We'll say it is, friend Hall, and how! The gifts ranged from watches and sets of golf sticks to bedroom suites and deluxe radios, numbering 14 in all, and with the help of J. C. McKenna, Saenger district advertising manager, the event went over in a big way. Yes, sir, that's promotion, alright, and we think both these men deserve a big hand for the way they handled the affair.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

To be born in Hagerstown, Md., and later on in life having an inclination for show-business can almost be classed as a natural for William Walter Artz, for to our recollection Hagerstown has been a famous show-town for many a year.

William W. Artz

At any rate, Artz started hanging around theatres when he was 14 years of age and finally managed to get a job as usher. This was in the days of independent ownership and from that time until he was 18 this Club member did just about everything that was done around a theatre, including an operator's job in the booth. He found the booth too confining and was then moved down to the office, where he specialized on writing of ads and office efficiency.

During his career in show-business he has been connected with Nixon-Nirdlinger, Silverman Bros. & Slutzker and Warner Bros., all operating in Hagerstown. In that city he managed the Colonial, Nixon's Academy and Warners' Theatres. At present he is located in Ambler, Pa., where he is in charge of the Ambler Theatre. He hasn't a thought of following another line of business.

STOP ME IF YOU'VE HEARD THIS ONE—!

Joe Gilch asked the boss to cut his salary in half. So the boss figured that a guy crazy enough to make such a request was too crazy to run one of his theatres. He gave him the well known ozone.

It Goes Like This:

Had Joe been a smart mugg he would have shown the boss that he could use some extra dough by getting behind a picture like

"Fireman, Save My Child" and winning some of the prize money which the Warner Bros. seem so anxious to pass out.

Make the Boss Happy, Too!

He'll get a break by seeing more tickets being sold by reason of your smashing campaign on this great box office picture.

First Prize	$100.00
Second Prize	50.00
Third Prize	25.00
Next Five	5.00

You have until midnight of April 2nd to get your prize campaign on this picture into the mails.

Can You Use A Hundred Bucks?

What a question! Answer it with actions—not hooey. Send your "Fireman" campaign in as soon as you can and get in the running. Every manager and theatre owner—including Warner Brothers' managers — are eligible.

EFFECTIVE ART WORK AT MINIMUM COST, AIM OF ALL SHOWMEN!

Experienced Art Man Offers Some Excellent Suggestions As a Guide to Managers and Artists Who Want Help!

These ideas are chronicled and presented with the thought in mind that they will prove of benefit to every Art Shop. Try to be governed by these plans whenever you are engaging in work to which they are adaptable.

Water Colors

When using water colors from the jars, I always put a small quantity of color in ordinary saucers and thin out as required, leaving the balance in the tightly covered jars. By keeping the rim of the saucer clear of paint you can flatten the brush out on the saucer's edge. A small flat cork with a nail partly driven through the center to form a handle is very useful in mixing the colors. At night, a little water put in each saucer will keep the paint in them from drying, and by pouring off the surplus water next morning the paint can be worked up with the cork and be ready for use.

Paper Signs

When working on paper signs with water colors, a little glycerine added to the color will help keep the paper from wrinkling and the lettering will lie flat like japan color. Do not put in too much glycerine, however, as this will retard the drying.

This article was prepared by John E. Perry of the Publix-Scranton Art Shop as a guide for suggesting various ways and means for all managers and artists in that division. Through the courtesy of Jack Jackson, divisional director of advertising and publicity we are passing it along on the Club pages for the benefit of all showmen who would like to be kept posted on the latest tried and proven methods in this kind of work.

The illustrations were reproduced from the bulletin sent out by Mr. Jackson and the display photos are examples of the striking art work being turned out by Mr. Perry.

Too much cannot be said about this phase of show-selling and its bearing on both receipts and expenses; therefore, we feel sure that many will find this article highly interesting and beneficial.

We are grateful to both Jackson and Perry for the opportunity of passing it along to our other members. "CHICK"

Novelty Backgrounds

A very simple and convenient marbleizing effect for showcard backgrounds is obtained by the use of a pan large enough to take the size card you need half filled with water. Pour a few oil colors on top of water (size of card to determine quantity). Oil color does not mix with water, therefore you can mix the colors in novel patterns by stirring lightly with a stick. Then take your card, preferably white with roughened surface, insert face down over oil covered watered and bring back face up quickly. The pattern on the water will adhere to card, but not enough to pull all the paint out of water. As many as 50 cards can be made with one pan of this mixture. Every time you print one card the oil paint is stirred so that you have a different pattern on all cards. Care should be taken to insure that cards are thoroughly dry before lettering or stacking. Use flat drying rack.

Metal Waterproof Signs

A very simple and inexpensive metal (galvanized iron) waterproof sign can be made with black lacquer. First, coat out metal with a japan white or silver bronze that has been mixed with small amount of varnish for binder. After your background has dried you proceed as though you were painting a showcard in water color, preferably white. After your lettering is finished and dry, coat out entire sign with black lacquer. Allow to dry and wash off surface with water. Your water color letters will entirely disappear, leaving a clean japan white or bronze cut in letter, whichever you choose, on black background. After sign has served its purpose the background can be salvaged for future use by washing off with lacquer thinner. Following this idea will enable a big saving in time, labor and cost of material as comparable to oil-painted surfaces or lettering.

Winking Eye Display

A very effective winking display at little cost. Use sign cloth for face. Outline face and fill balance of cloth with opaque color which is a translucent color—any ready-mixed water color will do. The top eye lash and eye ball is omitted on one eye on face of sign, but is added on reversed side of cloth. When this sign cloth is stretched over an illuminated box that has a flasher inside you get the effect of one closed eye, when light is out and both eyes open when light is on. The flasher does the rest. The common button flasher should be used as yon need quick flash to get the proper effect.

Read This Through Carefully, Then Pass It Along to Your Artist so That He Too Can Benefit by This Advice!

Screen Process Work

A simple process screen job can be made easily by stretching process silk over the size of frame you need. Next letter the desired copy on your screen with glue. After the glue is dry you coat out entire surface, including glue letters, with black lacquer and let dry in the sun. When the sun dries the lacquer the glue will break up leaving the screen ready to run off. After job is finished use clear lacquer thinners for washing off screen, which is then ready for use on future attractions. The screen will hold up for 50 or more jobs. I recommend the use of Process Paint, but regular oil paint can be used effectively if thinned well with linseed oil. With ordinary precaution 200 cards is possible with one pint of paint.

You can make your own frame to necessary dimensions, but be sure corners are reinforced to prevent getting out of line and that provision is made for the frame to be attached by hinges to a flat surface which will serve as a process table. A flat drying rack must be constructed so that finished process cards can lie flat without coming in contact with each other while drying.

ART SHOP ECONOMIES

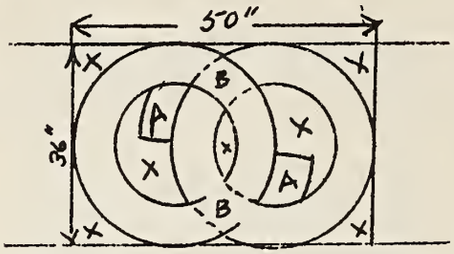
Material necessary: One yard silk from Joseph Mayer, New York; approximate cost, $2.50. Oil paint at warehouse prices. Window cleaners' rubber squeegee cost approximately 50 cents.

Another Silk Screen Process Method

Stretch silk over size frame needed and paint necessary copy on inside of screen, using white water color to which a small amount of glue has been added to assure binder. Next, have table convenient height to attach screen frame with small hinges. Use Process paint preferably or oil paint thinned lightly with linseed oil or varnish. Select a contracting paint color to the original card color as the water color lettering will hold against the Process or oil paint, giving you a cut in letter job with the paint as a background and card color as lettering. This method will take care of at least 150 cards of a 14 by 22 size at a cost not exceeding $1.00 plus cost of card. After your cards are printed wash off screen with turpentine and finish by using water which will remove all water color letters, which will then make screen ready for next order.

Use flat drying rack for cards.

Cut-Out Letter Economy



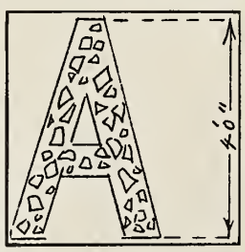
Cut-out letters for marquee display are very often used but once, so it is important to use a style of letter that will use the least amount of beaverboard or whatever other material you wish to use. A type of letter I find more suitable for this kind of display is a half-block letter which can be seen at a greater distance than most other styles. The greatest advantage to this form of letter is the simplicity in cutting. A knife can be used to advantage as no curves are needed; another factor is that your work is practically cut in half due to the fact that one cutting can make the outline of two letters. The sketch below shows more clearly the saving in time and material by using this style of lettering for large displays.

P. S.—Here's a sign that will stretch out 18 feet, but all made out of a piece of 4 by 10. Checks denote the little waste in following this style of lettering.

Circular Frames

Next is a rough sketch of two circular frames each 36 inches diameter made with one 50 by 36-inch piece of material. Considering the fact that you are to use frames with a coating of paint or textone the joints (stapled) will not show. The reason I suggest this method is from a material cost saving viewpoint. This same process can be used on smaller or larger circular frames as desired. In all instances you save nearly one-third of the material ordinarily required.

Note—The "A" pieces are put in openings "B," making two complete rings. Note, too, the small amount of waste (marked X) remaining.



Marquee Novelty

A very novel though inexpensive marquee display can be obtained when a 24-sheet head is available on any mystery picture that you wish to exploit. Paste paper on beaverboard and cut out as usual. Add 5 by 7-inch mirrors over eyes; these are obtainable at any 5 and 10-cent store. Place the mirrors at a sufficient slant so that a flood light properly directed will cast a reflection from the mirrors on the sidewalk. This stunt was used to good advantage in exploiting "Frankenstein." An added feature to this is to put flasher button in flood light, getting the moving effect of the eyes.

Mirrored Letters

A marquee display for a picture bearing a short title can be made at very little cost by cutting out 4 feet or smaller letters and covering same with a coating of textone about one-quarter inch thick. You can then procure mirror scraps, without cost, from local glass house that can be broken into uneven pieces 3 to 5 inches in size. Press mirrors down into textone being sure that the edges are covered to insure adhering. A flood light directed on this display will make a very impressive shot. An added feature to this form of display is to add an automatic color wheel in front of flood light which will reflect several colors.

Note—Textone can be tinted by using water color and an added effect by sprinkling metallics before it sets up.

Note—The use of textone makes it possible to use salvage wall board that has already seen its fullest possible service in theatre displays as the textone will cover all defects, etc.

Note—Reprints of this art shop economy article are available upon request from accredited Club members who may want to pass them along to their artists or art shops. Since only a limited number of them are available it is suggested that you send your request at once.

PROMOTING SINGLE CO-OP ADS ONE OF HAUSCHILD'S GAGS

Interesting and effective ads are still being turned out by Thor Hauschild, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, and this time we're showing one that was promoted through a tie-up with a local garage company. All it set the theatre back was a few passes. The copy is self-explanatory.

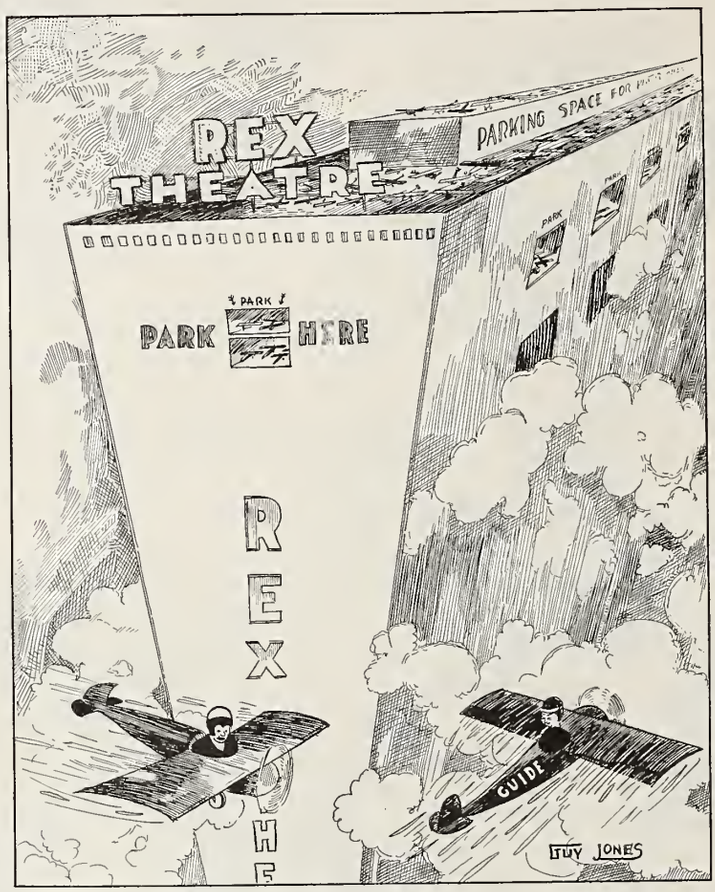
Apparently the practice of showing double features hasn't become widespread in Steubenville for you will note in the lower portion of this ad that a special inducement was offered in the way of a return showing of an extra feature to all who attended the Monday show. Hauschild tells us that it brought them in. While on the subject of the co-op ad shown here, may we remark that it's nicely laid out and certainly gave the theatre a great break.

However, there are other special attractions that take the place of extra feature pictures in this town. We note that a Kiddie Revue, in which pupils of a local dancing school took part, was recently staged at the Paramount. The occasion rated a two column head and story and a three column photo and caption on the amusement page of the local paper.

The popular new popcorn confection figured in the matinee trade when "Sooky" was played through a tie-up made with the Kamelcorn Co. A ten cent bag of this confection was passed out gratis to each of the first 350 children attending every matinee during engagement. A total of 1,400 bags were handed out and the theatre also secured the popcorn company's entire window on the picture. All the company received in exchange was a one sheet in the lobby and a line in ads.

Nice work, Hauschild, and here's luck on other tie-ups which we know you'll put over. Let's hope you'll continue to keep in touch with your Club so we can pass the good word along the line.

WEILER'S RADIO GAG!



Here is a corner of the Victory Theatre broadcasting studio where Manager Fred Weiler broadcasts an entertaining and interesting program several times weekly and has made his particular hour one of the most popular from his local station. The studio is used for another unusual purpose; they have a radio talent night once a week at the Victory when those who seek an opportunity of proving their worth on the air perform before the studio "mike" for the benefit and pleasure of the audience in the theatre. They are then brought on the stage and introduced personally. Those winning the most applause for their efforts are rewarded with a chance to be heard on the air at the next Victory Theatre broadcast.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

The theatre of the future, with patrons following the usher-guide to their parking spaces on the three - hundredth floor, etc. What a nightmare poor Jones must have had before he was inspired to draw this one.

SCOUTS PROMOTED A HERALD COOPERATIVE AD FOR J. VOERSTER

Forty-eight ads solicited from local merchants, whether these be small or large or appear in the form of a double truck or herald, represent application of considerable time, but that's just what was reaped from a tie-up made with the local Boy Scouts by J. H. Voerster, manager of the Douglas Theatre, Newman Grove, Neb.

He gave the Scouts sponsorship of two features and they went out and got up the 11 x 14 herald and sold tickets at the rate of 35c each, a move that brought many to the theatre who had not been regular patrons. After money resulting from sale of tickets was all turned over to the theatre, the Scouts received 30 per cent as their share of the deal. The tie-up did not affect Sunday's business a great deal as most of it is transient, but it did get the name of the house up before a lot of people and distribution of 2,000 cooperative heralds, each with small ad and catch line, "We Are For Scouting," turned out to be a most effective advertising medium.

In addition to this ad appearing in the paper, the Scouts paid for all tickets that they sold and Voerster thinks that the stunt is a good one to use during times when the S.R.O. sign is gathering cobwebs. The exhibitor isn't out very much and receives valuable advertising. The party sponsoring the picture or pictures receives No-percent of the box office. Okay, J. H., and thanks for remembering your fellow Clubmen. Shoot along some more of your ideas.

REETH HAS A FLAIR FOR MAKING NOVELTY ADVERTISING MATTER

Looking over some of the work turned out by Fred Reeth, Jr., manager of the Warner-Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., we can tell right off the bat that this Club member has a flair for getting out novelty advertising, such as pamphlets with trick fold, catchline copy on front cover, etc.

Some of the folds are rather hard to describe in print, for instance one used to plug a month's "Harvest of Hits." When the folder is closed it appears that the left hand upper portion is clipped, but in reality a diamond shaped section is turned in. When opened this diamond flaps open directly in the center and immediately draws the eye to the message.

We also have before us one of those long folded strips which we attempted to explain some time ago. It measures about two feet in length and about two and one-half inches in width and is folded every two inches. The final fold is sealed and copy cautions the reader not to break the seal until home with the family. As the strip is unfolded each section has a separate message such as "Everybody Gather 'Round—Don't Get Excited—It Won't Bite—Keep On Turning—One Good Turn Deserves Another—Let Mother Have A Look—Let Father In Too—The Whole Family Ought To Look—You'll Be Tickled To Death—And Your Troubles Will Be Over (if you come to)" and then, name of theatre, title of picture and playdates.

Here's another gag he used by forming sentences out of the letters spelling the title "Star Witness" and the same idea could be used with any other title. A red card measuring about 11 x 7 was captioned in the left hand upper corner, "30 Years Ago." The following sentences, each with first word spelling title, were surrounded by a heavy black border:

"There were no radios—Henry Ford was not famous—Even Beer was 5 cents a glass. (Then) Seven days made a week—There were very few women who smoked—Airplanes were a myth—Riding Bicycles was a fad. (And) When electricity was an experiment—Income tax worries were unheard of—Then happy marriages were common," etc., etc. We've already spelled out The Star and part of Witness, so by this time you've got the idea. The copy ended up with (But) You couldn't have seen a talking picture like The Star Witness at any price. You Can See this marvelous, etc., etc., "at the ——— Theatre."

Among other little advertising gags recently used was a glittering silver folder that opened in the middle and was captioned, "Again We Say" in black type against the silver. Copy inside read, "If you're seeking the best entertainment at all times—Visit ——— Theatre." Other copy pertaining to attractions was well laid out and ended with thanks for past patronage.

Still another trick folder showed on the front cover a hand with a string tied around one of the fingers. It was attractively done in colors and was captioned, "Remember," on the third page. This appeared when folded as the hand was silhouetted at top to disclose same. Inside the copy continued, "When Mother used this method to keep us from forgetting? We suggest that you tie a string on your finger right now to keep from forgetting those dates."

Another little folder carried the following copy: "Just as you unfold this, so does the unusual story of Lula Smith unfold to the women of the world." Copy on inside pertained to "Forbidden." On "East of Borneo" he used a fake match container captioned "A Red Hot Tip!—You can't blow it out." Copy inside read, "Don't Be Fooled"—and other copy pertaining to picture.

We wish it were possible for interested Club members to see these folders instead of having to describe them in haphazard fashion. However, we've tried our best to convey the idea that Reeth is getting out a very attractive line of folders. Each one carries distinctive appeal and has enough novelty to immediately enlist interest.

MINIATURE FARM YARD IN YOUR LOBBY FOR EASTER!

Here is an idea used in many spots last year for an Easter gag.

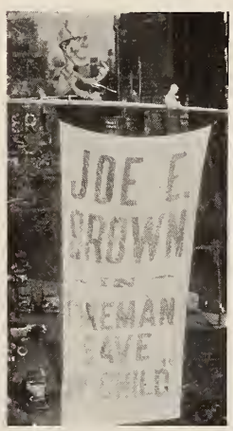
Erect a miniature farm in the center of your lobby, or whatever spot is practical, and turn loose a couple of dozen chicks. Most of the managers last year secured the chicks and feeding pans, etc., from local dealers who sell this material, especially around this time of the year.

The same idea can also be applied to live rabbits and, like the chicks, can be distributed to the kiddies on Easter Saturday or some other time during Easter Week.

Whichever way you decide to handle this idea, make sure that it is both attractive and interesting to adults as well as the youngsters. This you can do by dressing it up somewhat similar to the illustration here. Fence can be borrowed from local hardware store, or built, if necessary, at a very low cost.

Small houses, barns, etc., can be borrowed from toy stores and greens and flowers from the florist.

Try one this year and see how they take to it.



At any rate the idea ought to suggest several slants for you to work on since these gags generally click well in season there is no reason why you can't kick up a lot of talk about pulling something of this sort.

If you would like to see how the kiddies themselves take to it just wait until you announce this stunt for your lobby and then watch their faces as their eyes pop out of their heads watching the antics of these chicks and bunnies. It will more than repay you for the time and trouble working it out.

We'd like to bet that wherever one of these displays are used the manager will have more fun playing with them than the kids. Who said that showmen are not just great big kids slightly grown up?

LOU GOLDBERG AND CREW SOLD FIREMAN WITH NOVEL SLANTS

A widely circulated plea for an eight-hour day for firemen, an effective lobby front, ballyhoos, special invitations on opening night and numerous other activities, were effective instruments used by Lou Goldberg and his publicity staff when selling of "Fireman Save My Child" at the Strand Theatre, New York City.

Five hundred fire houses were contacted on the "Eight Hour Day" plea and a contest arranged for firemen, their friends and relatives to submit the best answer to—"Firemen Should Have an Eight Hour Day Because ———." A ten-day cruise to the West Indies was promoted from the French Line and was offered as first award. The next twenty-four answers were in line for guest tickets to the Strand.

Publicity and advertising was placed in "The Chief," an official fireman's paper, with a circulation of 50,000, and a total of 7,000 replies were received at the New York and Brooklyn Strand Theatres, the only points where receptacles were placed for the ballots. Bulletins printed in standard form and outlining the contest were posted in each fire house and letters were sent to each of the 500 fire captains.

You can see by the accompanying photos that the lobby front of the Strand was something in the nature of a knockout. A close up of the entrance would reveal that caricatures of Brown, drawn by a well known local artist, were interspersed among the letters spelling the star's name and placed at either end. An animated box-office piece, showing Joe E. Brown standing on a ladder and rescuing an artificial child, attracted much attention. The small photo shows a flagpole extended over sidewalk from the upper structure of the theatre, on which there was a ten-foot cutout of Joe E. Brown reaching for a life-sized doll. This gag strained a lot of necks along the Main Stem.

Other advertising and exploitation stunts included a ballyhoo of an old horse-drawn fire truck, such as shown in photo; the placing of 2,000 placards with copy, "Run, Do Not Walk—To see Joe E. Brown at the Strand;" the distribution of 50,000 Life-Savers in envelopes bearing picture copy during week prior to picture opening; a large amount of space in all local papers, and special invitations to 100 Marshalls and Captains to attend opening night in uniform.

We are given to understand that this campaign put on by Goldberg and his crew was engineered at comparatively low cost and they therefore deserve much credit for obtaining such fine results. The "Eight Hour Day" idea was certainly an inspiration and proved a means of getting under the skins of several hundred firemen. The lobby front also excited a lot of word of mouth comment on the picture. Although we were first informed that Warner theatre men would not be eligible to enter the nation wide contest for best campaigns on the Brown picture, a new ruling now permits them to submit their work. So here's good luck to Lou and his boys.

Those New Fords!

Public interest in the new line of Ford automobiles is at a high pitch right now.

Production has begun and it won't be long before your local dealer will have his first shipment at hand. Contact him and see if it can be arranged to display one of the new models at the theatre, providing you have the necessary space. Maybe he won't want to let you have it that early in the game, but perhaps you can overcome any objection by letting him station one of his own salesmen in the lobby to answer questions from patrons.

There are a number of other tie ups that might be made for the occasion—co-op ads, a give-away, etc. We believe it will pay to consider all angles and act at once. Then, let your Club know what you did.

ENDORSEMENT ANGLE SUCCESSFULLY USED BY TOM DI LORENZO

A personal letter outlining and endorsing "Over The Hill" proved an effective medium for Thomas di Lorenzo, manager of the Cove Theatre, Glen Cove, Long Island, N. Y.

He mentioned that the picture had been adapted from the famous poem by Will Carleton and that it was an intimate story of home and family life, also stating that it again brought together on the screen James Dunn and Sally Eilers and the triumphant return of Mae Marsh. The letter closed with an earnest recommendation to attend the showing.

Personal letters have been used to excellent results on many occasions by many of our members and we are glad to hear that the above worked out well for di Lorenzo. He was sold on the picture himself and he determined to impress his patrons with this idea. And if a show will stand for a personal endorsement, past observations have led us to believe it's a good gag to use.

STAFF OF BROOKLYN STRAND DOING GOOD WORK ON PICTURES

The fellows who keep the ball a-rolling over at the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Messrs. McLaughlin, Trust, Ruden, etc., continue to demonstrate that they are well versed in the art of exploitation. Recent activities are as follows:

They still believe in organs and organists over at the Strand and are fortunate in having the well known John Hays Hammond at the console. On a table in the lobby is a supply of cards with copy stating that every Sunday, in addition to the regular performance, a brief program of request selections will be presented. Space is reserved on the card for the filling in of the desired numbers and patrons are requested to hand the card to doorman or mail it to the Strand. They are notified by return mail as to when their selections will be played. This stunt has helped build up both organist and matinees.

When exploiting "Taxi," two-faced throwaways with cut and signature of James Cagney were distributed to Taxi drivers and in private cars. One side carried photo of Cagney, and notice that all seats would be at the rate of 25c up to 6 P. M., and the other side was headed—"Hey You Guys!—Take it from one who knows—I can give you the low down on the city's best and worst! I've seen all the excitement of Hell's Kitchen and the soft pedalled love stuff of Park avenue. I've whirled eloping couples to the Marriage Bureau and back again to the Divorce Court! My cab's a love nest for neckers—a guide for lonesome strangers and a short cut to the best street numbers." Title, name of theatre and play dates followed. Note that a local angle was given the message by naming a couple of New York neighborhoods. Cards with appropriate copy were also handed out by members of the usher staff to patrons of the current Brooklyn Auto Show.

To plug a Saturday morning matinee for children when a new serial was getting away for a run, 10,000 cardboard rulers were distributed in the public schools and playgrounds, carrying information that the Strand was running an episode each week as a special feature.

A throwaway was also effectively used in connection with "Union Depot," the front cover bearing the catchline, "It's Important!" This was surrounded with a conglomeration of large and small question marks above and below, and copy inside informed the reader that a "trip could be taken for 25c without leaving Brooklyn."

The Strand publicity department consistently turns out live wire exploitation work from week to week and they are ably assisted by a hard working crew of ushers. When ushers turn in a lot of extra work for their executives it reflects a lot of credit on the entire staff, for certainly there's nothing finer in any business organization than a general spirit of co-operation. We shall hope to hear a lot more from the fellows over at the Strand and know that their fellow showmen will appreciate any tips that are passed along.

With RKO In Cleveland

J. L. McCurdy has replaced Wallace Elliot as manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, Elliot going to Keith's 105th Street Theatre.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

The above pen and ink poster was sent to us from the Liberty Theatre in Carnegie, Okla., but no artist's name. Whoever he is, he achieved a good likeness of the comedians.

The Huston poster is from the shop of Will Wills in Syracuse, N. Y., and one of the series contributed by this artist. This seems to be a combination of both straight art work and high light art combined into one poster.

ADJUSTABLE COVERS NOW AVAILABLE FOR SCHOOL EXPLOITATION

Club members who have been exploiting their theatres among schools, etc., or are perhaps contemplating some move in this direction, will be interested to know that one of the leading book cover concerns is now putting out a flexible new manila cover, adaptable to any size text book (geography excepted) and furnished at low cost without charge for theatre imprint.

One side carries provision for student's name, school and other identification, above which reads, "You May Always Go To The Movies—If—You Do Your Home Work Regularly—Study and Know Your Lessons." The other side contains a descriptive paragraph of the theatre and picture. The copy is so worded to be suitable for all theatres. Underneath this paragraph provision is made for the theatre imprint, address, etc., for which, as already stated, there is no charge.

These covers are similar to those retailed in the five and tens for 10c per package of twelve but can be bought at a considerably lower rate in quantity lots. New school terms, making a change of text book and cover mandatory, are constantly starting and closing. Many Round Tablers have found free distribution of covers an inexpensive means of promoting good will among students. We'll be glad to supply the name of the cover manufacturer upon request.

RALPH COKAIN USED NOVELTY MATCH FOR WORD-OF-MOUTH AD

One of the Club's charter members, no less than Ralph Cokain, manager of the Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind., swings into action again with a little gag that was instrumental in starting up a lot of word-of-mouth advertising.

Maybe you've seen these matches that light when pulled from a container? At any rate that kind of match is something of a novelty these days and one of the leading manufacturers is putting them out with any kind of design or copy requested. Cokain sends them to restaurants, drug stores, dry-cleaning establishments (where they are inserted in pockets of suits) billiard halls, etc. and states that a surprising amount of good will and comment followed his move.

If anyone wishes to try out this gag we'll be glad to send further information concerning the manufacturer if your local dealer can't get the matches for you. Prices vary, we understand, according to design. Ralph states that the gag will positively gain attention because the match is new and different.

Rosen Not At Troy

It was erroneously reported a short time ago through no fault of ours that Leo Rosen, manager of the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., had been transferred to Troy, N. Y., to take charge of all Warner houses in that city.

The latest statement has it that Rosen is to stay on his old job and that the Troy city managership has fallen on the broad shoulders of Ed Hart, formerly manager of the Stanley, Utica, N. Y. Bert Leighton replaces Hart.

KIDS CAME THROUGH FOR ANNUAL BENEFIT SHOW OF ROSENTHAL'S

The genial Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, has again been indulging in his favorite pastime of doing something for the needy citizens of his town and as usual rang in his host of kiddie friends on the deal.

Every year he puts on some kind of benefit performance and this time it was a Potato and Canned Foods Show that brought joy to many poor families in his town. Every one of Jake's young friends, and they're all over town, was invited to bring along a half-dozen potatoes or one article of canned goods as admission to the theatre. The result was a big turn out and a tremendous pile of food. A transfer company moved the food to local organizations for distribution.

The last time Jake held one of his parties the crowd of kiddies became so large that the doors gave away, but he's got them reinforced now and is ready for the mob that always greets his benefit matinees or any other special performance he puts on. A big hand to him for his public-spiritedness and we'll hope to hear further about his activities out in Waterloo.

MARQUIS PROMOTED BIG CAKE THAT DID DUTY AT 6 THEATRES

We've heard of quite a number of trade accessories being routed over a theatre circuit but for an example of downright New England conservatism the season's medal will have to be pinned on the lapel of Joseph Marquis, manager of the Egyptian Theatre, Brighton, Mass.

See the picture of the big cake? Well, that cake not only did duty at the Egyptian but filled engagements at five other theatres in communities adjacent to that theatre. Of course, this was made possible by the fact that Anniversaries of the other theatres followed in close order, ranging from Firsts to Ninths.

A baking company contributed the huge piece of pastry and also provided 30,000 ballots to take care of estimates made on its weight, for which a special cake was awarded at each theatre. All necessary alterations, due to variance of anniversary number, wear and tear, etc., were taken care of by the baking company. Wotta cake, Joseph!

IS ADVERTISING NECESSARY?

William H. Bergmann Offers Many Important Points Proving Immense Value of This Medium!

YOU are no doubt aware of the fact, a great deal of my activities have been in theatres of the smaller Mid-Western cities of from 5,000 to 25,000 population and that I am not so thoroughly versed on deluxe operation in the larger cities. But on the other hand, I believe that the managers in these smaller towns have a condition to contend with that the larger theatre does not. Take for instance, the average mid-western town of from 5,000 to 10,000 population, with one or two theatres operating 7 days a week, regardless of whether or not either house is playing the cream of the product every day, there will still be an insufficient number of show-goers to make the house a real winner.

The answer is that the showman must stretch out over his territory for twenty, thirty, forty or even fifty miles and bring in enough extra patrons to make a fair engagement a real winner. How is this to be done? Through the occasional placing of readers in surrounding town weeklies, display ads on super-specials, use of mailing lists, lithographs in these outlying territories, distribution of heralds and novelties, and occasional street ballyhoos. Also periodical visits of the manager or assistant with the merchants of these surrounding towns (if nothing more than placing a window card, leaving a herald or novelty and giving the merchant a pleasant smile and a cheery "hello"). Don't think they don't like it! They eat it up! And it makes them real boosters for your theatre.

Used Extra Selling Effort!

I have been at times criticized for being a little too zealous in my merchandising efforts, but from actual experience I have found that no matter how important a picture may be (from the standpoint of stars or stories)—a little extra selling effort on the part of the manager will more than compensate him through increased box-office receipts.

To bear out my statement, a short time ago I received a letter from a city manager of two or three houses in a small mid-west city and he mentioned that with his budget so low, it was almost impossible for him to get out in his territory. He said he believed that if he could get out and sell his shows more, his receipts would be affected accordingly. He related that recently he had played "Ten Nights in a Barroom" in his "B" house, using increased newspaper space, liberal use of lithographs and a street ballyhoo. And to his astonishment the business on this attraction rung up a new three-year-old record and was greater than what he had done on many socalled "hits" in his "A" house. Although the picture named is sort of a freak—I question very much whether he would have enjoyed this sensational business without this extra effort.

In this little discussion I would like to mention a certain gentleman who is now division director for a large circuit in the east. This same man five or six years ago was operating a theatre in a little town of 7,000, a short distance from Omaha. I remember him well, for he was a real "go-getter"—he bought accessories in large quantities and used big city methods in selling his shows in this small town. A lot of the exhibitors in his territory thought he was very unwise; but he got results! Although this man today has 50 or 60 theatres under his supervision—I'd bet my bottom dollar he is still as firm a believer in advertising and exploitation as when he was operating that small theatre in 1925.

Advertising Did It!

To further bear out my contention that "Advertising and Exploitation IS Necessary," I would like to tell of a group of four theatres in four small towns, all of about 3,000 population: As I remember these houses two or three years ago, one was standing idle after having been closed eight or ten times as no one was able to make it pay. The other three were being operated in a hit and miss fashion, using an occasional newspaper ad, a one sheet or two, and a set of 11x14 on each attraction. Business was far from rosy in any of these houses. About two years ago, two highly successful state right film men took over these operations and that is when the picture changed. Each theatre was refurnished throughout, carpets were laid (this being unknown to these houses), new display frames were installed and at each theatre a huge Neon sign was erected. Also at the edge of town on each highway leading into the town, electric lighted painted 24 sheet boards were erected (in the center of each board was a space for a six sheet on the current attraction).

It Brings Business, Too!

Exploitation of every description was used, as well as large display ads in the newspapers. The result was without exception—every house took on a new color that was almost unbelievable.

Townspeople who had never attended a theatre became regular fans. Persons who had formerly driven many miles to a larger town for their entertainment began attending their local theatre, for they found that their wants could as easily be satisfied at home as in some distant town. All this was created through real showmanship in presenting their shows as well as plenty of thought on the subject of advertising and exploitation.

Although these houses won the confidence of every showgoer in their territory by playing the pick of the product, they consistently advertised week after week and in spite of the present low farm prices they are enjoying a nice patronage at all times.

"You bet advertising pays!"

(William H. Bergmann is well known around Omaha and other Nebraska show circles. His many friends will be pleased to learn that he is rapidly regaining his health.—"CHICK.")

WE OFTEN WONDER! By LOUIS SYLVESTER

We bet there are many managers who will get a great laugh out of this one. Sylvester hit the nail on the head when he selected this particular subject for his first cartoon contribution. If you've ever placed ads in local foreign papers then you can appreciate this best.

SERVICE CLUB OVER IN P. D. BLOOMBERG'S HOUSE FINDING FAVOR

We had occasion to mention the subject of Service Clubs several weeks ago when relating the account of how one of these unique organizations was formed by the staff of a Boston, Mass., theatre. Since that time, one of the organizers, James Darby, has been made assistant to P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Salem, Mass., and the same idea is being carried successfully out by the staff of the Paramount.

The main ideas behind a club of this sort is promotion of publicity that will build good will for the theatre and to foster a spirit of loyalty among house employees. The organization at the Paramount has only been functioning a few weeks but in that short time has received a number of worthwhile stories in local papers relative to supplying relief to needy families.

The boys have redecorated their room and made it into club headquarters and have promoted furniture, a radio, a small library and many other conveniences that go toward making working conditions more pleasant. Darby was the prime mover in the formation of the club and others who are giving their time are, Gordon Lyons, president; Timothy Call, secretary; Jack Kelleher; Ray Cheeney, Charles Lempesis; Edward Latallion; Leonard Eagan; Richard Welch, and Norris Dozois. The larger photo accompanying this article shows the boys lined up with their baskets of food.

When playing "Spirit of Notre Dame" Bloomberg made a very effective tie-up and engineered some exploitation in connection with schools in and around town that produced excellent results.

The tie-up was made with a local sporting goods store for a window and lobby display consisting of football material bearing the name of Notre Dame and surrounded by photos of the late Rockne and players of his undefeated teams. A card with appropriate copy tied the window in with the theatre. The small photo shows the lobby display.

Contacted the Schools!

The schools were contacted through the services of a former Notre Dame football player, who approached the principals so diplomatically that three of them announced the theatre, dates and name of picture. This player arranged to appear before the students and give a talk on Rockne and football. At Salem and one other town, it was arranged to have him appear in football togs and work out with the football squads. He gave "pep" talks and invited the squads to attend the theatre with faculty and school bands.

Three nights of the run were devoted to High School Nights and the bands were given a fifteen minute period on the stage. The nights helped increase attendance and brought in considerable extra trade, a check-up revealing that practically every guest ticket was good for one extra paid admission.

Another very effective stunt was arrangement for an interview over the local radio between the coach and one of the High School executives. The interview, along with talent promoted for the occasion, took up a half hour. Effective newspaper publicity resulted from all moves.

We first wrote about the Service Club idea when George Laby, at that time manager of the Washington Street Olympia, Boston, and now managing director of the New Paramount in that city, sent along an account of it, and it certainly looked like a great gag for any house staff to try out. In addition to doing city welfare work, as we recall, the organization also went in for some exploitation, ballyhoo, etc. It's all accomplished without any aid from management, other than a certain supervision of activities, and it seems to us that such a club can be made a most valuable asset.

Although no reward, other than deserved promotion, appears in prospect for the members, little gestures of appreciation can be left to discretion of the management. We're always glad to hear from Bloomberg and his crew and also invite other managers to let us know about their activities in this direction.

HOW "TAXI" WAS SOLD IN HOLLYWOOD

STUTENROTH MAKING PLAY FOR KID TRADE AT HOUSE IN PHILLY

Upholding Al Sindlinger's practice of making a play for kiddie patronage when that manager had charge of the Holme Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., E. O. Stutenroth, who recently succeeded to Al's old job, followed the same trail by putting on a big "After-school Song-fest" and rehearsal to select talent for a twenty minute stage act for presentation along with the regular feature attraction.

Stutenroth is fortunate in being able to play an organ and on this occasion he furnished accompaniment for the kiddies when they rendered their songs. Nearly nine hundred kids lined up for the matinee, which was quite a turnout. He means to use this gang as the nucleus for a Mickey Mouse Club, of which we'll tell you more soon.

Lest we haven't mentioned this before, Stutenroth's predecessor, Al Sindlinger, is now holding forth at the Forum Theatre, also in Philadelphia, and we'll also be looking for further word from him. As for the former, his present job is a promotion from an assistant managership at a Loew house in the Bronx, New York City, and were're happy to state that he's now a full fledged member of this organization.

Next time you get in touch with your Club, Stut', let us know all about your new Mickey Mouse Club or any other activity that has engaged your attention during recent weeks in building patronage.

FLORIST TIE-UPS NOW!

This being the season of the year when many showmen get together with their local florists for some free lobby decorations, we thought it an appropriate time to show how one theatre lobby was dressed up through such an arrangement.

Florists realize the value of getting their names before the public and also understand that there are mighty few avenues to reach a large proportion of the public except through the lobby of the local playhouse.

You ought to be able to promote plenty of greens, ferns, palm boxes and fresh cut flowers (latter to be changed daily) for that it will make your entrance a thing of beauty and fragrant, too. Only a neat credit card is all that any florist could expect for this great advertising medium.

VALENTINES NOT IN SEASON BUT ARE NO TARDIER THAN MONTY

Not that the following represents by any means the sum total of gags, etc., put over by Monty Salmon since we last heard from him, for this showman has been on the loop ever since he landed in Philadelphia, Pa., to do supervisory work for the Brothers Skouras; however, they'll serve as an indication that he hasn't forgotten his old Club and as a reminder that St. Valentine's Day has come and gone.

What we are referring to was the distribution of red, heart-shaped throwaways inscribed on one side, "The Tower Theatre's Valentine to You!" The other side was equally divided for current and coming week's attraction.

We also note another neat little throwaway that was widely distributed in connection with the showings of "Private Lives." It was a small four-page folder with front reading, "Diary—Revealing the Secrets of a Young Married Cople and Their Private Lives." A heart decorated the center portion of this copy. The inside spread contained excerpts from the "diary" and the back carried catch-lines, title of picture, featured players, theatre and playdates.

The next time we report on the activities of Round Tabler Salmon we shall hope to present a more detailed account of what has been going on in show-business down in his zone. 'Till then, we'll wish him continued success in all efforts.

J. R. MacEACHERN hails from Stuttgart, where he manages the Majestic Theatre. We are taking this opportunity to acknowledge Mack's application for membership in this organization and wish to extend a cordial welcome to this new member from the West. He tells us we'll hear later in regard to some stunts he has in mind and we mean to hold him to his word. Shoot them along at any time, Mack, and we will see that the other boys are tipped off.

PAUL V. McKAY is in charge of the Avalon Theatre down in Montgomery, West Va., and we became acquainted with him through the forwarding of some poster work turned out by his art man, Ramon Collins. We are indebted to McKay for his interest and will hope to receive other evidence of what he and his staff are doing to sell shows at the Avalon. Reproductions of Collins' work will appear in a forthcoming issue.

JOHN GALVIN is the manager of the Penn Theatre, a Publix house down in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and at this writing he also is in line for introduction to his host of fellow showmen. We're glad to enroll Galvin's name on the Club roster and hope he will fall in line with the many Publix men in this organization in the matter of keeping others informed on what's going on in show business. Let's hear from you, John.

JOHN ROGER LUDY, manages the Hines Theatre in Portland, Ind., and a cordial Club welcome is herewith extended to this new member of the Round Table Club. Step up and meet your brother showmen, John, and then help the good work along by shooting along some dope on what you've been doing for show-business out in Portland. We'll be awaiting your next communication.

HERRWOOD E. HOBBS is in charge of the Hippodrome Theatre in Pottsville, Pa., and some examples of his activities in show-business were recently brought to our attention. At this writing we are enrolling Hobbs in the Round Table Club and it is our hope that he will continue to be represented in this department. There are many of your Publix brothers who are doing their bit, Herrwood. How about shooting along an account of that last campaign you waged?

ROBERT J. RYDEEN is the manager of the Garrick Theatre, a house belonging to the Twin City Theatre Corp., out in St. Paul, Minn., and it's a pleasure to acknowledge new Round Tabler's application for membership. If you see the nice send-off enclosed by his boss, Howard S. Dale, you'd feel as we do—that Rydeen will come through with a lot of interesting contributions to this department. Okay, Robert, send them along at your earliest convenience.

ALLAN D. ROBERTSON manages the Orpheum Theatre, a Loew house located at 86th street and 3d avenue, New York City, that seats 2,300 and follows a policy of vaudeville and pictures. He's another new member of this Club and we're taking this opportunity to make his name known to his host of brother showmen in this organization. Despite the fact that less exploitation work appears to be done in this city than elsewhere, the N. Y. contingent is constantly growing and we're happy to add Robertson's name.

BEN B. GREBER has charge of the Strand Theatre, a Warner house in Reading, Pa., and we're also happy to announce that he is now a full fledged member of this ever-increasing organization of showmen. Now that you're one of the gang, Ben, come through with an account of that last stunt you used to fill the seats of your house. The rest of the gang will be waiting to hear from you. Shoot along some ideas.

MUSIC AND TALENT

Musical Shows In N. Y. Paramount As Film Auxiliary

For the first time in Broadway history, a highly successful $5.50 musical show is being presented in a motion picture theatre at popular prices.

The Max Gordon production, "Three's a Crowd," in its entirety has been produced by Hassard Short for the New York Paramount, with every member of the original cast appearing in it.

The musical comedy plan in miniature versions, each running 80 minutes, is being extended under a deal with Joe DeMilt, with "Follow Thru," already on the road, and "The New Moon," now in rehearsal. These shows are being routed over the out-of-town Publix houses and the decision to offer this type of entertainment is a result of the success of "Girl Crazy," which has played in many of this circuit's theatres, particularly in the Oriental, Chicago.

Pantages Plans Vaudeville Circuit

Alexander Pantages, theatre magnate, recently in San Francisco for a short stay, revealed plans for a new and independent vaudeville circuit. A coast-to-coast circuit, with units to play in the leading legitimate houses, are among the details of the plan which Pantages said is completed.

He expressed the belief that the day had come for a definite revival of variety attractions, and said he was willing to stake a good part of his fortune on that belief. He indicated that he plans to open a musical revue, titled "Lucky Day" with a cast of 90, at the Columbia in San Francisco during the current week.

America to Hear Organ Recital From Germany

An international organ recital, played by Otto Burkert on one of the largest organs in the world, will be broadcast from Breslau, Germany, over an NBC-WEAF network on Friday, March 25, at 4:15 P. M., E. S. T.

Known as the "Century Organ," it is the greatest in the world inside a closed room. It has 187 voices, 13 transmissions, 15,000 pipes of which 5,000 can be played at the same time, and is electrically operated.

Organist Herr Burkert will include in his program "Passacaglia" by Ditrich Buxtehude," "Schmuecke Dich O Liebe Seels," a choral prelude by Bach, and Fantasy and Fugue in C Minor by Bach.

The recital is presented in cooperation with the Reichs Rundfunk Gesellschaft.

LEE ERWIN

This personable chap, whose organ solos and accompaniments for orchestral overtures are delighting audiences at the Cincinnati RKO Albee, has an interesting musical background, especially for a lad in his early twenties.

Lee received his early musical education in Huntsville, Alabama, where he was born. Later, he started his organ career at Loew's Temple, Birmingham, and subsequently at the Alabama theatre. During his four or five years on these assignments his talent found further expression over radio station WAPI as featured organist and concert pianist.

With the traditional spirit of the ambitious youth for improvement Erwin spent the past year in Paris studying under Andre Marchal. Upon his return to this country, he was assigned his present post.

"King of Jazz" Whiteman At the New York Palace

Paul Whiteman is "holding court" on Broadway again after an absence of more than two years. He and his retinue of musical courtiers are at the Palace theatre for a limited stay and will also be featured from the National Broadcasting Company's New York studios.

Colleen Moore on Coast Stage

Colleen Moore, who five years ago was voted the best box office attraction in moving pictures, but has not been appearing on the screen of late, is filling an engagement at the Alcazar Theatre, San Francisco, where she is taking the lead in the three-act comedy, "A Church Mouse."

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending March 17

The Boris Petroff production, "Revue International," features the favorite entertainments of various nations and is headed by Pola Negri, who is making her Broadway stage debut in this presentation.

This entertaining stage show opens with the cast being introduced via trailers as the Paramount orchestra plays appropriate accompaniments. The orchestra, directed by Rubinoff, really opens the show with their compilation of Irish tunes and is followed by the show itself, in which the David Bines Girls and Boys in the "Germany" scene, are dressed in native costume and do native folk-dances. In the "Spain" scene, Carmencita is featured in a typical Spanish castenet routine, and is followed by the Yacopi Troupe of seven men and one girl. They perform unbelievable feats in their routine of acrobatics and tumbling. Italy is well represented in the person of Eduardo Brito, who beautifully sings, "O Solo Mio." The Bines Girls and the inevitable Apache dancers exemplify the dance spirit of France. Russia is ably represented in the persons of Gypsy Markoff and Sergei Abagoff. Gypsy, for her share, presents a program of accordian playing and Sergei does an outstanding "knife" dance. Pola Negri closes the performance with an amusing skit entitled, "So this is Love." Miss Negri still has a host of friends and undoubtedly gained many new ones during her engagement here. She seems to be more beautiful now than in the old "silent" days, and if applause means anything, her performance was very much enjoyed by the Paramount patrons.

Denver Orpheum

Week ending March 9

The RKO vaudeville this week is the best show since the opening, February 11. It opens with the Covans, four rhythm strutters who put on a quarter hour of fancy dancing of various styles. A colored act then works in solos, duets and fours. Two of them sing "Get Happy" to the accompaniment of two banjos played by other two. Charles Carver follows with his deluxe tricks with poles, apples, a plate and bottle. He balances an 18-foot pole on his chin, throws an orange and catches it on top of the pole. Jack McClallen, headliner, with Miss Doris Ellington and an unprogrammed man, put over a sophisticated dialogue and musical number. Miss Ellington sings a few songs in a good voice. Irene Vermillion puts ginger into the program with a clever dance number. Her dancing and tumbling around are different. The three Beverly sisters, dancers, build up for Irene's entrance and assist later by becoming a musical trio, playing piano, violin and bass viol.

Petroff Signed to Produce at the New York Paramount

Boris Petroff, exponent of the Russian school of stagecraft and a Broadway stage producer for the past 10 years, has been signed to produce all future stage-shows for the Paramount theatre.

Assisting Petroff in his future productions will be David Bines, ballet master; Vincente Minnelli, costumer and scenery designer, and Carmine Vitolo, who will execute Minnelli's designs.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Orpheum

Week ending March 4

Duke Ellington and his Aristocrats of Modern Music are holding forth at the Orpheum and are creating quite a furore, so stage entertainment may be in for a long run here again.

Duke might well be called the Paul Whiteman of colored dance orchestras, only he confines himself to the piano, which he attacks with the enthusiasm of a kitten playing with a catnip mouse.

The band offers a fast moving, well rounded act, in which instrumental solos find a place. A busy drummer sings "Stardust" through a megaphone and Ivy Anderson does "Rhythm in My Soul" and "Minnie the Moocher," garnering from four to six curtain calls at each performance.

The Four Step Brothers, formerly of the Cotton Club, from which Duke Ellington also was graduated, are quite in a class by themselves when it comes to nifty stepping, but even the audience cannot refrain from keeping time with their feet when the orchestra gets into action.

Intricate rhythm is the forte of this musical aggregation and its "Black and Tan" is a revelation of harmony, with the echoes of saxophone and trumpet held together with the insistent undertone of the drums. The treatment of "Limehouse Nights" is something not to be forgotten soon.

With the stage show is presented the screen attraction, "Ladies of the Jury," held for an indefinite run.

Dallas Palace

Week ending March 3

The program at the Publix Palace was completely dominated by a stage show of considerable class this week when Fanchon & Marco presented their Vacation Days idea. The unit was topped in a big way by Zelda Santley, whose impersonations were highly successful. Her imitations included Eddie Cantor, Helen Morgan, Chevalier and Garbo and her impressions were cleverly carried to her audience by lyrics, dialogue and songs. Wilmot and Peters also contributed a novel and entertaining skit with their trick horses in a roping and riding travesty on Western pictures and their comedy was received with much favor. Comedy intertwined in their hoofing was indulged in by Kirk and Lawrence, while Three Jacks and a Queen presented a novel adagio quartet before a black drop which made one of the "Jacks" invisible and presented the illusion that the danseuse was suspended in space. Kathleen Kay as an acrobatic dancer of quite excellent ability completed the program, which had a twelve-girl chorus whose numbers were well executed.

Cambria Joins Producing Staff at the N. Y. Capitol

Frank Cambria, veteran producer of stage productions for motion picture theatres, will become an associate producer with the New York Capitol theatre staff April 1, according to an announcement by Louis K. Sidney, chief of Loew's production department.

Mr. Cambria attracted international attention a decade ago when he produced some of the first "presentations" at McVicker's theatre, Chicago, with Paul Ash.

In recent years Cambria has been a leading producer for the Publix theatres in New York and the East. He will produce alternate shows at the Capitol, with the present associate producers, Chester Hale and Arthur Knorr.

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ending March 11

The stage show at the Mastbaum this week features Maria Gambarelli, premiere ballerina, in her celebrated "Snow Ballet," and Georgie Price acting as master of ceremonies.

The first number shows the chorus in black velvet and ermine in a routine dance. Peggy Bernier, ingenue singer, sings very energetically "Was that the Human Thing to Do?" and appears later with a chorus of boys.

Assisted by a corps of talented dancers, Gambarelli makes of the "Snow Ballet" a thing of grace and beauty. The scene opens with snow falling softly and the ballet in white as Gamby emerges from a lighted house in the background.

Georgie Price, with his inexhaustible fund of humor and high spirits, proves quite a hit as master of ceremonies.

Barto and Mann are genuinely funny in a slapstick comedy act, in which the antics of Barto, who is six feet tall and correspondingly thin and dressed as a baby, convulses the audience.

The finale shows a beach scene with the chorus first appearing in modern beach pajama costumes and ending in the ridiculous bathing costumes of the nineties, as the orchestra plays "In the Good Old Summer Time."

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending March 3

There is a new and novel idea in stagecraft this week in the atmospheric prologue, "The Legend of the Dragon of Virtue," which was conceived and staged by Robert Blair, manager of the Saenger. It tells a thrilling story of the huge dragon who stood guard over the virtue of the Chinese maidens of long ago. Told with music, song and dance, it comes to a sensational finale when the maiden in the story sacrifices herself to the dragon. The cast of players include Marcel Guerman, internationally renowned cellist, Sam Morton, tenor, Fontaine and Le Marr, dancers, and the Strakova-Dragon Dancers. Lou Forbes and his music again features Lee Mason and Louis Prima in a modern musical presentation.

Salt Lake City Orpheum

Week ending March 5

A comedian headliner, Jack McLallen, has an able and captivating coadjutor in dispensing his fun. A quartet of southern harmonizers offer some beautiful musical numbers and are well received. Then the supple Irene Vermillion and her trio of personable assistants present a well formed act with the skilful Charles Carrer filling out the program with his variety of entertainment of music and chatter.

MCA Expansion Sounds Note of Business Growth

High above Broadway, at the crossroads of the world, "the producers of the world's greatest orchestras and entertainment" are busy arranging most distinctive offices to provide additional quarters for a rapidly growing business.

The Paramount Building is the scene of the activities, and the Music Corporation of America is the company.

MCA has taken over the observation tower floor and this acquisition marks the passing of one of Broadway's most popular public show places into private hands.

ED DAWSON

New Hollywood Show Arranged

Harold Kemp, head of the Warner Artists' Bureau, has arranged the new stage show for the Hollywood theatre, beginning March 21. Lou Holtz will again act as master of ceremonies, with Harry Richman heading the bill. Other Broadway entertainers will be featured.

ORGAN SOLOS

MR. AND MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) at the twin stage organs featured the works of Harry Warren, writer of many of the latest hit songs. The numbers were played alternately by the Crawfords and the program consisted of "Old Man Sunshine," "Where the Shy Little Violets Grow," "Here We Are," "Cheerful Little Earful," "Take a Walk,' "Cryin' for the Carolines," "Telling it to the Daisies," "Million Dollar Baby," "Ooh that Kiss," and his latest hit, "You're My Everything." It was all nicely done and audience reaction was favorable.

JOHN HAMMOND (Brooklyn Strand) presented as a prologue to the feature picture, "Hatchet Man," an appropriate program of oriental atmospheric numbers. This appeared to be a welcome innovation to the patrons as their applause at the finish was very good. The program was well played and deftly handled by Hammond. It opened to an oriental scrim setting in which he played as different effect slides were flashed on the screen, at the conclusion working right into the title trailer of the feature.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum) was in exceptionally good voice and sang "You're My Everything" to great applause. However, the community singing of "Cuban Love Song," "All of Me," "This is the Missus," and "When It's Sleepy Time Down South" was lacking in spirit, seeming to indicate that the audience is tiring of this form of vocal music.

JOE STOVES (Jamaica Valencia) not only offered a program of well chosen popular tunes for the audience to sing, but proved to them that he could play difficult compositions as well as songs of the lighter vein. Stoves opened the program with a cleverly worded special version on "Human Thing to Do," and followed with "Just Friends," "Sycamore Tree," "You're My Everything," to which the entire audience sang. As an appreciative gesture to the audience, Stoves then played Gounod's "Faust" in concert style. Good lighting effects, together with the house orchestra joining in the last few bars, brought this to an outstanding finale and earned this popular organist a great reception.

ART THOMPSON (Newark Midland) played a game of checkers with his audiences in his recent novelty entitled "Musical Checkers." This solo was one of the most entertaining ever offered to audiences of this city and their great applause proved their appreciation. The idea was the usual community songfest, but it was built up so cleverly, with checker terms, a checker background for the slides and even the checkerboard motif of the organ console, that every one joined in the fun and sang as loudly as possible to beat Thompson for their "moves" when he "played" his. The audience singing numbers were "Can't Stop Me from Loving You," "Time to Fall in Love," "You Try Somebody Else" and "Faded Summer Love." For Thompsons "moves" he played "Blue of the Night" and "Old Fashioned Home."

DON MILLER (Miami Olympia), who is doing very well here, recently offered a combination instrumental and community singing idea entitled "Songs of Love." Opening with a chorus each of "Love Your Magic Spell" and "Indian Love Call," and playing them instrumentally. Don then introduced Stewart Wright, the Olympia's Singing Usher, who nicely sang a new love song called "You're My Everything," and encored with "I Don't Know Why." The audience then sang a comedy version of "Can't Stop Me from Loving You," "Betty Co-ed," and a closing chorus of "Good Night, Sweetheart." This combination idea is one that has struck a distinctly favorable feeling with this audience and one that is getting Don a lot of popularity.

KEN WRIGHT (Menominee Lloyd's), in addition to his usual song fest, recently presented one of the most humorous "acts" ever offered audiences in these parts. The act was made up of home talent and was a burlesque on the oldtime presentations. Everything from antiquated cartoons, one-reel "meller-drammers" and harmonica playing "hicks" to oldtime "movie" tunes and dances were offered. The "show" closed with a special arrangements to the new song, "Goofus," to which two of the boys danced. This brought the house down and as an encore the entire company offered a special arrangement of "St. Louis Blues," instrumentally and vocally. This was a distinctly different novelty and was the talk of the town for a long while.

OVERTURES

LOU FROHMAN (Brooklyn Madison) and his RKOlians recently presented an overture entitled "Impressions of Radio Stars," which was outstanding both in the way it was played and in the manner in which it was presented. Frohman, a leader very popular in this neighborhood, introduced the novelty, orally, through a "mike." Without any delay he went right into the playing of "Sleepy Time Down South," building it up nicely with a cornet solo, with soft orchestral accompaniment. Andy, at the piano, came in for his share of applause, with his good rendition of "Flapperette." Muted trombone and saxaphone solos of popular numbers were brought in very well. Lou closed the overture with his impression of a wellknown fiddler playing the "hot" number, "Wildcat." Full orchestra carried the number to a grand climax, and brought the boys ready applause.

SOL KLEIN (New York Audubon) and his Twelve Rhythm Masters presented an overture of out-standing quality this week. The presentation was built up of the famous "Morning, Noon and Night Overture," and offered Klein and his aggregation of capable musicians an opportunity to prove their ability and versatility. This popular music director's violin cadenza drew heavy applause, as did the entire overture.

DAVE SMASON (San Antonio Majestic) and his R-K-Olians presented a novelty overture, "A Modern Morning, Noon and Night." Smason's musical arrangement was given in the following style: "The World is Always Waiting for the Sunrise," "Some Sweet Day," with Dave coming in on a violin solo; "Just a Song at Twilight," featuring the maestro, Frank Hernandez and Eugene DeMatteis doing a special turn on their violins with other members of the orchestra playing softly. The musicians closed the concert with a good night song.

AL RICCI (New York 86th) compiled and presented an overture of "Hits of the Day," this week, that was entertaining and drew good applause from the audience. This young, personable and versatile leader has added another enjoyable feature to his presentations, that of a first class microphone outfit and he and the entire orchestra make use of it to good advantage.

FRED SCHMITT (Denver at Denver) and his Denver Grande orchestra, presented a sentimental overture for Valentine week. The feature came near the end when on a drop appeared three huge hearts, on the middle of which were the words: "A Valentine for You." Through a smaller heart at the bottom of the middle one, there stepped one of the prettiest little valentines you ever saw, about eight years old, and she did a mighty clever little dance. The crowd gave her a big hand. The selections played were of the sweetheart variety, thus: "Sweethearts," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "I'd Love to Call You Sweetheart," "Good Night Sweetheart," "You're a Real Sweetheart" and "Sweethearts on Parade."

A DOG WITH SEVERAL TAILS

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 120.—(A) Using the ordinary arc, in what proportion does the light-giving power of a crater increase with doubling of amperage (correct size of carbons being used in both cases)? (B) Do observed results as to crater area, and results as per formula on Page 396 of the Bluebook, agree? (C) Using the ordinary arc and correct lens system, should there be loss of light if the arc current is below 60 amperes? (By "loss of light" we are not referring to the loss at the spot or at the rotating shutter.) (D) With the ordinary arc why is it that there is increased light loss after the amperage is increased above 60?

[Again this week I omit a "Bluebook School" answer while giving a new question. This is done so that "students" may have ample time to prepare their answers without causing interruption in their publication except at certain widely separated intervals. I intended to present the Answer to Question No. 115 in this issue, but for the above reason, decided to postpone this answer until the March 26th issue.—F. H. R.]

In the State of Pennsylvania an exhibitor has passed out cards to his patrons, in what seems a dispute with the projectionists' union, which demands the employment of two men in the projection room, whereas the exhibitor is running with one man. Now it is not my intention to mix up in this particular argument, because I won't know anything about this particular theatre. However one of the cards contained the following statement: "If a motion picture machine requires two men to run it, then a dog should have two tails."

Just what is meant by a "motion picture machine" we are left to guess. Presumably, it means a motion picture projector, and in this matter I thoroughly agree with the exhibitor. The motion picture projector does not require two men to run it, but if we care anything at all about the safety of patrons, the safety of property or the excellence of shows, we must agree that one man should run the projector and do absolutely nothing else but attend to its possible needs while in operation.

I attend the Paramount theatre in New York City, on an average of once a week and have done so for at least three years. In all that time I have been unable to note any visible serious fault in the projection. I visit the projection room of that theatre, I think, on an average of twice a week, and never since the opening of the theatre have I found a motion picture projector in operation without a man right there beside it, watching the picture through the observation port. That is, of course, not the only reason I have not seen faults in the projection, but it most emphatically is one reason, and a very important one, too.

But to get back to Pennsylvania and the above statement as to "running a motion picture machine": True, it only requires one man to do that, but if the man does that competently, he certainly cannot do anything else while that projector is in operation, and since one or the other of the projectors are in operation all the while the show is running, if there is only one man in the projection room who is going to trim the lamps of the idle projector? Who is going to start the idle projector? Who is going to make the fadeover, do the rewinding and other necessary things?

If there is but one man, and he has duties to perform other than "running the motion picture machine," then certainly he must leave that "motion picture machine," in which case a dangerous situation is instantly set up. True, that situation may be set up many times and nothing will happen, but it nevertheless is a very dangerous situation, because when anything happens such as, for example, the starting of a fire, safety of the whole audience may hinge upon the matter of a split second, and if the projectionist be away from the projector, threading the other projector, for example, a thing of that kind may happen, and before the projectionist can get around to the operating projector and get into action, the audience may have detected the fire on the screen, or even have seen flames or smoke through the observation ports.

I have sat in a theatre in which there is but one projectionist and have many times watched the picture run out of frame until the audience hooted and whistled. I have seen other faults lasting as much as a minute—which would not have appeared at all, or at least would have disappeared quickly had the projectionist been at his post of duty beside the projector.

While the exhibitor talks about running a single "motion picture machine," there are in reality at least five machines operating at one and the same time in a modern motion picture projection room. They are a motion picture projector (at intervals two of them), the motor-generator set, the large amplifier, the battery set or its equivalent, a small amplifier, photoelectric cell and its optical system, and other apparatus.

Projection is still not recognized for what it is, and the men engaged in it are not given anything like the credit which is their due and which, in my judgment, must be given if we are to expect consistently maximum results upon the screen and through the horns. The spotlight is a great incentive to effort, and that is something that never even faintly touches one of the most important parts of the theatre.

The projectionist is far removed from the public gaze. Only remotely does the public realize there is such a thing as projection. It sees the manager. The musician parades before its eyes, and even the usher is where he may be seen. On the screen we see the names of the actors, the director, the cinematographer, the film cutter and all the others, but the name of the man upon whose skill and care all these people must depend for the excellence of their own work, is conspicuously absent.

Let us examine this matter. The modern projectionist has charge of the reproduction upon the screen of the work of artists. Unless he has the necessary pride and ambition to excel in his work, plus practical and technical knowledge sufficient to enable him to get the best possible results from the various subjects he is called upon to project, the work of these artists will not be high-grade. In fact, it will be far removed from that level. This is not only true of the screen image, but of the sound as well.

The knowledge requisite to high-grade work in modern projection covers an astonishingly wide range. The projectionist must seek to learn all he can of electrical action so far as has to do with power and light, because unless he has such knowledge in full measure, he cannot possibly cause his equipment motors, rectifiers, transformers, light sources and many other things to work efficiently. For very obvious reasons

The Scope of the SMPE Studies of Theatre Acoustics

[The following is an account of what the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is actually doing in that special branch of acoustics involving the motion picture theatre, in an effort to correct and extend old formulae, which have been found inadequate; and to standardize terms employed in their expression. This report has been prepard by Sylvan Harris, editor-manager of the society.]

At a recent meeting of the Sound committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, under the chairmanship of H. B. Santee, the following outline of activities for the consideration of the committee during the current year was formulated:

1. AUDITORIUM ACOUSTICS.—The sub-committee appointed to study the problem of auditorium acoustics consists of S. K. Wolf, chairman; and P. H. Evans and M. C. Batsell. The growing recognition of the importance of the acoustical properties of auditoriums in connection with the high-quality reproduction of sound, indicates the desirability of a rather complete consideration of these problems. The work of the sub-committee has been divided under the following heads:

Definitions.—This item is to be considered in a broad sense, as well as in the more restricted one suggested by the appellation, and is to include, if possilble, a discussion of the properties of an optimum theatre, that is, a theatre having ideal acoustics. While it is recognized that such an attempt may not be easy, it is nevertheless felt that if a proper acoustic specification of a typical theatre can be shown, this will tend to serve as a reference standard, and to demonstrate the factors which must be considered in making an auditorium acceptable for the reproduction of sound.

Accurate methods of test.—Until most recently, the methods of conducting acoustical tests have been inadequate and, in part, unreliable. Information is to be obtained by the committee on the improvements in present measuring facilities which will be necessary for obtaining accurate data.

Absorption data and acoustic materials.—Among the other matters to be considered by the committee is the danger of accepting data indiscriminately, and in using unchecked and often incorrect information on absorption coefficients of material, as well as a discrepancy in results between different methods of applying materials.

Application of formulae.—The formulae which have been accepted, until recently, as applying generally have now been found to be inadequate under certain conditions. The misapplication of formulae, the importance of recognizing the acoustical effects due to the presence of balconies, as well as the need of properly placing the absorption material which are used, is to be carefully considered by the committee.

Acoustics and wide-band recording and reproducing.—The committee is to include in its study the part that the acoustical properties of auditoriums play in relation to their influence on the recording and reproduction of wide frequency bands.

Ambient noises.—The study is to be extended to include the questions of disturbances emanating from ventilating systems, noises arising in projection rooms and various other causes of interference. The need of correcting such defects in theatres becomes more evident as the width of the frequency band to be recorded and reproduced is extended.

2. RELATION BETWEEN STUDIO ACOUSTICS AND THEATRE ACOUSTICS.—The sub-committee appointed to conduct the study of the relation which exists, and that which should exist, between the acoustical properties of the studio and of the theatre, consists of H. C. Silent, chairman; and W. C. Miller. This sub-committee is to consider carefully the tendency that has been shown in the past to consider recording and reproducing as separate and unrelated problems, in spite of the fact that the relation existing between them, especially as regards the acoustical properties of the studio and the theatre, is of extreme importance.

3. FREQUENCY CHARACTERISTICS.—The sub-committee appointed to study the various problems attendant on the extension of the frequency range in recording and reproducing, and of compensating for such losses as those involved in film printing processes and in reproducing slits, consists of M. C. Batsel, chairman; and R. V. Terry and N. M. LaPorte. By pointing out what the various losses are, and to what extent they occur, arrangements can better be made toward equalization

4. GREATER VOLUME RANGE.—E. W. Kellogg was appointed chairman, assisted by P. H. Evans, of the sub-committee, whose function it will be to study the desirability of extending the range of volume of reproduction. Although great stress has been placed upon the desirability of extending the frequency range, relatively little attention has hitherto been paid to the extension of the volume range, for which reason the committee feels that a study of the matter would be greatly desirable.

5. VARIATIONS IN NEGATIVE EXPOSURES.—Although means of controlling the intensity of the light source used in recording are available, reports from the film processing laboratories indicate that a wide variation in negative exposures is continually being encountered. Such contributing causes of these variations as a change of color of the exposing lamp, and the gradual darkening of the bulb, are to be considered carefully by the sub-committee, consisting of C. Lootens and W. C. Miller, chairmen of the East and West Coast divisions of the sub-committee; and N. M. LaPorte, P. H. Evans and H. C. Silent.

Projectionist Job Just Many in One

he must pretty thoroughly understand the action of light through lenses, and he must have a good knowledge of light action in general. He should have a good knowledge of the effects of auditorium lighting upon the screen image, and the effect of colors used in the screen surroundings upon the image, to the end that he may advise the management intelligently. The modern projectionist must have some knowledge of acoustics and of the acoustical treatment used in the modern theatre. Since he is called upon to take charge of and be responsible for the adjustment, and in many instances the repair, of mechanisms which must function with extreme accuracy, he must have exact knowledge of mechanical action and must have very real ability in the making of mechanical adjustments.

The projectionist must understand the effect of projection angles and of screen surfaces, because both these things bear directly on the excellence of the results he will be able to obtain.

In addition to all this, the modern projectionist should have some "artistic sense," which is necessary to enable him to make intelligent decisions as to whether or not the results upon the screen are all they should and might be.

Modern projection is not a "trade." It is a profession, and should be recognized as such.

JENKINS' COLYUM

DEAR HERALD:

The chief topics of conversation out here now are Marie Dressler in "Emma" and John N. Garner for president. With Marie marching at the head of the film procession carrying the pennant and Garner in the White House dishing out post offices and other jobs, this country ought to come out all right. If they want Garner for president it will be all right with us, for we've about come to think that Hoover—well, no matter what we think, it doesn't count, anyway, but we'd sooner march along with Marie and help her tote that pennant than to be Garner's post master at Rattlesnake Gulch.

We are sorry that "Alfalfa" Bill has thrown his sombrero into the ring from Oklahoma, for there's going to be a lot of dust in that ring before the race is over, and they are going to have to buy a lot of new hats.

Besides that, it is going to weaken Will Rogers' chances, and we're for Will, first, last and continuously up to the morning of election, and after that we may go fishing. Will some one please tell us whether we are a Republican, Democrat, neither or both? Don't tell us we're nothing; we know that already.

But speaking of that war over in China. If we were boss of that Chink army we'd tell those Japs to go back home and mind their own business or we'd kick the whey out of 'em. We'd chase 'em into the Yangstekickapoo river and if they couldn't swim that would be their hard luck. Then we'd ask the League of Nations what they were going to do about it. If we had all the notes that have been written by the League and Uncle Sam protesting the Japs' program, we could start a paper mill. If they are going to deal exclusively in notes they should send a bouquet with them. We used to send notes to our girl, but we never got anywhere until we wrapped 'em around goldenrod, and from then on the field was ours.

Through the courtesy of Don Eddy and Andy Hervey, publicity folk for Radio, we were privileged to witness a preview of "Saddle Buster" and "Carnival Boat."

In "Montana Rides," Tom Keene, Helen Foster and Marie Quillan (sister of Eddie) do most of the chores and brings home oodles of bacon. It has some of the best rodeo shots we have seen even in Pendleton or Ogallala or Cheyenne.

"Carnival Boat" is a title that may mislead you a little. There were only a few showboat shots in it. It is a story of lumber milling mainly, with Bill Boyd, Ginger Rogers, Fred Kohler, Hobart Bosworth, Marie Prevost, Edgar Kennedy and Harry Sweet. Were we to advise you (which we are not going to do) if you and your friends don't like it then you better all stop at the first asylum you come to, for there's something wrong with you.

If any one tells us that Joe Sherman, publicity director for MGM, isn't 100 per cent any way you are a mind to take him, we are going to hit him right on the nose, cop or no cop. Joe turned us loose in his "still" room (No, he hasn't any still; that's the room where he keeps his still photographs) and told us to pick out any photographs of the stars we wanted. Did we pick 'em out? Well, ask our daughter Marjorie Bradley. It cost us 23 cents postage to send them to her, and when she gets them and gets them framed in their lobby there will be fans and flappers around that lobby like flies around the bunghole of a molasses barrel.

Don't tell us that these publicity boys out here at these studios are not all right. There's a law against fighting except where you have a good cause, and we wouldn't want any better cause than that. Joe says that Marie is ill and not able to be about, but he is going to try and arrange for us to have our picture taken with Clark Gable and Polly Moran, and if he does that you can hear us sing "Away Down South in Dixie" from here until we get to Dallas, Texas. Then after we get north of Oklahoma we'll sing "Marching Through Georgia."

Yesterday we met Charley Murray out on the Universal lot. We said to him, "Say, Charlie, you can't guess where we saw a picture of Murray and Mack that was hung in the lobby of the Beckwith theatre." And before we could finish he said "Dowagiac, Michigan." Then we said we saw another one in the Bird Cage theatre, and he said, "Tombstone, Arizona." These pictures were hung in those theatres 50 years ago. Don't it beat all what memories these Irish have? Hope Polly remembers US that long.

We want to thank Mr. Johnson, publicity director for Universal, for a nice bunch of star photos. He's like all the rest of the boys, ready to lend a helping hand to the needy.

Everything seems to go haywire with our chances to have our pitcher took with Polly and Marie. We'll betcha if the girls know how handsome we are they'd be tickled to death to be photographed with us.

If Joe's children can open their mouths as wide as Joe can, they can swallow a Hubbard squash. "Fireman, Save My Child" is a picture worth while.

And then here's some more good news for Nebraska. Maybe we will start for Texas next week.

Wider IMPPA Scope Is Urged by Freuler

John R. Freuler, president of Big Four, this week urged the recently formed coast association of independents to work out interchangeable trade deals with the major companies to further strengthen their position.

Freuler cited the independent producer as a source of talent for the majors—who will bring the new players to the fore.

"The present limited studio activities of some of the national companies would permit the renting of sound stages and of elaborate sets to the independents at a price compatible with their budgets," says Freuler, "in exchange for which the independent producer could take some of the talent under contract to the major companies when they have not found suitable vehicles for them. A reciprocal arrangement could thus be evolved to the material good of both.

"There are infinite possibilities to the number of such arrangements which could be evolved once the independents have a solid front and can trade, with some degree of parity, with the large units, and since their reputability goes unchallenged."

Morrison Sponsors Hale in Act, Places Carrillo on Publix Time

Leo Morrison this week concluded negotiations with Publix whereby Leo Carrillo will appear at all the large theatres of the Publix circuit, including the Paramount at Brooklyn and at New York, where Carrillo's new picture, "Broken Wing," opens next week.

Georgia Hale, who appeared in a Chaplin picture and who has since been engaged in picture and radio work, will be starred in an act which Morrison plans to send on the road.

Cremonim Named to Represent Italian Trade Paper in U. S.

J. V. Cremonim, of the Cremonim-Wood Corporation, New York, has been re-appointed American representative for "Kinema," Italian motion picture trade publication.

Crenonim is vice-president and treasurer of the recently formed company with which he is associated. The firm is engaged in the export of portable theatre sound equipment, amplifier and sound accessories, and handles motion picture productions abroad.

Biblical Film in Production

"Joseph and His Brethren," based on the biblical episode, being done as a Jewish talker, is now in production in the East, under supervision and direction of George Roland. The cast includes Ben Adler. Immediately upon the completion of this, "The Jewish King Lear," now in preparation, will go into production. Empire State Pictures. New York, will distribute.

Rockwell Books Mills Bros. at Publix

The four Mills Brothers, who have been playing RKO time, will make a tour of the Publix circuit, that concern having concluded negotiations this week with Tom Rockwell, who manages the crooners.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

I HAVE WONDERED A GREAT MANY times how many exhibitors are of the same opinion as myself in regard to producers using music with dialogue. For me, it has ruined a great many parts in different pictures and especially so with juvenile voices. A child's voice seldom records as clearly as grownups' and the music drowns it out.

Recently I wrote a producer in regard to this and he replied:

"I wish to thank you for your letter in which you offer some comment and suggestions regarding musical background used in our pictures. We always endeavor to keep the volume down to a level where it does not interfere with the dialogue. In fact, our main object in putting background music in pictures in the first place was for the benefit of the smaller houses so as to provide the maximum amount of entertainment during the running of the picture. Also, you have no doubt noticed in pictures where after fifty or sixty feet of silent film has been run the voice comes in with somewhat of a jar and the background music serves to smooth out and connect the silent and synchronized scenes."

His reasons are not proven by facts. Feature pictures, without music in the background, are much more satisfactory than where they have it. When a person is speaking, they do not want to strain to hear what is said, and this you have to do and more especially with children. Many times one cannot hear a word that is said.

I would like to see you run a coupon in the HERALD, asking opinion of exhibitors on this subject.

Music, when there is no dialogue, is wonderful, but it should fade out when dialogue starts, is my opinion.—D. E. FITTON, Ozark Theatres Corporation, Harrison, Ark.

Ufa to Premiere German Films At Brecher House in New York

Ufa Films in New York has verified the conclusion of a deal with Leo Brecher, "intimate cinema" operator, whereby premiere presentation of Ufa's German talkers in New York will be held at Brecher's Little Carnegie Playhouse. Ufa recently permitted its lease on the Cosmopolitan, where it had opened the films previously, to lapse.

Brecher will also distribute these films throughout the country. The first German film to open at the Little Carnegie under the deal is "The Tempest," starring Emil Jannings, on Tuesday of the current week. Frederick Wynne-Jones has resigned as head of Ufa Films, Inc., in this country, succeeded by Ernest Eisle, acting as president, and Herbert Gray as vice-president.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

A SIMPLE EXPEDIENT NOW BRINGS YOU BETTER PICTURES

A YEAR ago Eastman announced the first super-speed negative film—a medium that helped to set up new artistic standards in the motion picture industry. Now a simple expedient—a gray backing on the film base—gives you even better pictures. When you run a release that is truly exceptional in photographic quality, the chances are it was made on this perfected Eastman Super-sensitive Negative. Eastman Kodak Co. (J. E. MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 106, No. 13 — March 26, 1932

MR. KENT AND FOX FILMS

THE announcement in this week's news pages that Mr. Sidney Kent becomes the active operating general manager of the Fox Film Corporation is by way of being not only big news concerning that much discussed and imposing corporation, but also decidedly good news for the whole of the motion picture industry.

The number of executives of Mr. Kent's rank of attainment and record of performance is so small in the motion picture industry that in these critical, trying days of "the reconstruction" it could ill afford the loss of such a unit of manpower to another field.

The closing of the contract with Mr. Kent by the Fox corporation is in the nature of most positive answer to any number of the assorted rumors of plans of liquidation or merger variously alleged to have been held by the great Chase bank interests, controlling the financial background. Mr. Kent as general manager means a declaration that the Fox company is definitely committed to remaining importantly and aggressively in the business of making and distributing motion pictures.

No other executive move in many years has been the subject of so wide and general interest in all departments of the motion picture business. MOTION PICTURE HERALD has been receiving inquiries from even the most remote and unexpected ramifications of the business ever since Mr. Kent's departure from the Paramount Publix Corporation. The exhibitor operating even the smallest house in the back-country cross roads knows his name and has been interested in what his next affiliation might be. Operating primarily as a sales executive these many years Mr. Kent has experted a pressure and influence of personality reaching deeply into the fabric of the industry.

Mr. Kent and the Fox corporation are happily presented with a somewhat unique opportunity to proceed into operation on new and aggressive policies, if they choose, with all of the freedom of a new concern, which in substance, by reason of personnel and other changes, the Fox corporation is.

There are certain assurances that Mr. Kent in his new post is likely to find himself also more completely than ever before in his industrious career empowered to put through the execution of his judgments and policies to their ultimate application. It may be observed that in his prior high post he was the powerful heir apparent, while at Fox now he assumes the throne of final authority.

LOCUS OPERANDI

THE press is vibrating slightly just now to sundry promotions by individuals and official campaigns aimed at attracting some motion picture production to Florida, which in years agone was somewhat of a film making region. Assuredly, motion pictures have been made and can be made in Florida, and the industry might benefit by a diversion of some of the present Hollywood concentration. However, it may perhaps one day be discovered that the really important motion picture production center should be slightly above the upper end of the producer's spinal column and back of the ears. The smart frontal region is dangerous. The geography of motion picture production is merely a heritage and a habit.

PRESS REACTION

THE public press has habits and grooves of thought as well defined as those of the individual. Sharply pointed example is afforded in the ridiculous, hurried circulation of rumor that the passing of George Eastman was part of a picture of financial entanglement and crisis. The publication of such report about a concern with something in excess of fifty millions in cash, government bonds and other prime securities, reflects no credit on the habit of the press mind, or its responsibility to readily ascertainable facts. It may also be pointed out that the extreme probabilities are that had there been any such complication of interest in the picture, Mr. Eastman would be alive today, doing something about it.

THE RED GODS CALL

ADVENTURE takes its inspiration from a curious divergence of sources. Once upon a time a blithe Mr. Beau Brummel stepped out for a stroll in a shiny new hat that started a rage for beaver and half a world away sent pioneering trappers across the wilds of North America to lay down the foundations of a history for the United States and Canada of today.

Now it is the motion picture camera in quest of the filmy stuff of audience emotion and interest in the far places and peoples that keeps the line of adventurers alive.

About the Museum of Natural History in New York, and around the cutting rooms of the city's commercial laboratories, the Young-Men-Going-Somewhere gather and talk of plot and plan. Just now one is aiming to bring back the North Pole in pictures. Another sailed a few weeks ago on an avowed errand to China which will prove to be a cinema assault on Mt. Everest. Yet another, with a flair for the cold countries, is negotiating with the Soviet for permissions which will let him try for something weird and sensational up on the remote Arctic rim of Siberia. Another is going into the Andean highlands of South America, with a side scheme to bring back some live royal Peruvian chinchilla breeding stock for fur farmers.

In the main, audiences, as is being contemporarily evidenced by the reception of "Explorers of the World," have more enthusiasm for such film than the industry holds generally. The business of the screen need not be exclusively fiction.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

JUST MARRIED!

Marriage of Hollywood to Broadway by the talking picture has taken something of the charm from that Coast institution, says ROBERT E. SHERWOOD in McCALL'S, thus:

. . . In the early pioneer days of ten years ago, the conduct of the more frolicsome film stars did bear a certain resemblance to the conduct of suddenly rich prospectors in Dawson City, or of sailors released on shore leave in Marseilles. But that has changed, especially since the arrival of the third stage, the "Marriage With Broadway." Since then, Hollywood has lost its uncouth, frontier quality, and also much of its charm. It is now altogether too sophisticated, too high-toned, to be capable of the outburst of unbridled hilarity which once caused it to gain dishonorable mention in sensational newspaper reports and in equally sensational sermons.

This marriage with Broadway, by the way was not of Hollywood's choosing. It was a ceremony compelled by Wall Street. It followed the introduction of sound as an adjunct to the moving shadows on the screen, and it has resulted in such an upheaval as no art or industry has ever known before. It has had a profound effect on the cinema (there are plenty of people who consider it a disastrous effect) and it has exerted an incalculable influence on Hollywood's state of mind. Since the bankers have assumed control, and since the influx of new actors and new writers from New York, the old delusions of grandeur have, to a large extent, vanished and in their place has appeared an uncomfortable sense of realism.

REMEDY

If Rev. George Reid Andrews had any real remedy for inferior motion pictures, Will Hays "would fall on his neck and embrace him," says an editorial writer in the TELEGRAM of BRIDGEPORT in CONNECTICUT, with the following comment under the heading, "Movies, Press and Radio":

The Rev. George Reid Andrews, pastor of the Park Street Congregational church of Bridgeport, delivered an address before the Waterbury Women's club, in the course of which he is reported by the Waterbury Republican to have heaped "vitriolic censure" on the moving pictures, the newspapers and the radio. In part Dr. Andrews was reported to have said:

"Don't expect too much support from the press . . . (in the campaign for better motion pictures) . . . The moving picture people advertise and that determines the policy of the newspaper with respect to the motion picture. It is a rare editor who will say anything derogatory about moving pictures and if by chance such a thing creeps into a news story, an editorial will follow, calling the speaker to task and not the situation he decries. The press is waning in power. It is becoming a chain institution with one desire—distribution, readers and advertising. The newspapers will run no risk of alienating a large group. The press fears any type of social control which will make censorship, and I am against censorship myself for it is a two-edged sword."

Dr. Andrews attempted to reform the movies but failed because, as he explained it, some of the key men in his own group were bought by the motion picture people. They were put under retainers as "advisers" to the industry.

We should like to know from Dr. Andrews exactly what he would do to the movies if he had the power. If he means that a great many of the motion pictures produced today are pretty poor entertainment, he has both the press and the public on his side, as shown by frequent criticisms from the one and lowered box office receipts from the other. But if he had any real remedy for this condition, Will Hays would fall on his neck and embrace him.

RESPONSIBILITY

The OBSERVER-DISPATCH of UTICA in NEW YORK editorially places the responsibility for "inferior or harmful films" upon the community itself, in quoting from a reply of Mr. Carl E. Milliken to critics of the industry. Says the newspaper editorial writer:

When better motion pictures are made, the communities which support motion pictures will make them, says Carl E. Milliken, secretary to the motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in reply to a criticism of the industry made by a religious weekly.

Mr. Milliken lists a half-dozen reasons why, better pictures are not available in spite of the protests of those who blame the cinema for so many of our troubles. The average community, he writes, faces the following situations:

Most of the children of school age down to the fifth grade attend the motion picture theatres on the average of once a week.

The great majority of parents assume no responsibility for choosing the shows suitable for their children, with the result that these children attend any and all pictures without home guidance.

The motion picture programs are generally arranged in the same haphazard fashion, without special reference to the entertainment needs of children. If the theatre manager discovers no indication of interest on the part of the parents, he assumes none himself, letting well enough alone.

Two out of five motion pictures, on the average, are suitable for the entire family. These figures Mr. Milliken takes from impartial review boards which make a special point of listing films as suitable for children, adolescents, adults. Compared with the recent survey of juvenile books which disclosed only 140 out of 800 as worthy of recommendation, Mr. Milliken believes the film average is not without merit.

Finally, the experience of hundreds of communities has demonstrated the possibility of co-operation between theatre managers and socially-minded groups to the end of protesting programs satisfactory to the entertainment of children and young people.

This candid exposition of the troubles of the producers and managers puts the responsibility for inferior or harmful films on the community itself, meanwhile stating the discouraging truth again that the very films hailed by civic groups as having the greatest social value are generally losses at the box office.

KENT IN CHARGE OF FOX OPERATIONS; WOOLAMS HANDLES COAST FINANCE

Both Elected Vice-Presidents at Meeting of Board of Directors, Completing Film Corporation's Executive Staff

Sidney R. Kent has joined the Fox Film Corporation. At a meeting of the board of directors on Tuesday afternoon, in New York, Mr. Kent was elected vice-president in charge of operations, and Leonard A. Woolams was elected a vice-president with supervision over finances in Hollywood. The company's executive staff, thereby, becomes complete.

President Edward R. Tinker of Fox, in officially announcing the simultaneous consummation of negotiations with Mr. Kent and his election to the vice presidency, said:

"I have realized since assuming the duties of my office that what Fox Film Corporation most needed was a general executive of outstanding experience in the motion picture industry. For some time I have been hoping Mr. Kent would be available. I consider it most fortunate for the corporation that at last a mutually satisfactory arrangement has been made whereby Mr. Kent takes up his duties beginning April 4.

"Mr. Kent comes to us at the height of a notable and successful career. He has made an outstanding record, not only as an executive but as a leader. It is a matter of consequence to the motion picture industry that he will remain to participate actively in its development.

"The last two years have been trying times for all business. This industry has learned that it has no immunity from those influences which swing the tide of business. It is beginning to apply to its affairs those rules of sound management, without which no industry ever prospered long. It is developing a consciousness of its responsibilities to the public and to its stockholders. Mr. Kent's record is in complete accord with this philosophy of business management.

"No one in the industry is more highly esteemed by his business associates or enjoys a larger measure of public confidence. His association with the corporation will do much to assure the success of the constructive plans outlined by the board of directors some months ago."

Mr. Kent resigned as vice president, director and general manager in charge of sales of Paramount Publix on January 25th, after an association of 14 years. Under Adolph Zukor, president, Kent had been general manager of Paramount for six years before his election to the vice presidency. He terminated his association with the corporation quite abruptly following a company conference with John Hertz, a Paramount director.

Kent has been, for many years, an ardent advocate of block booking as the most economical means of distributing motion pictures, and he also has played an important part in the celebrated 5-5-5 "standard contract" conferences between theatre owners and distributors. The sessions were held some years ago, as a means of amicably adjusting contractual differences between distributors and exhibitors.

Immediately upon Kent's resignation from Paramount in January, rumor linked his name with many companies, principally RKO and Fox. Discussions were held between David Sarnoff, of the Radio Corporation, on behalf of RKO, and with President Hiram Brown of RKO, and with Kent; but late in February, Mr. Sarnoff officially announced that "discussions" which followed "an invitation" extended to Mr. Kent to join RKO had "terminated."

Kent's name was next linked with that of the Fox companies, but at that time this was considered based upon a sequel of stories of endeavors in certain so-called "downtown" quarters to interest Mr. Kent in the Fox situation. In the meantime, President Tinker returned to New York from conferences with studio officials in Hollywood and then negotiations were launched which eventuated in his election to the executive vice presidency this week.

Further discussion by President Tinker of the current, and one of the most important meetings of the Fox directorate, brought forth the statement:

"Acquiring the services of Mr. Woolams enables the corporation to put in charge of its finances on the Pacific Coast a man with a long record of successful business accomplishment in California. He served for many years as vice president and treasurer of the California Packing Company, prior to which he was manager of Price, Waterhouse and Company in San Francisco for several years. This experience thoroughly qualifies Mr. Woolams to handle the multitude of financial problems connected with our extensive theatre and studio operations on the west coast. Mr. Woolams' time will be divided between the coast and New York where he is well known through his services as vice president of Transamerica Corporation.

"A few weeks ago the corporation announced that it had completed the reorganization of its western properties by the establishment of a management board to direct the affairs of the studio and by signing a management contract for the operation of Fox West Coast Theatres. The election of Mr. Kent and Mr. Woolams rounds out our executive organization. Its personnel should be adequate to all future needs of the corporation with such department heads as W. C. Michel, in charge of home office operations and liaison officer with our theatre organizations; Richard A. Rowland, New York production executive working in liaison with the production department in Hollywood; J. R. Grainger, in charge of sales; C. E. Richardson, in charge of finance in New York; Leonard A. Woolams, in charge of finance in the west and Glenn Griswold, in charge of public relations."

Leonard A. Woolams was born and educated in England and went to San Francisco in 1910 as chartered accountant associated with Price, Waterhouse & Company. He assisted in the organization of the California Packing Corporation in 1917 and later was elected vice president and treasurer of that company. In June of 1930 Mr. Woolams became vice president of Transamerica Corporation. Mr. Woolams is a resident of San Francisco. He is a director of California Packing, the Simmons Company, The United Parcels Company and Bancamerica-Blair Corporation.

Sidney Kent Confirms New Fox Affiliation

Immediately following his election to the post of executive vice-president in charge of operations of the Fox Film Corporation, Sidney R. Kent said:

"I hereby confirm the statement of Mr. E. R. Tinker, president of Fox Film Corporation, that I have joined that company in the capacity of executive vice-president in charge of operations. I am deeply grateful for the offers that have been made to me since my resignation from Paramount Publix Corporation. However, after weeks of negotiation and investigation, I have decided that association with the Fox Film Corporation offers the opportunity most attractive to me from many angles. There is no doubt in my mind that the company, long one of the leaders in the industry, not only can be restored in due time to a position of prosperity, but will be a unit in the business of which everyone—officials, directors, stockholders and those in the industry who appreciate that a clean and healthy company, even as a competitor, is a decided asset to the entire business—may well be proud. To this work in all its phases, to Mr. Tinker and to the directors, I shall give all I possess of ability, loyalty and effort."

Ohio Exhibitors Must List Film on Tax Return, Ruling

The tax commission of Ohio has ruled that exhibitors must show in their returns the film actually in their possession on January 1, 1932, it is indicated in a letter addressed to members of the MPTO of Ohio by P. J. Wood, business manager.

THE IRON BOSS—JEREMIAH J. KENNEDY

Motion Picture's First Great Efficiency Engineer Was the Man Who Made This an Industry

By TERRY RAMSAYE

The dawn chapters of the motion picture saga have passed into history and with them now the adventuring founders are passing like a pageant of shadows into the great final fade-out. In the last year the twilight has closed over the careers of four of the masterful builders of the foundations upon which the structure of a world industry stands today. First, in late summer, went George Kleine, the cultured, diplomatic first skilled merchandiser of motion pictures. In mid autumn Thomas Edison, creator of an industrial era, lay down to rest "for an eon or two" in that West Orange where forty-and-odd years ago he brought forth the motion picture. This bleak March in Rochester George Eastman, who first made film, the magic fabric for the dreams of a romance hungry world, in his stern, deliberate, decisive way went over the frontier into his Never-Never Land. And now we come to the recording of the end of the graph for the motion picture's first great efficiency engineer, Jeremiah J. Kennedy, the organizer who made this an industry.

It will soon be two full decades since the world of the motion picture passed from under the rule and dominance of this great Iron Boss, Kennedy. Rather more definitely and completely than any others of the early chieftains he had these many years passed into tradition, forgotten entirely to the Broadway he helped so mightily to make, and remembered only by a few of today's inheritors of the screen who felt his strong hand in their novice years.

So completely had Kennedy been forgotten that word of his death at his quiet residence over in Second Street, Brooklyn, on February 16, did not reach the amusement centers of Manhattan until this week.

Before Kennedy the motion picture had no rule, no laws, no ethics. Under him it became an orderly industry with a Prussian discipline. After him came a new era of chaos, but not a chaos complete, as men sought mastery. Meanwhile he is likely to stand in history as the most absolute ruler and most powerful executive of the motion picture. No such opportunity as he found or made can occur again.

To some several executives deep in the moil of the problems of 1932, there may be special interest and encouragement in the record and story of the coming of Jeremiah J. Kennedy in 1907—a year of panic without and despair within.

Mr. Kennedy, a civil engineer with a flair for business management, and a belligerent two fisted method of administration, had by that year accumulated a comfortable fortune and was looking about him for the pastime activities of an early retirement, barely on the threshold of a robust middle age. He had come up through the hard discipline of railroad building and operation and large industrial enterprises. He knew corporation practice of all the schools of that art, including the Gould system. He also knew what he wanted, how much he wanted and when he had got it. Work was not yet for him an enslaving habit; he knew what money was for.

Now, in this bitter 1907, an obscure motion picture concern, the American Biograph and Mutoscope Company, which had come into being very considerably because of a defection in the Edison organization, was suffering with the doldrums of the business and the drains of a desperate patent war with Edison, in progress since 1897. The Biograph concern failed to meet the interest on a bond loan of some $200,000 held by the Empire Trust Company of New York. Friends in the trust company prevailed upon Kennedy to take a look at the Biograph situation and see what he might liquidate out of it for the bond holders.

Kennedy went up to 11 East 14th Street, the old brownstone home of Biograph, and looked at the books. He examined the status of the litigation and held weighty conference with Henry Norton Marvin, the inventor engineer of the K.M.C.D. Syndicate which had founded Biograph. Kennedy decided that there was nothing to be had by liquidation, but much that possibly might be won by operation. He set about the seemingly impossible task of solving Biograph's problems by solving them for the whole of the world of the motion picture.

A Kennedy-Marvin program of action resulted in development and acquisition by Biograph of a group of all important patents concerning motion picture projection, including the Latham loop, the Pross shutter and the several projector patents of Thomas Armat. For the purposes of controversy at least, a technological picture was created in which it appeared that only Edison could lawfully make a motion picture and only Biograph could lawfully project it. Kennedy, in his square jawed, broadshouldered manner, made the moves and the bluffs and the gestures. George Kleine came on from Chicago to be an intermediary and to sit in council with Edison in West Orange and with Biograph in Fourteenth Street. Peace was made with a plan for patent domination of the young industry, then in the first fervor of the early years of the mad rise of the nickelodeon.

Kennedy's organization engineering came to flower with a dinner at the Brevoort hotel in lower Fifth Avenue one December day in 1908. The Motion Picture Patents Company was announced. Every reputable or quasi reputable maker of motion pictures was to be licensed—and the field closed. Every film was to be licensed and every projection machine was to be licensed, and all were to pay royalties to the Patents Company.

With a high degree of efficiency the plan worked for a time, with an inevitable rising fringe of independents, and an ensuing new line of litigations based on infringements, vigorously pursued by Kennedy's organization of lawyers and investigators.

No name among those members of the great dominant group of Patents Company licensees survives today in production: Edison, Essanay, Kleine, Melies, Biograph, Vitagraph, Lubin, Pathe and Selig —nine giants of yesterday.

Kennedy, with a vision of developments to come, played deftly with his poker wits in the young organization. He persistently refused to set or discuss a salary for his leadership as the operating head of the industry. The board grew alarmed and insisted on a deal, tentatively offering $25,000 a year and raising it to $50,000 before it could reach him.

"No, boys, I'll gamble with the future of the business," he responded. "Just give me ten per cent of the net." They were vastly relieved and accepted promptly. In the ensuing few years that 10 per cent paid Kennedy millions, more obviously than could be paid to any one of the nine producer members of the group after the deduction of his share.

Kennedy's aims were far beyond the status of the apparent first adjustment under the Patents Company. He intended complete control from studio to box office. Motion pictures were then being sold to an unorganized scattering of middlemen or exchanges, on a footage basis. Kennedy adroitly suggested and got official board action in support of a plan to open "a model exchange" in New York. It was to be an exemplar of exchange operation for educational purposes within the trade. It certainly so proved to be. The model exchange, before the industry was aware, was nothing less than the General Film Company, acquiring every important exchange in the United States and Canada, and by Patents Company grip on the product forcing these exchanges to permit General Film to buy them out on notes retired with earnings, or in other words Kennedy arranged to buy out the motion picture industry with its own money borrowed from it in advance. General Film, rising in 1910, achieved for a period a 90 per cent control of the industry. As much accused and accursed as he was, Kennedy, nevertheless, by his disciplines and economies and efficiencies made more money even for his "victims" than they had made for themselves in the anarchy of the pre-Patents Company days.

ORGANIZED THE PATENTS COMPANY

Down at 52 Broadway the Kennedy offices expanded to cover a floor, filled with the offices and charting tables of accountants and engineers. Kennedy set up a scientific graph control system and statistical organization which has had no successor in the industry. It worked with uncanny effectiveness. His system of operation was based on exhaustive, swift information. He put over the industry an espionage organization, made necessary by the crude ethical viewpoints of the time, and collected on a map and chart report under his blotter the daily story of every invasion of rules and contracts. He warred on duping of pictures, on bicycling, on premature release, and invasions of the automatic exhibitor protection system involved in the then effective system of selling film on an age basis in volume programs. Kennedy's espionage system was remarkably effective at dramatic moments.

When John R. Freuler, Harry E. Aitken, Robert Lieber and other independents, with great secrecy, decided to form a competitive distribution and production concern, the project which became in time the Mutual Film Corporation, they communicated by code messages and set up an appointment in St. Louis and then, lest Kennedy hear of it, on the last day secretly and by wire changed the meeting place to the Hotel Claypool in Indianapolis. As they gathered for that meeting a bellboy walked in with a wire addressed to those present in care of the room number. reading:

"You have my best wishes for success."

J. J. KENNEDY.

Mr. Kennedy made, and was never credited with, endless efforts at the general betterment of the standards of the industry in both product and practice. Some of his endeavors met with curious reactions within his own organization.

He put before the board of directors of General Film a proposal that in behalf of the improvement of pictures the judgment of an unbiased committee should each week elect the poorest release and that the company should then take up the negative, burn it and pay the producer his normal cost plus normal profit on a standard release, and fill the spot in the program by a double order on the product voted best. The board was in terror of Kennedy and tried to give him action. The directors voted, however, to retire and destroy the best product of the week, because, they reported to Kennedy, "none of our members would enjoy having his picture voted the worst of the week."

In response to this Mr. Kennedy made an address lasting ten minutes, with not a word which can be set down in type.

Kennedy was also strongly instrumental in encouraging the equivalent of a scheme of internal discipline in the industry by lending support to the movement of the People's Institute in opposition to legal censorship resulting in the formation of the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures, which became the present National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. It was, for his day, a concept tantamount to what the Production Code of today essays.

One of Kennedy's important aids in the systematization of the motion picture industry was W. W. Hodkinson, then a Salt Lake exhibitor and exchangeman. Hodkinson came on to New York to sell his exchange to General Film and curiously the transaction took less than five minutes, because Kennedy's figures and Hodkinson's were practically identical. Hodkinson became a district manager controlling the Pacific Coast for General and handled an amazingly large fraction of the gross business. He was an ardent statistician and maker of charts, pleasing in the eyes of Kennedy. It was Mr. Hodkinson's General Film experience and observation which brought him in time to the formation of Paramount, when it became apparent that the die-hards and self-assured conservatives of the General Film group were not going forward.

It is now nearly twenty-two years since I won an audience with Mr. Kennedy in behalf of an elaborate plan of motion picture promotion and selling, in the service of a Chicago advertising agency. He listened, read the specimen advertisements and surveyed the charts of the plan. Up to that time there had been, in effect, no motion picture advertising to the public in a modern sense.

"It will work, young man," he remarked, "but you are some years too early. The motion picture's big selling problems are within itself yet, not with the public. We shall have to do a great deal to the studios and the picture makers yet before we are ready to go to the public."

The rising independent opposition to the rule of Kennedy and his machine came to its sharpest personal focus in the movements of Carl Laemmle, then a Chicago exhibitor, budding into exchange operations and dipping a tentative hand into production. This broke into a long litigation.

Then, somewhat more nearly within, came the parallel war with William Fox, New York exhibitor with his Greater New York Film Rental Company, who sought, with some success, to compel by injunction, politics and force, to service by General Film product to his socalled independent exchanges, which he refused to sell at the figures in Kennedy's little black book. This too went on in the courts endlessly.

Kennedy was through this war in fact keeping the battle in the courts while the patents at the foundation of his mechanism were approaching expiration, and also while certain processes which he recognized as signifying dissolution were taking place among his own member licensees and producers.

Despite the proclamations of some several claimants to the honor of "busting the trust" it was never busted. The decisions rendered against it were too late to have a real bearing, and besides, on ex-

SCHNITZER PLANNING NEW FILM COMPANY

Independent Production and Distribution Unit Would Handle 24 to 32 Features Similar to Original First National Negotiations are in progress between Joseph I. Schnitzer, who recently resigned as president of Radio Pictures, and financial interests under which a new independent production and distribution unit handling 24 to 32 feature pictures a year is proposed. The general plan of production is similar in formula to the production plan of the original First National Company.

The plan contemplates a group of six to eight independent production units, each unit producing four feature pictures a year. Each production unit would operate with complete independence except for mutually advantageous cooperative arrangements set up by the central organization such as a central casting office and a central story department.

Although the plan is now only in a formulative stage, Schnitzer is reported to have lined up, at this time, five well-known producers now operating as associate producers or supervisors in major studios.

Negotiations are reported to be in progress for distribution of the product of the Schnitzer company through an established exchange system. The details of whether the exchange will supply physical distribution only or sales and distribution, with a supervision of sales from the production company, have not been determined.

Schnitzer is a firm believer in the principle of independent production as represented by the original First National plan, fortified by his experience as general manager of the FBO company when that concern handled a large proportion of independent productions.

RKO Stockholders Reduce Capital and Number on Board

RKO stockholders, at a special meeting at Baltimore on Wednesday, voted to reduce the capital represented by the issued shares of no-par common to $10 a share from $19.94 and voted to reduce the board of directors to 19 members from 23.

The stockholders thereby reduced by $23,148,769 the amount at which the stock is carried on the consolidated balance sheet and added it to the surplus account. Similar action was taken some time ago by RCA, the parent company.

Three new directors were elected at Wednesday's meeting: Joseph A. Bower, De Witt Millhauser and Frederick Strauss.

Bower is president and a director of the Chemical National Company, Inc., New York, and is also president and a director of the Canadian Transit Company and of the Detroit International Bridge Company. He is a director in 11 other companies, including the Chemical Bank and Trust Company, Merritt-Chapman and Scott Company and Shur-On Standard Optical Company.

Millhauser is a member of the banking firm of Speyer and Company of New York and a director in ten companies, including RCA Victor, Associated Rayon and several railroad and steamship companies with lines running in or to Mexico.

Strauss is a member of the banking firm of J. and W. Seligman and Company of New York. He is a member of the executive committee of the Brooklyn and Queens Transit Company, the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation, Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, Electric Bond and Share Company, New York Rapid Transit Corporation, RCA Tri-Continental Corporation as well as a director in those companies and 14 others.

Present from New York for the RKO meeting were Hiram S. Brown, president of the company; William Mallard, secretary; and Del Handle and Harry Pinstein of the legal department.

amination today will be found to be toothless. General Film got a Federal order to cease and desist sundry practices. There was no order of accounting on past profits. The truth is that "the trust" in its few swift years of prosperity got sick of the gout and died of a premature old age.

Kennedy, with a new fortune from the films piled on top of the one with which he started to retire in 1907, about 1914, withdrew from the picture, and went back to occasional engineering at 52 Broadway and a quiet life in Brooklyn, somewhat tired and very bored.

Not long before Kennedy's retirement from the films, D. W. Griffith, inspired by Kleine's importation of features from abroad, got Biograph authority to spend $18,000 on a big picture and brought forth "Judith of Bethulia" for $36,000 and an important success.

When Griffith sought Kennedy for a new adjustment of salary and plans for Biograph, Kennedy dissented. "No, you will not be content to go on as you have. You are headed for the $50,000 picture, and Biograph is not. You'd better follow your new opportunity." The next step was the epochal "Birth of a Nation" for the "independents."

One of Kennedy's last and little known constructive endeavors was in behalf of Adolph Zukor and his idea of screen entertainment on a higher scale. Due to the insistence of Kennedy and his friend H. N. Marvin, the Patents Company licensed "Queen Elizabeth," Mr. Zukor's first feature project, so it could play all licensed theatres. This raised an uproar among the producers for General Film and subsequent "Famous Players" pictures could not be licensed.

Kennedy in his boredom was near the quitting point. He let the matter go with a warning that the Zukor idea would survive and prevail. The subsequent efforts of General Film in the feature field are now more whimsical than important history.

For all the years of his corporation activity in rails, industrials and the films, Kennedy was never interviewed or even seen by the press. In 1925, while engaged in historical research concerning the motion picture, I laid siege to his office, demanding certain facts in the name of history and the record. Kennedy demurred for days. One afternoon at 3 o'clock, he came out belligerent and shirt-sleeved, with a peremptory "Come in."

For the next nine hours I sat across his desk while he strode the floor thundering out an amazing story of the motion picture, turning from file to file for astonishing data, letters, notes and the like.

After midnight we walked out into the dark canyon of Broadway, where his ancient giant Pierce-Arrow was waiting.

"I have never talked about this before —and I probably never will again. I don't know why I did it now," he remarked. "But it's off my chest."

Much of what Kennedy related that night, involving names in high places in the industry, in banking and in statesmanship, will not be set down for the public yet these several years.

My last conversation with him, a few weeks before his death, brought this comment on the current situation in the industry, from the viewpoint of his Brooklyn retirement:

"It still needs a firm hand, still needs discipline."

Mr. Kennedy was a native of Philadelphia. He was 67 years old. For many years his residence has been at 529 Second Street, Brooklyn. He was a member of the Engineers and Lotos clubs of New York, and St. Patrick's Society. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Annie Gordon Kennedy. A solemn requiem mass was offered at St. Michael's church in Philadelphia, February 17.

Sisk an Honor Guest at AMPA

Robert Sisk, new national director of advertising and publicity for RKO and Radio Pictures, is scheduled to be a guest speaker at the regular weekly luncheon meeting of the AMPA at Sardi's, New York, on Thursday. Frank Buck, explorer, whose picture, "Bring 'Em Back Alive," is to be road shown by Van Beuren, is scheduled for the same program.

MARRIED. Ann Dvorak and Leslie Fenton, both screen players, as they returned to Hollywood by airplane from Mexico, where they wed and honeymooned following their cooperative efforts in First National's "The Strange Love of Molly Louvain." Miss Dvorak's first Warner picture was "The Crowd Roars."

ACROSS LOT. John Gilbert, M-G-M star, and Paul Bern, M-G-M executive, imitating a movie as they try to beat the camera click across the studio lot. Gilbert has begun his next starring vehicle, "Downstairs"—his first in quite awhile.

MAKE-BELIEVE AND REALISM: TWINS

Give Us Romantic Realism in Pictures, Says Dr. Pitkin, in Book on "Human Stupidity"

Now comes an erudite professor of many sciences in a ponderous new book to say of the motion picture and its audience just what the motion picture exhibitor across the land is saying, give us "Romantic realism . . . the stuff being real and hopeful."

The professor is Dr. Walter Boughton Pitkin, of Columbia and many universities. The book is, daringly, whimsically, entitled "A Short Introduction to the History of Human Stupidity." It is to be published, in New York by Simon & Schuster, properly on All Fools Day of 1932.

This is an amazing work, with its nonchalance of flippancy presenting a grave and gay mingling of considerations of a large part of the world's greatest damnfoolishness, in the heroic proportions of 574 handsomely printed and bound pages. It is written as one might wish that more books could be written, which is to say without awed consciousness of the word "book."

This Professor Pitkin is somewhat an authority on assorted matters and is an adventurer, psychologist, professor of journalism, lecturer, short story writer, novelist, publicist, commentator, text book author, farmer, horticulturist, amateur architect, expert on printing machinery and color standards, and erstwhile newspaper reporter, editor and editorial writer, occasional substitute minister of the gospel, research expert on antique art, motion picture consultant, etc. . . .

Dr. Pitkin is widely known in the writing world and has been the consultant, and the instructor, of many of today's conspicuously successful writers and newspaper persons. He recently spent a year in Hollywood on scenario and pictorial construction matters.—TERRY RAMSAYE

In his big volume on Human Stupidity, Dr. Pitkin presents this discussion of the motion picture:

"Make-believe is a hang-over from childhood. In those early years it is lusty, largely as a result of the youngster's being as yet unable to distinguish between inventions and realities. It is in the dream that make-believe carries over most smoothly into mature years. It will not endure sunlight, as a rule, but night softens the outlines of its errors. Through its gloom wishes become horses on which the dreamer rides on and on until apocalypse. When dawn breaks, Fact thumps on the door and rudely shatters the shadow world with an alarm clock. Only two important varieties of adults continue make-believe in a serious, orderly fashion: they are the professional story-tellers and the victims of systematic self-deception, be they paranoiacs or merely eccentric introverts.

DR. WALTER BOUGHTON PITKIN indulges in a bit of ballyhoo at the behest of his publishers.

"Proof that the ordinary citizen loves make-believe but cannot indulge in it successfully enough to make it good fun? Look, please, at the immense popularity of short stories, novels, plays and motion pictures! Above all, the 'talkies.' These supply a deep need in dull humanity.

"Call this need the escape from realities, if you will; but do not forget that the particular escape that pleases must be one in which the fugitive departs for a country whose every detail is like that of a real world, while all that happens fulfills some abiding wish of his. Romantic realism, in short; the stuff being real, and the movement hopeful.

"Most people prefer a good talking picture to a stage play. They also prefer it to a silent movie, nine times out of ten. Drama old style has long been dying a natural death, for it has lost touch with reality in several ways. Ever since the passing of primitive pantomime recitals of minstrel and the ritual dances which reproduced events almost literally, the drama has developed under severe restrictions. Its equipment has been absurdly crude. The conventional stage, the lights, the paint and powder of make-up, and all the rest turned the whole affair into a mere language; it became a system of symbols—nowhere more completely than in China—which the spectator had to learn and accept as he accepts, in chemistry, H_2O as the symbol for water. Now, for an imaginative onlooker, this is usually easy and enjoyable. But the simpler fellow who depends on eye and ear has a dull evening.

"The swift and enormous vogue of talking pictures was this simple fellow's response to an art that gave him a hundred times more reality than the finest of stage plays. I know whereof I speak here, because I happen to be one of those simple fellows who, in matters esthetic, depend almost wholly upon the sense percepts for pleasure. All symbolic art—be it in sculpture or verse or novel or drama—not only leaves me cold but irritates me (or sometimes moves me to boorish laughter). In fantasy, so far as drama is concerned, I am 100 per cent stupid. As the herd, so myself here: and I might cite a hundred plays that bore me on the stage but fascinate me on the talking screen. But one allusion is enough. Take 'Street Scene.'

"Elmer Rice, who wrote the play, detests the movies. He thinks the screen version of 'Street Scene' is 'about as good as a movie can be'—which isn't saying much, from his point of view. He condemns the picture's lack of unity and rhythm. 'You can't get those qualities in when you're shown a close-up at one moment and a mob of six hundred people in the next.' Almost in the next breath he remarks: 'The movie crowd in Hollywood won't do with the pictures what the pictures can do best—and that's fantasy. . . .

"Now, to my eyes, the talking version of 'Street Scene' is—putting it cautiously—at least 10,000 times more exciting and lovely than the stage stuff—which is little more than a clumsy child's pottering with colored blocks and rag dolls. I have not seen five plays in all my life which I have enjoyed half so much as any of a hundred of the best talking pictures. Being a slave to percepts, I naturally spend my amusement funds on them; and I get more of them per dime in the pictures than elsewhere. This explains the billion picture lovers all over the world.

"In ten seconds of a talking picture our kind receive more impressions than in ten minutes of the swiftest stage play. When we behold in one shot of 'Street Scene' six hundred yelling, pushing human beings—all real, live creatures, mind you!—we are more impressed than when, on a tiny floor hung with colored cloth, we see a dozen or a score of bedaubed, dressed-up actors symbolizing a great mob. The thing is so simple that great dramatists simply cannot grasp it.

"Anyhow, to write a great play, one has to have a lively imagination; and so one belongs to the other school of taste. Ordinary spectator and extraordinary playwright never meet. The stupidity of the former prevents it scarcely more than the stupidity of the latter in failing to understand what people want. The expert in make-believe is constitutionally blind to certain realities.

"Now for a serious perversion of make-believe."

DISTRIBUTION VOLUME MOVES WEST ACCORDING TO DOLLAR INTAKE

Follow-up Group Named by Steffes

W. A. Steffes, president of Allied States Association, has appointed a committee of five, including himself, which is to act in a "follow-up" capacity, in accordance with a resolution of the recent Detroit convention.

The committee includes: W. A. Steffes, Abram F. Myers, Sidney E. Samuelson, Nathan Yamins, J. C. Ritter. The association statement says: "It is the duty of this committee to follow-up on the work of the convention, to see to it that the work there undertaken is carried into execution, and to detect and expose counter propaganda on the part of other branches of the industry and organizations."

The statement further reports "gratifying progress" in respect to the proposed federal admission tax fight being waged.

Warner Zone Heads Discuss Problems at New York Meet

Theatre policy, future product bookings and general operating problems were discussed at a Warner home office meeting this week, presided over by Joseph Bernhard, general manager of theatres, at which all zone district managers with the exception of those on the West Coast attended. Home office officials present were: I. J. Hoffman, Moe Silver, Dave Weshner, Clayton Bond, Willard C. Patterson, Jules Girden, Mort Blumenstock, Jack Cohen.

Zone managers and bookers present included: William Goldman, Louis Schlesinger, Philadelphia; John Payette, George Crouch, Washington; B. E. Hoffman, Max Hoffman, New England; Harry Kalmine, Frank Damis, New Jersey; Lou Lazar, Wilbur Grant, Upstate New York; John Harris, William MacGreavy, Pittsburgh; Nat Wolfe, Hill Barron, Cleveland; Lee Goldberg, Louisville; James Coston, F. Williams, Chicago; Leto Hill, St. Louis; Sol Hankin, Milwaukee; George Henger, Oklahoma City.

R.C.A. Capital Reduction Move Approved; Firm Pays Dividend

Radio Corporation of America has filed in Delaware a certificate of reduction of capital, after having obtained written consent to such reduction from holders of a majority of the voting shares of the corportation. The reduction was made effective on March 17, 1932.

At a meeting of the board of directors held last week, the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent, equivalent to 87½ cents per share, was declared on the "A" preferred stock. The dividend is payable on April 18, 1932, to holders of "A" preferred of record April 1.

Western Territory's Division of Return Increases 1.78% While East's Falls Off 3.33% from the 1930 Relation

The center of film distribution volume moved westward in the past year, according to a comparison of distribution figures for 1930 and 1931. The records, compiled by the M.P.P.D.A., show that both the East and Middle West suffered a loss in proportionate film distribution volume during the past year, whereas gains were made in the South and West, Far West and Canadian territories, but more noticeably in the Western territory which lies between the Midwest and the Far West.

The figures do not reflect actual gains or losses in sales volume of motion pictures, but indicate proportionate distribution volume as determined by the geographical origin of the distributors' dollar, according to the Hays organization.

A loss in comparative distribution volume of 3.33 per cent was shown during 1931 in the Eastern territory, as compared with the average sales percentages recorded by territories by all companies during 1930. In 1931, the Eastern territory supplied 42.35 per cent of the film distribution of all companies; the figure declining last year to 39.02 per cent. The Middle Western territory showed a decline in film distribution volume of .46 per cent, from 32.90 in 1930 to 32.44 in 1931.

The greatest gain was shown by the Western territory, which increased its motion picture distribution volume 1.78 per cent, from 6.90 per cent in 1930 to 8.68 in 1931. The Southern territory was second in point of distribution improvement for the year, with a gain of .54 per cent. The 1930 sales in the South comprised 6.25 per cent of the country's total distribution, as compared with 6.79 per cent last year. The Far West territory advanced its percentage of the country's total distribution from 8.60 per cent in 1930 to 8.73 per cent in 1931.

From the standpoint of key city changes, the greatest loss in distribution volume during 1931 was shown in the Philadelphia territory where the average dropped 1.5 per cent. The Chicago territory showed a decrease of 1.3 per cent during the year, and Buffalo a loss of 1 per cent. Highest percentage of average gain was shown by the Dallas and Salt Lake City territories, both of which acquired an additional .6 per cent of the country's average national distribution volume during 1931. Canada's increase is fixed at 1.3 per cent for the year.

Following is the apportionment of average national distribution in percentages by districts:

	1930	1931
South	6.25%	6.79%
East	42.35%	39.02%
Middle West	32.90%	32.44%
West	6.90%	8.68%
Far West	8.60%	8.73%
Canada	3.00%	4.34%
	100.00	100.00

MPTOA Head Asks Selective Buying

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will advocate a 10 per cent elimination clause, with no payment to distributors, as its answer to the problem of block booking, expressed at the Washington convention last week as the right-of-selectivity plan.

M. A. Lightman, president, claims that approval of this proposal will not only solve block booking, but make acceptable to the organization the standard exhibition contract which grew out of the 22 months of deliberation in the 5-5-5 conferences. Exhibitors now exercise the right to cancel 10 per cent of the contract provided they pay distributors 50 per cent of the purchase price.

Regional vice presidents of the MPTOA will serve on the executive committee, it has been decided. The independent representation will include: M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Walter Vincent, New York; Joseph Denniston, Monroe, Mich.; Love B. Harrell, Atlanta, Ga.; A. Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C. Affiliated circuits, entitled to one executive committee member, have not elected as yet.

Lesser and Wilson Distributing Unit

Sol Lesser and Frank R. Wilson have formed a new distributing company, known as Principal Distributing Corporation. Lesser is president and Wilson is vice-president.

The new company will handle all product formerly distributed by Talking Picture Epics in addition to taking over 20 exchanges through which Talking Picture Epics product is being handled.

Identity of Talking Picture Epics will be retained as a producing unit with Lesser to have headquarters in Hollywood. Principal expects to release at least 12 features and a similar number of featurettes, comprising three-reel and four-reel adventure subjects. Two serials, one of which will be "Tarzan of the Apes," are planned. Of the features to be produced will be Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man" and "Shandy."

A deal has been closed with M. A. Dent, managing director of British International Pictures, for distribution in Great Britain.

Allied Unit Meets Next Week

The Allied Theatre Owners Association of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota will meet at Minneapolis, March 30 and 31.

BROADWAY STAGE—FROM CAMERA EYE

Screen Possibilities of Several Current Plays Discussed by Commentator on Matters Dramatic

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

In this the third of a series of articles on the screen possibilities of current stage works, Benjamin DeCasseres draws upon his vast store of experience in the field of the art of the stage, coupled with his knowledge of the motion picture, to present in his vigorous, sweeping style the possibilities of current Broadway hits for translation into film plays.

NIGHT OVER TAOS

Of the Stage I demand brains and depth. Of the Screen I demand entertainment only.

"Night Over Taos," by Maxwell Anderson, will make a far better picture (if some one wants a tense, dramatic costume eight-reeler) than it does a play. In fact, it is all picture. The battle between the Spaniards in New Mexico and the Americans, which, of course, we do not see on the stage, would make good screen stuff—good hand-to-hand fighting before the boys dug into the trenches and used sixty-mile guns.

The story is laid at Taos, New Mexico, in 1847. Taos is making its last stand for the Mexican-Spanish aristocracy against the Gringoes. This city is ruthlessly ruled, as in mediaeval times, by Pablo Montoya. He and his two sons are in love with a member of his household, Diana. One of the sons has sold out the Spaniards to the Americans. Pablo kills him. He is going to send the other son to his death because of his love for Diana, but drinks poison instead.

As a play it is all costume, old-fashioned melodrama and devoid of life. But as screen entertainment it would be smashing.

The Group Theatre put it on with a long cast, the best of whom were J. Edward Bromberg, Morris Carnovsky and Franchot Tone.

THE DEVIL PASSES

This combination of Molnar's "The Devil" and "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" was made for just one screen actor on this earth, George Arliss. Any one who remembers him in "The Devil" will want to see his screen version of the Rev. Nicholas Lucy. Here is a field for that marvellous subtlety and cheerful cynicism of which Mr. Arliss is supreme master.

The fable runs this wise: In the country house of Mr. Magnus, art collector, epicurean, cynic and charming egoist (played superbly and vigorously by Arthur Byron, the most vivid actor on our stage), there are an actress, a novelist, a clergyman who is peeved at God and some others. Into this circle comes the Rev. Nicholas Lucy, the Devil himself. He is immensely rich.

He contrives to get each one of them to tell what his or her heart most desires. He then attempts to bring their wishes to pass, but in each instance realization of the wish involves disloyalty, betrayal and fraud. All the characters are fundamentally honest. Lucy himself tries to take Magnus' sweetheart from him. He fails all along the line: and the moral is that this Devil is really God who is just tempting them all to see what they are made of, or rather to convince them that there is more good in them than bad. Here the play trickles out in blah. But in a picture it is precisely this ending that goes over.

Basil Rathbone played the clerical Devil with a minimum of motions, facially or otherwise. Robert Lorraine played with convincing funeral rant a clergyman who has just told his congregation what he really thinks of God, Cecelia Loftus gave a finely human and homely portrayal of a woman whose only bible was Duty. Ernest Cossart, Mary Nash and Ernest Thesiger did well in other parts. Arch Selwyn produced.

HOT-CHA!

Lupe Velez made a tremendous hit in Ziegfeld's show, "Hot-Cha!", which spins from a New York speak-easy to the City of Mexico, where the daggers grow out of the air if you think you are in Push-Over Land.

The story is conventional enough, and if it ever gets screened (and it'll make a glamorous picture) I recommend that some better music be written for it than Lew Brown and Ray Henderson gave it. But Lupe as Conchita looked dazzling, acted her best and wore the bald heads out with her evident charms.

Bert Lahr steams around the stage as a matador, and he's certainly a Depression-smasher with his rubber face and crazy antics. He has many good lines which were probably by Mark Hellinger, one of the co-cookers of this thing.

Then there was good-looking Buddy Rogers as Jack Whitney, Bob Gleckler as a semi-bad man, Lynne Overman and Marjorie White.

The story? There isn't much to tell. It's just Hot-Cha! (a corking b.o. screen title for a picture for the gayer girls and boys).

THERE'S ALWAYS JULIET

John Van Druten's new comedy, "There's Alway Juliet," imported by Mr. Gilbert Miller from London, would make a quiet wisecracker. It is as thin as cellophane. It is hardly a play at all. It is rather a rambling dialogue on sex and lesser matters between two quite uninteresting, sophisticated and bloodless creatures—one American and one English—in the girl's West End flat.

The play, nevertheless, has a sleepy charm, a Philip Barry tinkle, a subtle groping after things not at all realized. It might be called "Strictly Honorable," for in the second act when the girl, left alone by her parents who are in Vichy, invites the man to bite the apple, he, American boob and architect, refuses because as he has to leave for America the next day the sting would be "too poignant." Now, in my opinion, nothing could sting this bloodless Dwight Houston. Neither the girl nor the man ever quite comes to life. The screen, I believe, can vitalize these two persons immensely.

Edna Best and Herbert Marshall are, however, a delightful pair. They drag out of the dialogue every ounce of intelligibility that is to be got. It took hard work on the part of both of these players, and also some perspiring on the part of Mr. Miller, I wager, to make this play jell. It's a fashionable hit.

At the end the American fat-head marries this enigmatical and quite impossible English girl. Best and Marshall are, as I said, superb. Why not let them Lunt-Fontanne the play in Hollywood?

MONEY IN THE AIR

There are two kinds of pictures as there are two kinds of plays: those that overflow their screen or the footlights, and those that do not. By that I mean there are pictures and plays you remember after leaving the theatre and pictures and plays you do not.

Mystery plays always remain with me if they are good. I believe "Money in the Air," a somewhat different kind of mystery play by Thetta Quay Franks, contains all the elements of good screen entertainment if pepped up a bit. It is a well-bred piece of work. It may even be too well-bred for the screen, where they like their murders hot and fast. But the basic idea—who killed Arthur Hamilton—is a guessing contest, and that's all we want.

As a play I did not think much of it. It's along conventional lines. But, you see, I've been spoiled by such masterpieces as "Whistling in the Dark" and "Riddle Me This!"

SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY

Springtime for the producer who picks this—with the right cast!

Mr. Benn W. Levy, four actors and actresses cast in impeccable parts, brought to Broadway one of the most cracklingly brilliant and corrosively scintilating farce-comedies, fantastic dramas, satirical bubbles (or whatever you want to call it) that I have seen in years, and one that amused me from beginning to end. It is called "Springtime for Henry"—why, I do not know. But n'importe, as Mr. Hoover would say. There is nothing conventional about this play. The situations are strikingly original. The dialogue is redolent, and even at times

TODAY your box office faces three crucial months

—April, May, June—a period during which only OUTSTANDING MONEY PRODUCT can pull your theatres through to extra profits. It's a real test of "the survival of the fittest."

EVEN in normal times, this is often a period of uncertainty at the box office. It is doubly hazardous today when the BIG crowds will come out only for GREAT Pictures—and there have never been too many of these.

PARAMOUNT is deeply aware of this situation and has faced it squarely, strongly, earnestly. With pictures into which Paramount has poured every dollar, every ounce  of showmanship brains, every possible box office element that would put this product in the extra playing time, extra profit class. Every foot of film has been measured by the one yardstick of  DOLLARS AT YOUR BOX OFFICE. The result is a group of pictures that will give your theatre receipts a decided immediate lift—and Paramount will keep them there!

TODAY from Paramount—and only from Paramount in any quantity—you get not merely pictures you want—but pictures you absolutely MUST HAVE to protect your theatre investment.

THEY are pictures that warrant and will get EXTRA PLAYING TIME from every exhibitor for the extra profits that are in them. And every exhibitor who accords them the proper handling—the extra play dates their obvious merit and outstanding box office qualities merit—will reap his reward in increased profits. And consequently Paramount will reward him with even greater product in the future. These are facts—proved in your own box office.

PARAMOUNT is expending millions of dollars on several pictures at a time when this is the exception, rather than the rule.

Because Paramount realizes that RIGHT NOW is a critical test of box office values. Because RIGHT NOW is a time when outstanding product is literally worth its weight in gold. Because your theatre cannot continue to exist in these strenuous times without motion pictures PLUS + such as these from Paramount.

PARAMOUNT is laying the foundation now for its policy for the future—when every picture will be looked upon as a SPECIAL—special in treatment, in cast, in production value, in box office possibilities.

PICTURES built for longer runs, extra play dates, special handling and cooperation that Paramount anticipates from all exhibitors.

START RIGHT NOW! With the Pictures described here. Screen them! Book them! Play them for extra time and extra profits!

ME

"Jerry and Joan"

By CLEO LUCAS

CHAPTER I

They looked at each other a second or two.

"Oh!"

They both said this at once.

"I'm sorry if I frightened you," Jerry Corbett said this.

"You did frighten me a little. I didn't know anyone was in here."

The girl said this.

"Neither did I."

They laughed.

Jerry walked over to her.

"May I?"

"Certainly."

He sat down.

"I'm a little drunk. Excuse me."

"I think everyone here is drunk. But I'll excuse you."

Jerry didn't blame Damerry, that conceited old gossip columnist, for having tried to kiss her a few minutes ago. He put her down on record. Blue eyes blonde hair, the most beautiful mouth he had ever seen. The rest he would look over later. Hands, arms, legs, etc.

"Do you know who that was, the gentleman who tried so unsuccessfully to kiss you just now?"

The girl was embarrassed.

"I thought you just came in," she said.

"No. I was sitting over in the corner there, trying to sitch up with myself."

"I was awfully disgusted with myself."

"I don't blame you. I have an aversion to gossip columnists myself. Just on general principles."

The girl was fixing her hair. It was fluffy around her cheeks and then it got straight up on top.

Jerry stood up.

"Would you like a drink?"

"No, thanks. I'm not a drinker, and I've had about all I need tonight."

Jerry walked over to the table. It looked awfully messy. Somebody had spilled a drink on it. He had a feeling that he should try to straighten things up for her. She was awfully sweet-looking. He remembered as he drank.

"Did that make you feel any better?" she asked with a little smile.

"Much. Enough better so that we may introduce ourselves?"

Jerry laughed.

"I'm sorry. I forgot. I'm Jerry Corbett."

The girl stared at him.

"What's the matter?"

"Oh, I didn't mean to look so stupid—but—well, I've always missed out on meeting the people I've wanted to meet. Real useful people—people who do things. That's nothing. Just a title. Isn't even a good job. Doesn't mean any money."

"You! Awfully fine hands. Long slender fingers. It's something. I never miss the size of a ring. I think it's artistic. A diamond dinner ring, small little—"

After about six chapters he leaned over and kissed her very definitely on the mouth.

Paper. It's like checking up the day's receipts in a store.

Joan's premiere looked at Jerry Corbett. He wasn't a bit good-looking. Curie she guessed. He was short—shorter than she liked a man to be—but he was handsome. That expressed it. His hair was brown and unruly. It parted and fell in easy curls on his head.

"You'll have to pardon me again. This man Noble has been having a good time! It's getting late. I have derful drinks and I have my quota."

Jerry poured himself a drink and then looked at Joan.

"Don't you want to dance here and sit at the table? It's so much more cozy or—" and then the drinks and Joan came over and sat in the chair he held.

"Well, I'm a little disappointed. I expected to meet a lot of famous people and talk to them. But they're all too drunk to talk intelligently or else they insult you."

"Writers aren't any different from anyone else. They like to drink too, you know. I've wanted to meet everyone you've met, haven't I?"

"I think so."

Joan liked the song.

Joan liked Jerry.

Do you know any more songs?

"Sure. But I can't remember any right now. Say—" comfortable with him—what were—

"Say," she began, "what was it at school?"

"What was it?"

"Yes, what fraternity did you belong to?"

Jerry laughed.

"Oh, I couldn't imagine what I've been out of school so long I've forgotten that that was expected of you. Sigma Chi."

"Do you know the Sigma Chi sweetheart song?"

ICE WATER TO WARM UP TRADE SEEMS BRITISH EXHIBITORS' IDEA

But Mooring Sees Attempt to Irritate American Distributors in England in Association's Gloomy Picture of Conditions

For the past four or five months the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association has persisted in a policy of gloom spreading.

Its official organ, week by week, has sung the dirge of the dying.

Difficulties are emphasized: the hopelessness of everything in this business of ours is painted over and over in dark and still darker shades. The association's annual report just issued does its utmost to go still further into the doldrums, although even the gloomy Dean Inge himself could not have been equal to such a task.

"Struggle for Existence"

It may interest America to study the spirit of the British—at least as suggested by the mouthpiece of the British exhibitors. Sam E. Morris, vice-president of Warner Brothers, who has been telling U. S. A. that "there is no public talk of depression, and that the spirit of determination is doing much to alleviate economic stress and forward a return to normalcy," cannot have taken account of the official wailing of the CEA.

"Your General Council would add for the benefit of members," says W. R. Fuller, general secretary of the Exhibitors' Association and editor of its official organ, "that the real struggle for existence will be fought this year . . . the present year will probably be the most difficult that has yet been encountered.

Renters Held Largely Responsible

"Depressions go in cycles. If the present cycle is one of five years, 1930 and 1931 have been the first two. 1932 should see the bottom of the depression, while 1933 and 1934 should see a steady return to normal conditions."

Insistence is laid upon the bad state of trade, and throughout the report the suggestion is stressed that the renters are largely responsible for the plight of exhibitors, and that the American renters in particular should be discouraged.

The policy of the CEA would scarcely merit special attention were it not a possibility that its pessimistic utterances filter through the national press to the public, and increase reactions against the industry to the further detriment of exhibitors, whose cause the CEA appears anxious to serve by its present campaign.

Campaign is the correct word if, as seems clear, this tearful tone is adopted merely to irritate American distributors operating in Britain.

The question arises as to how far an industry can be served by putting itself into sackcloth and ashes, especially when that business, like ours, sets out to support itself by providing a jaded public with stimulants to gaiety.

It is perfectly true that matters are bad with British exhibitors, notably with those whose theatres are on the small and antiquated side. But they are not as bad as the CEA represents, and it would be mighty bad for the self-same exhibitors if they were to fall under this spell of pessimistic influence.

Today more than ever, the problems of our industry demand action. And action cannot spring from an organism sapped of its vital urge to win through.

A policy of hopelessness never yet brought a patient through a crisis, and the only doctor who ever suggested that it might do was named "Do-Little." It is disgraceful, not to say a trifle pathetic, that British exhibitors who maintain the CEA to doctor their ills, should find that the only remedy suggested to them in alleviation of their present troubles is to just stop breathing!

Not Done with Cold Water

This surely is a fair simile, for the CEA has on several recent occasions urged that exhibitors can spare their present losses by holding off future bookings.

Rentals will undoubtedly fall, just as trade will undoubtedly improve, but neither development will be incubated by the "cold water" of the CEA and it is time the British exhibitors who do not already know were told exactly what is the weight of all this headquarters propaganda. When it is not merely spiteful it is mainly spurious.

Eyes on U. S. A.

Following my recent statement that British production executives are veering their policy towards American audience appeal, British and Dominions has decided to send over to Hollywood its ace director, Jack Raymond, who will be expected to study prevailing technique and conditions there, returning to Elstree to report in two months. This company—the only production unit in Britain operating on Western Electric recording license—has already started to employ stars of known value on the U. S. A. side. Jack Buchanan has just finished one for it; Joseph Schildkraut has played in two. and it has signed Victor MacLaglen for one while he is here on vacation. Efforts are soon to be made to put the company's product on the U. S. A. market with a bang.

Universal Will Continue To Liquidate Theatre Holdings

Charles B. Paine, treasurer and operating officer of Universal Chain Theatres, has announced that the circuit will continue its present policy of liquidation. Paine made the statement upon his return from the annual company meeting at Baltimore.

The company's chief theatre holdings are in the form of stock interest in various circuits, with only a very few houses being operated directly. Re-elected at the Baltimore session were: Carl Laemmle, president; R. H. Cochrane, vice president; Paine, treasurer and operating head, and H. E. Hughes, secretary.

Barrett Hits At Screen Censorship

The importance of motion pictures in the mobilization of public opinion was stressed by Wilton A. Barrett, executive secretary of the National Board of Review, in an address before the Greater Cincinnati Better Motion Picture Council last week. The meeting commemorated the 14th anniversary of the founding of the organization.

Barrett, speaking on "Social Uses of Motion Pictures," mentioned censorship, maintaining that he is opposed to militant blue-penciling of films as being both unnecessary and undemocratic. He voiced the belief that efforts to create legislative censorship will meet with an opposition that would kill such pernicious attempts. He said that, to his mind, talking pictures form the greatest medium of gaining vicarious experience that ever existed, and expressed the hope that producers might see a need in providing adventure of a spiritual nature in stories. Tragedy, he felt, still has a place in drama, and he pointed out some of the present-day conditions and injustices that might well be used as the basis of plots for screen stories.

James D. Stover, assistant superintendent of the Cincinnati public schools, in his address on "Visual Education," challenged the motion picture industry to produce pictures to meet the educational demands of the schools.

Toronto Allied Unit Meets; Hanson New General Manager

The Allied Exhibitors of Toronto, Canadian organization, held a meeting and dinner-dance on Tuesday at Toronto, instead of at Ottawa, as originally planned. At the March 17 meeting which decided the location change, the Ontario tax situation was discussed.

Officers elected include: C. T. Ross, president; W. S. Brady, M. Gerbertig, vice presidents; Gordon Filman, secretary; William Yates, treasurer. Oscar Hanson was named general manager, and Earl J. Lawson, general counsel. H. W. Wells, Toronto, was named assistant treasurer.

Katz Due Monday; Botsford to Make Headquarters on Coast

Sam Katz, Paramount executive, is scheduled to return to the home office from the Coast next Monday. A. M. Botsford, head of the editorial board in New York will leave for the Hollywood studio in about one week, to make the plant his permanent headquarters.

Russell Holman, now on the Coast as a member of the production editorial board, will return to New York shortly, at least temporarily. His stay is indefinite, as is the nature of his work at the home office.

SEE FILM TAX DEFEAT IN "SOAK THE RICH" AIM

But if General Sales Assessment Is Blocked, Specific Levy on Picture Leases at Higher Rate Is Feared as a Possibility

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Disdaining leadership in any form in a spectacular manner, the House of Representatives last week took up the new revenue bill for amendment and by overwhelming majorities incorporated into the bill the main planks of a "soak the rich" platform which is expected to spell the doom of the manufacturers' excise tax, in which is included a 2¼ per cent levy upon motion picture films.

If the House goes through with its announced intention of rejecting the sales tax, however, it may mean the writing into the bill of a specific levy against motion picture leases and rentals, possibly at a higher rate than would be imposed under the general sales tax.

Concede Sales Tax Defeat

Hopes for enactment of the sales tax faded early this week when it became apparent that the anti-sales tax forces in the House had taken the bit in their teeth and would refuse to approve the revenue bill drafted by the ways and means committee.

Following a week of general debate, during which it became increasingly apparent that the sales tax was foredoomed to meet bitter opposition, the House began consideration of the bill item by item, in the hopes of passing it along to the Senate by March 26.

Without difficulty, the Progressive group, aided by Republicans and Democrats, forced the adoption of a maximum normal income tax rate for individuals of 7 per cent and a maximum surtax rate of 65 per cent.

House Republican and Democratic leaders privately are conceding the defeat of the sales tax after witnessing the flight of their followers away from that feature, to which they had previously given conditional pledges of support.

Confiscatory Estate Tax Seen

There now looms as a probable substitute wartime surtaxes upon individual incomes and confiscatory rates upon estates. The House repudiation of leadership was the most spectacular in recent years, the rout becoming even more disastrous with the issuance by Speaker Garner of a statement in which he indicated he did not care how the money was raised, but was concerned only with the balancing of the budget.

On Tuesday the House voted to raise the federal inheritance tax to a minimum of 45 per cent on estates exceeding $10,000,000. On the same day Acting Chairman Crisp of the ways and means committee offered an amendment to the manufacturers' sales tax section of the tax bill, exempting foodstuffs, wearing apparel, farm implements, prescription medicines. Rentals on motion picture films were not included in the proposed exemptions.

When the manufacturers' sales tax provisions are reached it is anticipated that there will be substituted a number of special excise taxes, possibly including a levy upon motion picture films, and stamp taxes on bank checks and legal records.

The fight now being waged against the ways and means committee's bi-partisan bill is believed to foretell the amendment of the admission tax exemption upward to include 50 cents. The admission tax provision was the subject of some discussion during general debate, when it was indicated that there would be a heavy vote against the 24-cent exemption provided by the committee.

Florida Opening Drive to Bring Production to State

Florida may produce a "statewide" motion picture as a means of pointing out to producers the advantage of using Florida as a site for production. The plan has been advocated by the committee on the development of the motion picture industry, of which Trenton C. Collins, Tampa, is chairman.

He is calling on all sections to aid with an "aggressive campaign" the drive to bring film production to the state of Florida. One move proposed calls for the donation of property to be used as studio sites.

Western Electric Wins Suit As Aleograph Plea Is Denied

The United States Supreme Court at Washington on Monday, denied review of the suit of the Aleograph Company of Texas against Western Electric and affiliates.

The suit, which charged infringement of patents in the manufacture of reproducers, asked damages of $2,000,000 and an accounting of profits, was originally brought in Texas and from there was carried to the circuit court of appeals, then to the Supreme Court.

Forms Firm for One Film

Fulton R. Gordon Productions, Inc, has been incorporated in Delaware for the production in New York of a screen version of "The Dawn of a New Civilization," of which Gordon, Washington realtor, is author. John Fredericks, screen writer, is collaborating with Gordon on the adaptation.

Laemmle Signs Edwin Lester

Edwin Lester, former manager of the Platt Music Company in Los Angeles, has been signed by Carl Laemmle as a Universal special sales executive under Jack Schlaifer. He will operate between the home office and the studio.

Exhibitors, Poster Exchanges Prepare Counter Proposals

New York City exhibitors and poster exchanges this week were preparing counter proposals to present to distributors following the distributors' announced intention of demanding the return of copyrighted "paper," a move which, it is claimed, would force poster exchanges out of existence and increase exhibitors' overhead.

The counter activity of the New York factions augments a resolution passed last week at the Washington convention of the MPTOA condemning distributors' efforts to prevent the resale of paper. These efforts follow alleged continuous operating losses of distributors' poster departments, and are being manifested by insertion of clauses in sales contracts prohibiting the resale of paper and ordering its return, as copyrighted material, to the exchange. Fox, MGM and Paramount contracts provide for the return of the paper, and several other distributors are said to be contemplating similar clauses.

Greater New York exhibitors met with the week at the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, to discuss the situation, but failed to take action. A second meeting, planned for this week, will consider four counter proposals to be advanced by Rudy Sanders, New York exhibitor, who is sponsor of the meeting. Sanders will recommend that sets of stills be reduced from 75 cents to 35, the reductions to be embodied in five-year contracts and the stills made returnable to the distributor after use; that in cases where poster departments have been operated at a loss, distributors turn them over to poster exchanges for operation; merger of ad service departments into a central service bureau with reduced overhead in order to enable price reductions, and establishment of a policy of non-interference with poster exchanges wherever distributors are unable to meet the former's prices.

Independent poster renters also are planning a protest meeting in New York at which they will set forth their contention that no copyright infringement is involved in the resale of paper when changes in the paper and reprints are not made. About 40 poster rental houses throughout the country contend that they would be put out of business if the distributors persisted in their campaign to prevent the resale of paper.

Columnist Sells Four Stories

Rian James, columnist for the Brooklyn Eagle, has sold three stories, "Hat Check Girl," "Crooner" and an untitled story for film production. His first novel, "Love Is a Racket," is now being made by First National, with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., starred. Sanford J. Greenburger, former First National story editor, and now vice-president of Kennaday & Livingston Literary Agency, completed the deal.

Universal to Offer Special

Universal will release "The Doomed Battalion," war film of the Italian front, as a special some time in April. The picture was directed by Cyril Gardner.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A PUBLICITY story sent out from Hollywood recently by Joe Blair, press agent for Roy Pomeroy, inferred that Sidney R. Kent would join a new organization which, it was said, is about to be sponsored by Pomeroy. Blair's story said that Kent "is interested in the proposition," but it did not say how much.

In view of the trade interest attached to Mr. Kent's activities, particularly since his affiliation with the Fox corporations this week, we asked him about it. He replied:

"If Mr. Pomeroy gave out that statement, he gave it out on his own responsibility!"

The profile of Mary Pickford, sketched the other day by Howard Chandler Christy, famous artist, in order to aid unemployed, looks quite unlike the attractive lady, according to newspaper photographs of the sketch. So much so that one recognizes Miss Pickford only by the newspaper caption. Mr. Christy is not as young as he used to be.

Mary addressed 600 inmates of the "workhouse" on New York's Welfare Island the other day and in reporting the incident, one conservative local newspaper said: "Mary Pickford told inmates of the workhouse how early everybody goes to bed in Hollywood and what a 'privilege' it is to be in jail."

It appears, therefore, that Si needs to brush up on his Chinese.

Some managers give away old trailers and cut films, or dispose of it with ordinary theatre refuse, both of which are dangerous and may involve the circuit or individual property in serious liability, and in order to prevent such a situation, Paramount has evolved a system wherein managers will in the future dispatch waste film to the nearest Paramount exchange. THE political byways of London's Fleet Street have been busy with rumors that at last the press agent is going to be killed. We in America have also heard on numerous occasions of movements launched by this association and that federation and the other society, wherein all have promised to act in unison and firmly to reject every line of editorial matter sent in to the respective papers by press agents. When one asks diffidently how it is going to be done, there appears to be some uncertainty about the details of the execution, and in this connection we hear currently from the Association of National Advertisers:

"It is not quite certain, for example, what will be done about 'puff' paragraphs sent out by advertising agents with a warning typed in red ink: 'This firm advertised in the Daily Blank.' Nor is it quite certain what will be done about the genuine news stories to which the news editor's attention is drawn by the public relations office of the big corporations which apart from being advertisers, are news all the time. It is not quite certain how some papers will continue to hold their circulations without the spicy trivia concerning the cinema and the stage which emanate from the brains of the highly-paid blurb merchants indigenous to the entertainment jungle. The outcry against press agents comes almost exclusively from advertisement managers. The editorial men know perfectly well how to treat bad press agenting. It gets the same treatment as bad reporting. It is spiked."

CONSERVATIVE POLICY VINDICATED: JACK COHN

Hollywood's Poverty Row has become "Prosperity Row" in the past few years, declared Jack Cohn, Columbia vice-president in charge of distribution, in commenting this week on the Hollywood scene.

"Now Columbia," Cohn said, "has proved the wisdom of conservative operations. Today, there is no need for company retrenchments. In fact, we are ready for expansion. Our company is one of the very few in the business which is not burdened with obligations or being run by banks.

"Our established policy of economical and efficient operation has been learned well in the years of the company's existence. We were forced to adopt it at the outset, in the moneyless days of Columbia's beginnings. In those days, every production dollar had to buy its dollar's worth of production value, and while we were learning how to accomplish this, other companies stood on the sidelines jeering or feeling sorry for us and the financial restrictions imposed upon dwellers on Poverty Row."

"Staying Within Budget"

"Today," Cohn observed, "those same companies are being forced to adopt Columbia's policies. For the first time in years, Hollywood is staying within its production budgets, instead of spending two or three times as much as the budgets provide. I remember encountering, some time ago, a large production unit on location which had been kept idle for seven days while it awaited a copy of the script which had been returned to the studio for some minor change after the company had begun work.

"Incidents such as that were unheard of in the Columbia organization. Harry Cohn, our production chief, has always believed in long and careful preparation before shooting begins in order to insure against just such unnecessary and costly happenings. Similarly, he has always believed in an advance preparation which would require no retakes. Quality was never sacrificed, but production appropriations were made to buy maximum production value, and were never lost in waste or diverted for personal aggrandizement."

No Theatre Affiliations

"Morcover," Cohn continued, "the company has never had theatre affiliations to worry it and eat into resources, and overhead has never been a problem because the studio has not seen fit to maintain a stock company, or extensive star lists, or directors' and writers' staffs.

"The current adverse conditions, therefore, finds Columbia in no need of retrenchment, or of slashing salaries, operating expenses and personnel."

Columbia's plans to wind up its current production program with several big action pictures were made known with the announcement that Harry Cohn and Walter Wanger, in charge of story material, have completed plans for an Allan Dwan production, starring Walter Huston; an Irving Cummings production, starring Edmund Lowe, and an action drama with a Sino-Japanese war background, having Jack Holt in the role of a hard-boiled war correspondent.

Bombings' Cost to Insurance Firms in Year Set at Million

Insurance companies last year were assessed approximately $1,000,000 as a result of theatre bombings, a prominent insurance agent in Kansas City said this week. The statement was in explanation of the cancellation of several Kansas City theatre policies covering houses against damage by bombs or dynamite.

Defending the insurance companies in their stand on the situation, the agent said annual premiums on bomb coverage constitute only a fraction of the loss, and expressed the belief that the "only remedy is vigorous warfare on the racketeers by the authorities. Unfortunately, in most big cities the racketeers are in league with the officials."

"The practice of insurance companies throughout the country is to cancel coverage of theatres that have been subject to attacks unless they eliminate the apparent cause of the attacks," the agent explained. "By that we mean that bombing of theatres that employ non-union help is ascribed to labor trouble. Theatres are protected up to and including the time of the outrage, but when an attack occurs, we must for business reasons cancel the insurance. However, if the theatres decide to employ union help, the insurance is reinstated," he concluded.

odoriferous, of Oscar Wilde. The four characters are clean-cut, violently contrasted, and not merely stuffed shirts and epigrammatic automats.

It begins with a crash at the rise of the curtain with Mr. Dewlip hurling his secretary through the door. Appears his friend, Mr. Jelliwell. Then comes Mrs. Jelliwell. Mr. Dewlip is in love with Mrs. Jelliwell, and when Mr. Jelliwell discovers that Mr. Dewlip is about to jilt his wife for a demure, Pollyannish secretary who has killed her husband for his infidelities, he gets peeved. It's a reflection on a husband for a lover to throw down his spouse! A comic situation, sometimes known as Continental. But it is uproariously witty, spicy and odd—and only one of many bits. Page Mr. Lubitsch!

Leslie Banks, Nigel Bruce, Frieda Inescourt and Helen Chandler made up the perfect cast. Banks was ripping; Bruce was the perfect parasitic, stuffed-shirt husband; Frieda Inescourt was the suave wife—and there was that fascinating little woman from the screen, Helen Chandler, as the secretary who tried to shunt Mr. Dewlip into the straight and narrow patch of teetotalism, chastity and dominoes (in which she failed). The quiet Helen gave the archest, coyest, most innocent-looking performance of a husband-murderer that has been seen in these parts for years. Her quiet confession of murder to Mr. Dewlip is a rib-quaker.

OF THEE I SING!

Whether this great and penetrating satire on the Whole Washington Game will ever get on the screen or not, I can't say. But it would be a bold thing to do. The screen is coming of age. Good red satire is creeping in ("Hot Money," for instance, a corking biff at high-pressure salesmanship).

"Of Thee I Sing!" is the first great American satire in the Gilbert and Sullivan tradition. It is a knockout. The producer that will screen this as is will be to the future of the screen what Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" was to the screen of today.

George Kaufman, Morris Ryskind, George and Ira Gershwin did this Great Laugh at our Presidential elections, our campaigns, our politicians, our Senate, our Supreme Court. "Put Love in the White House!"—why not? Only the brave deserve the shekels—"Of Thee I Sing!" is calling for a Marshal Ney of the screen.

Bill Caxton, Lois Moran and Vic Moore are the stars in this play. I ought to be arrested if I described it to you. It's to be seen and guzzled—guzzled through all your laugh-pores from brain to toe.

EXHIBITORS OF AUSTRALIA WARN THEY CANNOT STAND HIGHER TAX

And Prime Minister Sees Disastrous Reaction on Industry and Government If There's Further Levy in New Zealand

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

Increased amusement taxation is the gray cloud darkening the entertainment firmament of Australia. Although far from official, strong rumors persist that the Federal Government, in bringing down its new budget, will also bring down the taxation ax on the entertainment industry's neck; and in view of the crushing effect additional burdens have had on the motion picture business of England, and the likelihood of similar effects in the United States, the trade in Australia is growing more noticeably apprenhensive.

That Australian show business cannot possibly stand further impositions is a fact plainly in evidence on going into statistics. Not an exhibiting circuit, large or small, and a very minor percentage of independents have staved off a loss during the last financial year. How, then, can they afford to pay more to the government for the privilege of remaining in operation? The same applies to the distributors. They are feeling the pinch more acutely because they are so severely handicapped by the adverse monetary exchange position.

For every dollar remitted from Australia to America, a little under half is sacrificed, and yet there is no dependable investment in the country to which they could entrust a few thousands. Even now the public, by staying away, is demonstrating its inability to pay "passed on" taxation; so surely the government will realize that any increases will defeat their own objects, as they already have done in England.

New Zealand Exhibitors Protest

Foreseeing attempts at additional taxation in New Zealand, the Dominion Exhibitors Association, in its annual report, resolves to fight vigorously any further impositions, in the knowledge that an increase at the present time would react disastrously, causing still greater unemployment.

"The increase in general taxation imposed during the year, on top of the special film taxation of 1929, has made the tax burden on the film industry a very heavy one," the report states. "It has already been intimated by the prime minister that the budget position at the end of the financial year now approaching will be very unsatisfactory, and fresh burdens are indicated as unavoidable. The executive is firmly convinced that any fresh burden on the motion picture industry would react disastrously on both its business interests, and on the government, from a taxation point of view. Probably in no other industry in New Zealand has such a relatively large number been forced out of business within the last two years as in the business of keeping people amused."

That then is the outlook; and if the governments of Australia and New Zealand cannot be convinced of the seriousness of the position, the amusement business is going to become still less amusing—for those endeavoring to obtain a livelihood from it.

"Ben Hur" Scores in Sydney

MGM seems to be scoring all along the line lately and "Ben-Hur," revived with sound effects, has clicked well at the Lyceum, Sydney. A highly profitable run of at last three, and possibly four weeks, is assured. "Politics" has also done remarkably well at the St. James, Sydney, getting seven weeks in the face of terrifically hot weather. By notching seven, "Politics" gets into the "Trader Horn" class as far as long-runs are concerned, running second only to Warner Brothers' "Viennese Nights." With six months in Sydney, and seven weeks in Adelaide (a phenomenal season there), "Viennese Nights" holds records that are likely never to be beaten.

"Alexander Hamilton" is another picture that promises to do something of account.

Distributor Organization Under Fire

Owing to economical considerations, there is a pronounced feeling among Australian distributors that their association, the MPDA, should be abolished. The distributors are of the opinion that as they themselves have taken drastic cuts in their personal incomes, and, by every possible avenue reduced expenditures to the irreducible minimum, the stipendiary officers of the association should accept their share. So far, there have been no cuts in that direction. The upkeep of the MPDA is costing the combined distributors upwards of $50,000 a year and they want that figure reduced by just half. If those who conduct the association hold out against such a wholesale cut, the distributors will be inclined to throw the organization over entirely; and although during its years of existence the MPDA has done much good, there will be few regrets among exhibitors at its passing.

Await Censor Appointments

The industry in Australia is eagerly awaiting the announcements of the new censorship appointments for 1932. While it is a foregone conclusion that Cresswell O'Reilly again will be selected, speculation is rife as to who will be called upon to assist him. From all sorts of organizations, representing every political and national thought, overtures have been made to the authorities in the hope that their nominee will be the ultimate choice; but the government refuses to be hurried, and after postponing its selections for a fortnight, has delayed them for another six weeks. Meanwhile it has been said in semi-official quarters that the Appeal Board will be discarded, leaving the industry's fate in the hands of three, O'Reilly and two others, or with those three, and an Appeal Board consisting of one arbiter.

Australia Circuit Head Sees Net of $250,000 in 1932

The first four months of operation of Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., Australia, the reorganized Union Theatre circuit, indicates a net profit for 1932 of approximately $250,000, according to R. W. G. Mackay of Sydney, a director of the company. Mackay is in America establishing contacts with distributors whose product has been signed by Greater Union Theatres.

The financial outlook for the year has made possible formulation of a plan by which creditors of the former Union Theatres circuit will be paid off in full over a period of years, Mackay said. A receiver for Union Theatres was appointed last fall, resulting in the reorganization of the company and the disposition of approximately 15 non-profit making theatres.

"The new organization has continued to carry on since the end of October of last year," said Mackay. "In that time it has turned a weekly loss into a weekly profit and the figures to the end of February suggest the company will make a profit of 60,000 to 70,000 pounds for the twelve months ending December 31, 1932.

"Improvements in the financial position of the company," he continued, "together with improved rental arrangements and better film contracts make it possible for the company to plan to set aside 20 per cent of its profits each year for the purpose of meeting the claims of the creditors of the old company. This is being undertaken in spite of the fact that the new company is free from any obligation to pay the creditors of the old company, and although it is, at the present time, purely a voluntary offer made by the new company, an agreement will be entered into which will be binding on the new company, within the course of a few months."

Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., has signed new film contracts with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Universal, United Artists and RKO Radio Pictures, Mackay announced. He said from his observations of theatre conditions in America, the problem of overseating appeared to require the most immediate attention.

"Australia has the same problem," Mackay said. "There are too many theatres in America, just as there are in the Commonwealth. It is a problem that can be solved only by producers and exhibitors jointly."

Mackay called the decline in the value of the Australian pound "the biggest problem of American distributors doing business in Australia." The unfavorable rate of exchange, he said, has forced American distributors to keep their revenues in Australia awaiting an upturn in the exchange rate, which today is approximately 55 per cent of par.

AWAIT EARLY RELIEF ON DOUBLE FEATURING

Reinhardt Leaves Deutsches Theatre

A special copyrighted dispatch to the New York Sun from Berlin this week says that Max Reinhardt, who is one of the world's most famous theatrical producers, is withdrawing from the Deutsches Theatre management, after 25 years of association, to escape from the pressures of "a Germany ruled or even seriously influenced by Adolf Hitler," national socialist leader.

The dispatch relates that Reinhardt explains that he has long been burdened by managing a number of theatres which he owns or controls, but that his intimate friends aver that Reinhardt is "getting out simply because he does not intend to submit to persecution that he as a Jew would have to stand from the racial fanatics among the Hitlerites."

The Deutsches Theatre is, it is announced, to be managed by Dr. Beer from Vienna and Carl Heinz Martin, a stage manager long associated with Reinhardt.

Mr. Reinhardt is well known among the chieftains of American motion picture production. On the occasion of his last American sojourn he was a speaker at a National Board of Review convention.

Radio to Feature a Second Western Series With Keene

RKO Radio will continue western features as part of the production schedule. Tom Keene will be starred in a new series of six, it is announced by David O. Selznick, in charge of production. Fred Allen will be retained to direct the new group.

One film, "The Sunrise Trail," is yet to be made on the current series of six, after which the next group, beginning with "The Law Rides," will go into work. Selznick sees a definite market for the western feature.

Normanly Joins Giannini

James P. Normanly resumed his duties this week as executive assistant to Dr. A. H. Giannini at the Bank of America's Coast offices. Normanly was for many years executive assistant to Giannini at the Bank of America, National Association, New York.

Columbia Signs Connelly

Myles Connelly, studio executive, has been named an associate producer at the Columbia Coast studio. His first assignment will be supervision of "Washington Merry Go Round," book recently acquired for production.

Columbia Acquires Mysteries

Columbia has acquired the screen rights to a series of mystery novels by Anthony Abbott. The first to be produced will be "About the Murder of the Night Club Lady."

Restrictive Clauses Indicated from at Least Three Large Distributors; Agitation Renewed in Three Key Cities

With both national exhibitor conventions having given attention to double featuring, and with renewed agitation against the practice in Chicago, Cleveland and Kansas City, numerous exhibitors in hotbeds of double featuring look for some relief from the evils attendant upon widespread use of the policy, in the near future. Lending hope to these groups are indications that several large distributors will incorporate in their new sales contracts clauses prohibiting or fixing a penalty for double featuring.

Resolutions condemning the practice were passed at the Allied national convention at Detroit and, earlier, by the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. Agitation against continuance of double featuring in Chicago has been under way for some time, and a petition, already signed by approximately 100 independent exhibitors calling for abolition of the practice, is in circulation. Sponsors of the petition hope it will be subscribed to by every independent exhibitor in that city.

Skouras Policy Criticized

Inauguration of the double feature policy at all Fox West Coast suburban theatres adjacent to Kansas City shortly after the houses came under Skouras operating management, brought forth spirited objection from independent exhibitors at Kansas City. Protests were filed with the Hays office by the Independent Theatre Owners' Association of Kansas City, whose members see their earlier efforts to curb the practice nullified, general adoption of the plan for self-defense and possible "business ruin" for some small theatres.

Kansas City independents recently adopted agreements regulating double featuring.

The resolution signed by Cleveland exhibitors called for only a partial elimination of the policy, as it permitted double featuring on weekly change programs. M. B. Horwitz of the Cleveland organization said that unregulated continuance of the practice there would mean an acute shortage of product by June which would force the closing of numbers of smaller independent houses until new product became available.

Restrictive Clauses Planned

Indications are that at least three large companies will attempt to reduce double featuring of their product to a minimum next year by incorporating in their new contracts certain restrictive clauses. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer hopes to accomplish this by extension of percentage contracts, under which it would be impossible to double feature pictures of this company so sold. Paramount and Warner Brothers, it is understood, favor restraining clauses in new contracts, either prohibiting or sharply restricting use of certain pictures on the same program with others of more than four reels in length. Fox and United Artists are also said to be considering inclusion of similar clauses.

Columbia 6 Months Net $1.46 a Share; On Stock Exchange

Columbia Pictures stock during the past six months has shown a net profit per share of $1.46 after all charges and taxes have been deducted. Its common stock is now listed on the New York Stock Exchange for the first time. This was approved by the Governing Committee Wednesday. The exchange admitted to the trading list voting trust certificates for the corporation's 144,642 outstanding shares of common stock, with authority to add additional shares up to a total of 235,867.

The statement of the corporation's earnings for the six months ended Dec. 26, 1931 shows net profit before amortization of film, interest charges and income tax of $3,029,068; and net profit after all charges and provision for federal income tax of $275,006, equivalent to $1.46 a share on the common stock, for six month periods, based on the capitalization outstanding Dec. 26, 1931. This compares with a net profit, after all charges and taxes, of $560,869 for the entire fiscal year ended June 27, 1931, which was equivalent to $2.99 a common share for the twelve months period.

The corporation's balance sheet as of December 26, 1931 shows current assets including $615,522 cash, of $4,798,466 compared with current liabilities of $1,894,984. Total assets are placed at $6,619,502.

Typewriter for Composition Of Film Music Is Invented

Emmanuel Rubenstein, Hollywood composer and scenarist, and his brother Enoch, of Syracuse, N. Y., have patented a "musical typewriter," to speed production of theme songs and musical accompaniments for pictures. The device will be manufactured in Rochester, N. Y., if negotiations with a firm there are concluded. Production is expected to get under way in the near future.

The typewriter has 53 keys, bearing all necessary symbols, and is equipped with a special ratchet enabling the composer to write either up or down the scale without using the line shifts. The inventors claim speed, better "copy" and better music, as the resulting advantages of the use of their machine.

Italian Talker On Broadway

"Zappatore" (Toilers of the Soil), said to be the first Italian talking picture to come to Broadway, will have its American premiere at the Sam H. Harris Theatre on West 42nd Street on Sunday.

The house will henceforth be operated by Napoli Film Company, which will offer, in addition to the feature, a program of Italian shorts including one of Ria Rosa.

Standards Bureau to Fete SMPE

The Bureau of Standards will entertain members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, during the annual spring meeting, at Washington on May 10. Dr. L. J. Briggs, acting director of the bureau, will discuss bureau work of interest to the film engineers.

FILM THEFTS REDUCED ONE-HALF BY BUREAU AND SHIFT TO SOUND

Only 24 Cases Investigated in 1931; Disposal Overseas More Difficult as "Shooting Galleries" Are Diminished

An estimated 50 per cent reduction in thefts of film last year is attributed by the MPPDA to increased activities of the Copyright Protection Bureau in this country and to the increased difficulties of disposing of stolen film in foreign countries.

Arthur S. Dickinson, in charge of Hays office investigations of film thefts, reports that only 24 cases of film thievery were investigated in 1931 as compared with double that number the preceding year. A larger amount of film, however, was involved in the smaller number of investigations last year due to the uncovering of two unusually large film "bootlegging" operations in the East.

Convictions Effective Deterrents

"Increased activities of the Copyright Protection Bureau," said Dickinson, "have succeeded in materially reducing the number of film thefts by acting as a restraint upon dishonest employees of film exchanges who occasionally worked in collusion with rings of film thieves. Convictions obtained in the past also serve as deterrents both to film thieves and to obscure laboratories which formerly engaged in 'duping' prints. The latter practice, though not entirely abandoned, has been practically eliminated in recent years, so that there are very few laboratories remaining which still engage in unauthorized 'duping'."

The cooperation of the American consular offices in Central and South America, together with the change-over from silent to sound theatres, has succeeded in greatly decreasing foreign outlets for film stolen in this country. Central and South America, heretofore, have offered ready markets for disposition of stolen film, but the consular services are now checking every instance of questionable possession of American film, with the result that these countries are fast becoming less of a problem than they have been in the past. Aiding in the clearing up of these localities has been the advent of sound theatres which has eliminated numbers of irresponsible operators of Latin American "shooting galleries." These have given way to a better class of theatres, with fewer exhibitors willing to deal in purloined film.

Were Difficult of Access

Formerly, small theatres in the interior of Central and South America had no compunctions about buying and using stolen film. Located in remote towns, difficult of access, they had little fear of discovery or investigation, according to Dickinson.

The three forms of thievery—outright theft, connivance with dishonest exchange employees, and "duping"—all are believed to be decreasing rapidly. When left unguarded, prints are occasionally picked up, rushed to nearby laboratories where duplicates are made within a few hours and the originals then returned to the spot where they were found. Occasionally, they are stolen from film delivery trucks and from exchange offices and shipping rooms.

One of the newest ruses for obtaining film has been for a conspirator to approach an exchangeman with the announcement that he is about to reopen one of the darkened houses in the locality of the exchange and would like to borrow a picture to test the theatre's sound. The picture, of course, is never returned. Three such cases have been reported to Dickinson's office in the past few months.

One recent investigation led to the recovery of several hundred reels of film stored in a barn near Indianapolis. From this location, a large number of theatres in many sections of the country were being served, some with new film obtained almost as rapidly as by first-run theatres. Included in the collection recovered were many prints which have been ordered destroyed by the distributors-owners because of damages and imperfections. Faulty parts of the film were cut out and the remainder rented out as a good print.

Maney Joins RKO in Charge Of Publicity at the Palace

Richard Maney, formerly publicity representative identified with the Erlanger and Jed Harris "legitimate" enterprises, has joined RKO, to handle publicity for the Palace in New York.

Under the new arrangement, Arnold Van Leer will handle the Mayfair in New York and the Albee in Brooklyn.

Richards Heads Radio Casting

Charles Richards has been appointed casting director at the Radio Coast studio, following the promotion of Lynn Shores as head of the new talent department. Richards was former casting director at the RKO Pathe studio.

Comedy Team, Kennedy Re-Signed

Clark and McCullough, comedians, have signed for a new series of six short comedies for Radio. Edgar Kennedy, comedian, has also signed for a new series of six comedies, known as "Mr. Average Man." Louis Brock will supervise both groups.

Paramount Re-signs Lubitsch

Ernst Lubitsch has signed a new contract with Paramount, whereby the director will handle three pictures a year. He leaves New York on Friday for the Coast, where he will produce.

Will Hays, MacKenzie Return

Will H. Hays returned to New York on Monday, after six weeks in Hollywood. Maurice MacKenzie, an executive assistant, accompanied Hays to and from the Coast.

RKO Financing Suit Dismissed

Judges Charles F. Stein and Albert S. J. Owens, of the Baltimore circuit court, by signed order have dismissed the receivership suit of J. Cookman Boyd against RKO. With the dismissal is seen the disappearance of the last vestige of stockholder opposition to the refinancing plan which gave RCA control of RKO.

Boyd, Baltimore attorney and RKO stockholder, filed suit early in January attacking the legality of the financing plan. The suit was an amended complaint to a receivership action previously filed. B. B. Kahane, RKO counsel, filed a demurrer stating the financing plan was legal and properly voted upon without unnecessary delay, and asked dismissal of Boyd's suit.

Joseph Plunkett, general manager of the RKO circuit, and Martin Beck, in charge of vaudeville bookings, left on Monday for Chicago to join Kahane and Plunkett's assistant Nate C. Blumberg, in a business conference.

At the home office, Phil Reisman, former general sales manager at Universal, has taken over his new duties as general manager of the film booking department of the RKO circuit.

Public Responsible for Film Standards, Says State Censor

The annual report of the Maryland censor board, just published, points out that the public must share the responsibility for "evil" films, noting "evidence of a quite deplorable appreciation of this type of picture among regular theatre patrons, and the producers have not hesitated to capitalize this popularity."

The board recommends some form of regulation of the attendance of minors at film houses, and attacks the character of recent films as "unwholesome." The report covers the period from October 1, 1930 to September 30, 1931. The board set its seal upon 4,738 miles of film, including prints, during the period covered in the report, which is 74 miles less than was ratified during 1929-1930. There was, however, a decrease of 1,881,491 feet in original films viewed, a fact accounted for by the reductions of output in the studios during the period. For its services the board received fees amounting to $35,245, as against $38,954 in 1930, marking a decrease in revenue of $3,709. Since the total expenses for the year were $31,816, the board was more than self-supporting.

Lustberg With J. H. Hoffberg

Jack Lustberg has become associated with J. H. Hoffberg Company and will specialize in the preparation and distribution of the company's product designed for South America.

WARNS OF BLUE LAW DANGER TO THEATRE

New York M. P. Club Holds Annual Meet

Members of the New York Motion Picture Club were advised at their annual meeting this week that the club had improved its financial position during the past year in spite of decreased income and a smaller membership. Figuring in the improvement were reduced operating costs, a Federal tax refund and profits from the club's annual ball.

Charging members of the club with lack of sufficient interest in its affairs, President Lee A. Ochs said that only 46 per cent of the membership had supported the club's ball, but that in spite of this the affair netted the club $3,800. The Federal tax refund of $10,593 was voted for the club treasury, in lieu of being returned to individual members.

Membership in the club decreased during the year from 399 to 367, and 43 additional resignations are now before the board of directors. Resignations of the following directors were accepted on the completion of their three-year term: Sam Katz, David M. Loew, Sam Stern, Louis Nizer, Leo Klebanow, and James L. Ryan. Klebanow, Stern, Ryan and Nizer were re-elected, and Joe Brandt and Charles L. O'Reilly elected to the three-year division. These six men and the following directors will meet next Tuesday to elect new officers: Arthur Stebbins, Lee Ochs, Herbert R. Ebenstein, Arthur W. Kelly, Paul Gulick, Al Lichtman, Jack Alicoate, Harry D. Buckley, Lee Marcus, E. A. Schiller, Jack Shapiro and Louis F. Blumenthal.

Freuler Appoints Glett Vice President

John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, has appointed Charles L. Glett as vice president of the company. Glett has been associated with Big 4 for several months in its distribution and production activities. Glett has produced several series of shorts, released over the Publix circuit, and several features for Pathe and other companies.

Glett will be located in New York, though he is expected to make a tour of Big 4's affiliated exchanges in the near future.

First Division Adds Offices At Philadelphia and Albany

Harry Thomas, president of First Division Pictures, concluded arrangements this week for the opening of two additional branch offices in the company's new country-wide exchange system. Albany and Philadelphia were added to the list, which now reaches six key cities where the company has its own branch.

Move to Close Barber Shops At Washington on Sundays Would Be Wedge, Says Religious Liberty Secretary

Warning that "the Sunday blue law zealots have their eyes on the capital of the nation" and aim to make Washington a "model" city for the whole country, Professor C. S. Longacre, international secretary of the Religious Liberty Association, this week urged that the strongest opposition possible be brought to bear against enactment of legislation now pending in Congress closing Washington barber shops on Sunday.

Enactment of this measure, in itself of little importance, it is asserted, will have far reaching effect, for "if Washington will allow the Sunday blue law camel to thrust his legislative nose into its tent, it will not be long until the camel itself—head, body, legs and tail—is all in.

Wedge for General Legislation

"That Washington has no Sunday observance laws and has withstood all attempts to fasten such blue laws upon it has been a sore spot to the Sunday law advocates of the Puritan type," Professor Longacre asserted. "Just now these Puritans are chuckling with glee over the hopeful prospects of securing the enactment of a mild and innocent appearing Sunday rest law for the barbers of the District of Columbia, which these Puritans claim will serve as a thin edge of the wedge to force open the legislative doors of Congress and establish legal precedent for their Sunday blue law legislation."

Pointing out that under the blue law legislation sought in the past and the two bills affecting barbers now pending, those who observe Saturday as a sabbath must refrain from work on that day "solely because of religious beliefs" if they want to work on Sunday, it was declared that the laws are not health laws but religious laws.

Warns of Spread to Theatres

"From the viewpoint of civil law, any act or work that is legitimate and honorable on one day of the week is equally legitimate and honorable on other days of the week," Mr. Longacre declared. "Religion alone prohibits certain acts as sinful on holy days that are perfectly legitimate on all other days of the week.

"When once the Federal Government commits itself to the precedent of regulating people's conduct on Sunday differently from the other days of the week, there is no telling where this Sunday blue law legislation is going to end. So far Congress has steered clear of this treacherous blue law legislation, and let us hope and pray that the 72d Congress will follow the splendid example of its worthy predecessors.

"The barbers, are aiding the blue law cause unconsciously, and soon they will discover, if the Sunday closing bill becomes a law, that all kinds of labor besides barbering are prohibited, including the operation of theatres, motion pictures, baseball and innocent amusements of every kind."

Pathe Liquidating Rapidly, Annual Report Indicates

The annual report of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the fiscal year 1931, made public this week, shows that since the sale of the company's principal picture assets to Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation in January, it has invested most of its cash in its own bonds. The balance sheet as of January 2, 1932, shows that the company holds $2,003,000 par value of its own debentures, leaving outstanding 2,729,000 par value of the original $6,000,000 issue.

The report itself comments upon the substantial progress made in liquidation of the company. As of that date, the company had cash on hand of $548,818 against current liabilities of $216,122. Among the assets are notes of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, maturing serially, amounting to $1,905,279.

In the course of the year, the company set up a policy of using all profits of the laboratory at Bound Brook and of the State Theatre, Denver, to reduce the book value of those assets, and also to use the net receipts of pictures to write off the residual value of released pictures. The balance sheet shows no inventory of film except a nominal $21,090 for positive prints and raw film.

The report reveals that in the year 1931 the board of directors placed a valuation of $4,000,000 upon its 49 per cent common stock interest in the Du Pont Film Manufacturing Corporation. Including this asset and the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation notes, the total assets of the company are $7,580,962, with a capital surplus balance of 2,390,896.

The profit from operations in 1931 amounted to $132,243. Other income brought the profit up to $659,229, but the company set up reserves and took into account other extraordinary items which reduced the year's operations to a deficit of $392,523.

On the basis of the new balance sheet, taking into consideration the asset valuations of the company and calculating the outstanding bonds and preferred stock at par, there is a balance of $3,582,000 of book value as common stock equity. In ultimate liquidation this item would be reduced approximately $300,000 by the accumulated dividends on preferred stock. The Class A stock is entitled in liquidation to $75 per share before the B stock participates, and on the basis of the book value shown by the new balance sheet, the A common stock has a present equity of approximately $13 per share.

New York Pioneer Passes

Martin Spreitzer, who established the first picture theatre in White Plains, N. Y., when the community was a village, died on Tuesday at his home in that city. He was 67 years old and had been ill for a week. When pictures were first developed, Spreitzer, who then operated the Newport Butcher Shop in the old village of White Plains, cleared away the counters and by placing a few seats in his shop established the Electric Theatre, first movie house there.

10 Radio and Film Suits on Calendar At Wilmington, Del.

Ten suits involving the motion picture and radio industries are listed on the March term calendar of the United States district court at Wilmington, Del. The suits involve American Tri-Ergon Corporation, Tri-Ergon Holding A. G., RCA Photophone, Inc., Universal Sound System, Inc., Nakken Patents Corporation, Pilot Radio and Tube Corporation, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, American Reproducer Corporation, National Broadcasting Company, RCA Communications, Inc., Dubilier Condenser Corporation, Radio Corporation of America and others. Argument in the suit of American Tri-Ergon Corporation and Tri-Ergon Holding A. G., against RCA Photophone, Inc., will be heard soon.

The suits listed are: Nakken Patents Corporation against Universal Sound System, Inc., Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company against The Hammond Clock Company; Joseph Lopiano and Henry Frank, Jr., receiver of American Reproducer Corporation, against Pilot Radio & Tube Corporation; John M. Miller against the National Broadcasting Company, Inc.; John M. Miller against RCA Communications, Inc.; Dubilier Condenser Corporation against National Union Radio Corporation; Perryman Electric Company, Inc., Radio Corporation of America, and Pilot Radio & Tube Corporation; each a separate suit.

The cases of Lopiano and Frank, Jr., receiver for American Reproducer Corporation against Pilot Radio & Tube Corporation; John M. Miller against the National Broadcasting Company and John M. Miller against RCA Communications, Inc., are up for trial. Trail in the suit of John M. Miller against RCA Communications is slated for April 11.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., Leaves for Coast to Speed Production

Carl Laemmle, Jr., left New York for the Universal Coast plant late in the week, following recovery from an illness. He was accompanied by his assistant, Harry Zehner, and by David C. Werner. Werner, former eastern scenario editor, will devote all his time to active production. Maurice Hirshon will accompany the party as far as Chicago.

Laemmle's hurried departure was necessitated by the need of completing the current production schedule. The last on the program has been definitely set. It will be Wellesley Wong's production, "Shanghai Interlude," starring Lew Ayres. John Ford will direct.

Lee Marcus Confers on Coast

Lee Marcus, vice president of RKO Radio Pictures, is at the Coast plant on his regular trip as liaison officer between the home office and studio. His stay is indefinite, conferences being held with David O. Selznick and Frank O'Heron, vice president in charge of operations.

NEW FRANCHISE PLAN ON POPULATION BASIS

Arthur Hickox Proposes Direct Operation from Maker to User for Proposed New Product Backed by Coast Capital

Rebirth of the First National distribution plan of franchising theatre owners, but with numerous radical departures from the original system, is contemplated within the next few months, according to Arthur Hickox, of Los Angeles, who says he is now at work on plans for the launching of a company which would eliminate the middleman in a manufacturer-to-user method of motion picture operation.

Hickox, who formerly represented Electrical Research Products' sales division on the West Coast and is a brother of Sidney Hickox, Hollywood cinematographer, returned to Los Angeles the other day after conferring with certain unnamed and unaffiliated film executives in New York and laying before them the details of a plan to sell exhibitors outright, for a period of five years, territorial rights of motion pictures.

Lining Up New Capital

Hickox said he is lining up Western capital, "new to the picture business," which will sponsor the production of a minimum of 12 features yearly. "Through conservative independent operation," Hickox said, he can make pictures of above average for $150,000. He said he intends to split up the country into 100 zones, each having a population of 1,000,000. The territorial franchises would then be sold on a population basis and the rights to each picture would remain in the hands of the exhibitor purchaser for five years. The theatre owner or circuit purchasing the franchise would be vested with the right to re-rent the picture simultaneously with or following its appearance in the purchaser's theatre, or theatres.

Where a certain city, such as New York or Chicago, has a population of more than a single million, Hickox said it might be difficult to divide the town into population zones. In these cases, Hickox said, the proposed company would dispose of a block of franchises covering the entire city. Economically unsound territories are not being counted on by Hickox, who said his plan involves only 100,000,000—divided into 100 zones—of the country's total population of 120,000,000 or more.

Cash and Royalty Salaries

"Stars, directors and cameramen who will be used in features to be produced according to our plan," Hickox said, "should have a greater incentive to work than under ordinary circumstances, because it provides for salary payments on the basis of one-half in cash and the remainder on royalty of their individual pictorial efforts."

Each exhibitor franchise purchaser will pay approximately $2,500 for territorial rights and he will secure one print. Disposition of that print, or duplicates which he will be empowered to have made, rests entirely upon his judgment just so long as he keeps within the confines of his respective territory. An exhibitor, therefore, will perform the duties of the present exchange, if he decides to rent the production to others in his territory.

The new company, according to Hickox, will participate in distribution only to the extent of shipping prints to franchise holders, by express and collect. There will be no home office organization other than clerks needed for office routine, he said.

Considine Debates Pantages Offer in Film Circuit Plan

Production and theatre organizations are planned by Alexander Pantages, according to John W. Considine, Jr., Fox director, who says he has been invited by Pantages to head the picture producing organization. Considine, who recently was married to Carmen Pantages, said while in New York this week on his honeymoon that he had made no decision in regard to his father-in-law's offer as yet.

"I like directing," said Considine, "and would like to do several more pictures before assuming executive responsibilities which would command all of my time exclusively."

Pantages, himself, would head the theatre circuit, according to Considine. Approximately 100 theatres would be taken on lease, it is planned, and operated on Pantages' old 10, 20 and 30-cent policy, with combination film and vaudeville programs. The circuit probably would be augmented by several hundred additional theatres later on, bringing the total to approximately 300 houses, it was said.

"Theatre operators in many sections of the country," Considine said, "are urging Mr. Pantages to assume operation of their houses. The best theatres of those available would comprise the original circuit group, with others being added as conditions improved."

Rodney and Lloyd Pantages also will be associated with their father in the venture, and probably will have charge of vaudeville acts for the new circuit. Production activities will be centered on the West Coast in a leased studio, and the first year's schedule probably will call for one picture a month, it was said.

Fox Midwest Buyer Dead

Ralph E. Oviatt, 42, for the past two years purchasing agent for Fox Midwest circuit, with offices in Kansas City, died there last Sunday following a sudden heart attack. He had been with National Theatre Supply for three years prior to joining Fox. Funeral services were held Wednesday.

CHISELING—A MENACE

It Spells Tragedy to Business Whether Exhibitor Or Producer Practices It, Says Joe Brandt

by JOE BRANDT

Experience gathered in years of activity with and for the motion picture provides the background for the accompanying article by Joe Brandt, who entered the business as private secretary to Carl Laemmle in 1908, rose to general manager of Universal, then left to form C. B. C. Sales Company in partnership with Harry and Jack Cohn in 1921. Out of C. B. C. grew Columbia Pictures Corporation, from which Mr. Brandt only recently resigned as president when his interest was acquired by Harry Cohn. In this article Mr. Brandt discusses "chiselers" —both exhibitor and distributor varieties—and suggests that they could be eliminated if all in the industry would unite in the common objective of providing good entertainment for the public.

Webster defines a chiseler as one who cuts, pares or gouges, and the definition perfectly fits a class of individuals who have come to the fore in the motion picture business during the last ten years.

No exhibitor can be blamed for trying to buy as cheaply as possible and, by the same token, no distributor can be blamed for trying to get the best possible price for his product. Unfortunately, no way has ever been found of establishing a standard price for film service, because in the exhibitor's mind there is always the thought, "How cheaply can I buy?" and in the distributor's mind, "How much can I get?"

JOE BRANDT

There is no gainsaying the fact that all too frequently the chiseler is allowed to walk away with the honors. Particularly is this true of some buyers, who, in their effort to achieve the reputation of being able to get away with a hard bargain, go to senseless and ridiculous extremes to achieve this purpose.

A Very Creditable Job

In spite of all the weaknesses and extravagances charged against the production end of the industry, it has in the main done a very creditable job considering the obstacles that have had to be surmounted. Prior to this season the producers maintained a standard in motion picture entertainment which enabled them to obtain undisputed recognition as an important factor in the financial and business world.

It is true that vast expenditures do not necessarily mean great pictures, but it is also true that proper financial support makes it possible for a producer to invest more money to give reasonable assurance of good pictures.

The chiseler, with his attitude of "I don't care how good you can make them, but how cheap can I buy them?" discourages the investment of large sums necessarily expended to make good pictures possible. There is no such thing in picture making as bargains. Every dollar spent buys exactly what is paid for, whether it be merchandise, talent or mechanical equipment. With the brief exception when talkies first appeared on the scene, pictures never sold beyond their true value, and an analysis of the prices obtained by distributors today reveals that the average distributor is actually receiving less for his product than he did ten years ago.

Must "Cut Corners"

It is obvious that producers, if return on their investment is curtailed, must inevitably "cut corners" in order to stay in business. No manufacturer can be expected to spend more on his product than his sales warrant. If a producer is forced to rent pictures at a loss, the result is inevitable—necessary, although objectionable, steps must be taken to protect himself.

Exhibitors all over the country, from the big national circuit to the smallest of small town showmen, are now filling the air with wails to the effect that pictures are not as good as they should be and that their box offices are feeling the result of this poorer product. There are many reasons—overproduction, over-seating, over-selling, and under-buying—one form or another of chiseling is responsible for the present slump.

The chiseler, in hammering down prices, has done something any first year student in economics could have predicted, he is trying to get something for nothing, and is getting nothing; he is trying to disprove the proven fact that you only get what you pay for.

The realization that buyers are prone to chisel prices down has compelled the producers to offset this tendency by policies which have been considered vicious because of their apparent evil,—i. e. protection, overexpansion in building or acquiring theatres to secure proper return on negative investments.

A Tragic Battle

A situation has arisen which would be amusing were it not so tragic. A constant battle is being waged between the producers and the theatre owners. The producers fight strenuously for higher rentals because of their desire to continue to invest the maximum necessary to make the kind of pictures which would show the best box office returns. The theatres are constantly fighting to purchase their product as cheaply as possible because they believe this is the proper method to pursue. They are always at loggerheads, each of them forgetting how essential cooperative measures are in order to bring about the prosperity of the industry as a whole.

Speaking for the average exhibitor, I certainly do not expect him, out of the kindness of his heart, to pay more than a reasonable price for his film, any more than I expect the distributor to offer his wares at a price which represents a loss. However, it would be to the advantage of all of us who have so much at stake, if we tempered any negotiation, either in buying or selling a product, with this thought—that the producers have only one objective, to make pictures that will induce the public to patronize the theatres. This takes money—and plenty of it. And the theatre owners must be willing to pay a fair rental to induce producers (particularly independent producers) to continue to risk the terrific investments required.

Vicious Practice

Chiseling film rentals means a desire for greater protection by the producers—more protection means more claims by theatre owners of monopoly and ruinous practices. Both are vicious practices which smack of disaster and are devoid of common sense.

All that is needed to remedy the situation is a definite spirit of give and take—not take all or give all, but a fair attitude on the part of both theatre owner and producer of being fair in their dealings and to realize the problems which confront both.

The present chaotic condition is far-reaching in its effect; banks and investing public have lost confidence in the industry. The recent conventions in Detroit and Washington indicated definitely that evil practices have crept into the business which both the theatre owners and the producers are guilty of.

Considering the billions that are invested in the industry, is it unreasonable to ask that the attempt to dominate on either side be eliminated and a forceful effort made to create a more cooperative spirit, and thus bring about a safe and sane manner in which to conduct our business, conserve assets, protect investments—and restore the confidence which has been lost?

English Circuit Net Drops

Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, an English circuit, shows a net profit of £485,-605 for the year ended January 31, 1932, according to a statement just issued in London. The net is a decrease of £21,204 from the previous year. The per share dividend rate has been maintained at 15 per cent.

Johnson's "Congorilla" Ready

Martin Johnson's latest African picture, "Congorilla," is cut and the finishing touches are being added. The picture will be on Broadway in about 10 days. This is said to be the only film with 100 per cent sound actually recorded on the spot.

Releasing Four in May

First National will release four features during May, as follows: "The Famous Fergusen Case," May 14; "The Rich Are Always With Us," May 21; "The Strange Love of Molly Louvain," May 28; "Two Seconds," May 28.

Blum Reelected MPTO Head

Herman A. Blum has been re-elected president of the MPTO of Maryland, an Allied unit. Blum is treasurer of Allied States Association, the national organization.

FARRELL AND GAYNOR RULE FILMS AGAIN

King Charlie moves back into the office which Lew Ayres enjoyed during a year's lease. It feels pretty good to Charlie, you bet! And Ex-King Lew graciously vacates. The Farrell plurality is 3,223 votes. He wins over Clark Gable.

Queen Janet is simply thrilled with the idea of being movie monarch once again. Once, twice, thrice! That's a splendid record indeed! Janet swings 5,927 ballots more than Joan Crawford who's next to top in 1932's listing.

We'll let you in on the four-star final returns. Here's the official count, showing what's what:

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THERE is spring in the air, and just ahead of us we have National Boys Week, which is officially marked on the calendar for April 30 to May 7. There is something exciting about the small boy. He is the keynote person of the family; he is the small dynamo that moves things in the general direction of his desire. And of course he desires his motion pictures. He is a potential customer to be considered.

April has many attractive possibilities for program building and box office return. The intelligent theatre manager will recognize the fact that he will have to use his imagination and his creative capacity to compete with spring in its early bloom. It is so much more attractive to ride out into the country, where the first fruit blossoms are in their glory; to investigate the first streams finding their way out of their shell of thin ice. There is no motion picture in the world as tempting as the open road in April. But there are a number of ways to bring the poetry and adventure of April into the theatre. Sensibly planned programs of historic importance, literary significance, local interest will not fail.

The First Pony Express

SATURDAY, April 2d.

It was on April 3d in 1860 that the first pony express riders left Sacramento to ride to the east, while another group, in an attempt to build up a national service, left St. Joseph, Missouri, to ride west. This undertaking was the preamble to the great railroad system of the current day; to the air mail service that has spread its wings from coast to coast and cut down the hours of communication.

The following pictures are splendid for your purpose. These, properly exploited, should win press comment as well as local interest.

FEATURES:

"Fighting Caravans," Paramount, 8,566 feet.
"Big Trail," Fox, 9,720 feet.
"Santa Fe Trail," Paramount, 6,142 feet.
"Red Fork Range," Big 4, 5,490 feet.

SHORTS:

"Bimbo's Express" (Cartoon) Paramount, 1 reel.
"Hare Mail" (Cartoon) Universal, 1 reel.
"Little Covered Wagon" (Chimp. comedy) Tiffany, 2 reels.
"Little Trail" (Krazy Kat cartoon) Columbia, 1 reel.
"Pioneer Days" (Cartoon) Columbia, 1 reel.
"Pony Express Kid," Universal.

Polar Discovery

SATURDAY, APRIL 9th.

On this date Admiral Peary in 1908 started on the journey which won him the acclaim of the world as the discoverer of the North Pole. He left Etah on August 18th, struggled through the accumulating ice of Grant Land on his way to the Great Adventure. There is a wealth of historic story behind this hazardous undertaking, the details of which will interest the educators, club people and church officials of your vicinity. An announcement to these people should bring a special audience for a selected program. There are persons in every community to whom an anniversary of this kind is of especial importance, members of historical and geographical societies, for instance, newspaper representatives, history teachers. Hang maps in your foyer. Local schools might be interested in presenting a sketch of Eskimos in their igloos, for Iceland is always of particular interest to children.

FEATURES:

"With Byrd at the South Pole," Paramount, 7,593 feet.
"Dirigible" (South Pole drama), Columbia, 9,211 feet.

SHORTS:

"Houses of Arctic and Tropic," RKOPathe, 2 reels.
"Arctic Antics" (Silly Symphony) Columbia, 1 reel.
"The Explorer" (Cartoon of North Pole) Educational, 1 reel.
"The Gall of the North" (Eddie Buzzell) Columbia, 1 reel.
"Polar Pals" (Tom and Jerry cartoon) Radio, 1 reel.

Thomas Jefferson

SATURDAY, APRIL 9th.

April 13th is the birthday of Thomas Jefferson (1743-1826).

The following short features, with a short talk by one of the distinguished guests, would make this occasion noteworthy:

"Frontier Romance" (Colonies 1777), MGM, 2 reels.
"Paul Revere" (comedy), Universal, 1 reel.

Kindness to Animals Week

SATURDAY, APRIL 16th.

The week of April 17 to 23 is set aside as Kindness to Animals Week. This is an outstanding anniversary for children. There is not a small boy in the neighborhood who doesn't love a dog. Children are instinctively tender to their pets. It is good for them to be trained in the care of animals and to know something of the ethics of humane societies.

FEATURES:

"Wild Horse" (Hoot Gibson), Allied, 68 min.
"Sporting Blood" (Story of thoroughbred horse), MGM, 82 min.
"On the Border" (Rin-Tin-Tin), Warner, 4,410 feet.
"Rough Waters" (Rin-Tin-Tin), Warner, 3,960 feet.

SHORTS:

"Animal Fair" (Aesop Fable), RKO Pathe, 1 reel.
"Big Champions" (Circus animals in training), Sportlight, RKO Pathe, 1 reel.
"Blue Grass Kings" (Sportlight—race horses), RKO Pathe, 1 reel.
"Busy Beavers" (Silly Symphony), Columbia, 1 reel.
"Canine Champions" (Sportlight), RKO Pathe.
"Cat, Dog and Company" (Gang observes slogan, "Be Kind to Animals"), MGM, 2 reels.
"Dog Snatcher" (Cartoon), Columbia, 1 reel.
"Dogs Is Dogs" (Our Gang comedy), MGM, 2 reels.

Paul Revere's Ride

SATURDAY, APRIL 16th.

There is not a school in the United States whose children have not learned the lines of Longfellow's famous poems among the "Tales of a Wayside Inn." The story by the landlord of Paul Revere's ride from Lexington to Concord on which exciting occasion he warned the people of the approach of the English troops, is a familiar legend with every school. Attractive short features for the occasion are:

"Frontier Romance," MGM, 2 reels.
"Paul Revere" (Comedy), Universal, 1 reel.

National Garden Week

SATURDAY, APRIL 23d.

The week of garden shows comes April 17 to 32.

SHORTS:

"And the Green Grass Grew All Around" (Comedy song cartoon), Paramount, 1 reel.
"Flower Garden" (Revue), MGM, 2 reels.
"Mickey Cuts Up" (Mickey-Mouse cartoon—gardener), Columbia.
"Mickey's Warrior" (Comedy—garden party), RKO, 2 reels.
"Springtime" (Silly Symphony—cartoon of flowers, birds, frogs), Columbia.

National Boys Week

SATURDAY, APRIL 30

Boys' Week (April 30 to May 7) was instituted to arouse the interest of men in boys and the responsibility of the average American citizen for the small boy who is America's potential citizen. This is a week of importance to the Boy Scouts and to boys' organizations everywhere. There is a splendid history behind boy achievement that may be built up for the programs of this week. This department in Motion Picture Herald has a file of interesting material at the disposal of the theatre manager who may wish to do a program in a special way for boys. A postal card of request will bring it to you.

FEATURES:

"Tom Sawyer" (mischievous boy), Paramount, 7,972 feet.
"Carnival Boat" (The story of a lumber camp emphasizing the relationship of father and son), Radio.
"Father and Son" (Drama—Jack Holt), Columbia, 6,300 feet.
"Father's Son" (Lewis Stone, Leon Janney), First National, 6,930 feet.
"Penrod and Sam" (Comedy of boy life), First National, 71 min.
"Forbidden Adventure" (Comedy—Mitzi Green, Jackie Searl), Paramount, 7,242 feet.
"Huckleberry Finn" (Comedy, with Junior Durkin, Jackie Coogan), Paramount, 7,434 feet.
"Skippy" (Boy life, Jackie Cooper), Paramount, 9,147 feet.
"Ambassador Bill" (Will Rogers, Tad Alexander), Fox.
"The Champ" (Jackie Cooper, Wallace Beery), MGM, 7,800 feet.
"Sooky" (Jackie Cooper), Paramount, 7,587 feet.

SHORTS:

"Ahoy" (Sea Scouts). Educational, 2 reels.
"Barefoot Days" (Comedy), Warner, 1 reel.
"Batter Up" (Comedy, Penrod and Sam in baseball game), Warner, 1 reel.
"Boyhood Memories" (Sportlight), RKO Pathe.
"Dog-a-Log" (Comedy), Universal.
"Dogs Is Dogs" (Our Gang comedy), MGM, 2 reels.
"Knights in Khaki" (Boy Scouts), Educational.
"Lost Valley" (Boy Scouts), Educational.
"Runaway Boys" (Bruce novelty), Paramount, 1 reel.
"Younger Years" (Sports for children), RKO Pathe, 1 reel.

This department is indebted to the Fox West Coast public relations department for helpful data on timely programs.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

DANCERS IN THE DARK

74 Minutes

Better than average, this picture is easily one of the best that came to Broadway last week, which, when considering one or two other offerings, is not paying it sufficient praise. It is entertaining chiefly because of the acting of Miriam Hopkins, Jack Oakie and several members of the supporting cast, and the cross section of 10-cents-a-dance-hall atmosphere dangled before your eyes by a deft cameraman.

What goes on behind the doors of one of the dance halls in a large city has been admirably pictured. You are made to feel that it is authentic and that's all any picture need do to accomplish something worthwhile. The scenes hurry back and forth between orchestra platform, the floor and private offices, never getting away from the theme for one moment throughout the entire footage.

The story is built around the orchestra leader (Jack Oakie), his pal (William Collier, Jr.), a 10-cents-dance girl (Miriam Hopkins) and an underworld character (George Raft). True to his promise to his pal's parents, the leader does everything under the sun to break up a romance that has reached the point of marriage between his pal and the dance girl. In this he is ably abetted by the crook, who wants her for himself—and had her before the young saxophone player came on the scene.

There are many amusing scenes and slants too lengthy to set down, contributed mainly by Oakie, Eugene Pallette, Walter Hiers and Lyda Roberti. The latter can certainly clown. And while the medals are being thrown about, let us not forget to mention that George Raft does splendid work as Louie, the crook.

It would appear that the best selling angles lie in "Names" and authentic dance hall atmosphere. Play up Oakie and emphasize that Miriam Hopkins gives everything he's got (and that's a lot) to her role. The title is a good one, offers many possibilities and suggests a corking little atmosphere prologue where practical. The New York Paramount used a couple of attractive flasher signs at the entrance to the lobby and a head cutout of Hopkins with some mechanical contrivance that made an attached rigging of hips do mean wriggle.

Step on it and get your money out of this one.

POLLY OF THE CIRCUS

70 Minutes

Clarke Gable as a minister and Marion Davies in tights as a trapeze performer. Think that over for a moment, plus the fact that this picture gets started at the half-way mark, and then decide that you'll accept things as they are, do your best with an unwieldy vehicle and pray that those vast publicity sources outside your control will bring the curious to the box office.

Sell Miss Davies all you want to; she'll need it in this one. But don't try to foist Mr. Gable on your public as a preacher. This because of past roles, which he has so admirably filled, and because he simply doesn't register as a member of the clergy. True, the picture has its moments, but these are few and far between. Not even the suspense in the aerial sequences will atone for what is obviously gross carelessness in production, from casting right down the line. The one redeeming feature of the whole picture appears to lie in the aerial shots of the performers of the circus. These were deftly caught by the camera and clearly show the intricacy and danger of a trapeze act; So clearly, in fact, that some patrons may let out a gasp now and then.

This picture came into the New York Capitol the week preceding Easter, presumably as a Lenten offering on account of its religious background. Well, boys, there are some bits in Miss Davies' dialogue that won't go over very big with some of the folk in the smaller cities. On top of that there's a scene in a church that hardly appears within the range of possibility. What would have been stark drama in life, when a crazy janitor "stops the show" by hurling accusations and abuse at the pastor, is more or less quietly tolerated by a congregation whose self-control is remarkable to the extreme.

The scene is laid in a small community about to be visited by a circus. Polly (Miss Davies) falls off the trapeze and is carried to the nearby rectory to be treated for injuries so severe that it's impossible to remove her to the hospital. She wins the young preacher's heart, but not on an equal footing with members of the parish. There's a distressing scene in the church, and a self-sacrificing wife leaves her husband to rejoin the circus, there to plan a suicidal fall, which is averted.

It may be that there's a strong element of appeal in this picture for women—and the credulous. At least that would be the slant we'd follow, not forgotting, of course, the value of Clark Gable's name and the vast amount of publicity Miss Davies is bound to receive. However, it does not seem advisable to oversell any angle. Push the circus atmosphere by all means and if your town will stand for that draped trapeze performer gag, it has its possibilities. You can also mention that the picture was adapted from a show staged back in 1907. Some of the oldtimers may recall it.

HOTEL CONTINENTAL

71 Minutes

The success of that stage play based upon drama that constantly ebbs and flows through rooms and corridors of internationally famed hostelries, was bound to echo and re-echo through Hollywood. Among others, Tiffany caught the fever and here's that company's offering on what can happen overnight in a big hotel.

Right at the start, however, let us sound a note of caution about selling a Grand Hotel pattern because this isn't one. As a matter of fact, this picture had as great a theme, if not a greater one, only to lose it through close application to a thinly constructed crook story. Think of the possibilities of a wake on the eve of demolishment of the famous Waldorf Astoria Hotel! Director Cabanne obviously did think of this several times, as indicated by several little excursions in that direction, but never at any time got very far away from a sordid little central theme. As a result, what might have been an outstanding picture, resolved itself into a good program attraction.

Just an idea of the thinness of story, outside of a few digressions portraying hotel life. It deals with the return of a crook to reclaim a sum of money he has hidden behind brick and mortar in one of the rooms prior to being sentenced to prison. His old associates are right on his trail, however, and are there ahead of him, to rob him, with the aid of an attractive girl. Then romance develops.

The title will undoubtedly be one of the angles you will cash in on when playing this picture. Whether its a Grand Hotel or not, the similarity of title immediately will suggest itself and stimulate interest. But we do not think it advisable to stress this angle for reason that there is a Grand Hotel in the making and some apologies might be in order at a later date. It may be possible to obtain some good stories by use of the Waldorf-Astoria wake slant for the name of the famous old hotel has penetrated to the far corners of the earth. Royalty and many notables registered there in bygone days.

In addition to excellent work done by Peggy Shannon and Theodore Von Eltz, you will have several familiar "names," 'though obscure as to roles, to offer. Many patrons will recall the palmy days of Ethel Clayton and Henry B. Walthal. The cast also includes J. Farrell MacDonald and Rockcliffe Fellowes. However, the two principals are in focus the better part of the time.

Tempest

(Ufa)

Drama

Emil Jannings, notable German film player, appears again before an American film audience at the Little Carnegie Playhouse, where Leo Brecher has undertaken to offer the premieres of Ufa product in this country, following the termination of Ufa's lease on the Cosmopolitan, neighboring upper Broadway picture-house.

The film, understood to be at the moment playing in various European cities under the title "Sturme der Leidenschaft," which is literally translated as "Storms of Passion," runs rather long, but seemed to hold the attention of an opening night audience at the theatre. It is unquestionably melodramatic. The use of occasional English subtitle dialogue translations is helpful to the members of the audience who do not understand German.

Prominent in the cast are the blondely attractive and well received Anna Sten; Franz Nicklisch, who with Miss Sten, is principally involved in the rather secondary romantic interest; Otto Wernicke, inscrutably able as the detective on the trail of Jannings, who at the same time is an old friend.

The story concerns Jannings, a physically large and powerful crook, who, upon leaving prison, returns to Miss Sten and his old haunts. A crook friend urges him to vouch for young Nicklisch, and he obtains the boy's release from a reform school. Jannings, against his will, is persuaded to join in the robbery of a bank and detectives follow his trail. Meanwhich, Nicklisch, who has already fallen in love with Miss Sten, reveals to Jannings in a moment of heat that she is carrying on an affair with Anton Pointer, photographer at a carnival. Jannings pursues the man and tosses him into the water after a struggle. A robbery which he commits to satisfy Miss Sten's desire for a fur coat, sets Wernicke on the trail again. Jannings hides, but his hiding place is revealed by Miss Sten to save Nicklisch. Escaping from prison, he finds the boy with Miss Sten, and a terrific struggle results badly for Nicklisch just as the police arrive.

Jannings again offers a role in which he turns

TARZAN THE TALK OF THE INDUSTRY!

"Gentlemen, I've just come back from the Stanley Theatre in Baltimore. We put on 'TARZAN THE APE MAN' and cracked the house record held by 'Hell Divers' by a wide margin. The Big Timer

(Columbia)

The Pugilist

(Seen in Hollywood)

Columbia's contribution to the present cycle of prize fight pictures under the title of "The Big Timer" reveals the rise and fall of Cookie, the pugilist, and with the exception of picturing a girl, Constance Cummings, as his manager, it could be accepted as an authentic document of the average fighter's life and his environment.

It is Eddie Buzzell's first attempt at directing a feature length production and he was the recipient of much credit in the handling of a more or less difficult story. He made his characters live their parts, put over his laughs at the proper time and slipped in the drama just long enough for the audience to prepare for the next comedy situation, it appeared.

Ben Lyon as the fighter was well received by a recent Coast audience, while Constance Cummings also proved popular in the difficult role of the feminine fight manager. Tommy Dugan was accorded a good reception for his true delineation of the champ's aide and he provoked many laughs.

The picture has plenty of action combined with fast dialogue.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. From an original story by Robert Riskin. Adaptation by Dorothy Howell. Directed by Eddie Buzzell. Photographer, L. W. O'Connell. Release date, March 10, 1932. Running time, 71 minutes.

The Mouthpiece

(Warner)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Tricks of the profession among criminal lawyers form the background for this production. It features well received performances by Warren William, Aline MacMahon and Sidney Fox. Particularly noted as outstanding is the characterization of Miss MacMahon in the role of the wise and flippant, but tolerant secretary of "the mouthpiece."

The film career of Vincent Day, as portrayed by Warren William, is much like that related in a recently popular biography of the life of New York's famous criminal attorney, William J. Fallon. Starting as a prosecutor, he turns to acting as counsel for those charged with crime after he is the unwitting instrument which sends an innocent young man to the electric chair.

Like the late William J. Fallon, he soon discovers that psychology is equally as important as the law in swaying juries and outwitting prosecutors. Also, he finds himself inextricably tangled with the high life of the underworld, whose leaders he defends from the clutches of the law. Liquor and women are his weaknesses, until he meets a little stenographer in his own office, Sidney Fox, whose natural goodness prompts him to see his own increasing worthlessness. But he has gone too far, and when he tries to get out of criminal practice the gangsters, feeling he knows too much, provide him with the inevitable end to such a shady career.

Based upon a story by Frank Collins, for which Earl Baldwin wrote the adaptation, "The Mouthpiece" is directed by James Flood, with Elliott Nugent aiding him. While the story revolves principally around Warren William, Sidney Fox and Aline MacMahon, a large cast of acknowledged capable players assist them.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by James Flood. Based on story by Frank Collins. Adapted by Earl Baldwin. Co-directed by Elliott Nugent. Photographed by Barney McGill. Release date, May 14, 1932.

Keepers of Youth

(B. I. P. America)

Drama

An English importation which, when viewed in the projection room recently, evoked a good bit of praise for the leading player and seemed to fairly well entertain the assembled small audience.

Robert Irvine, cast as the new headmaster of an English preparatory school, was thought to have done an excellent characterization, while his support, chiefly involving Ann Todd, Garry Marsh, John Turnbull and John Hunt, handled their parts sincerely and effectively, it was generally conceded.

Irvine, at the school, finds things not all that they might be among the masters, who are in the main, a group of broken down and unsuccessful teachers. In attempting to protect Miss Todd from the advances of Marsh, bullying sports instructor, Irvine is found alone with her in her room by Turnbull, headmaster. Refusing to listen to explanations, Irvine writes his resignation, which is opened by Marsh. The latter provokes a fight and Irvine thrashes him, hands in the resignation and leaves with Miss Todd to conclude the film.

Polly of the Circus

(MGM)

Drama

Marion Davies plays the lead in this picturization of the elderly stage play of the same name, authored by Margaret Mayo and prominent on the boards of Broadway as far back in history as 1907. Clark Gables takes care of the role of the young and handsome minister who sacrifices everything in his career for the love of Polly, the circus trapeze performer.

An audience at the New York Capitol gave evidence of having enjoyed the rather melodramatic adaptation. On occasion, the musical score was perhaps too heavily stressed, where it hardly dovetailed with the theme or action of the story, except as it provided a certain background atmosphere.

The story concerns the romance which develops between Gable, young minister, being guided to a career by his bishop-uncle, played by C. Aubrey Smith, and Miss Davies, hurt during her trapeze act and carried to the minister's house nearby. The two are married, with the result that Gable loses his post and is in a fair way to losing his career because of his marriage to Miss Davies. He willingly makes the sacrifice for her, but is unable to find work. Realizing that he is unhappy, she pleads with the stern-faced bishop to help him. Meeting with a refusal, she leaves Gable to return to the circus as the only means of restoring her husband's career.

When the uncle does an about-face in his opinion of the girl, and goes to Gable, she has already left. The two hurry to the circus grounds, but find her already aloft, about to try the act which caused the previous injury. She is not at all sure of herself, the audience is given to understand, but the sight of Gable enables her to carry through successfully.

Comment was favorable of the camera work in the circus tent, where unusual angled shots were achieved. Well received in the support were Raymond Hatton as the drunken attendant at the minister's home; David Landau as the circus manager, and Maude Eburne in a minor role as the girl's nurse.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Alfred Santell. From the play of the same title by Margaret Mayo. Adaptation by Carey Wilson. Dialogue by Laurence E. Johnson. Editor, George Hively. Cameraman, George Barnes. Release date, February 27, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Dancers in the Dark

(Paramount)

Drama

Miriam Hopkins, recently imported from the New York stage to the screen, as a professional dancer and entertainer in a dance hall of not too savory reputation which is reflected in her own past, captivated a New York Paramount audience with her sincere and finished portrayal of an exacting role.

In chief support are Jack Oakie, voluble and appealing as the leader of a band; William Collier, Jr., as the saxophone player who is in love, mutually, with Miss Hopkins; George Raft, as the young crook who wants Miss Hopkins. The balance of the cast was found to be highly capable throughout.

The story is set exclusively in the rather sordid atmosphere of the cheap "dance-factory," carried out competently in the behavior of the large number of the supporting cast. Among them, Eugene Pallette provides amusement in his budding romance with Lyda Roberti, who in turn supplies a bit of lightness with her accented conversation, her unusual dancing and singing.

The story, sordid as is the setting, is brightened by the romance of Miss Hopkins and Collier. Oakie attemps to steer the boy from his fiancee by having him fired by Maurice Black, hall manager who was well received for his portrayal of the excitable Italian. Oakie arranges that Collier go to Pittsburgh with another band, in the meanwhile hoping that Miss Hopkins will slip. Raft, for his part, attempts to draw her to him and asks her to leave with him after committing murder in the course of a robbery. Oakie had attempted to cause the "slip" on the part of Miss Hopkins but failed. Collier finds them together on his return and suspects the worst. The police come for Raft and he shoots Oakie in attempting an escape, which fails when he falls to his death from a window. Oakie, waiting for an ambulance,

Man Wanted

(Warner)

Comedy-Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Being private (and male) secretary to Kay Francis should make it difficult for any ambitious and personable young bachelor to keep his mind exclusively on his work. On the other hand, having a husband who takes no interest in wife's business, which is her great passion, makes it difficult for the wife to maintain strictly business relations with her secretary when he is efficient, personable and graciously attentive. That is the situation in Warner's latest film starring Kay Francis.

The husband, Kenneth Thomson, is rich and does nothing, while the secretary, David Manners, is very helpful in Kay's publishing business. The husband finds his interest wandering elsewhere, and his wife takes greater and greater interest in the office.

The plot affords opportunities, well taken, for very attractive backgrounds, for gorgeous costuming and occasional bits of comedy to divert attention from the romantic aspects of the piece. In these latter well-received service is rendered by Andy Devine and Una Merkel. In a brief appearance Elizabeth Patterson also provoked a few well chosen chuckles. Miss Francis and Manners it was agreed do their romantic work with charming taste.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by William Dieterle. Story by Robert Lord. Adaptation by Charles Kenyon. Photographed by Gregg Toland. Edited by James Gibbon. Release date, April 23, 1932.

Two White Arms

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Menjou's First British Film

(Seen in London)

Here is a motion picture packed with first-rate players, directed by Fred Niblo, photographed by an efficient American cameraman, and costing in all £35,000 to make, but which was not strikingly received at its English showing.

Based on the Dearden stage play, it presents Major Carey Liston (Menjou) as a philanderer, who throws aside the good and beautiful Lydia Charrington (Margaret Bannerman) in favor of Alison Drury (Jane Baxter), an unsophisticated child whom, as though for a change, he marries. Later, when she as a doting wife fusses and fawns around him, inducing her mother (Jean Cadell) to assist her in the process of pampering, he yearns for the greater freedom which he formerly enjoyed.

Dr. Biggash, (Claude Allister) a psychologist of great popularity among men who do not mind paying the price for "understanding diagnoses" with which to convince their wives, appeals to Major Liston, who immediately becomes a patient. The idea is that Liston will "lose his memory" and, absenting himself from home, he takes up work in a garage where he joyfully recommences his old habits with a fascinating secretary (Rene Ray). Lydia Charrington, just returned from a visit to India, where she sought solace from her disappointment at Liston's marriage, discovers the game and helps to explode it. Finding life with his wife impossible he appeals to Lydia to elope with him but she, like a good woman, sends him back to his boring little wife.

Every member of the cast, as well as the director and the cameraman, it was conceded, did their utmost but certain comment indicated that the subject lacked in scope for the motion picture artist.

Whistlin' Dan

(Tiffany)

Western

A surprise is provided early in the picture when Ken Maynard's friend Bob, played by Don Terry, is killed by the bandit gang because the ransom has not arrived. And the reason it has not reached the band's lair is because the banker has refused Maynard's plea for the loan, forcing him to hold up the bank, but too late. Whereupon Maynard resolves to capture them all. In this he is assisted by July (Harlan E. Knight).

Action starts when a member of the gang of Karloff (Georges Renavent) arranges for their delivery from jail with him when the posse is tricked into a futile chase. They join Karloff. They have turned over several of the criminals to the sheriff when Karloff's suspicions are verified. Carmelita (Joyzelle) by a ruse wins Maynard sufficient time to start for the border, his plan being to trick the gang into crossing the line, where he has arranged for the posse to jump from hiding. The plan works, but Karloff dashes off, with Maynard in pursuit. A fight follows at the saloon. Maynard is felled but a bullet from July stays the dirk in Karloff's hand.

It was noted that Tarzan had less featuring in this production.

A Tiffany production directed by Phil Rosen from the story and continuity by Stuart Anthony. Photography by Ira J. Morgan. Settings by Ralph De Lacy. Sound by John Stransky. Film editor, Rose Loewinger. Release date, March 20, 1932. Running time, 64 minutes.

Behind Stone Walls

(Mayfair)

Drama

Mayfair Pictures, until recently known as Action Pictures, offers a dramatic effort centering about the love of a father for his son, and the sacrifice, on his part, of political ambition and opportunity to aid the son.

Robert Elliott enacts the role of the district attorney, whose son, played by Eddie Nugent, has passed his bar examinations and is about to follow his father in the law. Elliott's wife, Priscilla Dean, who, it is understood, is not the mother of Nugent, has long been carrying on an affair with Robert Ellis, friend of Elliott. After Elliott is forced to leave town on business, Miss Dean visits Ellis in his apartment. An argument and attempted renunciation of their affair results in her killing him.

As she attempts to make her escape, Nugent comes in with a message from his father for Ellis. Realizing the situation, he permits his mother to escape, and when Ellis' servant suddenly walks in, he is held for the murder. His father resigns as district attorney to defend him, but when the boy refuses to divulge why he committed the murder, the father recalls his resignation, and, prosecuting, sees his son sent to prison for life. However, the boy's sweetheart, Ann Christy, accidentally sees Miss Dean going into Ellis' apartment with the latter's servant. She brings Elliott and they overhear sufficient to prove Miss Dean's guilt. Letters, which she buys from the servant, George Chesebro, Elliott tries to obtain, and in the struggle, Miss Dean is shot.

Elliott is tried for the murder of his wife, and the son, meanwhile released, offers an impassioned plea and saves his father, with a conclusion more or less as expected.

The cast was thought to have handled itself adequately, with the burden of the dramatic work, at least throughout the major portion of the film, resting on Miss Dean.

Produced and distributed by Mayfair Pictures. Directed by Frank Strayer. Story and continuity by George B. Seitz. Editor, Byron Robinson. Photographed by Jules Cronjager. Recording, Earl Crain. Release date, March 15, 1932.

Cossacks of the Don

(Amkino)

Drama

The painstaking, deliberateness characteristic in the treatment of drama in Russian productions is emphasized in this story of war and misplaced love, which also makes of the motion picture a vehicle of realism in delineation of the clashes of the Cossacks and the common moujiks, along the banks of the river Don.

Intermingled in the picture, and with sharp contrasts, are scenes of conflict and of play, both in the frank rough style that is native to the Russian picture. Grigory, young Cossack, falls in love with Aksinya, the flirtatious wife of a Cossack officer. Grigory's father forces him to marry Natalie. But all four are unhappy and Aksinya urges him to elope with her. They find work on the estate of a landowner. Then comes the call to war, where bullets level peasant and Cossack to one standard. Grigory, wounded, returns home to find that Aksinya has been betrayed by the son of the landowner. He obtains revenge and deserts Aksinya.

Emma Cessarskaya is starred as Aksinya. M. Abrikosov has the role of Grigory or Grisha.

Produced in the Soviet Republic by Soyuzkino and distributed by Amkino. Directed by Olga Preobrajenskaya. Associate director, Mikhail Pravor. Photography by D. Feldman. Running time, 81 minutes. Release date, March 18, 1932.

Carnival Boat

(RKO Pathe)

Melodrama

A rather melodramatic but quite active story, set in the lumber country of the Northwest, and featuring Bill Boyd and Ginger Rogers, is this recent Charles R. Rogers production for RKO Pathe.

Interestingly pictured is the pulsating activity of the high timber country, with the thrill or two of the logging camp which should have the younger element of the population on edge, as was indicated by several representatives at the New York Hippodrome, as well as numerous of the adult generation.

Bill Boyd, blonde, curley-headed and robust, is rather too lax with his men on the job, and Hobart Bosworth, his father and old lumber boss, comes up to find why Rail Head is falling off quota. When the carnival boat arrives, he sees why. Ginger Rogers, star performer thereon, is taking up much too much of the mental activity of Boyd, to the detriment of the quota. Fred Kohler, unhandsome and equally as robust as Boyd, is using his wits to usurp his position and step into the shoes of Bosworth, soon to be retired.

Bosworth takes a double trainload of cut timber down the track without good brakes, when the men refuse. He is hurt, but saved from serious injury when Boyd goes to the rescue. Boyd goes to work then, and floats so many logs in a short time, that the inevitable log-jam occurs. Boyd's logging activities have been at the expense of his attentions to Miss Rogers. Following an unsatisfactory visit to the invalid Bosworth, Miss Rogers is leaving for the boat, about to pull away, when she sees the jam. Again the men refuse, and Bosworth is set to do the dynamite job himself when Boyd takes the box, and Kohler with him. Kohler's double crossing fails, the jam is broken, Boyd rescues Kohler from the log-filled river, and proceeds to trounce him in a delightful battle. His sorrow at sight of the departing boat is transformed when Miss Rogers arrives at his elbow.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Produced by Charles R. Rogers. Directed by Albert Rogell. Story by Marion Jackson and Don Ryan. Screen play by James Seymour. Editor, John Link. Cameraman, Ted McCord. Release date, March 19, 1932. Running time, 62 minutes.

Law of the West

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Western

Cut to the more or less conventional pattern of the western film of today, this effort has its better than fair quota of hard and fast riding in a country which abounds in splendid mountain scenery, of which much is made. The guns are not lacking, but their barking is somewhat subordinated to the drumming feet of the hard-driven horses.

Young and personable Bob Steele, who rides like a fiend, indulging in various trick methods of mounting which should delight the hearts of the younger element of the population, takes the lead. Opposite, completing the romantic angle, is Nancy Drexel, attractive and blonde.

A prologue-sequence pictures Ed Brady, villain of the piece, abducting the baby son of Hank Bell, rancher, despite the efforts of Charles West to prevent the crime.

Seventeen years later, Brady is found as leader of a band of cattle rustlers; Bell, the marshal, called from a neighboring regime to rout the rustlers; Steele, the kidnaped boy, now as the son of Brady. Brady makes a habit of lashing Steele at any opportunity, and Steele insists on seeing Miss Drexel, daughter of West, despite Brady's instructions. Brady schemes to draw Bell into his hidden valley and have it out for past wrongs, while Bell is still on the hunt for Brady and his son. Steele attempts to escape with Miss Drexel and West, but Brady gets there first and sends Steele out to meet Bell, after persuading him that he had come to "get" them. Brady's deception is discovered in time for Steele and Bell to beat off the gang and save Miss Drexel from Brady, who had attempted to escape with her. The lost mother and son sequence follows in order.

Produced and distributed by Sono Art-World Wide. Directed by Robert N. Bradbury. Story and adaptation by Robert Bradbury. Edited by Charles Hunt. Photography, Archie Stout and Will Cline. Release date, March 20, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

My Wife's Family

(B. I. P. America)

Comedy

A light and rather rapid-moving domestic comedy revolving about the always opportune in-law situation, this is an English production released in this country by B. I. P. America.

Gene Gerrard, musical comedy player, offers the lead as the once happy young husband, whose domain is invaded, after a brother-in-law arrives for a stay, by his wife's mother, father and sister. The wife is played by Muriel Angelus. The cast is, of course, more or less unknown to the American motion picture audience. There is rather much of slapstick, but a projection room group which saw the film in New York, seemed to extract a good bit of enjoyment from the effort.

The mother-in-law, played by Amy Veness, attempts to persuade Miss Angelus to return home, on the ground that her husband is untrue. The fun begins when Gene buys his wife a piano, sending her a note to look in the summer house. She does, finds a baby in a basket, and completely overlooks the piano. Mother-in-law decides the baby is Gene's and asks for an explanation. Stumbling, he involves his father-in-law and Jimmy Godden. Gene plans with Godden that he should arrange to blow up the piano. Mother-in-law, after the explosion, accuses Gene and Godden of murdering the unknown baby, which really belongs to sister and brother-in-law, and has them arrested.

They talk themselves out of jail and find another baby, belonging to the maid, who has secretly been married to another brother-in-law. A few swift bits of liquid refreshment spur Gene on to elect his in-laws from his home, which returns to peace and quiet for the young husband and wife.

Produced by British International. Distributed by B. I. P. America. Directed by Monty Banks. Screen adaptation by Fred Duprez and Val Valentine. Release date, April 15, 1932. Running time, 65 minutes.

The Drifter

(Capital Film Exchange)

Melodrama

William Farnum, oldster of the screen, and still retaining much of that flavor of vigorousness and vitality which once made his name a by-word where films was the topic, plays a lead which was conceded to be important to the ultimate result in this film. Drawn to a more or less conventional melodramatic pattern, the Willis Kent production is an adaptation of the Oliver Drake story, "Wanderlust."

The story, briefly, concerns Farnum as the wanderer who finally and unexpectedly arrives at a small Canadian village, there to meet and immediately fall in love with the daughter of a lumber company proprietor. He also keeps his identity secret from a brother, played by Bruce Warren, he discovers by accident in the place. Noah Beery enacts the role of the lumberman-villain in his usual capable manner, while Phyllis Barrington plays the girl. Charles Sellon also has an important position among the supporting players.

Farnum succeeds after several complications, in putting the villain where he can do no harm and in seeing his brother and Miss Barrington united. That done, the wanderer takes himself off to other parts, happier, it is understood, than at his arrival.

The outdoors, always appealing as a setting for a film which has its full quota of action, should especially draw those fans of the film who like their pictures in wide-open settings. Much is capably made. via camera, of the beautiful Canadian mountain scenery, with snow-capped peaks a splendid detail.

Produced by Willis Kent. Distributed by Capital Film Exchange. Directed by William O'Connor. Adapted from the story "Wanderlust" by Oliver Drake. Edited by Thomas Persons. Cameraman, William Nobles. Release date, February 10, 1932. Running time, 71 minutes.

War in China

Enlightening, Timely

The international implications of the Sino-Japanese "un-declared" war centering about Shanghai, are still of sufficient importance, are still of sufficient moment to the press and the world for this compilation to be timely now, and interesting always. Leon Britton and Charles Hugo, we are informed, took the shots in Shanghai, the editing was done here by Forrest Izald and the running fire of accompanying dialogue is rendered capably by radio announcer John S. Young. Though there is comparatively little action in the film, there is much to interest the world. Pictured are the burning buildings, the soaring Japanese bombers, the helpless refugees, the various foreign military units on guard in the International Settlement, the demolished Woosung forts, the Japanese artillery in action. All in all, the best of shots of the newsreel type rolled into two coherent reels.—Running time, 19 minutes.

The Marriage Wow

(Universal)

Fair

A few laughs when the man comes home in the wee hours with his boss after they worked late. It so happens that the wife's family is paying a little visit when the two enter. Hubby explains that there is plenty of room, and wakes his wife. She tells him what she thinks of his drunken friends. The boss hears, and the fun begins. The man is fired, but before he leaves he tell his wife what he thinks of her family.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Speed in the Gay Nineties

Good Comedy

Andy Clyde in a comedy of the early days of the automobile. Andy is considered by the village fathers more than a little mentally incapacitated when he attempts to fly with wings and a tail, and they come for him with a wagon and strait-jacket. He evades them, humorously, and enters the great horseless carriage race. Barney Oldfield himself is also entered in the great event at the fair. Of course he wins, and astounds the populace with a speed of 20 miles an hour, though the car nearly blows up in the effort. Amusing, and Clyde is always enjoyable.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Strange As It Seems
(Universal)

Interesting

Number 17 of the Universal series produced by John Hix and one of decided general interest and appeal. Opening shots have to do with a Belgian sailor who is able to sustain the entire weight of his body on one finger. Other items: raising of the unusual cactus pear, the use of the spider web in planning high buildings, a glance at the American navy and the life of the Eskimo.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Special Messengers
(B.I.P. America)

Most Interesting

Highly interesting is this short subject indicating the seriousness with which the English take pigeon racing. Pictured in clear fashion are the raising and training of the birds, and the elaborate machinery which has been developed for identification. Climaxing the short is an actual pigeon race. Appealing.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Deutsche Jungen Wandern Durch Griechenland
German Students on a Ramble Through Greece
(Ufa)

Unusual Shots

Male singing, a fixed ingredient of many German pictures, has a thematic value as a background for this travel picture. A novel scene is of a church fathers' retreat atop a cliff, the only means of access being by rope. There is also likeable photography of the littoral of Greece.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Playground of the Mammals

Good

Mack Sennett offers another of his personally supervised series, "Cannibals of the Deep." The camera, aboard an ocean-going schooner cruising off the coast of Southern California, pictures various of the larger species of water mammals. Intimately noted by the camera's eye are porpoises, sea lions, seals and a type of small whale. The dramatic punch climaxing the short comes when the crew goes after, and finally captures a two-ton whale, speared with a harpoon. Scenic effects are good, action is sharp, but the accompanying dialogue is in many cases inaudible, in others of no particular interest.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Torchy's Night Cap

Fast Moving Comedy

There is an abundance of comedy action and complications in this Torchy picture from the Sewell Ford stories being produced by C. C. Burr, with Ray Cooke starred. After rapid developments in which Ray dresses as the Colonel's daughter, and the girl in man's clothes, the marriage finally takes place in the courtroom, and the "kidnaping" is explained. Torchy has failed to deliver a certain communication, which later events prove to be just the proper procedure, saving him his job. In the cast also are Dorothy Dix, Edmund Breese, Franklyn Pangborn, Dorothy Appleby, Charles Giblyn, Elaine St. Maur, Edward McWade, Richard Purcell and Jack Cheatham.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Subway Symphony
(Vitaphone)

Clever, Amusing

An inconspicuous subway straphanger is knocked down in a station rush. Appearing at a board meeting he proposes that the desire of travelers to board the first train to arrive be counteracted by furnishing entertainment at the various stations. Novel and amusing is the following group of shots, picturing choruses, singers, entertainers of all types giving performances on the stations to delighted audiences. One number, "It Cost Me a Nickel," proves tuneful and attractively melodious. A final sequence pictures the straphanger awakening from his dream where he had fallen. It is rather entertaining nonsense.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Ireland, the Melody Isle
(MGM)

Splendid

The interest, enlightenment, enjoyment characteristic of the James FitzPatrick Travel-talks is again demonstrated in this number. Set against a background of accompanying dialogue of real effectiveness and the rendering of several of Ireland's most famous melodies by a fine-voiced tenor, the short contains numerous beautiful scenic bits. In addition typical natives are shown at work and at leisure. An audience at the Capitol in New York found the number of great interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Red Noses
(MGM)

It's Been Done

Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd cavort more or less at large in a Turkish bath, in a manner that has been done on more than one occasion in the past. James Horne, directing, tried for the maximum laughs, but they were not very frequent. The trouserless man in great haste is, unfortunately, among those present. The attendant women cry aloud in the time-honored fashion.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Billboard Girl

Fair

The reputed popularity of Bing Crosby will perhaps make this comedy effort successful, though it cannot be accurately stated that the crooner is an actor. The short concerns Crosby falling in love with the picture of a girl on a billboard. His letters to the girl at college are intercepted by her brother, who, upon the crooner's arrival, masquerades as his sister and stages a love scene and elopement rendezvous. The girl, Margie Kane, discovers the plot and it all comes out in the end. Crosby renders two numbers in fairly effective style for those who like his type of vocal rendition.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Slides and Glides

Fast Action

Bill Cunningham, sports reporter, invades the chilly precincts of the winter Olympic arena at Lake Placid, in the Adirondacks, with his camera for this Brown-Nagel produced number of a series. Seen, heard and explained are the skaters, skiers, bob-sled racers. Pictured in action are a feminine fancy skater, a stunt skater, several of the most noted of the country's speed skaters. Skiiers of various nations are seen in cross-country and distance jumping practice and the short concludes dynamically with pictured racers negotiating the treacherous, icy curves of the long bob-sled run. Generally interesting, its appeal is wide.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Cigars, Cigarettes
(Vitaphone)

Fair

Marjorie Beebe leads the way in this comedy effort, as the cigarette girl in a cabaret who, on New Year's Eve, sells a kiss for $100, and takes a ride with the purchaser. It develops that the car is hired and not owned and the two are taken to court when she tries to climb out of the car. The judge samples the product, and dismisses the case upon recovery. Miss Beebe in gratitude passes cigars around the court room. When the explosion dies away, neither judge nor police are anybody's "finest." Miss Beebe and the short disappear with a loud crash.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Das Geheimnis Der Eischale
Secrets of an Eggshell
(Ufa)

Interesting

Pictures of an educational nature, a forte of Ufa production, reach a high point of interest as well as instructiveness in this film, showing the development through the embryonic stage to the full-formed fish or animal literally "making its own break" in the world. Fish, chicken and even snake are pictured making their bow.—Running time, 13 minutes.

Believe It Or Not
(Vitaphone)

Interesting Oddities

Robert L. Ripley, cartoonist extraordinary of the unusual and strange, again offers a group of the odd things he has noted on his world travels. Drawn by the artist and noted by the cameraman are, among other things, the famous guide who carried a piano for miles on his back; the huge rock which is balanced by nature on a three-foot ledge; queer root formations found accidentally a few feet underground, and numerous others of general interest principally by reason of their abnormality.—Running time, 8 minutes.

In the Bag
(Universal)

Slim's Laugh

Slim Summerville again, and when he appears the audience may automatically expect a good time. This is no exception. Slim, Marine bugler, smuggles a girl aboard a transport, against all orders from the captain, who is Tom Kennedy, Slim's former Marine rival. The girl is discovered in the captain's office when the ships gets under way and a free for all starts between Kennedy and the sergeant. Slim and the girl disappear rapidly during the battle. Funny and innumerable laughs.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Movie Album
(Vitaphone)

Novel, Entertaining

Vitaphone has dipped into the library of nearly forgotten cans of film, and unearthed bits of heavy drama, melodrama and alleged comedy of an earlier day in the progress of the motion picture art. Clara Kimball Young, Charles Ray, Norma Shearer, Lionel Barrymore, Harry Carey, Mae Marsh and others are shown in the roles that made them famous when a nickel was the price and a "tinny" piano supplied the sound. The novelty and entertainment afforded by the old reels were amply attested by an audience at the Winter Garden in New York.—Running time, 10 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for key cities over the country for the calendar week ended March 19, 1932, decreased $93,986 from the total for the previous calendar week, ended March 12, when $2,170,572 was recorded. For the March 19 period, $2,076,586 was grossed by 175 theatres in 29 cities, which compares with 182 theatres in 30 cities for the preceding week. During the later period, three new high individual theatre figures were noted and five new low individual house records. The highs were taken at the Paramount in Omaha, the Palace in Chicago and the RKO Albee in Providence. During the previous week, one new "high" and eight new "lows" were established.

"WILL PACK THEATRES AS NO PICTURE

SCAR

"Will cause sensation ... will pack theatres as no other picture has ever done before ... you may think you have seen gangster pictures before, but until you have seen 'SCARFACE' you have never seen one. No other producer could hope to make anything but a futile imitation."
—HERE'S HOW

"A ten-strike ... more thrilling than 'Little Caesar' ever dared to be ... never surpassed."
—HOLLYWOOD FILMOGRAPH

"'SCARFACE' is a masterpiece ... most thrillingly dramatic, superbly enacted and brilliantly directed film ever made ... leaves you breathless with its drama ... Paul Muni in title role gives incomparable performance. Muni has all the fascination of Clark Gable and is a far greater actor. Every role is flawless ... story builds to climax after climax with never a lessening of intensity ... Howard Hawks' direction is something to cheer for. Howard Hughes, I salute you!"

"Tensely human . . . packed with dramatic dynamite . . . Paul Muni as 'SCARFACE' most realistic and human portrayal ever brought to the screen . . . fairly shook the nerve centers of the preview audience . . . Miss Dvorak more than covered herself with glory . . . stands to score one of the greatest box-office successes in many months."
—Edward V. Granville in the HOLLYWOOD SCREEN WORLD

"Splendidly done . . . magnificent in its sweep . . . action never lags for a moment from the opening scene to the spectacular ending."
—MOTION PICTURE HERALD

"Masterpiece of direction, acting and production . . . will awaken country . . . should be classed with gangster picture no more than 'Covered Wagon' would be compared with ten thousand dollar Western."
—WILKERSON in front page editorial in the HOLLYWOOD DAILY REPORTER

"Excellent . . . players achieve outstanding honors for histrionic work . . . Muni splendid . . . Hawks' direction wins applause for its realism."

Don't Let Your Theatre Get Shabby!

It will cost you more later if you do. And in the meantime, you will be paying the price of inefficiency, which can be represented as truly by shabby appearance as by faulty machinery.

Both are insidious enemies of the theatre. And we speak of them thus because we know the temptations that business men have these days—to reduce overhead to lower and lower minimums—even dangerous minimums.

Dangerous minimums because they shut off the flow of fresh energy into the business. New minimums have been discovered. Not good ones, all of them, but sometimes necessary. There is a limit, however. And it is reached as soon as the effectiveness of the business—in your case, the theatre—is threatened.

Don't neglect maintenance. If you have, correct the conditions at once. You can't afford to do less, and planned inspection plus judicious selection will show you how to do so with greatest economy. Because this matter is so important to theatre business now, and to the continued appeal of the motion picture, BETTER THEATRES will devote many pages of the Spring Buyers Number (issue of April 9) to these very problems of Theatre Maintenance and Rehabilitation.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

IN THE SPRING—

WELL here we are around to spring again, but this time we had better turn our thoughts to other things besides love and flowers and poetry. It is all too apparent that rigid economy is going to be queen of the May Pole frolic this year and the smart showman is going to be the man who not only watches his P's and Q's but his pennies and dollars besides.

THE trade papers for the past few weeks have carried oodles of reports from the Detroit and Washington exhibitors' conventions. We wonder how many managers are aware of the different resolutions and other industry improvements (we hope) that have been debated, discussed and argued at those conventions.

Certainly we are all affected by the outcome of these meetings and oftimes important changes are a direct outgrowth of exhibitor conventions. If you have neglected to follow up these meetings by reading about them in the trade press then you are setting yourself on a pedestal so high that when you fall it may be another case of humpty-dumpty.

THIS department of Motion Picture Herald, always having the managers' interests at heart, cannot refrain from publicly expressing its appreciation to such circuit heads as Frisch and Rinzler of the Randforce Amusement Company here in New York for the keen personal interest they are taking in the welfare and consideration of their many employees.

It accounts, no doubt, for the marvelous spirit and loyalty which predominates the entire organization, especially from the seven supervisors—all genuine showmen—the house managers and even the lesser employees, right down the line.

We can only predict a successful business enterprise founded on such fine principals and hope that other organizations try their methods.

THIS is as good a place as any to thank those many Southern showmen for the kind invitations to visit them this winter. Although we made no plans this year for any sort of an extended trip through the south we hope to do so next winter. If we do we feel certain that a marvelous time is in store for us. We have always had a large and active group of Round Tablers below the Mason-Dixon line and would like to meet every one of them personally.

Incidentally, if any of those Southern boys plan a northern trip this summer we expect them to visit Club headquarters where every facility for their convenience is at their disposal. Make this your New York headquarters whenever you come to the big town.

ONE of the fundamental thoughts back of the Club idea was to make this a sort of meeting place each week where showmen, managers and exhibitors, could meet and discuss their various problems and offer suggestions that would improve theatre operation and box office receipts.

We have adhered closer to this idea during the past few months than ever before by carrying any number of special articles from different members and leaders in the exhibition end of the industry.

We sincerely trust that any member, no matter how small his town or theatre may be, will avail himself (or herself) of the opportunity of addressing one of the Club's weekly meetings by contributing a special article dealing with some phase of our interesting business. These pages are restricted to no special group, any showman can make use of them whenever he has something to say to the rest of us. Don't be backwards, take advantage of it and stop leaving it for others. Everybody ought to do their bit for the organization.

THE large correspondence reaching our desk brings to light the interesting fact that a large majority of showmen are golf addicts. That's great. Now we know that we are not alone in "dubbing." Suppose you showmen who "think" you are good golfers start to send in your score cards (but on the level) so we can publish them on the Club pages.

Just remember that you're not writing reports for the home office when you keep that score. It must be honest and only a confirmed golfer like ourself knows the temptation of a lead pencil and unintentional loss of memory for those extra strokes in the sand traps.

Too bad we're so widely scattered. It would be a grand idea if we could hold a tournament for Round Tabler members every year. Oh well; maybe THE HERALD will send us out on a golfing expedition from coast to coast when we will be able to play a round with each member in his own community. (Don't wake me up.) "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

When you run a Beauty Contest you had better post a "No Electioneering" sign in your lobby to keep the proud Mama's from trying to vamp you into a favorable decision for their angel chee-ild. Manager Gilch in this picture is torn with conflicting emotions (that's what Dick Kirschbaum calls it). He's not sure whether he ought to shoot Mama, the daughter or both.

MacLEVY IS GETTING OUT A MANUAL FOR MEN ON RANDFORCE CIRCUIT

Managers on the Randforce Circuit, Frisch and Rinzler's group of 40-odd theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y., are being edified these days with a multi-page weekly bulletin of exploitation briefs on current shows by Monty MacLevy, publicity manager of the circuit. The many practical suggestions are couched in Monty's own words and are for the most original with Monty himself, though here and there a few press book notes are included when applicable.

For "The Champ" he counseled the playing up of athletic angles, such as construction of a boxing ring made of 2 by 4's or 1 by 2's. The usual accessories of the ring were included, as were cut-outs of Beery and Cooper, selling copy, etc., to make up realistic atmosphere. As an alternative for this lobby display he also suggested selling the local sporting goods dealer the idea of making up a special athletic display for the center of lobby. Other angles included tie-ups with gym and health clubs, etc., and the personal appearances of pros or amateurs.

On "Secret Service" he called attention to the Civil War atmosphere and mentioned the advantages that might accrue from tie-ups made with veteran organizations, a local decorator, gunsmiths, etc. It was pointed out that the decorator might be prevailed upon to make up an entire patriotic display to include a variety of equipment. Schools were also listed as possible means of exploitation in the matter of essay contests among pupils on such subjects as: greatest general in the Northern Army; greatest general on Confederate side; causes and effects of war, and biographies and importance of prominent generals. Merchants were mentioned as sources of prizes for best essays.

For "Ten Minutes to Love," in addition to a number of catchlines, attention was called to excellency of paper for cut-out purposes; the press sheet for special layout of copy, and a mirror display such as was used for "Big House." A diagram described a curtain and window effect made from crepe paper or duvetene. The three-sheet of Swanson and Douglas (embracing) was then cut out with scissors and pasted at base of mirror. It was advised that all tacking be done on underneath part so as to avoid disfiguration of paint work. Selling copy was placed at base of mirror, or in a blank spot.

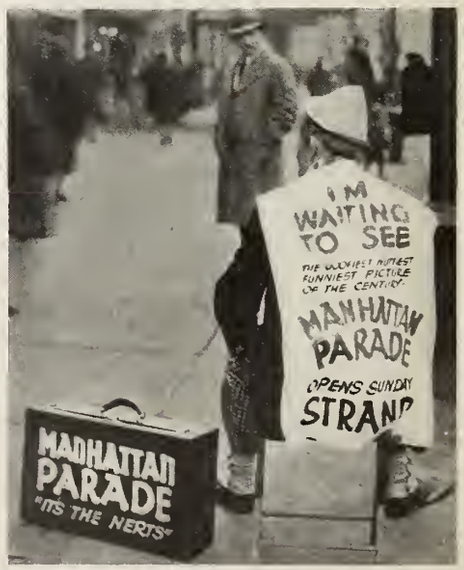
Stressed Atmosphere

Atmospheric lobbies, tie-ups and trailer gags were described as effective exploitation aids for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Managers were reminded of the lighting effects used with "Frankenstein," such as a change from green to red, and utilization of a set of cut-out letters from the three-sheet-B, with eight or ten heads of the doctor and the monster, mounted on card or compo board and hung in various parts of the lobby. Medical laboratory material was also recommended for additional atmosphere, and it was suggested that tie-ups might be effected with drug stores, laboratories, etc.

The trailer gag consisted of dropping the house lights, excepting exits, and the raising of the fader several points in order to bring out sound effects. This, however, should be lowered as soon as dialogue occurs. Then have an usher, dressed in a large coat, walk through the house and up to the stage while trailer is on. He should be followed by a spot while doing this.

The campaign folder containing the above suggestions is the first of MacLevy's bulletins to come to our attention, and, to our way of thinking, he has boiled down a lot of practical ideas to a point where they can be easily digested by his associates. We'll be keeping an eye on future issues of "Exploitation Briefs."

Schaefer Had An Idea



David Schaefer, public relations counsel for Warner Theatres in the Newark, N. J., district, recently put into effect a corking idea that hit him square in the eyes when he saw an animated display sign on "Unguentine" in a drug store window.

The product was synonymous with burns; burns generally result from fire, and "Fireman, Save My Child" was the thought uppermost in Dave's mind at the time. So he forthwith contacted the "Unguentine" people and arranged a tie-up with the attractive animated (flaming) sign for the entire Newark division.

FLOYD MORROW NOW BATTING THEM OUT AT KENOSHA, WIS.

Before Floyd Morrow left the Strand at Akron, Ohio, to take over his new duties as manager of the Kenosha in Kenosha, Wisconsin, he pulled a little street bally on "Manhattan Parade" which, from accounts, created all the word-of-mouth comment he was looking for and clicked at the box-office as well.

While the accompanying photo shows only one interested spectator, there must certainly have been more or it wouldn't have done for him what it did. O. K., Floyd, and let's hear some more from you now that you're out in Kenosha with the rest of the Round Tablers.

PEPPER PROMOTED SERIES OF CO-OPS INSTEAD OF GROUP

We are showing herewith a sample of some cooperative ads worked out by Jimmy Pepper, manager of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., and you will note that he adopted the practice of promoting a series of individual ads instead of grouping same or following out the idea of a cooperative page.

In this case the title, "Working Girls" served as a natural tie-up for hosiery stores, a printing firm and a local newspaper. The latter is not reproduced but the classified page with its "help wanted" also fitted admirably into the general scheme.

The paper worked up an attractive announcement headed, "Hey, Miss, Is Your Name Here?" Eight names of local girls followed and an explanatory note read, "Through the courtesy of 'The Montgomery Journal' we want you to be our guest at the Strand Thursday or Friday to see our new picture 'Working Girls.' Because we know that you are like us. Crazy about your job, but when you get off you like singing, dancing, romance, gayety and cute boy friends—That's just what you can enjoy in our new picture—Call the 'Journal' for your guest tickets. This was followed by a mat with classified ad page background, all giving the theatre a splendid break.

The value of the radio as an advertising medium is also brought up by Pepper, since he is getting a very good break from his local station by donating an Organ recital for one hour. For this he receives three announcements read during the hour every day except Sunday.

He takes it for granted that practically every member of this Club is using the radio whenever possible, and while not holding it on a par with newspaper advertising, believes that it can be made to serve the same purpose as a newspaper reader for the small courtesy of a few passes.

Pepper would like to hear from other Round Tablers on the subject of radio announcements and so would Club headquarters. If others will jot down their experiences with air programs, etc., and just what they think of this as an advertising medium for the theatre, we'll see that the opinions are broadcast.

Patrons Annoyed

Theatre managers in the downtown section of Columbus, Ohio, recently made complaint to city authorities that patrons were being annoyed by children begging in front of theatres. Social agencies have taken steps to put an end to the practice.

BRENNAN BORROWED AN AIRPLANE WHEN SELLING A PICTURE

Some highly realistic atmosphere was provided the town of Menominee, Mich., by Elmer Brennan, manager of the Lloyd Theatre, on the occasion of exploiting "Flying High." He used a couple of stunts and if one of them didn't focus public attention on that picture then we don't know what we're talking about.

The big gun of the campaign consisted of securing permission from the owner of an airplane to park the machine in front of the theatre but a considerable portion of effective publicity resulting from this move came when the 'plane was being transported from airport to theatre. If we merely stated that this was just another job it wouldn't at all describe what took place. To quote Elmer, "It was a hell of a job," what with the airport three miles away and the city streets barely wide enough to allow passage. Traffic had to be re-routed, a couple of dozen autos had to be moved out of the way, to say nothing of one of the 'plane's wings being almost ripped away by a telephone pole. It took over three hours for the 'plane to reach its destination. The accompanying photo shows 'plane in front of theatre.

To lend a further realistic touch to the scene a motor was rigged up with leather straps on the belt and this was placed in front of a large horn attached to the marquee. Cardboard was placed in front of the straps so that when the motor revolved the contact made a sound like a speeding airplane motor. As a matter of fact, it sounded so much like one that the Chief of Police started to bawl Elmer out for starting up the engine of the 'plane.

Another little gag that attracted its share of attention was use of a number of small, toy airplanes, with wings lettered, "Don't Miss Flying High at Lloyd's Theatre, Friday and Saturday, Laughter and Comedy."

No doubt the town sat up and took notice when Elmer, his crew and the 'plane made that memorable trip from airport to theatre. It's too doggone bad that a cameraman wasn't there to shoot the whole trip. But hard work or otherwise, the stunt let them all know that there was a special attraction at the theatre, and perhaps the good results at the box office justified the expenditure of all that energy.

Active In Relief Work

Jos. M. Franklin, manager of the RKO Capitol Theatre, Ottawa, Canada, has been doing his share of relief work in connection with the Red Cross Fund. His photo and caption appeared in a local newspaper not long ago, calling attention to a Sunday night show Franklin and his staff put on without charge.

"TARZAN" SOLD BIG IN BALTIMORE!

Heavy Exploitation Campaign Waged Resulted In Sell-Out Business; Many Novel Slants Used To Excellent Advantage

Sensational outdoor billing, newspaper contests, effective tie-ups, stunts and excellent publicity breaks recently combined to hang up record-breaking business for "Tarzan, the Ape Man," when that picture held its world premiere at the Stanley Theatre, Baltimore, Md. The Stanley is managed by Arnold Stoltz, who was assisted on this occasion by William R. Ferguson, M-G-M manager of exploitation, and his associate Phil Di Angelis, to whom is given a major share of the credit for the novel bill board advertising.

All during day and evening of opening day two cashiers were kept busy selling tickets. The second day, one hour after the box office opened, the sale of tickets was stopped. As a result of this move, the public lined up in double column and waited for the signal. The first show cleaned the house and within a short time again the house was again a complete sell-out. Following is a resume of the campaign.

The photo in the upper right-hand corner of the page will convey a good idea of the extraordinary display made on outdoor boards. If you can imagine six 24-sheet stands in a row, all posted into one stand, you will immediately grasp the scheme. The stand actually amounted to a 168-sheet and, to our knowledge, this is the first time that a stand of that size was ever used in show-business. In addition to this feature, 15 25-sheets were placed in choice downtown locations and 500 three-sheets were sniped all over the city.

The newspaper advertising campaign consisted of a 300-line ad on the Sunday preceding opening, announcing that Baltimore had been chosen for the World Premiere. From then on the ads increased in size and catch lines were used such as, "Girls, would you live like Eve if you found the right Adam?; Tops Trader Horn for Thrills; A New Move for the Movies; Here is the Trader Horn for 1932, and Hold Your Breath as Thrill follows Thrill."

In return for a special showing of the picture to carriers, a leading paper of the city and a tough one as far as publicity is concerned, came through for a back-page story. Another paper ran a daily contest and a picture each day for six days prior to opening. Still another was tied-up for a Baby Lion contest for presentation of the animal to the local Zoo. In this case children were asked to name the cub and in addition to generous publicity the paper also made editorial mention of the gag. One of the photos shows young "Leo" tied-in with a department store display.

Another newspaper stunt was put over by having a photographer approach patrons for comments on the picture. He then photographed the ones interviewed and following editions of the paper carried stories and photos. A "Tarzan the Terrible" cartoon strip was also carried in a paper to be colored by children.

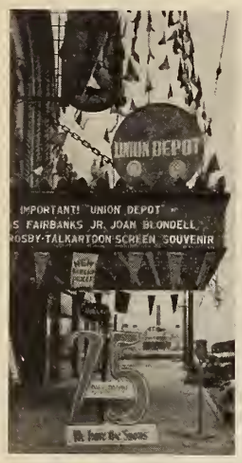
In addition to the baby lion display in the big department store, on which occasion the store advertised the stunt heavily, announced exhibitions twice daily, and released 100 balloons carrying 25 passes a couple days prior to opening, Johnny Weismuller swimming suit and B. V. D. tie-ups were arranged with two other stores. Some of the models you see in the accompanying illustrations were "live" and very effective as a stopper. Ten windows, including another display of live models, were also obtained in leading stores and the department store already mentioned above came through with an excellent display of books and oil paintings.

While the campaign outlined above was an extensive one, returns at the box office of the Stanley undoubtedly justified all outlay of energy and expense. For smaller communities it will, of course, be too elaborate, but to our way of thinking there are many excellent ideas put forth by Stoltz, Ferguson and others on the staff which can be scaled down to suit the occasion. From all accounts the picture has strong box office potentialities. You can cash in the same as Baltimore if you give it the push it deserves.

Make your contacts now with merchants who carry lines of swimming suits, etc., and arrange for a tie-in of live models. Don't neglect Scout and other organizations made up of youngsters for there's plenty appeal in that direction in this picture. Get behind it and then cut yourself a large piece of cake.

A PERSONAL LETTER BROUGHT RESULTS TO BIRKMEIR OF BABYLON

The personal endorsement letter was again used to good results when "Silent Witness" was sold by H. Birkmeir, manager of the Babylon Theatre, a Prudential house down in Babylon, Long Island.



He pointed out in the letter that the picture had keenly impressed him as one of the best pictures he had ever witnessed; that the plot was logical and gripping, with an unusual surprise finish. Cast and playdates were mentioned in the closing paragraphs.

We've commented so often on personal endorsement letters that we feel sure that all readers are familiar with our views on plugs of this nature; briefly, that it's a great little gag when the picture will stand the gaff—as it evidently did in the above case.

What else is doing down in your South Shore town, Birkmeir? Let's know.

MORRIS WAGED A BIG CAMPAIGN WHEN PRICE CHANGE WAS ANNOUNCED

Prior to leaving managership of the State theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, a price change went into effect and Walter Morris waged a most comprehensive campaign to let the public know that there was an added inducement to attend the State. Screen, lobby newspapers, billing and a number of tie-ups were effectively used to herald the occasion.

Silent Trailers were employed one week in advance and currently with copy: Soon—You'll shout with joy—front page news that will rock this town with happiness—news that will actually put money in your pocket—in appreciation of your loyal patronage—and because we shall soon give you the greatest parade of master productions—and because we don't want you to miss any of them— we shall inaugurate starting—bargain prices that will make history, etc, etc." The second trailer was addressed to the "entire family" and asked if advantage was being taken of the bargain.

The front of the theatre was decked with pennants from top of building to top of marquee and burgees were hung under marquee at various points. As you will note by photo, cutout numerals of the new admission price were used in the form of a sidewalk display.

Exploitation included attachment of banner strips to local taxis and autos; bread inserts with appropriate copy inserted in 10,000 loaves of a popular brand of bread; distribution of 10,000 paper bags, bearing tie-up copy on one side and sent out from 34 local groceries, and the distribution of 25,000 "Movie News," a house organ, in newspapers, by mailing lists and in the theatre.

The new rate was consistently plugged in newspaper advertising and out-of-town teaser stories were placed in local paper, current stories the day of the break. Billing consists of 250 one sheets; 50 threes; 25 sixes and 500 window cards, all distributed over an area of 25 miles.

Seasoned showman that he is, Morris could be counted on to take a price change idea and extract a lot of publicity from method of waging the campaign. True, it cost a few dollars to put the above over, but newspaper ads were the largest item of expense and could really be absorbed by regular advertising appropriation. The other items constituted a relatively small portion of the total. Club members similarly situated in towns the size of Sandusky should find food for thought in the above ideas if contemplating a like move.

Stonebrook On Job

Rollin K. Stonebrook, newly appointed manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., hammered in his first wedge by arranging for an interview with Dolly Dalyrmple, a feature writer on the "News," leading paper of the city.

MANAGER'S MONTHLY CHAT

(Good Institutional Program Material)

It is with great displeasure that the management of this theatre sometimes observes a family, arriving to enjoy a performance together, become separated because there are not enough adjoining seats available. Perhaps the condition is not extremely disappointing to the family, but it is to us.

Our programs are formed for the entire family. It is our aim to provide an atmosphere inviting to the entire family. And to our mind the sight of a father, mother and children enjoying themselves together is far from being the most unpleasant in the world.

Uusually, however, there is a sufficient number of adjoining seats at the beginning of each show, and perhaps fathers and mothers would do well to remember the show hours. They are 2 o'clock at the matinees; 7 and 9 at night. And if forgotten, a telephone call to the box office will bring them. Come at approximately these hours and we believe your family may be kept intact.

B & K ORGANIZATION SENT OUT LETTER TO SELL A NEW PICTURE

Following is a letter mailed out by the Balaban & Katz Corporation in advance of "Man I Killed," or "Broken Lullaby" as this picture is now known:

Dear Madam:

Some time after the war, Maurice Rostand, French playwright (son of the author of "Cyrano de Bergerac"), wrote a play based on an unusual episode in the life of a French soldier.

Its effect on audiences was astounding. Critics called it "most powerful." Such an innate sense of the inner secrets and fears of men and women, their hearts, their yearnings, had never before been revealed so effectively.

The fame of the play spread. After deliberation the Paramount Picture company decided to present it in this country in talking picture form. A free hand was given Ernst Lubitsch, the director, with whom is associated the successes of Emil Jannings, Maurice Chevalier and other foremost players.

Director Lubitsch chose as featured members of his cast, Lionel Barrymore, Nancy Carroll, and Phillips Holmes. Production was begun under the temporary title of "The Man I Killed." This working title was later changed to "Broken Lullaby" under which name the picture opens at the McVickers Theatre, Wednesday, February 24.

It may appear to you that this letter is an unusual way of introducing a motion picture. But the reason for this is the picture itself. It is more than distinctive entertainment. It is an experience in intelligence. It is excellent and unusual drama and delivers a sincere message.

The above letter blew into Club headquarters all by itself, no credits or anything, so we'll let the author claim his own. Mailed out to a selected list, it undoubtedly did its share in the selling campaign.

MILLER PROMOTED A CO-OP AD IN SMALL UP-STATE COMMUNITY

Our readers have often had occasion to look over many articles of co-operative ads, both full page and double truck and we can recall writing about many fine examples of work promoted by Club members along these lines. Most of them were handled in cities of a fair size or in city neighborhoods with as many stores as some cities.

Therefore, don't sniff when you look over a half-page co-op promoted by our old friend George A. Miller, manager of the Smalley Theatre in Hamilton, N. Y. Rather consider the size of Hamilton, which is a small village in upper New York State, and dwell upon the fact that the newspaper is issued but once a week. Then try to figure out the amount of energy that Miller must have expended in the matter of selling some of those hard-boiled merchants the idea of getting together on a co-operative basis. Furthermore, there's a goodly number of ads and the entire layout gave the current picture an excellent break. All the entire ad cost the theatre were guest tickets, based on finding misspelled ads that when put together made up "Year's Great Talkie."

Good work, George, and you may be sure that Club headquarters and others who have been up against similar working conditions fully appreciate your efforts. We also note that you have been organizing the harmonica players in your community, etc. Keep in touch with us on all your activities.

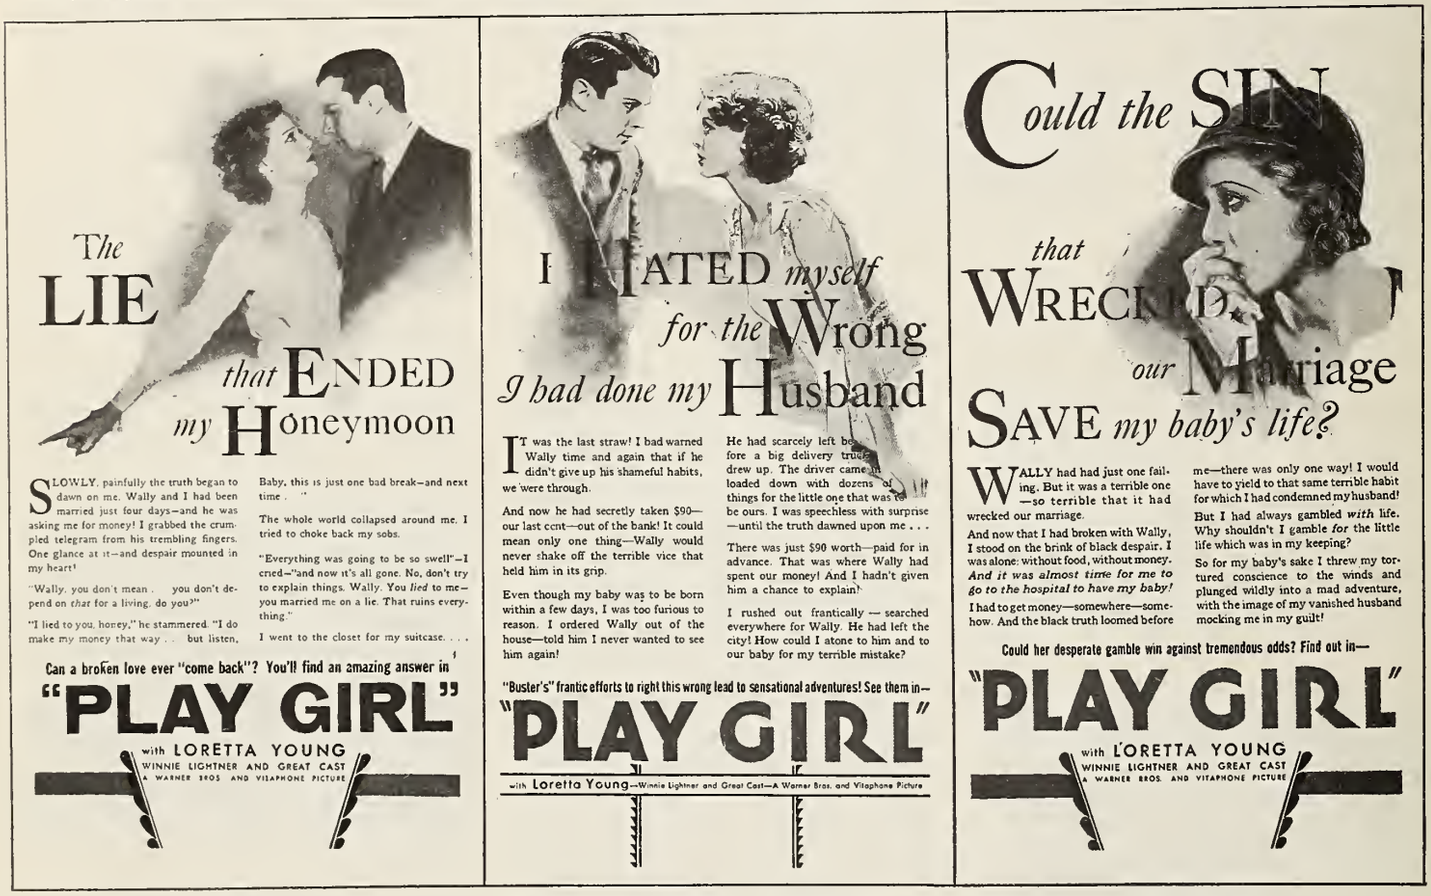
Ricketson Promoted

Rick Ricketson, formerly manager of the Los Angeles Paramount Theatre, was recently promoted to the post of district manager of the Rocky Mountain division for Fox-West Coast, taking in theatres in Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico. Rickertson replaces Gus Cohen, who at this writing has not announced his plans for the future. At one time, Ricketson was district manager for the northern half of this district.

A NEW STYLE IN NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING!

Created by

WARNER BROS. ADVERTISING AND PUBLICITY DEPT.



Under the Supervision of

Some outstanding newspaper ads are distinctive because of the art work or background; others earn that rating because of "selling" text; here we believe a combination of the two brings about something akin to the "perfect" ad. Certainly you will agree that they are head and shoulders above the general run.

In four years we have encountered but three other campaigns that merited such praise. If you stop to consider the tremendous number of campaigns created in the course of four years then you will begin to understand how unusual a "different" campaign must be to get such attention.

Look at these ads closely. Read through the text. Then size up each ad individually. We feel certain that your investment in time spent will yield good returns in the shape of new ideas and some wonderful text for your future use.

NOVEL HAND BILL BROUGHT IN TRADE FOR JACK PORTEE

Some of the boys in the New York City neighborhoods may not go in any more for rip-roaring methods of exploitation but they do use little gags now and then to let patrons know that a certain picture is around. Take for instance a hand-bill recently gotten out by our old friend Jack Portee, manager of the U. S. Theatre, Bronx.

This bill was printed on a good stock of coated white paper and carried the following copy: "New York's Fifty Thousand Speakeasies Can Help You Get a Big Kick Out of Life." But It Takes The World's Greatest Clowns, Bert Wheeler—Robert Woolsey— in their Roaring Comedy "Peach O' Reno"—To Give You a Good Time!" Photos of the featured players were gronped in the center and with plenty of white space all around the whole layout was attractively set up.

By this time Portee will have put over some other little selling gag that the boys will want to hear about so we'll sign off until we hear from him again.

TRAVELING BOX OFFICE!

Here's the latest wrinkle in ultra-modern convenience, Sid Grauman's traveling box office, which delivers tickets to the home in answer to telephone calls. Of course, Grauman's Chinese is a reserved seat house; however, this idea might be used as a ballyhoo stunt for a special midnight show or some other outstanding attraction. It might even be practical as a means of healing the wounded feelings of those who have to stand in line at crowded downtown houses.

GOULD CIRCULATED LETTER WHEN TAKING CHARGE OF NEW JOB

When E. W. Gould was appointed manager of the Manhattan Theatre, New York City, he used his mailing list for circulation of a letter setting forth that fact and general information concerning house and coming attractions.

The month of February, he stated, had been designated "Festival Month," during which many outstanding pictures would be shown. Attention was called to the exceptionally low admissions for children and adults for both matinees and evenings; new sound equipment was mentioned, as were new seats and a newly decorated interior. The letter closed with the wish of the writer to become personally acquainted with the patron at an early opportunity.

Gould is a veteran in this business and a smart showman and the above was one of the first moves he made when taking charge of his new post. By this time he has held his "Festival Month" and we'll hope to hear how the box office fared during this occasion.

SELETTE PUT OVER A CO-OP SINGLE-HANDED; OKEH WITH MAYOR NOW

There's been a lot said in this department concerning promotion of single and double truck co-operation ads and it's generally understood that a majority of these deals are put over by theatre managers and a representative of the local newspaper.

Hence, when a manager goes out and does the job single handed it would appear that he's entitled to a Croix de Guerre, a Palm or at least some sort of medal, for his efforts. We modestly refer to Eddie Selette, manager of the Arcadia Theatre over in Portsmouth, N. H., who carries on in showbusiness despite the many tribulations which constantly beset him.

We've stated before this that Manager Selette and the town mayor have not hit it off so very well in recent months on account of the mayor doubling as editor and part owner of the opposition theatre. Now, there's a set-up complicated enough to sprout gray hairs in many a manager's locks. Not so with Eddie. He likes a war and appears to thrive under such a condition, as you will agree when we disclose that it took him but a half-hour to line up a full-page co-op in the mayor's own paper. Moreover, the Arcadia box was featured right in the center of the page.

Good News!

However, at this writing we have some good news for those who have sympathized with Eddie's battle against imperialism. He met the mayor on the street not long ago, following a recent tilt that resulted in cancellation of all theatres ads, and His Honor invited him into the royal suite to discuss the situation. Eddie told him that he was a "damn good mayor" and then went on to express himself in no uncertain terms as to why he did not qualify as an editor of a newspaper.

The mayor feinted with the remark that he was getting gray worrying about the city's unemployed and wasn't aware that any friction really existed between himself and Selette. Well, to make a long story short, the two of them kissed and made up and, as far as we know, are pals at the present time. All in spite of the fact that the mayor let the other house pull a benefit show and then passed the buck to the Chamber of Commerce. Selette could hold his show, the mayor told him, at the recent peace conference, but Eddie wouldn't play second fiddle. So there the matter rests for the present, with all hands taking time out.

Clear Sailing Now

Now that Selette has ironed out his difficulties with the mayor of Portsmouth, we take it that he will have another sailing in the matter of newspaper co-operation, city organization tie-ups, etc. We and all his fellow showmen are also mighty glad that he can now meet His Honor on the street and greet him with a "Hello Pal." And that's the way it should be. No use fighting the powers that be, even though we must hand it to Eddie for his never-say-die spirit when successfully contending against overwhelming odds. We know he'll keep up the good work, and next time we write of him don't be surprised if we disclose that he's been up the mayor's home for tea.

ADVERTISE YOUR SHOW OR CLOSE YOUR THEATRE!

Dave Lustig Understands This Important Phase Of Business From His Long Experience!

NO matter if you have the finest product of the season . . . or just another batch of pictures . . . you MUST advertise your show!

There are various methods . . . newspapers, exploitation, news weeklies, direct mail, circularization and what have you.

Newspaper advertising is all right when the mighty moguls will shell out for it . . . if they won't, well, one has to go into a trance and figure out other ways and means THAT WILL BRING RESULTS . . . !

Advertising is never a sure thing . . . that is, something that will surely bring a certain amount in to the box office. Because . . . no matter how good you think you are . . . everything you do that comes under the head of advertising and exploitation (and their sins are many!) reacts in some way on the sale of tickets at your box office.

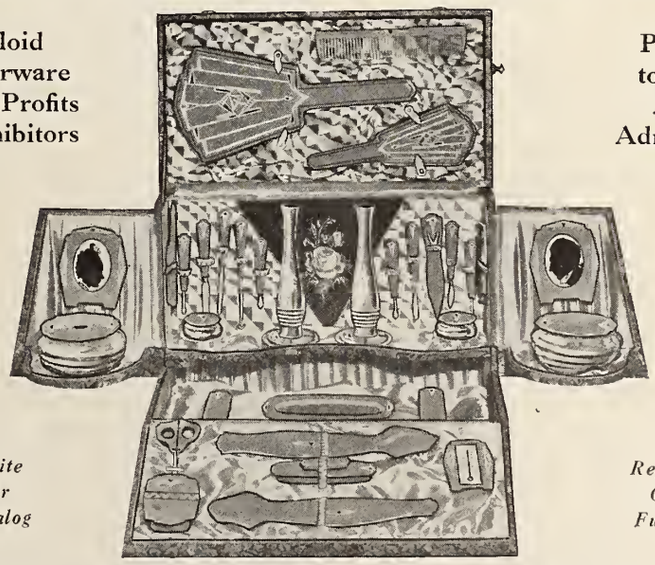
Some fellow will pull a "joker" in the way of a stunt . . . and think he is the cat's eyebrow . . . and basking in the rays of his own spotlight TAKE A BOW . . . but who even notices this poor program folder who ought to be back carrying hods full of coal for the porter!

Then again the bad part of this game is that many a man parading around under the guise of manager is a detriment to his own box office and to the firm that employs him. But maybe he's one of those "must" labeled fellows who just has to keep his job . . . regardless.

The active man on the job . . . could write a dozen volumes about this and that regarding stunts, advertising, exploitation and what not . . .

Show business is getting the product and letting the folks know you have it!

If you haven't the product . . . you have to become a fortune teller . . . read the minds of the public who look up at your trademark . . . and build your show in a way that hypnotizes them to plank down their hard earned coins on your box office shelf. It's sure a tough world without the beautiful offices, the two or three cute apes with their, "Who did you want to see?" . . . laughable attitudes.



Today . . . things, as we all know, HAVE changed . . . we have to smash out hard and true . . . and try in every way to give the people something for their money . . . no matter what it may be, if THEY, and not the so-called managerial staffs, enjoy it.

Get the folks talking about your theatre, the shows, the courteous treatment they receive from the cashier to the local manager. Every theatre can't have the cream o' the Broadway pick BUT NO MATTER WHAT YOU HAVE TO WORK WITH STRIKE OUT FEARLESSLY AND ADVERTISE . . . SELLING TICKETS FOR STAGE AND SCREEN ENTERTAINMENT that WILL entertain . . . and make the patron feel that the money spent in your theatre was well invested.

No matter what the product . . . no matter what the show . . . ADVERTISE IT OR CLOSE YOUR THEATRE!!

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

This patron is suffering from no modest feelings. According to Cartoonist Jones, he won the Ford car, then waited through two complete shows. When the "Free Eats" were not forthcoming, he went out to register his kick with the manager. Bless (?) his 'ittle heart!

IF YOUR NEWSPAPER WON'T PLAY BALL TRY HERB BRENON'S REMEDY

Now and then a situation arises between newspaper and theatre that demands drastic action and we note that Herbert Brenon, Jr., city manager of Fort Smith Theatres, Fort Smith, Ark., was equal to the occasion when he recently encountered difficulties with publishing interests in his town. His answer to a no-publicity policy ultimatum on the part of the publishers was an eight-page tab size newspaper, which is still flourishing and, to all appearances, will continue to flourish until the situation rights itself.

The Situation

There are two newspapers in Brenon's city, one with a net paid circulation of 3,500 and the other with a net free circulation of 8,000. The former is more closely identified with city circulation while the latter is concerned with both city and rural distribution. The city paper issues a morning edition and again comes out in the evening under another name, a combination of the two constituting Sunday's paper. All recently adopted a most drastic policy regarding theatrical readers and other news of the screen world.

All of which brings us to "The Gossiper," Brenon's eight-page tabloid weekly, edited by none other than the city manager himself and featuring news of the show world. Every Friday 3,000 copies are distributed to all business houses on the main street and to homes by carriers, the latter receiving a pass for their labor.

Club members who are against similar opposition and interested in the above plan, will immediately inquire concerning the overhead of such a move. The answer to this is the almost unbelievably small sum of $3 to $5 per week per theatre, all brought about by the sale of advertising space at the rate of 15c. per inch on contract and at 25c. per inch with no contract.

The paper actually costs $48.50 a week to publish and distribute. Subtracting the amount received from advertising, the net cost has never amounted to over $5 per theatre, often ranging a dollar or two less. The publisher has received many fine comments from business men and others in the city regarding its style and complete theatrical news.

A glance through this paper discloses that the front page and others are liberally sprinkled with photos of screen stars, scenes from current and coming attractions, etc. There is space for an editorial on matters not pertaining to the theatre, giving the theatre manager an opportunity to proclaim his interest in matters concerning public welfare. A box is devoted to a blank form for the "Question Box," to answer inquiries on movies, stars, etc., and the balance of the matter is made up of screen notes, philosophical jottings and a liberal assortment of ads of local merchants.

Other Instances

The above is not the first instance brought to our attention of an occasion when a theatre manager has been forced to "throw down the glove" to a prejudiced newspaper publisher, this, despite the fact that most newspaper men fully realize the value of cooperation with local theatres.

Take David Sablosky, down in Philadelphia, Pa., for instance, who gets out a replete neighborhood tabloid newspaper. We don't know just what prompted him to start an enterprise of that kind, but start it he did, and it grew into a power of publicity for himself and theatre in his section of the city. From a small sheet largely devoted to screen news, it gradually became a vital factor in neighborhood life.

Brenon's paper is apparently experiencing the same evolution out in Fort Smith and it now becomes a question of whether the publishers will see the handwriting on the wall and open up their pages to theatrical news, or continue their present policy of "no-publicity," which after all is not publicity if interesting to readers. It has been a great source of satisfaction to Brenon to overcome the many obstacles placed in his path, and with his present weapon he is quite able to take care of newspaper publicity for his theatres. He thinks that a move such as he made might be applicable as a remedy to situations existing in many small towns, where there is either no newspaper at all or dependence is placed upon a weekly in the town or adjacent to it.

Think It Over

It's food for thought anyway. Round Tablers, and those of you who may be up against a tight publicity policy, or who may not have proper publicity facilities, might do well to consider the proposition of establishing a paper of your own. Contact your merchant friends and see what their reaction is to the plan. One of your big selling arguments will be public interest in things theatrical. If the total cost of publishing an eight-page paper only amounts to $48.50 per week, it will not take many ads to offset the overhead. And think of the vast possibilities of such a medium in your hands—if properly administered.

GROVE'S DIPLOMACY OPENED SCHOOLS TO FILM EXPLOITATION

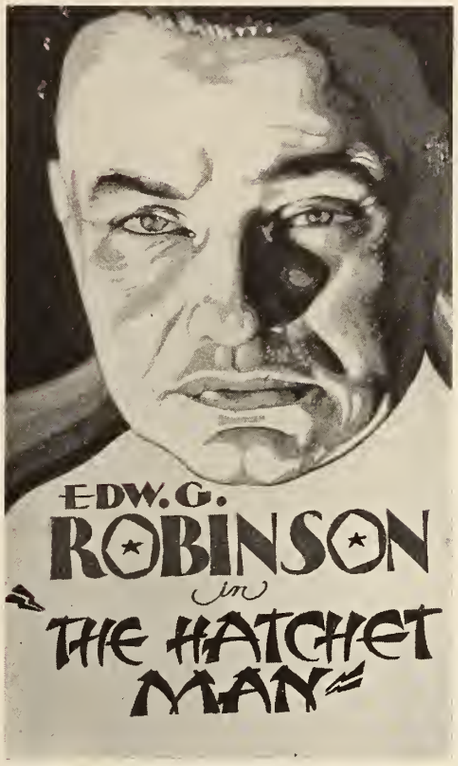
The problem of breaking down resistance many school authorities have where the subject of theatre or picture exploitation is concerned, was effectively brought about by H. D. Grove, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Davenport, Iowa.

Prior to selling the following idea to the Superintendent of Schools in his city it was absolutely impossible to place any form of advertising in local institutions. His plan consisted of an offer to admit each week on Fridays and Saturdays all students in the High School who reached a certain grade, which was to be established by the principals. After considerable contact work the offer was accepted and announcement made at Assembly. Permission was also granted for the posting of small advertising matter at the entrance of the Principal's office.

Another stunt that immediately clicked with the school authorities was the offer of a cup as an award to the High School student who graduated with highest scholastic honors. This idea went over in a big way for reason that the student was to be rewarded for what he actually was in school for, a different angle than the usual award for leadership in athletics.

When this tie-up was first started an average of six students won the weekly award of free admissions. However, interest rapidly developed until at the present time about twenty students are taking advantage of the deal. The school officials are so pleased with the increased effort on part of students to make the grade that they 'phone the theatre management each season for a renewal of the tie-up.

As the result of this move of Grove's the grade schools as well as the high schools are open to any kind of a legitimate tie-up. For example, we have a card before us that is headed, "Special Student Ticket," and it entitled Rock Island students to admission to the theatre on Armistice Day to witness "Penrod and Sam" upon presentation of same and ten cents at the box office. There are about 6,500 students in Rock Island, with about 2,000 over the age of twelve. Tickets are distributed directly in the school to every student, regardless of age, and results have been very satisfactory. A point stressed by Grove is that the theatre has never attempted to put over any tie-up on any picture that wasn't absolutely okay.



There may be members of our Club who are experiencing the difficulty of effecting a tie-up with local schools and Grove's stunt of awarding weekly passes to those who make the grade and his graduating cup might turn out to be means of overcoming the obstacles. If these methods are tried out by any Round Tablers we would like to hear details. In the meantime, we thank Grove for his contribution and wish him continued success.

DENVER DOINGS

Holden Swigger, formerly manager of the Denver Theatre, Denver, Colo., has been transferred to Chicago by Publix. It was not announced what house he would be connected with.

Walter Shuttee, formerly assistant manager at the Denver Theatre, and prior to that manager of the Rialto, has been appointed manager of the Paramount Theatre.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Two unusually striking examples of poster art are offered this week. The first, above, is from the versatile brush of Jerry Foley, Poster Artist of the Capitol Theatre in Rochester, N. Y. Jerry is another new-comer to the series started by Benton L. James, but we hope he'll become a regular contributor.

The poster below is from Claude Barnett, Booth Theatre, Knoxville Tenn., whose work has already been shown on these pages. Color scheme is as follows: Background—Red orange to yellow. Head—Dark green to pale light green. Lettering—White, with the little space fillers in lavender, light magenta, light blue.

VOICE OF THE SOUTH STILL CALLING FROM MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE

The practice of confining hot news to the front page of a newspaper is still considered good form down in Memphis, Tenn., particularly so by certain editors; hence, when a theatre manager can crash that sacred section with a two column story, the feat may be looked upon as an outstanding one in the annals of showbusiness. Doff your cap, Howard Waugh, impresario of the Warner Theatre, for we refer to none other than you, "The Voice of the South."

The above was occasioned by a tie-up made with the newspaper on "Under Eighteen" and concerned the writing of letters on the subject, "Why Girls Under 18 Should Not Marry." Two letters, pro and con, were featured in the story naming the winners, which also gave additional winners of the sixteen awards of guest tickets. As a matter of fact, this gag was good for a whale of a lot of publicity on other pages, some of the stories setting forth that marriage at 18 was okay and others emphatically turning thumbs down on such a move. Most of the stories carried a photo of the local contributor.

Other recent activities of this enterprising member of our Club include a tie-up with a newspaper for the holding of a "Happiness Party," during which youngsters witnessed the showing of a feature and short reels and partook of soda, candy and popcorn.

Admission to the affair was an old or new toy. These were all turned over to poor children after being repaired by firemen who volunteered their services. With the help of Bill Brennan, Waugh's assistant, a well known college football team contributed an autographed ball as the main award for the boys. The girls received twelve dolls with names of Warner stars inscribed. Local soda-bottling concerns contributed many cases of free drinks and candy companies donated their share of sweets. The feature picture was "Father's Son."

Before signing off on the "Voice of the South" let us state that he is still using the front page of the "Memphian," somewhat of a departure from the accepted form of journalism, for a front page over-print in red ink, the last occasion we have note of being "Union Depot." This little tab size paper is getting quite a play down in Memphis, we hear, and Howard was right on the job to cash in on its popularity. So that's that, until we next hear from this Club member.

LEMKE HAS METHOD TO BOOST TRADE ON BLUE MONDAY NIGHTS

As a means of boosting trade on Blue Monday, which is his poorest night of the week, William Lemke of the Princess Theatre, Cayuga, Ind., is using a little card with punch marks for the four Mondays in the month.

It is only punched on Mondays when presented along with an adult ticket and the holder is entitled to witness the fourth Monday's show free of charge. A time limit is noted on the card.

Lemke is one of our recently elected Club members and the above is his first contribution to this department. We thank him for passing along this tip to his fellow showmen and hope that he will come through with many more.

BRICK AND MORTAR!

Which Means Your Theatre, Staff, Equipment, Etc.; Are You Cashing In On This End?

By F. M. A. LITCHARD

Morse Theatre, Franklin, Mass.

"Brick and Mortar" refers to what is commonly called good-will, and what is more clearly the theatre, its equipment and personnel. Every time a picture is advertised some space should be devoted to selling the theatre and some of its good qualities. The theatre represents an investment of thousands of dollars, and yet most of the people conducting them ignore this fact. Every brick and piece of mortar in it must be made to pay for itself, and this opportunity has been too long overlooked.

"What do we have to sell besides pictures?" you ask. Let us consider your sound. Is it all you could ask for? Is it as good as that in the theatre down the street, or in the next town? It is. Well, make it better, then spend some money and space telling the public about it. "How do we make it better?" you ask. There has been a huge amount of money expended by large and reliable companies in learning the actions and reactions of sound under varying conditions. The term is acoustics. For a small amount, or in some cases free of charge, this knowledge may be obtained to apply to your theatre, and it will be more than satisfactory providing your sound equipment is approved.

Then there is the problem of keeping the theatre clean, and to my mind this is most essential. No matter what the homes of your patrons look like they expect to find your theatre spotless; if it isn't they will find one that is, if it is within their reach. The retiring rooms must have particular attention.

Then the atmosphere must be considered. Do your carpets look warm and inviting? Do your draperies make your theatre cozy? Are your lamps giving a beckoning light? Do your attendants smile? All of these things have a bearing on the potential customer. Even if the program isn't all that it should be, it is possible to make the patron want to come back again if you send him away with a smile in his heart for your theatre. Greet him with a smile and send him away with one, and he will come back for more. Incidentally, in this matter there is one very important factor that goes a long way toward solving the problem. If the manager is doing his duty he will be on the floor to greet all his patrons. If his powers of retention are normal he will make every effort to learn the names of the people who come to his theatre. He will then greet them by name the next time. The doorman can also play a part in this. This applies to the poor as well as the rich.

Is your picture clear, and is it large enough? I have entered several houses and seen a picture that looked miles away, because the screen was too small. To give a good illusion of the actors being present in person it is necessary to make the screen large enough to have them seem close at hand. It lends an air of intimacy that cannot be gained otherwise.

How is your parking problem? Is there sufficient room near at hand for your patrons? If not, have you made any attempt to get some? Parking is becoming one of the serious problems of our business and it is time to do something about it. People are not coming to any theatre if it isn't convenient for them to do so. Do you have a one way street? Have you exerted any influence to have it changed? Proper manipulation by a wise manager can do many things that are thought impossible.

There is another question that is more important. Do you have the personality that is necessary to sell yourself to those with whom you come in contact? Is it possible for you to get what you want in your community? A theatre manager or owner meets more people from more walks of life than any other type of man, or should if he is a good manager. It is necessary to have tact, to smile and be congenial if you are to be successful in the theatre business.

On Your Toes!

So much for the "Brick and Mortar." Now we come to the matter of booking pictures. Do you align with the ideas of the so-called legitimate theatres and old time managers when it comes summer time, or Lent, or the week before Christmas? If you do you aren't running a motion picture theatre as it should be run. There are just as many people to be entertained in any of those periods as at any other time. The thing to do is to go after their business. The manager of the modern theatre recognizes no competition. Your pictures must be as good, your ventilation must be at its best, and your advertising must be stronger to meet these times of unsettled habits on the part of the public. The motion picture industry has no room for a man who does not fight for what he can get. It has been built upon a fight for recognition and business, and fighting is the only thing that will make it survive.

People will not patronize a theatre that is obviously trying to give them cheap entertainment. There are 365 days in the year and an effort must be made to have any one day just as good as the other 364. And every one of those days counts when the year's business is totaled. A day neglected is many dollars lost to the theatre. There must be the will to win, and the idea that "it can be done." If your predecessor couldn't do it that doesn't mean that you can't.

If the essentials of "Brick and Mortar" are followed there is nothing that can't be done to overcome all obstacles, even protection and poor location.

THE MORSE LEADS ALL THEATRES IN THIS SECTION FOR FINE, MODERN ENTERTAINMENT

(One of the Program Editorials Used by Litchard Each Week)

Let us take this opportunity to again emphasize the fact that the Morse Theatre now stands alone as the undisputed leader in modern entertainment in this section of the state.

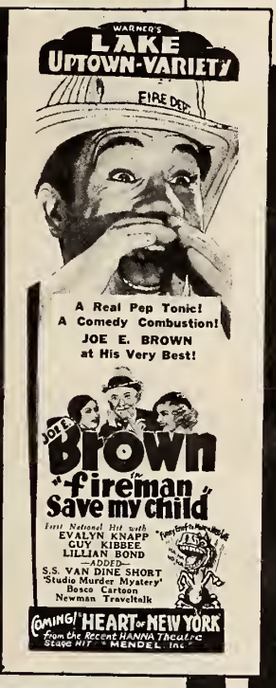
Our new and perfected Western Electric Sound System is unexcelled due to the scientific treatment of the theatre. Our screen is large and gives a sharp, distinctly defined and well illuminated picture. It has been scientifically tested with the theatre lights and is as near perfect as science can make it. No eye-strain! No flicker! No blur! No distortion!

Our cooling system circulates pure and healthful air. It is not chemically treated, but a soft breeze is constantly wafted about, just like the sea shore. The theatre is spotlessly clean. There are no disturbing noises, no distracting sounds.

Franklin does not have the annoyance of one way streets and parking regulations. The streets are wide and two-way. Parking space is handy and free. The time of the performances is for the convenience of the patrons. The theatre is run for your enjoyment. Get the most in entertainment at the Morse.

It's worth twice as much to see your pictures and stars at the Morse and you save time, temper and money by doing it!

KEN HAYDEN USING VARIETY OF STUNTS TO SELL HIS SHOWS

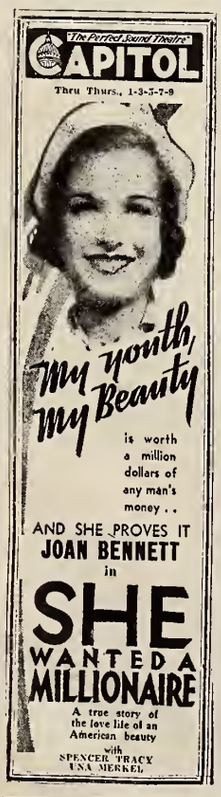


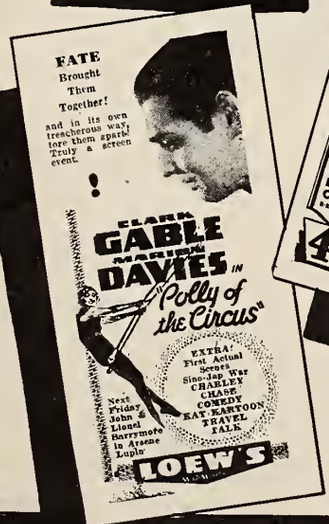
Like most managers of theatres in the suburban communities of New York City, Ken Hayden, in charge of the Howard Theatre, Howard Beach, Queens, is up against pretty stiff competition and, as a consequence, has to resort to various ways and means to attract neighborhood patrons.

His recent activities include a "Save Your Program" gag, in which the program carried certain marks identifying them with give-aways; and another business booster consisting of a five-piece breakfast set for give-away on Saturday nights. These sets are donated by local merchants and the stunt is holding up very well in its sixth week.

Conditions in communities necessarily govern the actions of theatre managers, and while premiums are frowned upon by many in show-business as a practice which will eventually "bite the hand," strong competition forces resort to some such means in order to keep seats filled. If Ken can do the job this way without cost to his house, as in the above case, certainly he's in line for praise. We'll be looking for further news from Howard Beach.

ONE COLUMN ADVERTISING OFFERS MANY NEW WAYS TO USE NEWSPAPER SPACE!





'FIREMAN' CONTEST ENTRY!

Howard Waugh Left No Stone Unturned to Make This an Outstanding Sales Campaign!

A NUMBER of effective tie-ups, excellent newspaper publicity, an attractive lobby display. a radio gag and numerous other activities all combined to put over a smashing campaign on "Fireman, Save My Child" for Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn. All efforts were based along comedy lines and consequent sale of tickets

Five days prior to opening a local radio station was tied-up for a Kiddies' contest during which the youngsters vied with one another for the best imitations of Joe E. Brown's laugh. Announcements were frequently made and auditions were held on the theatre stage Saturday morning before opening. The stunt resulted in splendid advance plugs and a big crowd of children around the theatre when the doors were opened.

Other tie-ups included a window and naming of a new sport show by a downtown shoe shop proprietor; windows in three sporting goods stores in downtown section; stuffing of 5,000 heralds in packages sent out by a big laundry concern, and twenty-five stills framed and marked in leading downtown stores.

Many Fine Tie-ups!

ANOTHER stunt that clicked nicely was a tie-up arranged with a local jeweler for donation of a "Joe E. Brown Trophy" to the winner of a roller-skating contest, a diversion undergoing a big revival in Memphis at the time. Still another advance stunt that secured a lot of good publicity was a special screening for all firemen one week prior to opening. (Waugh did not go in for the fire engine ballyhoo on account of the large size of the city.)

One of the photos on this page will give readers an idea of how the lobby was dressed for the occasion. Bright red predominated and at all times the general scheme stressed the "big mouth angle." The large cutout at lobby entrance was hung directly over the box office so that the cashier's window appeared to extend the opening of the huge mouth. The "V" board standing on the sidewalk was connected with a "Mike" in the audience and on the stage. Baseball scenes were broadcast through the mouth opening on each side and the sound could be heard for blocks. Laugh records were also broadcast through this board from a Victrola. The sidewalk was painted a bright red.

Waugh can certainly be credited with obtaining a generous amount of newspaper publicity on this picture and his display ads were well arranged. Day after day stories and cuts of Brown appeared in both amusement and sporting sections and on one occasion he secured a four column fashion spread on Evalyn Knapp.

Nothing Overlooked!

NOVELTY heralds printed in red and carrying large pictures of Brown were also effectively used in a number of ways. One was headed "Fire Sale" and many of these were pasted close together on windows of vacant stores. Another stated that there was a "Joe E. Brown Sandwich" in town and that it would fill any man's mouth. (Must have been a triple-decker, Howard.) This was tied in with a restaurant. Another trick herald of the same color reading, "Speak-Easy Inspection" was widely distributed among billiard parlors, etc.

Street cars and taxicabs also acted as advertising mediums, 200 of the former carrying "Fireman, Save My Child" cards on all lines and 75 of the latter using strip cards attached to front bumpers.

Special Matches, Too!

MATCHES and fires are generally closely related and this idea was gotten across by having an attractive girl distribute the novelty "pull quick" matches along main streets on opening day of picture. As you can see by the photo she was dressed with fireman's hat and overcoat. These matches are a distinct novelty, lighting when pulled from container, are being effectively used for word-of-mouth comment.

Other stunts included announcement of show at a wrestling bout that played to about 10,000 people; a presentation of a 14 x 22 inch complimentary ticket to the "Biggest Newspaperman in Memphis," which carried instructions that it must not be folded in order to be honored (this rated cut and story), and circularization of all service and luncheon clubs in city with letter suggesting that a lot of fun would be in store for those who conducted a Male Beauty Contest. The gag is for the club to frame things in advance and pick out the homeliest man in the outfit, voting him the best looker. He receives guest tickets for himself and family. Two tickets were enclosed in each letter for the club secretary. To make this stunt more attractive, it was also suggested that a certain night be set aside for a group of club members to attend the theatre and have the best looker introduced from the stage. Letters at hand attest that the Kiwanis and Traffic Clubs took advantage of the offer.

Well, Howard, you certainly did cover a whole lot of ground when you put over the campaign and there can be no doubt but that you will be considered a serious contender for honors in the nation-wide contest being conducted by Warner Bros., for best efforts on this picture. Folk in Memphis must have been aware that the well known "Voice of the South" was calling when you did your advance work and we believe you're in line for much praise for the way you handled all your publicity stunts. At any rate, good luck, and if you didn't tire yourself all out on this one, tell us more about recent activities.

A FEW NOTES ABOUT MIAMI SHOW BUSINESS FROM SONNY SHEPHERD

Miami, Fla., and its attractions as a winter resort par excellence are extolled in an interesting communication from Round Tabler "Sonny" Shepherd, manager of the Biltmore Theatre in that well advertised Southern city.

But with all its advantages as a place to make a visitor forget his or her woes, the fellows that have to live there the year 'round have to take it on the chin now and then, particularly in view of the general business trend past and present. On the other hand, rents are cheaper than in any other city with a climate like Miami's and if the Blue Law faction doesn't succeed in enforcing an old Sunday closing ordinance as the result of a coming election, things on the whole in show-business won't be too bad. True, the dog races are offering rather stiff competition right at present, but even people tire of dogs chasing a synthetic rabbit around a course.

Sonny informs us that Harry Weiss. manager of the Paramount Theatre (formerly the Fairfax) recently held a world premiere on Ruth Chatterton's "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" and did a very nice business, plus the fact that the picture pleased.

McCoy's Olympia, he states, is using stage shows to good results, with Ray Teal's orchestra and acts secured from Miami's floating population. Helen Morgan opens soon at the Club Lido. Maybe she will draw, who knows.

No doubt about Shepherd's Mickey Mouse birthday file being in working order for we have one right before us disclosing the fact that "Chick" had a birthday not long ago. Thanks for that, Sonny, and let's hear a bit more about what the Biltmore is doing these days. 'Till then we'll sign off.

JENKINS' COLYUM

DEAR HERALD

We note by the press that the whisky, beer and "alky" barons are holding a convention in Halifax, N. S. The object of the convention, as stated, is to arrange to buy the product in bulk so as to get a cheaper rate. That's fine, and if this is to be an annual affair then watch Los Angeles go after the next convention.

Out here is the proper place to hold the convention, anyhow, for Los Angeles is so close to Hollywood, and Hollywood is right next to Beverly Hills.

We hear people talk about wanting to go back to the "Good Old Days." Yeah, go back and see mother bending over the wash-tub; see Dad chasing old Speck around the cowyard to try and milk her; see the hogs rooting up the potatoes in the garden; walk three miles in the snow to attend spelling-school and find that the teacher couldn't get there; have the ague and have to swill down ash bark tea; have the measles, chicken pox and mumps just after you had gotten over the lumbago. Wouldn't that be fine! Some people can't get any good out of the present; they are always looking on the dark side. They claim that everything is going to the dogs. What we like is a guy who can look Adversity right square in the face and tell it to go plumb . . . .

Did you ever attend a Wampas banquet? Maybe you don't know what a Wampas is. We asked a fellow in the drugstore if he knew what a Wampas was and he said he did, that it was a bird that lived in Siberia. Another fellow spoke up and said, "You are all wet. A Wampas is a cross between a banana and a pineapple and grows in South America. Then another fellow said, "You are both crazy. A Wampas is a pouch that Indians carry their tobacco in."

We have taken this matter up with Webster and Web don't know a thing about it We had an invitation to the Wampas banquet and we went to find out just what a Wampas is, and it's this way. The Western Associated Motion Picture Advertisers hold an annual banquet at which time they choose a number of baby stars between the ages of 14 and 16, or thereabouts. The Club wanted a nice name for these baby stars and so the matter was brought up at one of their meetings.

A writer for Fox suggested the name "Peaches" but that met with opposition because peaches won't keep unless they are kept in cold storage. A writer for MGM suggested the name "huckleberries" as the best thing he could think of, but that brought a storm of protest until finally a Paramount writer got up and said, "Mr. Chairman, as a compromise measure, and in the interest of harmony, I suggest that we take the initials and call it Wampas." And so it was settled, and that's how it comes that we have Wampas baby stars.

Back in the "Good Old Days" we knew a baby that if we had called her a Wampas she would have knocked the tar out of us with a washbowl, but not so out here. The height of every girl's ambition is to be a Wampas star, and the height of every Club member's ambition is to be present when they pick 'em. This Writers Club never misses a thing, not even a paycheck, but they are not a very bad bunch of fellows. We went there with four bits and got away before they found it out.

They had a fine banquet and we met a fine bunch of fellows and we had a fine time. We saw some of the Wampas baby stars and you can take it from us, Abner, that they are SOME babies. This Club knows how to pick 'em. Now you know what a Wampas baby star is.

We are indebted to Mr. Vic Shapiro, publicity director for Fox, and Colonel Jack Francis, whom the studio boys all lean on when there isn't anything else around handy, for showing us around the Fox lot. The Colonel arranged for us to have our picture taken with Elissa Landi and Ralph Bellamy, Fox stars, and Henry King and Mr. Howard, Fox directors, and if that isn't what you'd call courtesy, then you and Webster fight it out between yourselves.

We also had the pleasure of meeting "Skeets" Gallagher and John Boles, both Fox stars, and if anybody ever steals our watermelons we'll know right where to look for 'em. We saw Will Rogers in the Fox cafe but didn't get to meet him. There's another watermelon hound.

A woman and her husband back in Wayne, Nebraska, had their goods all packed to move out here to Hollywood. The husband came home at night and the goods were all unpacked. He asked his wife what it meant and she replied: "Well, I just read an article in the paper that said that out there in Hollywood every fourth child is a Chinaman, and we've got three children now. I'm not going." That kind of publicity is what keeps so many people away from here. It ought to be stopped.

Russian film interests are negotiating for the purchase of picture rights to Clement Wood's "The Man Who Killed Kitchener" for production from a Russian point of view, as a great deal of the story is laid in old Imperial Russia. Ernst Lubitsch also has the story under consideration.

Gloria Goddard Doctoring Dialogue

Gloria Goddard is Americanizing and otherwise bringing up to date the dialogue of Duquesne's "Harlequin King," which Sam Roth will probably produce in pictures this year along with "Plumes of Passion," Miss Goddard's own comedy drama of Franco-American life written for the screen.

Peerless to Produce in East

Peerless Productions will make all future product in the East, at the Metropolitan Studios, Fort Lee, N. J. Seven films are yet to be made on the current schedule, while 24 will be produced for 1932-33. "The Warning Shadow," with Dita Parlo, is nearing completion.

THE EMBLEM OF RCA PERFECT SOUND
PHOTOPHONE
SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE-IN-ARIZONA.

My Dear "J. C.":

Well, "J. C.", the confabs of the Allied Exhibitors and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and as you may have inferred from the excellent reports published in the last two issues of THE HERALD, the announcements concerning the introduction of two new all AC operated types of equipment, the reduction in the prices of three models and the marked reduction in contract services charges by the Photophone Division of the RCA Victor Company, gave the boys something to talk about. And did they talk? And did they applaud? And did they cheer? I'll say in accents loud and wild and with plenty of emphasis that they did. Both Mr. Richey of Allied and Mr. Lightman of the M.P.T.O.A. took it upon themselves to emphasize the importance of the announcement to the hundreds of exhibitors assembled at each convention. And why this enthusiasm? Well, "J. C.", there's only one answer to that question. The two new all AC operated types of equipment for theatres, one for theatres having between 1,400 and 2,500 seats, and the other for theatres between 2,500 and 4,000 seating capacity, are considerably cheaper than the former battery and motor generator operated models. Also, the substantial reduction in contract service charges on all types of equipment wasn't hard for the boys to take. Then, and particularly important to small theatre exhibitors, was the announcement that the capacity limitations of the all AC operated Standard Small Size apparatus had been increased from 1,200 to 1,400 seats and the Special Size equipment from 500 to 800 seats. Now, "J. C.", I'm asking you. Did you ever, in your entire experience, hear better news for exhibitors? You don't have to answer that one, "J. C." I can hear you say "Boy, that's telling 'em." But for the good of the cause and just so everybody will be happy, you might pass the word along.

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 121—(A) Tell us how you would prove the fact that the ordinary arc cannot use above 60 amperes d.c. without increased proportional loss of light. (B) Using the ordinary arc, in what proportion is screen illumination increased with different arc amperage, assuming the correct optical line-up to be used in each case. (C) With the ordinary arc and plano-convex condenser, is it possible to increase screen illumination by increased amperage over and above 120? (D) Is it essential to best results that there be a certain fixed carbon separation (ordinary arc) for each different amperage?

Answer to Question No. 115

Bluebook School Question No. 115 was: "(A) Will an a.c. arc deliver 50 per cent as much light to the condenser as will a d.c. arc of equal amperage? (B) If a. c. is used at the arc, should an attempt be made to etelize light from both craters? (C) Name at least two points of difference as between a. c. and d. c. projection light. (D) Are the violet lines in the arc stream said to be brighter than the crater floor itself? (E) Does the flow of current through the gas stream cause it to have luminosity, regardless of its temperature?"

Again I must warn my "scholars" to affix their name to the sheets containing their answer, preferably at the top of the first sheet. Not a week passes but I must discard one or more good answers because this is not done. Immediately upon receipt, sheets are separated from any letter sheets there may be, and filed with the other answers. It may be, and usually is, at least a week before they are examined again, and if the name is not on them—well, it is just too bad. Here are the successful ones this week:

S. Evans and C. Rau*, Lester Borst*, Herman B. Billings*, Lewis A. Goldman*, James J. Hobdell*, Roy J. Arntson*, John Dudiak*, G. E. Doe*, John Wentworth*, Bill Doe*, Andy Bailey*, Jack Billings*, Pat O'Brien*, T. Van Vaulkenburg*, P. L. Davis*, Dave Goldberg*, William Broadbent*, Tom Murphy, Nic Granby, T. L. May, Dan Emmerson, George Deckson and Albert Jones, Frank C. Hagmyer, A. Gibson, D. L. Sinklow, Henry B. Coates, Dave Andrews, G. Tinlin, Aleck Giebto, Dan L. Mason, Chick Peters, John Williams, H. D. Schofield, Richard Singleton, Frank F. Franks, Andrew Breaston, Frank Davis, P. L. Ludlow, Seymour Carroll, Dave Bitdoll, Don Warren, G. Farmann, P. L. Toeping and Joe Daniels, John Ahrenson, P. H. Bondom, M. D. Dove, H. D. Tyler, S. T. Jones, Tom Whitnath, Thomas McGruder, S. Kay, Andrew Wells, Peter Jackson and Bob Diglah, Charles Ray and Tom Taylor, Dan L. Simmons, Dave Lambert and Tom Davis, H. B. Billings, Dave Lode, Richard Michaels, P. T. Garling, Charles Tamper, Tom Rathburn, Mike McGuire, F. B. Gamble, Leo Garling, Henry Sicmann, Frank Burker, K. L. Knight, John Cermak, Gorman Helder, Dave Anderson, J. G. Gates, Alonzo Zerach, Frank Ferguson, P. D. Thompson, T. R. Peters and Dan Holler.

Again I have decided to divide the honors by publishing different answers to the various sections of the question. Remember, however, that this does not mean that all answers by those named are not equally correct. For publication I try to select such answers as seem to express the matter most clearly and fully. In many cases I can see that a man making a poorly worded answer really does understand the matter, but is unable to express himself clearly on paper —or at least I very often give him the benefit of the doubt. Only those who are obviously wrong have their answers discarded.

Regarding Section A, we will listen to T. Van Vaulkenburg, who says:

"In this matter we are, as I understand it, considering only light available for projection. It is well to consider that point, which (if we read Section A carefully) we find is made quite clear. I have found it well to first study the question itself. Failure to do so has several times obliged me to throw an answer away and form an entirely new one. I believe you not infrequently so word a question that unless we study it we will fail. [Correct, Brother Van Vaulkenburg. This is a school. If those answering are careless, that is entirely their own fault. I happen to know that you are far from the first one who has discovered the fact that I not infrequently deliberately so form questions that you must consider them, and all their applications, before answering—unless you want your answer thrown out.—F. H. R.]

"In a d. c. arc, we all very well know that only one crater is available for a light source in projection work, if maximum results are to be expected. We also all very well know that whereas the full power of, say, 60 amperes will be employed to form one crater on the positive (upper) carbon in the case of a d. c. arc, only half that power will be, or can be, used to form the crater on the upper carbon (the one most available for use in producing projection light), hence the available a. c. crater can not possibly have in excess of half the area of the d. c. crater, amperage being equal. Whether the actual crater area will be half as large is doubtful for several reasons, an explanation of which would consume much more space than probably could be spared.

"This being true, and I think we all know it is true, it follows that since the light-giving power of a crater is equal to its square millimeter area multiplied by 160, and it follows that the a. c. projection light production cannot be in excess of 50 per cent of the d. c. arc of equal amperage, and in my opinion, measured in foot candles, it is considerably less than that. There is, however, a vast difference in light quality, and that immediately hangs this whole question upon another and quite different hinge. I would myself very much like to have this latter item discussed by our editor."

Gentlemen, I regard that as one of the best, most complete answers ever put in during the entire course of the "school," covering several years. My compliments to Brother Van Vaulkenburg, who, by the way, is a small city projectionist. I shall see to it that the matter he asks me to discuss is discussed very soon.

One man started off on Section A most excellently. Then he said, "And since the temperature of the crater increases in proportion to its area, it is readily seen that the d.c. crater will have a much higher temperature than will either, or both, craters of an a.c. arc."

Now I have indicated this brother's answer as correct. Why? Well, I believe he really understands the action in general very well. His reply, viewed as a whole, proves that, but he has worded this section of his answer badly. The temperature of a crater floor is, of course, limited by the volatilization point of carbon. True, the large crater will produce more heat, in total, than the small one, but it will still have essentially the same temperature. Two sq. mm. will produce twice the heat that one will, but nevertheless the actual temperature would remain the same for both. Had he used the term candle-power instead of temperature, he would have been entirely correct.

G. E. Doe says in reply to Section B, "Since the crater of an electric arc must, in projection work, be focused at or near the projector aperture, if discoloration and unevenness of screen illumination is to be avoided, and since two craters located at different points cannot both be focused by the same lens at exactly the same place, it follows that we must use only one crater of an a.c. arc for projection."

(C) Evans and Rau: "Two points of difference as between a.c. and d.c. projection light are (1) a.c. has a higher power of penetration, and (2) a whiter, colder brilliancy than has d.c. projection light."

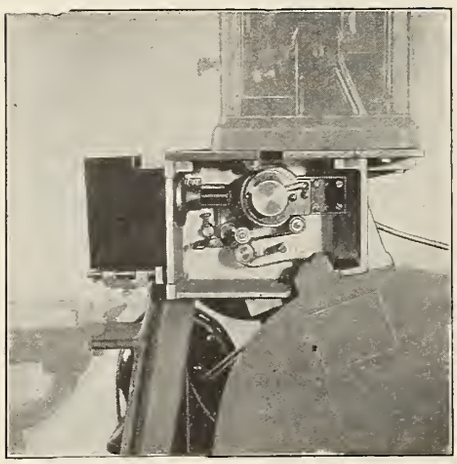
(D) James J. Hobdell: "That portion of the arc which lies directly between the carbon tips is called the arc stream, the inner portion of which consists of a hub of violet non-luminous vapor in which the vaporized carbon combines with the surrounding oxygen to form carbon monoxide. This portion is in turn surrounded by a layer of luminous flame in which the carbon monoxide burns to carbon dioxide.

"The foregoing view is not altogether supported by another authority, who says, 'A color analysis of the electric arc shows that its central portion is violet in hue. This is the carbon vapor, which is incandescent at the crater floor. Surrounding this colored region is a non-luminous area where a dark flame indicates that the oxygen of the outer air is being combined with the carbon vapor, and carbon monoxide is being further oxidized, forming carbon dioxide.' "

Excellent, but after all does it really answer the question? Evans and Rau say, "The violet lines in the spectrum of the arc stream are said to be brighter than the crater floor itself. The arc stream is higher in temperature even than the crater floor. The flow of current through the gas stream causes the stream to have luminosity, regardless of its temperature."

(E) Answered in (D).

SMPE Recommends 16 MM. Standards



The subcommittee of the standards committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has reported its recommendations for 16 mm. film standards, with complete designs for two types of the narrow film. The recommendations are now up for approval and validation by the standards committee and the society.

The committee made a thorough study of all problems related to 16 mm. film before deciding upon the recommendations. Two types are at present under industry consideration, one with one row of perforations and the sound track on the other side, the other being the present type, with two sets of sprocket openings. The committee has drawn up standards for both types, but has recommended one system in particular.

Cooperating in the work of the subcommittee were: J. L. Spence, in charge; V. B. Sease, P. H. Evans, L. A. Jones, H. T. Jermaine, H. Griffin, R. P. May, T. E. Shea, L. A. Elmer, H. G. Tasker. The standards committee is headed by M. C. Batsel, chairman.

SYNCROFILM IS NO EXPERIMENT

It is made by the largest independent motion picture machinery manufacturer in the world. It has many years of experience in actual manufacture behind it. The best engineering knowledge is embodied in its many exclusive features. Thousands of dollars have been invested in special equipment to manufacture it.

With such a background, is it astonishing that we guarantee your money back if you are not satisfied with Syncrofilm? We have too much at stake to turn out an unsatisfactory machine. That is why we do all our experimenting in our laboratories before we sell a single machine. No experimenting is done in your projection booth when you buy Syncrofilm.

Buy the machine you know will make good from the first day. Write for quotation, naming your make of projector.

Photophone Adds Recording Outfit

RCA Photophone, division of RCA Victor, has installed complete re-recording facilities in its studios at 411 Fifth Avenue, New York, in order to accommodate increasing activities in the production of 16 mm. sound-on-film subjects. The reduction of 35 mm. silent subjects to 16 mm., and the subsequent dubbing of sound are pointed out as further reason for the expansion.

Grover C. Schaefer is in charge of the department. Several subjects have already been re-recorded for reproduction on the RCA Victor Photophone portable 16 mm. sound-on-film projector.

Burton Holmes Lectures, Inc., motion picture lecture bureau, and producer of travelogue shorts, has contracted for the installation of Photophone recording equipment. Under the provisions of the contract the Holmes company becomes an RCA Victor Company licensee and will record its sound product by the Photophone system. The lecture firm will immediately begin the production of 16 mm. sound films for non-theatrical exhibition, reducing much of the reputed millions of feet of 35 mm. silent and sound negative at present in the vaults of the company. W. A. Graham, assistant manager in charge of recording operations for Photophone, completed negotiations for his company.

Geneva Court Gives First Judgment on Sound Films

The Court of Justice at Geneva, Switzerland, has given judgment for the first time which establishes jurisdiction in reference to sound films, according to George R. Canty, trade commissioner in Paris.

It was necessary to decide whether musical works, adapted in a foreign country as sound films, with the permission of the authors and composers, could be presented in Switzerland without payment of the copyright. The judge decided that, according to federal law, the adaptation of works for sound films could not be considered lawful and that the adaptor could not obtain the necessary license unless he possessed in Switzerland an industrial establishment for the manufacture of the musical apparatus and had paid to the author a suitable indemnity.

Supreme Screen Service Is Opening Two New Branches

Supreme Screen Service has opened two new branches, one in Boston, the other in New Haven. They are under the supervision of Henry M. Sperling, independent distributor affiliated with World Art Pictures of New England, Inc.

The two offices bring the total of Supreme Screen branches to nine, the other cities having branches being New York, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis, Milwaukee and Dallas.

To Remake "Ten Commandments"

Paramount will remake "The Ten Commandments" in a modernized sound version, with release set for July 1. According to present plans, William Schorr will direct the new version. Cecil B. De Mille handled the direction of the original silent film.

Van Beuren Will Roadshow Feature

The Van Beuren Corporation plans to roadshow its first feature film, "Bring 'Em Back Alive," produced by Frank Buck, author of the book of the same title. The film is said to be an authentic motion picture record of the expedition which Buck led into the Malay jungles, and which occupied five months.

Buck has canceled a series of lectures on the expedition, making his final appearance in Cleveland this week before the University Club, to devote all of his time to the completion of the film, which is 8,500 feet in length. It is said 170,000 feet of film were taken in the field.

The roadshow engagement of the feature is to be followed by national release through a major distributor. Clyde E. Elliott was film director and Nick Cavaliere was chief cameraman on the expedition, which was organized and financed by Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of the Van Beuren Corporation.

Visugraphic Has Baseball Series, Stock Exchange Film

Visugraphic Pictures, in conjunction with Cy Peterman and Don Donaghy of the Evening Bulletin, Philadelphia, has produced a series of five one-reel shorts on baseball, with stars of the two Philadelphia teams seen and heard in explanatory action.

Visugraphic's "The Nation's Market Place," having its first showing at the Plaza in New York on Thursday and Friday, is said to be the first film ever made on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange during actual trading.

He described the making of animated cartoons, illustrating with recent shorts. Another paper, on trick photography, was also read.

Mario Remo Turns to Stage

Mario Remo, young picture actor, is playing the part of Royal Menton, the juvenile lead in "Revealing Eyes," a comedy drama being produced by Coliseum Attractions. The play is in rehearsal under direction of Joseph Ornato and will open in about two weeks at a Broadway theatre.

MUSIC AND TALENT

New Firm Offering Stage Unit Circuit

Columbia De Luxe Revues, Inc., of which Lewis Grosner is president and general manager, has been established with offices at 1560 Broadway, New York, offering a group of stage units for film theatres over the country.

Each unit will consist of 20 people, including 12 in a chorus, seven principals and a musical director and manager. The units are offered for one day, two days, three days and weekly. A rotary tour of from 35 to 50 weeks is planned, playing each location each week with a different unit. Ten presentations are said to be in work at present, with additional units intended in the future.

Allan K. Foster is in charge of the "Allan K. Foster Girls"; Seymour Furth, music department; Madam Berthe, production department; Ed Ryan, stage producer. Scenic work is handled by the Beaumont Studios.

Dobbs' Radio Entertainers at San Francisco Warner

Hugh Barrett Dobbs and his radio entertainers celebrated the fourth anniversary of the launching of the "Ship of Joy" by broadcasting from the stage of the Warner Brothers theatre, San Francisco, at a performance commencing at 8 a.m. A feature of the stage decorations was a birthday cake eight feet high.

Feist Handles German Success

"Der Raub der Mona Lisa," ("The Theft of the Mona Lisa"), German film which opens next week, has as its theme, a song entitled, "Warum Lachelst Du, Mona Lisa?" which is understood to be one of the sensations of Europe. Returned travelers have been demanding it, it is said, and Leo Feist, Inc., has taken it over and will publish it under the English title of "Tell Me Why You Smile, Mona Lisa." The number was originally written by Robert Stolz, composer of "Two Hearts," and a new lyric has been written by Raymond B. Egan.

Glogau Now Music Publisher

Jack Glogau, until recently general manager of Shapiro, Bernstein & Company, has established "Star Songs by Star Writers," under the name of Jack Glogau Music Publishing Company. The initial number, "Midnight, Moonlight and You," is being used by Jack Denny, Columbia radio star, as his air signature.

Mme. Alda at RKO Theatres

Martin Beck has signed Mme. Frances Alda, famed grand opera star, for a limited vaudeville engagement at RKO theatres. The singer will open at the RKO Palace, Cleveland, on April 9, followed by the RKO Albee in Brooklyn and the Palace in New York, are listed on her present schedule.

LOU BONDER

Here is a young fellow who has made himself the mainstay of one of New York's neighborhood theatres, and he is really a box-office attraction. He's a New York boy, born, raised and educated within the narrow boundaries of Manhattan.

Lou is proud of the fact that he has never stepped off Greater New York soil and what is more has no desire to do so. That doesn't mean he is not ambitious, because he is and gives his audiences the benefit of his ideas. He has been the featured organist at the Park Plaza theatre for the past five years.

Organists Re-Assigned

Recent changes of assignment among organists include: Dick Betts, limited engagement at Fox Avon, Watertown, N. Y.; Earl Abel, at the RKO Majestic, San Antonio, Texas; Julia Dawn, from the Publix Aztec, San Antonio, to Plaza, El Paso, Texas; Ted Crawford, from the Oxnard, Oxnard, Cal., to Publix Orpheum, Phoenix, Ariz.

Crosby to Appear in Shorts

Bing Crosby, who is back at the New York Paramount theatre after a run of eight weeks at the Brooklyn Paramount, expects to sign a film contract within the next two weeks to make a new series of shorts.

Kerr Band on Radio Hour

Charley Kerr and His Adelphi Hotel Orchestra was heard on the "Lucky Strike" radio program last week, marking the first time the company has taken a Philadelphia orchestra. Kerr conducted the first organized band to broadcast when radio was at the "earphone" stage, 13 years ago.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending March 16

Hermie King as master of ceremonies, succeeding Paul Ash, who has entered the catering business, presents a stage show filled with rapid-fire entertainment, red-hot rhythm and hilarious humor. Hermie has caught the Warfield spirit.

The show opens with an announcement from the wings that Hermie King and his Warfield joy band will play a medley of hits of a few seasons ago. The medley includes "Till We Meet Again," "Whispering" and "My Blue Heaven."

The Evelyn Torey Trio, made up of two girls and a boy, offer some scintillating footwork, with Evelyn proving exceptionally graceful and an excellent contortionist.

Clever Sammy Carr dances on to the stage with his hat balanced on his nose. He is clever with his sleight-of-hand work and seems to be able to balance almost anything on his nasal appendage from knives and cannon balls to a tiny piece of paper—and yes, a hair. The best is his balancing of two empty bottles, "dead 'orses," he calls them, topped by a cannon ball.

A medley of rhumba tunes serves to introduce Ynez, who is, by the way, a Warfield "Opportunity Night" find. This Spanish maiden, in a costume of white and orange, distinguished by its briefness, dances the rhumba and her movements prove an eyeful. They so enthrall George Wendt, rotund member of the Joy Gang, that he joins in a few turns.

A bit of color is added to the show by the dancing of George Green on roller skates. Bernie and Walker Company put over a fast line of chatter that takes well with the audience and there are other specialties that make a well-rounded bill.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending March 11

Lou Forbes and Bob Blair provide some real stage entertainment. The 16 Strakova girls, twisting in rythm made more vivid by beautiful lighting effects, are almost as spectacular as the far-famed "Bolero" of the "Vanities."

Louis Prima shows acting possibilities as well as his peculiar style of song delivery, and Charlotte Murrie—ah, there's a singer. Miss Murrie makes her debut this week and is given only one song. She could sing a dozen, and each one would be equally enjoyed. It has not been decided yet whether she's a feminine baritone or a tenor, but which ever she is, she has personality that sparkles in pantomime and vocal ability and she'll wear like iron, or we miss our guess.

Lou Forbes sort of steps on it in a musical way, offering "Trees," "Flight of the Beumblebee" and "Was That the Human Thing to Do." Lee Mason croons, a la megaphone, and gets a nice hand. The special arrangements for the various numbers are brilliant.

And "Herbie" at the organ makes 'em sit up and take notice.

Nagel to Play Mastbaum

Conrad Nagel has been booked for a personal appearance at the Philadelphia Mastbaum for the week of April 8. Warner Brothers Artists Bureau handled the booking.

STAGE SHOWS

Dallas Palace

Week ending March 10

Entertainers of the memorable sawdust ring brought to the stage in Fanchon and Marco's "The Big Top," which lacked only the red lemonade to complete the ensemble for a complete circus setting. Even the echoes of the calliope are present as Raymond LaPere leaves the orchestra piano and takes over the organ to do a stirring imitation of the steam calliope. The star of the show was Bee Starr, tiny aerialist, who has been a trouper with both Ringling Brothers and Sells Floto. The climax of her unusually good act is her feat of swinging by one arm and completing more than 80 revolutions to the final accompaniment. The elephants are well trained and Adele Nelson puts the three through a well-appreciated rhumba, followed by a Spanish number with the soloist costumed in bells. The climax is when the clown elephant executes its staggering steps to the tune "How Dry I Am." Lillian St. Leon, in her bareback riding, and Carl Sayton and partner, gymnasts and balancing artists of unusual accomplishment, contribute to the success. Hooper and Gatchett, as the Ringmaster and Rube, respectively, please with their songs, patter and chatter. Hooper, finding the rube peering under the tent's edge, brings back a real touch of bygone circus days. The entire production is one of the best ever assembled for a stage performance.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending March 10

Although Fanchon and Marco's "Around the World" Idea is rather ambitious, it is nicely presented. The opening episode presents Harry and Frances Usher, who land from an airplane. Harry does a sleight-of-hand trick with a dollar bill and then the pair proceed to take a flight about the world.

The first country visited is England, and Phillis Du Bary does a neat bit of stepping to "All the King's Horses." The band, under the direction of Glenn Welty, is on the stage. The six girls of the chorus are attired in red with red plumes, while the six male members are mounted on dummy horses.

The scene shifts to Dixie, and Tex Morrissey Company, consisting of two girls, clown about. The one wears a donkey outfit and dances and clowns about, even crawling out into the audience and hobnobbing with those in the front row.

The framed scene behind the orchestra shifts to Ireland and the mixed chorus does its stuff in typical Irish garb of green and white, to the tune of "Anybody Here Seen Kelly?"

Mysticism is the keynote of the next episode with India as the setting. The two Ushers again take the stage, Harry swallowing a handful of needles and a length of thread to draw the fully threaded needles out of his mouth, after swallowing a glass of water. Frances is blindfolded and proceeds to name various objects as Harry picks them up from patrons.

Conchita Montenegro, headliner, fits into the Spanish episode very nicely and offers two Spanish dances in a very capable manner. She makes a little speech between her numbers telling the audience how fine it is to be able to see and hear them after playing to them on the screen.

Al Nord plays the banjo and Jeanie dances and wisecracks with Al. He plays "My Little Gypsy Sweetheart" as though played on two banjos and then offers two different selections played at the same time on this instrument.

Miss Du Bary again does her stuff in the finale, which is set in France.

Cincinnati Albee

Week ending March 18

Very good stage layout headlined by Mitzi Green, juvenile stage star in person. "Three Aces and a Queen" occupy "hello" position in a fast moving casting turn on double horizontal bars, with somersaults from bounding mat. Act works along familiar routine, but is nicely dressed and a good opener.

Collette Lyons and George Snyder follow with the girl handling bulk of material, and Snyder a good foil. The team gag and wisecrack accompanied by Miss Lyon's clowning, following which she sings "When We're Alone," playing her own guitar accompaniment. More gags and a vocal number, "Wonderful You" with Snyder joining the chorus for an exit. For an encore, Miss Lyons does a nifty soft shoe dance.

Mitzi Green in center position is preceded by a film showing bits from her several pictures. Her entrance was the signal for prolonged applause. After a few introductory remarks, she offers clever impersonations of Arliss, Dietrich, Chevalier, et al., each accompanied by a song, dialogue bit and business typical of the celebrity. For an encore she impersonates Chas. Mack (of Moran and Mack), singing "Sweeping the Clouds Away," then presents "herself" doing a song, "Sing, You Sinners." Little Mitzi could have taken innumerable encores, but the customers had to be satisfied with several bows.

Britt Wood, harmonica player, is back again with practically the same routine as previously. After playing "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," plus a jazz number, he gags a bit, but his material, which has done duty for many years, needs modernizing. He then plays "Double Eagle," and "My Hero," the latter number being especially good. For his first encore he plays "Swanee River" for his own dance accompaniment. Second encore finds him in a guitar number with a burlesque on yodeling. Next encore brings a Spanish harmonica air and a jazz tune plus a dance. Refused to take further encores, although could easily have done so.

Gracello and Theodore close the show in a three-scene classical turn. Opening scene in full stage, "Song of the Princess," seen through a scrim, shows medieval setting and illumination. Upon awakening of the princess, the principals go into a beautiful adagio dance while two unbilled male and two unprogrammed female attendants sing operatic arias in excellent voices. Act switches to one with special drop with one male and one female voice rendering a bit from "Il Trovatore." Third scene in full stage shows jungle setting with gorillas at large. Principals clad in native leopard skins do a classical dance interrupted by the gorillas, which however, are an integral part of the offering, and do not detract therefrom. The interpretive dances are replete with rhythm, and the epitome of grace and precision.

Coon-Sanders, the people's choice for president and vice-president, have thrown their hats and musical instruments into the political ring with the announcement they are candidates on both the Republican and Democratic tickets and that the "Knights and Ladies of the Bath" will handle their campaign in Chicago. The Coon-Sanders' ticket is Joe Sanders, the left hander, for president, and Carelton Coon, the right hander, for vice-president. They will establish headquarters at the College Inn in Chicago about April 15 and plan to call on the mythical order of the "Knights and Ladies of the Bath" for support. The "Knights and Ladies of the Bath," it was explained, is the radio order started by Joe and Coonie during their broadcasting days in Chicago and has as its membership radio fans from coast to coast. In announcing their candidacy Coon-Sanders sent the following wire to the press: "Not to be outdone by other presidential aspirants and confident we will carry the North, South, East and West, not forgetting the good old Middle West, we hereby throw our hats and musical instruments into the ring for nomination on both the Republican and Democratic tickets for president and vice-president. The Coon-Sanders ticket had its inception at a recent orchestral rehearsal. Coon-Sanders campaign headquarters will be established soon at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago. The speaking rostrum will be the bandstand of the College Inn. Our supporters will gather there nightly to devise new ways and means of furthering our candidacy. Suggestions for campaign slogans are now in order. Make them short and snappy. Our campaign platform is also open to suggestions. Be liberal in your platform planks as we are out to build a boardwalk to the White House. And voters, I tell you I will rule this country with an iron hand and a billiard cue.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) offered his popular "singing class" community song-fest in a manner slightly different than usual this week and even though this audience always sings well, they seemed to sing even better this time. Instead of his usual short talk between numbers, Bernie presented the program in medley form. He opened as usual with the RKO signature song and then went into a new number, "Put the Sun Back in the Sky," (the audience singing it surprisingly well) and then made his announcement of the medley of "By the Sycamore Tree," "Wabash Moon," and "Just Friends," which everyone joined in singing. Bernie closed the solo with his ever-popular "news events," which he writes to a popular melody. Bernie, "old faithful" of this house, always puts on a good performance and always draws good applause.

LARRY McCANN (Seattle Fox-Paramount) featured selections from "Rio Rita," in a recent organ solo and carried the "Spanish" illusion throughout, not only in the tempo of his playing but in the slide background and in the dress of a three-year old boy who sang "Lady of Spain." The program opened with Larry's playing of "Following the Sun Around," and followed with "If You're in Love," "You're Always in My Arms," and "Rio Rita." The second chorus of the last named number was beautifully sung by Larry and gained him a very good hand. He closed with a Spanish dance. The applause at the finish of solo was also very good.

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Astoria Triboro) built his most recent community-sing into a burlesque on the noted Seabury investigation and had the entire audience singing and obviously enjoying every bit of it. Many exceedingly laughable stunts and gags were injected into the solo and it was outstanding in entertainment value. Songs used were: "Kiss Me Goodnight," "I Found You," "Marta," a "scat-singing" chorus of "Minnie the Moocher," and a final chorus of "Sweet Sue, Just You." Great applause followed the solo.

BANKS KENNEDY (Stamford Palace) recently offered as a "community-sing," a "Cafeteria of Songs" idea, entitled "Every Man for Himself," and did very well with it. Banks offered the following "singable" songs from which the audience could "pick": "Just Friends," "Lies," "Snuggled on Your Shoulder" and "Human Thing to Do." To enhance the program, he had the organ console decorated with an appropriate setting. This young chap has "taken hold" here and is very popular.

LEE ERWIN (Cincinnati RKO Albee) clever young Southern organist, who introduced community singing at this house when he took charge of the console several months ago, is continuing to corral the vocalists in the audience in no uncertain manner. His current overture, "Married vs. Single," is a decided novelty, and considerably out of the beaten path, inasmuch as the song slides, which are of an unusually persuasive type, are divided into songs for single and married folks and bachelors respectively, with a final appeal for a mixed chorus. Erwin has sold the idea of audience participation in a big way, and his overtures seldom fail to put the customers in a pleasant mood for the remainder of the program.

DON MILLER (Miami Olympia) continues to please audiences of this theatre with his unusual type of solo. He recently presented "A Variety Concert," of popular, semi-classic and novelty numbers and not only played them very well but presented them in a showmanlike manner. The solo was divided into five parts, the continuity of which was delivered via microphone by Miller. Opening with a popular hit, "Too Late," this popular organist followed with "The Minute Waltz" by Chopin, playing it in concert style; "Who'se Your Little Whozis," for the audience to sing; "Rustle of Spring" (played as a piano solo) and a finale of "Dance of the Hours." Audiences apparently enjoy this type of solo, as there was spontaneous applause after each number.

OVERTURES

EARL KAYE (Denver Orpheum) and his orchestra played a number of "Broadway Hits of 1932," including "Dancing in the Dark," "My Song," "I've Got Rhythm," "You're My Everything," and "Doing the New Yorker." A clever method of announcing the numbers was used. An outline of the tall buildings of New York was set up on the stage, with the Empire State building in the center, and an flashing electric sign told what was being played. Cliff Gillette sang "Youre My Everything" and a trio sang "She Didn't Say Yes." This overture was one of the best seen here.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and his orchestra present a tribute to John Philip Sousa in one of the most impressive musical offerings ever heard at this house. Roesner directs his men through a rendition of a fantasia of airs from the works of the March King and as it is concluded the curtain rises on fourteen buglers on the stage who add to the final strains. Taps are sounded in the darkness and when the curtain goes up again the full 30th Infantry Band from the Presidio is revealed on the stage. The combined band and orchestra, each with their own leader, play the "Stars and Stripes Forever" and as this reaches its tumultuous finale, the huge American flag at the background goes into the flies and a gigantic portrait of the beloved Sousa is seen in characteristic action. Joaquin Garay brings the musical offering to an end by singing "Auf Wiederseh'n My Dear."

KARL LAMBERTZ (Dallas Majestic) and his orchestra, Dallas Kings of Syncopation, gave an artistically arranged and delightfully delivered overture in their rendition of "Lady of Spain" with interpolation of "Marquita."

JOHN McCONNELL (Philadelphia Mastbaum), assistant conductor, led in an intelligent and artistic interpretation of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Italienne." The orchestra responded to his leadership with more expression and warmer tonal quality than usual.

TOMMY SANDVALL (Spokane Fox) and his versatile orchestra, occupying the headline position on the bill gave a number of haunting melodies of another day. Sandvall made an elaborate arrangement of four of the most melodious numbers from that ever popular operetta, "The Student Prince," "Deep in My Heart," "Just We Two," "Drinking Song" and "The Serenade," the members of the band not only offered a wide variety of instrumental interpretations and combinations, but were also heard in vocal presentation. The beautiful "Serenade" was played by eight violins.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

HAVE BEEN A READER OF YOUR PUBlication for some years. In the past I have set back and let others do most of the talking. I am probably one of the youngest old exhibitors in the business today; just going on 33 and having been an exhibitor for the past 15 years. Prior to that time I worked in and around an old Opera House for three or four years.

Never have I, since entering the exhibition field, seen this industry in such strife and turmoil as it is right now.

Finances aren't the only trouble with this industry now. There is too much inefficiency.

Just a week or so ago your publication carried an article to the effect that a booker in Texas had just discovered that bunching the express shipments to a certain theatre or theatres in various towns would mean a savings of about $100 a week to exhibitors. I wonder where this booker has been all my life. It is a well known fact, and has been for years, that lot shipments save money.

I suppose, too, that a lot of shipping clerks are still unaware of the fact that every time they send out a C. O. D. parcel in addition to the actual postage it costs the exhibitor an additional 10 cents for the C. O. D. plus 7 cents return fee on money orders up to $5; this doesn't matter particularly in this territory as our shipments are all handled by truck.

J. C. certainly has the right idea with regard to previewing pictures; since when has the 10 per cent class been given the privilege to dictate to the other 90 cents what they shall see in the way of screen entertainment. What the Art Gallery-Grand Opera-Yacht Club Class think is great doesn't interest the man who is making the wheels of this nation go around, or his family.

When previews were in their infancy we had some real pictures.

It is time that Brookhart or somebody that's got guts starts to clean up the movies before we all go out of business. The parents won't send their children any more because there is so much filth in it and, after all, they are the fans of tomorrow. The parents don't even come because they feel embarrassed at some of the dirty cracks they are pulling in pictures today. In the cities it may be different where no one knows their neighbor; but this is the situation in the small towns.

When the producers weren't so busy looking after their theatres we had real pictures, but they can't burn the candle at both ends and not get burned themselves any more than a small town businessman can run his own business and expect to run the theatre as a side line and make a success of it. It can't be done; I have tried it and seen dozens of others try it and nine times out of ten it fails.

Now they squawk about losing money. They should lose money and will probably continue to until they get back to producing pictures that the people want to see and let the exhibitor sell them to his public. The circuits have demanded such unfair protection that by the time the suburban or small town exhibitor can get the pictures they have either lost what publicity they had, if any, or the public is demanding a different type of picture.

In the past we had such things happen as one company producing a "Ten Commandments," another "Intolerance," and another "Moon of Israel," but it would end there; now one company makes a gangster or newspaper or murder story that clicks and every company in the business will rush out a half a dozen imitations. When are they going to be able to stand on their own feet, pick their own stories, be original? There are thousands of books that have never been made into pictures; thousands of others that could be remade successfully if they would get down to business, stand on their own legs, forget the sex stuff and let politics go to hell.—E. L. PARSONS, Mgr. Garden Theatre, Renville, Minn.

Wales Paging Jenkins

LET ME TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY of saying how much I enjoy reading the HERALD. I particularly admire its broad outlook and its insistence on the necessity of keeping the screen healthy and clean.

When are you going to send J. C. Jenkins to pay us a visit?

With compliments.—JAMES HARE, County Theatre, Bangor, N. Wales.

A SIMPLE EXPEDIENT NOW BRINGS YOU BETTER PICTURES

A YEAR ago Eastman announced the first super-speed negative film—a medium that helped to set up new artistic standards in the motion picture industry. Now a simple expedient—a gray backing on the film base—gives you even better pictures. When you run a release that is truly exceptional in photographic quality, the chances are it was made on this perfected Eastman Super-sensitive Negative. Eastman Kodak Co. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
